Character sketches and summations of the achievements of 24 artists, most of them personally known to the author, each of whom "is typical in his or her own way of some one achievement or creative emphasis." As a group, they constituted in 1942 a "cross-section of the American printmakers now in their prime." The oldest of the artists considered was the photographer, Alfred Stieglitz (1864–1946), the youngest, Federico Castellón, born in 1914. Some are better known for their paintings, like John Marin (1870–1953), George Biddle, Yasuo Kuniyoshi, and Thomas Hart Benton; others, like John Taylor Arms, Rockwell Kent, Paul Landacre, and Thomas W. Nason, are more exclusively printmakers. "Perhaps the most exciting and important in our art history," their day has seen the transition of American graphic arts "from provincialism to the beginnings of a national school." The "fertilizing influence" of these artists "has been one of the most important factors in the growth of the American school of art all over the country." The illustrations, two to a leaf, are arranged in groups of four, each consisting of a portrait of the artist and three typical works.

I. Decorative Arts

5784. Avery, Clara Louise. Early American silver. New York, Century, 1930. xliv, 378 p. (Century library of American antiques)
30–30325 NK7112.A8

"Bibliographical note": p. 361–364.

A general survey of early American silver from mid-17th century to the classic revival of the late 18th century. The first part of the book divides into chapters on the seven areas: Massachusetts, Rhode Island, Connecticut, New York, Philadelphia and the Delaware Valley, Virginia and Maryland, and Charleston, South Carolina. Since Boston produced the bulk of the early silver, with a longer and fuller sequence of styles than other localities, the chapter on Massachusetts is elaborated into ten chronological sections. The remainder consists of a chapter on the silversmiths and their methods, another describing the elaborate coats of arms which indicated ownership, and a far longer one (p. 273–359) tracing the "course of development of characteristic objects, such as the beaker, standing cup, tankard, tea-pot." There are 63 halftone plates and 33 line drawings which show characteristic shapes and their dates.

5785. Harbeson, Georgiana (Brown). American needlework; the history of decorative stitchery and embroidery from the late 16th to the 20th century. New York, Coward-McCann, 1938. xxxviii, 232 p. 38–29098 NK9212.H3

"An historical outline of decorative stitches used by American women in various embroidery techniques. Examples have been selected from each period in the country's development." If much of the design has come from sources abroad, the simplicity of American taste has been expressed in adaptations of or departures from the originals, and in 1938 the author found evidence that American work was reverting to the "purely decorative and interpretive effects" achieved in the early 17th century. Part one is devoted to the needlework of the American Indian, and includes the use of porcupine quills and beads. Parts two to five are concerned with colonial, early national, Victorian, and 20th-century embroideries. Each section describes the materials, methods of working, and designs of its needlework. Among the varieties shown are objects for use, such as chair seats, pillowslips, or altar cloths, and purely decorative work, such as samplers of various eras, needlepoint pictures, or embroidered maps. The numerous halftone illustrations and 5 colored plates indicate the various stitches and the uses to which they were put, but in most instances are rather too small to show much detail.

5786. Hayward, Arthur H. Colonial lighting. New ed., rev. Boston, Little, Brown, 1927. xxiv, 168 p. 27–5863 NK8360.H3 1927
First published in 1923.

A record for collectors of American antique lamps, lanterns, and candleholders, of the progress made by artificial lighting from the colonial era to the 1850's, when gas and kerosene superseded lard oil, fish and whale oil, and camphene as illuminants, and rendered obsolete the early lamps and candlesticks. Mr. Hayward describes the lamps used, from the first crude iron open-wick Betty lamps to the graceful pressed glass lamps manufactured by the Sandwich Company; iron and tin lanterns, many of them intricately pierced; and the numerous types of candlesticks, stands, sconces, moulds, and the like, made of iron, tin, pewter, wood, brass, glass, silver, and earthenware. Most of the 114 illustrations, averaging one or two to a page, are of pieces in private collections, including that of the enthusiastic author, who offers much advice to amateurs.

5787. Kauffman, Henry. Early American copper, tin, and brass. New York, McBride, 1950. 112 p. 50–11133 NK806.K3
Bibliography: p. 112.

A brief but pioneer survey of early American copper, tin, and brassware, based upon contemporary wills, vendues, bills of lading, and, especially, newspaper advertisements. The first piece reported is a primitive early 18th-century copper weather vane by Shem Drowne (1683–1774); the last are brass buttons, furniture, hardware, andirons, bells, clocks, and the like, cast in the early 19th century just prior to the industrial revolution. The author describes such articles as copper and brass warming pans, kettles, pans, coffeepots, ladles, and stills; decorated tin boxes, trays, and footwarmers; and plain tin candle boxes, ovens, sconces, and other lighting devices. The author quotes freely from advertisements of prominent craftsmen and includes lists of coppersmiths, braziers, brass founders, and tinsmiths (p. 108–111). Many of the articles reproduced in the 91 gravure illustrations are in the author's collection.

5788. Laughlin, Ledlie Irwin. Pewter in America, its makers and their marks. Boston, Houghton Mifflin, 1940. 2 v. 41–1939 NK8412.L3
Bibliography: v. 2, p. [161]–[192].

Based upon contemporary sources, published and unpublished, and addressed to the beginner as well as the experienced collector, this is a history of American pewter (domestic vessels made of an alloy of tin and lead) from the mid-17th century, when "at least four pewterers were at work in the Massachusetts Bay Colony," to the 1850's after which pewter ware was usually silverplated. The early makers have been grouped in approximately chronological order within 7 regional units: Massachusetts Bay, Rhode Island, the Connecticut Valley, New York City, Albany, Pennsylvania, and the South. The craftsmen of the britannia (pressed ware made from thin pewter sheets) period, ca. 1830 to ca. 1855, have been separately and more briefly treated in an alphabetical arrangement. All are included in the alphabetical checklist which forms Appendix I. Among the subjects of other chapters are: pewterers' marks, household pewter, ecclesiastical pewter, fakes, and notes on collecting. Reproduced on 78 gravure plates are small but clear photographs of nearly 700 plates, dishes, and basins, porringers, tankards, pots, and beakers, spoons and ladles, coffee and teapots, pitchers, candlesticks, and lamps.

5789. McKearin, George S., and Helen McKearin. American glass. 2000 photographs, 1000 drawings by James L. McCreery. New York, Crown, 1948. xvi, 634 p. 48–2187 NK5112.M26 1948
Glossary: p. xv–xvi.
Bibliography: p. 615–617.
First published in 1941.

Addressed primarily to the critical collector, this is a detailed history of the development of American glassmaking from the 18th century to the 1890's. Chapters one to four are devoted mainly to 18th-century glass: the South Jersey ware made of bottle glass on Dutch or German peasant lines, the brilliant and delicately colored flint glass and fine ware produced by the great Pennsylvania house of Henry William Stiegel, and the engraved presentation pieces manufactured by John Frederick Amelung. Chapters five to eight deal with the fine flint, blown and molded, cut and engraved table and decorative wares manufactured from 1820 to the 1860's, as well as the pressed glass produced on a large commercial scale from the 1820's to the 1890's, by the New England Glass Company, the Boston and Sandwich Company, and other glassworks. The three concluding chapters describe such special forms as paperweights, commercial bottles, and pictorial flasks. The text includes "Blown Three Mold Charts" (p. 285–331), "Bottle Charts" (p. 512–582), and "Chronological Chart of American Glass Houses" (p. 583–613).

5790. Sonn, Albert H. Early American wrought iron. With three hundred and twenty plates from drawings by the author. New York, Scribner, 1928. 3 v. 28–24035 NK8212.A1S6

Bibliography: v. 3, p. 243–244.

An attempt to record, mainly in drawings, such specimens of early American wrought iron "as are still in existence, whether on old buildings, in museums, in private collections, or among the treasure-trove of dealers in antiques." A brief initial chapter sketches the development of the iron industry from the establishment of the first successful colonial ironworks at Saugus Center, Massachusetts, 1685, to the advent of machine production about 1850, "which gradually displaced the hand-wrought articles of the earlier period." The remainder of the book describes, and the plates illustrate, various types of: knockers, latches, and locks; bolts, hinges, hasps and handles; and gates, railings, balconies, lanterns, newels, weather vanes, foot scrapers, shutter fasteners, fireplace accessories, candle snuffers, and other articles. Mr. Sonn's text is often desultory, but his drawings are attractive and his work inspired by a sincere affection for "the pleasing variety of design, the artistic conception and beauty of workmanship displayed in early American wrought iron."

5791. Spargo, John. Early American pottery and china. Garden City, N.Y., Garden City Pub. Co. [1948, ©1926] xvii, 393 p. 48–10842 NK4006.S7 1948

"Bibliographical notes": p. 373–376.

"Largely given to historical record" of the major American potteries producing wares up to the Centennial of 1876, this is a handbook designed for the amateur collector wanting "to be aided in identifying and classifying specimens, and to be intelligently informed concerning their history, their contribution to the development of ceramic art in this country, their makers, and so on." The development of pottery (opaque ware) is traced from the simple domestic earthenware jugs, pans, and platters of the mid-17th century potters to the fine stoneware, Rockingham, flint enamel, and scroddle wares produced at Bennington, Vermont, by Julius Norton and Christopher Webber Fenton 200 years later. The "era of porcelain" (translucent ware) opens with the incorporation of the Jersey Porcelain and Earthenware Company in 1825 and is continued to the designs created for the Centennial Exposition by the sculptor, Karl Müller. Two chapters are devoted to "folk-pottery," slip-decorated and sgrafitto ware, produced mainly by the Pennsylvania Germans from the 1730's to the 1860's. The 64 plates are in black and white; keys to the potters' marks are provided in an appendix (p. 358–372).

5792. Stiles, Helen E. Pottery in the United States. New York, Dutton, 1941. 329 p. 41–15157 NK4005.S7

A survey of recent American pottery: china or porcelain, stoneware, Parian, Jasper, fine earthenware or semi-porcelain, and common earthenware, which regards it as an art newly matured. The Ohio-West Virginia pottery district in 1941 ranked "first in the number and size of its ceramic industries"; in it were manufactured kitchen, industrial, and art wares, and, especially, domestic tablewares, among them "American Modern," designed by Russel Wright for Steubenville Pottery, and "Manhattan Shape," created by Viktor Schreckengost for American Limoges China Company. The most important products of New Jersey, the second ranking area, were the dinnerware designed by Frank G. Holmes for Lenox Incorporated, and "sanitary ware" of vitrified china. Ceramic sculpture and handmade pottery have been executed by Waylande Gregory, Russell Barnett Aitken, and many other "studio potters." Sections are devoted to the employment of decorative tile and terra cotta in recent architecture. The numerous illustrations are in black and white.

5793. Vanderpoel, Emily (Noyes) American lace & lace-makers. Edited by Elizabeth C. Barney Buel. New Haven, Yale University Press, 1924. xx, 14 p. 24–28973 NK9412.V3

An album of 110 halftone plates showing samples of lace made in America, chiefly from the colonial era to the early 19th century, and drawn in large part from the collection of the Litchfield (Conn.) Historical Society. Pieces illustrated include trimming, handbags, pillowcases, bedspreads, collars and guimps, dress skirts, veils, caps, shawls, kerchiefs, and the like, as well as details, patterns, and lacemaking equipment. Plates 1 to 13 exhibit lace made by North and South American Indians. A very brief introduction surveys American lacemaking and describes the types of lace produced: lace made with the needle, or needlepoint lace; and lace made on a pillow with bobbins, or pillow lace. Distinction is drawn between the lace industry as introduced by Dean Walker about 1820 at Medway, Massachusetts, and lacemaking as an art pursued especially by young gentlewomen of the 18th and early 19th centuries.

J. Museums

5794. Coleman, Laurence Vail. Historic house museums. Washington, American Association of Museums, 1933. 187 p.
34-27050 NA7205.C6

"Directory": p. 113–159.

Bibliography: p. 160–165.

Chiefly a manual of operations for the management of historic house museums. These are buildings which "achieve importance by withstanding the assaults of time," or "by acts of man that create hallowed associations." As far back as 1850, the State of New York acquired Washington's headquarters at Newburgh, and by 1933 "all but a few of the very youngest states" had begun to preserve their historic houses. The author advocates administration of them by organizations having custody and immediate control, under Government sponsorship and supervision. He offers practical advice about the financing of such museums, their restoration, preservation, and furnishing, supplementary collections and buildings, and attracting and guiding visitors, and outlines the possibilities of "the museum resort." The 66 gravure illustrations average two to a plate. Ralph E. Carpenter's The Fifty Best Historic American Houses, Colonial and Federal, Now Furnished and Open to the Public (New York, Dutton, 1955. 112 p.) is a convenient and well-illustrated little book for the tourist—if everyone is likely to have some alternative "best"—but is limited to the East between New Hampshire and Virginia. John Drury's Historic Midwest Houses (Minneapolis, University of Minnesota Press, 1947. 246 p.) presents brief descriptions and photographs, usually of exteriors, of 87 structures in the 12 states from Ohio to the Dakotas; more than half of these were museums open to visitors.

5795. Howe, Winifred E. A history of the Metropolitan Museum of Art, with a chapter on the early institutions of art in New York. New York [Printed at the Gilliss Press] 1913–46. 2 v. illus.
13-4111 N610.H75

Volume 2 has imprint: New York, Published for the Metropolitan Museum of Art by Columbia University Press.

The authorized history of the Metropolitan Museum of Art from its projection by the Art Committee of the Union League Club in 1869 to 1941; for the years 1905 to 1912 the two volumes overlap. By March 1871, Miss Howe records, the Trustees could announce the purchase of 174 paintings, "principally Dutch and Flemish, but including representative works of the Italian, French, English, and Spanish schools," as a nucleus of its permanent gallery. On April 5, 1871, a committee of the Museum secured the State Legislature's authorization to construct a suitable building in Central Park. The story thereafter is told in terms of: expansion in space, acquisitions, and services in the Dodworth Building, 1871–73, the Douglas Mansion, 1873–79, and the Metropolitan Museum Building, 1880–1941; the loyalty and generosity of such friends as Henry G. Marquand, J. Pierpont Morgan, Robert W. de Forest, and George Blumenthal; and the development of a philosophy of Museum purposes and practice.

5796. New York. Metropolitan Museum of Art. American Wing. A handbook of the American Wing, by R[ichard] T. H. Halsey and Charles O. Cornelius. 7th ed., rev. by Joseph Downs. New York, 1942. xxxii, 321 p.
43-1249 N611.A6A3 1942

A guide to the 21 original American rooms of the colonial, revolutionary, and early republican periods installed in the American Wing, as well as to its galleries and alcoves. The book is divided into three main sections corresponding to the floor plan of the Wing: third floor, the first period, from the earliest years of permanent settlement in New England through the first quarter of the 18th century; second floor, from the second quarter of the 18th century to the early republic; and first floor, the third period, from about 1790 to 1825. Besides summarizing the architectural history of its period, each section describes the design, decoration, and materials of its furniture, metal work, textiles, pottery, and glass, and describes in some detail the origin, structure, and furnishings of the several rooms. These have been salvaged from old houses from New Hampshire to Virginia. Contemporary advertisements are liberally quoted; the 131 black-and-white illustrations are small but clear. A tribute to Mr. Halsey (1865–1942), the organizer of the American Wing, follows the preface (p. x–xvi).

5797. New York. Museum of Modern Art. Painting and sculpture in the Museum of Modern Art, edited by Alfred H. Barr, Jr. New York, Museum of Modern Art, distributed by Simon & Schuster, 1948. 327 p.
48–10843 N620.M9A4 1948

First published in 1942.

An album of halftone reproductions of "less than half" of the 660 paintings and 137 pieces of sculpture owned by the Museum of Modern Art in 1948, together with an alphabetically arranged catalog (p. [297]–324) of its whole collection. Paintings are grouped in 20 sections, each prefaced by a descriptive paragraph; sculpture in 4, of generally similar order. The sequence is very roughly chronological, "not so much by artists and works as by idea, style and movement, action and reaction." After the primitives of various dates come the late 19th-century European pioneers of modernism, then the early 20th-century traditionalists and expressionists, American and European. Cubism, which spread rapidly through Europe and America just prior to World War I, is followed by abstract art with its dogma of pure form, and by the various countermovements that arose in the 1920's and became dominant in the 1930's. Mr. Barr's introduction explains the method of eliminations whereby the collection is to be kept modern. Handsomely commemorating its 25th anniversary is the Museum's Masters of Modern Art (New York, distributed by Simon & Schuster, 1954. 239 p.) which reproduces in excellent color or black and white many of the "best or most characteristic" works of art in the collection. Each piece is identified, described, and evaluated. Demonstrating the "variety, excellence of achievement, and vigor" of the visual arts—painting, sculpture, drawing, prints, photographs, motion pictures, and industrial arts—produced in 40 countries during the last 75 years, this lively, unpretentious book is full of pertinent quotations from artists and critics.

5798. Whitney Museum of American Art, New York, Catalogue of the collection. New York, Published by Rudge for the Whitney Museum of American Art, 1931. 238 p.
32–5001 N618.A6 1931

5799. Whitney Museum of American Art, New York. The Whitney Museum and its collection: history, purpose, and activities [and] catalogue of the collection. New York, 1954. [41] p.
55–1142 N618.A65 1954

First published in 1935.

5800. Whitney Museum of American Art, New York. Juliana Force and American art; a memorial exhibition, September 24–October 30, 1949. New York [1949] 75 p.
50–4507 N618.A63

The alphabetically arranged first catalog of the Whitney Museum lists its collection at its opening in 1931—"for the most part by living artists, of some five hundred paintings in oil and water-color, one hundred fifteen pieces of sculpture, drawings, etchings, lithographs and works in other mediums, to the number of seven hundred." The Museum and its predecessors, the Whitney Studio, Whitney Studio Club, and Whitney Studio Galleries, 1914–30, were organized by Gertrude Vanderbilt Whitney (1876–1942), the sculptor, in the "belief that America has an important contribution to make in the arts, that in order to make this contribution effective, a sympathetic environment must be created in which the artist may function to the fullest extent of his power." Preoccupied as it is with contemporary American expression, the Museum owns only a few works of the recent past which are precursors of modern tendencies, but has organized valuable exhibits of the work of early American artists. The illustrations of 172 paintings and prints and 37 pieces of sculpture are in a rather dark halftone. The catalog of 1954, by no means so elaborate, lists 490 paintings, 212 watercolors, gouaches, and pastels, 197 drawings, and 134 pieces of sculpture, a total of 1,033 works; it also reports the Museum's main activities, such as exhibitions, acquisitions for the permanent collection, lending works to other institutions, research, and publications. Juliana Force and American Art offers tributes to the Museum's first director (1876–1948) from her friends, including John Sloan, Guy Pène de Bois, and Alexander Brook, celebrates her long connection with the Whitney enterprises (1914–48), and provides a catalog (p. 67–74) of the memorial exhibition held in her honor in 1949.

K. Art and History

5801. Davidson, Marshall. Life in America. Boston, Houghton Mifflin, 1951. 2 v.
51–7084 E178.5.D3

"Published in association with the Metropolitan Museum of Art."

Bibliography: v. 2, p. 463–472.

"A graphic survey of American history," particularly of the social, economic, and cultural scene. Drawn mainly from museum collections and other public sources, the gravure illustrations are reproduced from paintings, drawings, photographs, prints, and the like, for the most part contemporary with their subjects, which "faithfully, expressively, and completely depict the American past." The closely linked and lively text, based upon both primary and recent published materials, serves as framework for the pictures and as connective where they are lacking. Volume one is arranged topically in five chronologically subdivided sections. The subjects treated are: colonial America; westward expansion to the Pacific; maritime progress, from packets to clippers and iron steamships; agriculture, from handtools to machinery; and industry, from the handicraft tradition to mass production. Volume two portrays American entertainment and play, the invasion of the city by farmer and immigrant and the growth of urban centers and services, and the tightening of the Nation through development of arteries and vehicles of transportation. A final section, "The Democratic Mold," presents the American political system and libertarian way of life.

5802. McCracken, Harold. Portrait of the Old West; with a biographical check list of western artists. New York, McGraw-Hill, 1952. 232 p. 52–9455 ND225.M18

A chronicle of the work and careers of the pioneer artists who were "graphic historians" of the Old West. In the 1820's, the first Western artists produced only static Indian portraits, disappointing both as art and as documentation, but in the 1830's George Catlin (1796–1872) began to create a documentary record of animated and realistic scenes from the life of the Plains Indians, and initiated a "popular interest in painting the Indians and frontier life." As the frontier steadily receded, however, from 1849 to 1870, the old Indian and wildlife subjects were supplanted by the Indian fighter, the range, and the cowboy. Charles M. Russell was a cowboy-artist in Montana during the 1880's; Charles Schreyvogel depicted the trooper and the infantryman of the Plains in the 90's; and through both decades Frederic Remington searched for remnants of the Old West and found enough to document it. There are 39 plates in off-key color, and 47 halftones, besides numerous illustrations in the text.

5803. Murrell, William. A history of American graphic humor. New York, Whitney Museum of American Art, 1933–38. 2 v. 34–4666 NC1420.M8

Volume 2 has imprint: New York, Published for the Whitney Museum of American Art by Macmillan, 1938.

"A partial list of works consulted or referred to": v. 1, p. [241]–242; v. 2, p. [265]–267.

A panorama of the development of American graphic humor from its 18th-century beginnings to 1938. All three categories, cartoon, caricature, and humorous drawing, utilize economy of line and aim to provoke ridicule, but have as separate subjects, respectively, topical political or moral issues, individual physical peculiarities or idiosyncrasies of manner, and ridiculous social situations. Although Benjamin Franklin is credited with attempting "to symbolize a political situation" as early as 1747, not until the Embargo and the War of 1812 did graphic humor become bolder and more frequent. In the years 1817–28, an unbroken production of humorous illustration and social caricature began, which formed a species of graphic reporting, and the Jackson administration (1829–37) provoked a flood of separately published cartoons. A journalistic medium for sustained attack was lacking, however, until Harper's Weekly began to publish the great political cartoons of Thomas Nast (1840–1902) in the Johnson administration. Since then, American graphic humorists have presented "a broad visual commentary on the lighter and seamier sides of the principal men, women, and movements of our heterogeneous civilization." A number of the 479 black-and-white illustrations are too small to be wholly effective.

5804. New York. Metropolitan Museum of Art. Life in America; a special loan exhibition of paintings held during the period of the New York World's Fair, April 24 to October 29 [1939] New York [Scribner Press] 1939. xxix, 230 p. 39–27465 ND203.N4

A chronologically arranged annotated catalogue of 290 paintings, together with small halftones of most of them, selected to form an exhibition of life in America during the 300 years from 1616 to 1915. Of the 145 lenders, 78 were private owners, and 67 were institutions. The lively and informative notes accompanying the reproductions of portraits, landscapes, and genre pictures characterize their subjects and quote freely from pertinent contemporary sources. In his introduction to the "picture chronicle," "A Visual Account of Life in America" Harry B. Wehle surveys rapidly both the "taming of the continent" and the artistic recording of the personages and events concerned. The latter must depend for the most part upon obscure painters, although West, Copley, and Homer in their early years, and Morse and Eakins were able reporters.

5805. St. Louis. City Art Museum. Mississippi panorama, being an exhibition of the life and landscape of the Father of Waters and its great tributary, the Missouri. [St. Louis] 1949. 227 p. 50–13673 N5020.S325 1949

The partly annotated and illustrated catalog of an exhibition of more than 350 paintings, drawings, prints, and photographs, together with river boat models and pieces of ships' equipment, held at the City Art Museum of St. Louis in 1949. The 7½ by 348-foot Dickeson and Egan moving panorama (1850), last of its kind devoted to the Mississippi, was the central feature of the display which aimed to show not only the art inspired by the rivers but to review "American social history as it unfolded along the Mississippi and the Missouri in the last century." In a preliminary essay, Perry T. Rathbone, Director of the Museum, points out that the river painters were first of all explorers and recorders: poetry and romance were not added by them but inhered in the life they portrayed. Four color plates accompany the numerous halftones.

5806. Taft, Robert. Artists and illustrators of the Old West, 1850–1900. New York, Scribner, 1953. xvii, 400 p. 53–7577 N6510.T27

A very detailed and thoroughly documented account of "the actual experiences of a number of artists and illustrators, most of whom personally witnessed some part of the marvellous transformation of the region beyond the Mississippi—chiefly the Plains and the Rockies—in the half century extending from 1850 until 1900." These men, many of them obscure and untrained amateurs, served as artists with official surveys and expeditions, as artists traveling on assignment for Harper's Weekly or Frank Leslie's Illustrated Newspaper, or as independents on wagon, and later, railroad trains. John M. Stanley and Heinrich Balduin Möllhausen depicted views and Indians and Indian modes of life. William Jacob Hays was a painter of animals, chiefly buffaloes and prairie dogs. After the Civil War, Theodore R. Davis and Alfred R. Waud of Harper's, and many others recorded the tide of emigration, Indian troubles, and the expanding Western scene. The 90 halftone illustrations are reproduced on 36 leaves.

5807. U. S. Library of Congress. An album of American battle art, 1755–1918. Washington, U. S. Govt. Print. Off., 1947. xvi, 319 p. 48–45628 N8260.U4

An album of 150 full-page reproductions in gravure of American prints, drawings, photographs, and pictorial maps, most of which depict battles, although some are portraits, and others are scenes of military life. Based upon an exhibition held at the Library of Congress in 1944 and drawn in the main from the Library's collections, they are arranged chronologically in 10 sections, each representing a war or group of wars from "The French and Indian War and Its Aftermath, 1755–1765," to "The First World War, 1917–1918." Each has a brief introduction by the editor, Donald H. Mugridge, giving a historical framework for the group of plates, and special attention is given to graphic processes and the artists who made use of them or whose work was reproduced by them. Each illustration is provided with an annotation which describes it in technical terms and explains its historical significance. Selection of illustrations has been governed to some extent by the ease or effectiveness with which they could be reproduced; scene and artist are usually but not invariably of the same era. Pictorial Americana, 2d ed. (Washington, Library of Congress, 1955. 68 p.) is a catalog of photographic negatives available in the Library's Prints and Photographs Division, "published for the convenience of those who may wish to obtain positive prints"; the originals, mostly prints and magazine illustrations, reflect American history through 1899, or are views, or are social materials here classified by subject matter.

XXVII

Land and Agriculture

A. Land 5808–5818
B. Agriculture: History 5819–5838
C. Agriculture: Practice 5839–5850
D. Agriculture: Government Policies 5851–5861
E. Forests, National Parks 5862–5866
F. Animal Husbandry 5867–5874

AGRICULTURE is normally thought of as a part of American economic life, which is the subject of the next chapter. It has been given separate and prior treatment, in part for convenience, since the economic chapter is large enough as it is, but also because of a real priority, historical and logical, in its subject matter. Through the first two and a half centuries of our history, America was a land of farmers. Not until after the Civil War—and, some have argued, largely because of it—did the industrial interest come to outweigh the agricultural, and not until the second decade of the present century did the urban population come to outweigh the rural. Urbanized and industrialized man remains quite dependent upon agriculture for his food, and less completely so for his clothing and shelter; its priority in economic process therefore persists, if it is less overwhelming than a century ago. Americans still tend to follow Thomas Jefferson in regarding the agrarian way of life as healthier in several senses than its alternatives, and as supporting a democratic order in society and government more effectively than any other. For these and other reasons the state of American agriculture has been a special object of public solicitude for nearly a century. Agricultural research and education have been so effectively subsidized that they have led to one of the greatest paradoxes in economic history: as cultivated acreage and agricultural manpower have been shrinking, output has gone on increasing, and regularly produces commodity surpluses beyond effective demand which threaten to send prices tobogganning. This situation has, during the past 25 years, occasioned an exceptional degree of Government subsidization, exceptionally wide Government controls, and a continuing stream of diagnosis, criticism, and commentary. A vast literature has grown up over the century, from which the titles that follow are a selection of the less technical works that will have significance for those of us who are not farmers or are not actively engaged in wrestling with the farmer's problems.

Just as agriculture is prior to other forms of economic activity, so the land is historically and logically prior to the forms of its cultivation, and our first section includes titles on land use, soil conservation, public land policies, the public domain, and land speculation and values. Works with a more strictly geographical approach appear in Chapter VI. The next three sections divide the books on agriculture according to whether they emphasize its history, its current practice, or the Government policies which affect it; but these aspects are by no means mutually exclusive, and titles in one section may have much of interest for one or both of the others. As in similar situations elsewhere, we have not hesitated to select books which take decided views on recent developments, as being the most likely to arouse the lay reader's interest, but of course no endorsement of these views is implied. The concluding sections lump the national parks, which could as well have gone in Section A, with books on our forests and their industries, and bring together all animal enterprises, whether catching fish, preserving wildlife, or breeding horses.

A. Land

5808. Bennett, Hugh Hammond. Soil conservation. New York, McGraw-Hill, 1939. xvii, 993 p. illus. (McGraw-Hill series in geography) 40–1134 S623.B36

This volume presents a comprehensive statement of the science and practice of soil and water conservation by the Chief of the Soil Conservation Service, U. S. Department of Agriculture (1935–52), who is known throughout the United States and abroad for his leadership in the soil conservation movement. In part 1 he traces the problem of soil erosion in the United States back to the wasteful exploitation of land by the early settlers; compares it with the problem in other countries, and presents its economic and social effects on the welfare of our people. In part 2 the development of the national plan for soil conservation, based on acts of Congress and administered by the Department, is traced, and present-day conditions in the several regions of the United States are described. Dr. Bennett's briefer manual, Elements of Soil Conservation, appeared in a second edition in 1955 (New York, McGraw-Hill. 358 p.). The story of the conservation movement and the man who led it is told in a popular, somewhat journalistic style by Wellington Brink: Big Hugh, the Father of Soil Conservation (New York, Macmillan, 1951. 167 p.).

5809. Clawson, Marion. Uncle Sam's acres. New York, Dodd, Mead, 1951. xvi, 414 p. illus. 51–10247 HD216.C55

Bibliography: p. 393–397.

The director of the Bureau of Land Management, U. S. Department of the Interior (1948–52), describes the kinds of land, including national parks and national forests, owned by the United States. He tells how they were acquired, and in large part disposed of, and how the fourth of our area that remains in Federal ownership is administered. Using "relatively simple terminology and exposition," the author directs his book to those primarily interested in the outdoors and its use, to Federal and State employees in land and resources administration, and to students in both college and high school. The policies and politics that determine the management of the public lands are analyzed in the last chapter, where it is predicted that the public lands and the Federal Government's control over them will expand in an effort to conserve our minerals, timber resources, grazing land, national parks, and waterpower as they become increasingly important to the total national economy.

5810. Graham, Edward H. Natural principles of land use. New York, Oxford University Press, 1944. 274 p. Agr44–202 S493.G65

Bibliography [in large part annotated]: p. 233–261.

Associated with the Soil Conservation Service since 1941 as chief biologist, and then as director of the Plant Technology Division, the author has had abundant opportunity to observe the normal processes of the landscape and to study the best methods of plowing, fertilizing, and irrigating the land for the conservation of the soil, forests, and wildlife, and for increasing its potential productivity. He has written this nontechnical book to help the land management biologist as well as the man who operates and lives on the land, by pointing out "something of the relation and importance of natural ecological principles to land management methods." The 32 plates are accompanied by concise descriptions and contribute greatly to the reader's enlightenment.

5811. Hibbard, Benjamin Horace. A history of the public land policies. New York, P. Smith, 1939. xix, 591 p. (Land economics series, edited by R. T. Ely) 39–6945 HD216.H5 1939

Bibliography: p. 573–579.

This basic volume was first published in 1924 by the Macmillan Company. While head of the department of agricultural economics, University of Wisconsin (1919–32), the author used the manuscript as the basis of a seminar, and several of the chapters were revised by members of the class. The result is a detailed and somewhat technical history of the acquisition of the public domain, and the various policies that have been followed in its disposition since 1780. Special attention is given to the origins and the operation of the Homestead Act of 1862. Numerous tables show sales and receipts, bounty land warrants issued, Federal grants for roads, railroads, and education, etc. In the last chapter the Federal land policies are reviewed and criticized. The author points to the reservation of forest land from private entry as "the most commendable act on the part of the government during the past half century," and to the great need for a Federal policy concerning grazing land, which, as Dr. Peffer describes (no. 5813), was adopted in 1934.

5812. Hoyt, Homer. One hundred years of land values in Chicago; the relationship of the growth of Chicago to the rise in its land values, 1830–1933. Chicago, University of Chicago Press, 1933. xxxii, 519 p. 34–44 HD268.C4H6 1933a

Bibliography: p. [496]–499.

Fascinated by the growth of Chicago from a dozen log huts in 1830 to an urban population of 3,376,436 in 1930, with a corresponding rise in the value of the land from a few thousand dollars to five billion, and convinced by his experience in the real estate business that an understanding of the past movement of land prices was indispensable for any rational real estate investment policy, the author undertook this study for his Ph. D. thesis at the University of Chicago. He gathered material from the records of the Chicago Title and Trust Company, the annual land-value maps, newspaper files, appraisals, and from tax-assessment records. Part 1 traces the history of the city's growth in relation to the rise in land values during four booms: those of the canal and railroad eras, 1830–62; the boom that followed the Civil War and the Great Fire, 1863–77; the boom of the first skyscrapers and the first World's Fair, 1878–98; and the land boom that preceded and followed World War I, 1898–1933. Part 2 analyzes the relation of the growth of Chicago to the rise of its land values, and works out the Chicago real estate cycle and the mechanism of the Chicago land market. "The result," says Prof. H. A. Millis, "is a distinct contribution both to the economic and social history of Chicago and to urban land economics."

5813. Peffer, E. Louise. The closing of the public domain: disposal and reservation policies, 1900–50. Stanford, Stanford University Press, 1951. 372 p. (Stanford University. Food Research Institute. Miscellaneous publications, no. 10) 51–10461 HD216.P44 TX341.S8, no. 10

This scholarly study is organized around the major legislation dealing with the public lands from the passage of the Reclamation Act in 1902 to the creation of the Bureau of Land Management in 1946, which marks the official closing of the old public domain. It details the struggle between the concept of "land held in escrow pending transfer of title" to individuals, corporations, or States, and the demand of conservationists for reservations "held in perpetuity in the interest of the collective owners, the people of the United States." Out of that struggle grew the Federal management of public lands, with the control of grazing (established by the Taylor Grazing Act of 1934), the development of water-power sites, the classification of certain mineral lands, and the building up of the national forests and parks for economic and recreational use in the public interest.

5814. Robbins, Roy M. Our landed heritage: the public domain, 1776–1936. New York, P. Smith, 1950, ©1942. 450 p. maps. 55–21591 HD216.R6 1950
"Selective bibliography of secondary references": p. [427]–433.

Originally published in 1942, "this volume presents perhaps the first attempt to integrate American land history with the other forces that have shaped our civilization." It traces the political, economic, and social effects of the policies underlying the development and disposition of the land owned by the Federal Government, from the cession of Western lands by the States following the American Revolution to the withdrawal of all public lands from private entry in 1935. Much of its content is derived from the Congressional Globe and Congressional Record, reporting the arguments for and against the several measures which determined Federal land policy.

5815. Sakolski, Aaron M. The great American land bubble; the amazing story of land-grabbing, speculations, and booms from colonial days to the present time. New York, Harper, 1932. 373 p. 32–29324 HD191.S3

From the colonial charters granted by England to individuals and companies to the Florida real estate "boom" of the 1920's, the author presents the most comprehensive study to date of the more important speculative land transactions which have left their imprint on the development of the United States. The Western land ventures of the Ohio Company, the Georgia Yazoo land frauds of the 18th century, the colonization of Texas by the Austins, and the "land grabbing" that accompanied the California Gold Rush of 1849, are among the instances described. Although land speculation generated panics such as that of 1837, it gave impetus to the building of roads, canals, railroads, and towns.

5816. U. S. Dept. of Agriculture. Atlas of American agriculture. Physical basis including land relief, climate, soils, and natural vegetation of the United States. Prepared under the supervision of O. E. Baker, Bureau of Agricultural Economics. Washington, U. S. Govt. Print. Off. 1936. 6 v in 1. Agr 36–297 S441.A15 1936a

This atlas was originally planned in 1916 as a monumental undertaking including sections on crops, livestock, size of farms, rural population, etc., but after some experimental advance sheets had been issued, "it was decided to confine the publication of data in atlas form to the physical conditions, which are more or less permanent." Much of the other material assembled was published in the Yearbook and other publications of the Department. The Atlas as finally published has, therefore, rather more kinship with the titles entered in our Chapter VI on Geography than with most of the other titles in the present chapter. However, the sections by Joseph B. Kincer on "Temperature, Sunshine, and Wind" and "Precipitation and Humidity," by William Gardner Reed on "Frost and the Growing Season," by Curtis F. Marbut on "Soils of the United States," by Homer L. Shantz on "Grassland and Desert Shrub," and by Raphael Zon on "Forests" are basic to any geographical approach to American agriculture. Each section consists of an extensive text, as well as a series of maps, most of which are colored.

5817. U. S. Dept. of Agriculture. Land. Washington, U. S. Govt. Print. Off. [1958] 605 p., 64 p. of plates. (Its Yearbook of agriculture, 1958)
"A summary in charts and maps": p. 263–276.
Agr 58–321 S21.A35 1958

This latest yearbook of the Department of Agriculture, edited by Alfred Stefferud, is concerned with the use, management, present trends, and future of public and private lands in the United States. It consists of 67 relatively brief and untechnical papers arranged under 10 general headings; the majority of the papers are of double, triple, or even quadruple authorship. The section on public lands includes essays on these relatively unfamiliar subjects: "The Management of State Lands," "Getting and Using Lands in Time of War," and "The Management of Tribal Lands." A large section deals with "Some Financial Aspects of Land Use"; its final paper tells us that "Getting Started in Farming Is Hard." Another large section on conservation concludes with "Information on Land from Airphotos," indicating the peacetime uses of a wartime technique, and including 16 pages of airphotos of typical farm regions throughout the United States. Of special interest are the concluding sections, "Our Growing Needs and Problems" and "Planning for a Better Use." In the former, Professor M. Mason Gaffney of the University of Missouri puts the pertinent question, "Urban Expansion—Will It Ever Stop?" There is practically no bibliographical apparatus, but there is a considerable index.

5818. Van Dersal, William R. The American land, its history and its uses. London, New York, Oxford University Press, 1943. xvi, 215 p.
43–14146 S441.V3

This book fills the need for a general introduction to the American land, and how it is used for agriculture, including livestock, for forests and woodlands, and for wildlife and recreation. In the first two chapters the land as it was in the beginning is contrasted with the land as it is now. The author interprets the change which has taken place as equivalent to the development of European culture into a truly American civilization. In nine chapters, comprising over half the book, he traces the origin of certain basic crops and describes their contribution to that development. Concluding chapters describe the menace of erosion to our fertile topsoil, and the new methods of farming, such as contour cultivation and terracing, which are reducing its destruction.

B. Agriculture: History

5819. Barger, Harold, and Hans H. Landsberg. American agriculture, 1899–1939; a study of output, employment and productivity. New York, National Bureau of Economic Research, 1942. xxii, 440 p. (Publications of the National Bureau of Economic Research, no. 42) "Charts: sources and notes": p. [409]–413. 43–2979 HD1761.B3

Charts and graphs are extensively used to illustrate the authors' analysis of the results of a number of studies of agricultural "output" and its constituent parts. Part 1 describes agriculture as a segment of the Nation's industry, and defines "output as consisting of those products which are not consumed in further processing within agriculture but are available for consumption elsewhere." In part 2 their index to the aggregate product of agriculture is explained, as well as the rise, or in some cases the decline, of individual products, as both are affected by foreign market and domestic demand. The growth of nutrition as a science and the changes in dietary habits which affect consumption are discussed in a chapter on "Agriculture and the Nation's Food." The development of agricultural technology, from improvements in machinery to bettered strains of plants and animals, is reviewed in part 3 as a prelude to a comparison of output with changes in the volume of agricultural employment. Output has increased, and may be expected to increase, as the number of workers declines. In part 4, "Summary and Conclusions," the authors point out that long-range factors such as technical progress and changes in population and in demand for foodstuffs will continue, as they have in the past, to force agriculture to adjust itself to changing conditions.

5820. Bidwell, Percy Wells, and John I. Falconer. History of agriculture in the northern United States, 1620–1860. Washington, Carnegie Institution of Washington, 1925. 512 p. (Carnegie Institution of Washington. Publication no. 358)
25–13458 S441.B5
HC101.C75, no. 5

This is the fifth in the series of Contributions to American economic history projected in 1904 by the Department of Economics and Sociology of the Carnegie Institution of Washington. Parts 1–3, by Dr. Bidwell, deal with developments in field husbandry, livestock, farm labor and equipment, trade in agricultural products, and land tenure, principally in New England and the Middle States during the years 1620 to 1840. Part 4, by Dr. Falconer, covers the two decades 1840 to 1860, characterized as "The Period of Transformation," and describes the shifting of crops, dairy farming, and livestock from area to area as it was influenced by climate and soil, labor, transportation, and markets. Chapters are devoted to agricultural machinery, to the diffusion of information, and to each of the major crops, as well as to animal production. An extensive classified and critical bibliography (p. 454–473) adds to the book's value as a reference work for students of American economic history.

5821. Carrier, Lyman. The beginnings of agriculture in America. New York, McGraw-Hill, 1923. xvii, 323 p. illus. (Agricultural and biological publications; C. V. Piper, consulting editor)
23–5941 S441.C3

Bibliography: p. 308–312.

The author aims to bring together "from widely separated and often nearly unavailable sources pertinent facts and observations on the early history of agriculture, especially in America," and has liberally sprinkled his text with extracts from contemporary writers. Against a background of economic and social conditions in each of the Colonies, aboriginal agriculture and the indigenous plants, as supplemented by the introduction of European crops and cultivated by simple imported farm implements, are described in full. The author demonstrates in detail that Indian agriculture had actually reached a complex stage of development, and that its methods as well as its crops were in large part taken over by the white settlements. The closing chapters discuss the effect of the introduction of slavery, the development of commerce, and the manufacture of alcoholic beverages on colonial agriculture.

5822. Cohn, David L. The life and times of King Cotton. New York, Oxford University Press, 1956. 286 p.
56–10457 HD9076.C56

A socioeconomic history which tells "something of an agriculture that fashioned the life of a great region and profoundly affected the destiny of the whole American people." The first seven chapters trace the story of cotton from Eli Whitney's cotton gin, which brought about profound internal changes in the United States and gave cotton a place of international importance, through the Civil War, which precipitated the breaking-up of plantations into small family farms and the spread of sharecropping. In the last four chapters the author describes the spread of cotton cultivation westward, the movement of the cotton-textile industry from New England to the South, and the increase of competition from foreign countries and man-made fibers, against a background (after 1929) of Government measures to bolster farm prices. Mr. Cohn does not conclude on an optimistic note: "While cotton is fighting a losing battle for a diminishing share of the home market, it is fighting a spectacularly losing battle in the export market." The latest phase of this historic crop is analyzed by James H. Street in The New Revolution in the Cotton Economy; Mechanization and Its Consequences (Chapel Hill, University of North Carolina Press, 1957. xvi, 294 p.). Harvesting machinery was not introduced on a large scale until the latter years of World War II, but by 1955 nearly one-fourth of the American crop was mechanically harvested, and in the western cotton regions virtually all stages of production had been mechanized. Mr. Street treats these developments as a problem in "the cumulative character of technical progress," and seeks to determine their relation to the decline in the agricultural labor force and in share tenancy in the cotton areas. A comprehensive history of another major Southern crop, if one of less geographical extent than cotton, is Joseph Carlyle Sitterson's Sugar Country; the Cane Sugar Industry in the South, 1753–1950 ([Lexington] University of Kentucky Press, 1953. 414 p.). Save for one chapter on sugar in the Florida Everglades since 1880, it concentrates upon southern Louisiana and eastern Texas. The first part, more than half of the whole, is concerned with slavery times; the second narrates the recovery of sugar culture from the dislocations of the Civil War, and from the mosaic disease which nearly extinguished it during the 1920's.

5823. Gray, Lewis Cecil. History of agriculture in the southern United States to 1860, by Lewis Cecil Gray, assisted by Esther Katherine Thompson. Washington, Carnegie Institution of Washington, 1933. 2 v. (Carnegie Institution of Washington. Publication no. 430)

Bibliography: v. 2, p. [943]–1016.
33–6309 S445.G8
HC101.C75, no. 7
AS32.A5, no. 430

This companion work to Bidwell and Falconer (no. 5820) rounds out the history of agriculture in the United States prior to the Civil War. The first volume describes the beginnings and development of agriculture during the colonial period, in Virginia, Maryland, the Carolinas, the lower Mississippi Valley, the Gulf coastal plains, Georgia, and Florida. Chapters are devoted to the various agricultural industries of the period with emphasis on the tobacco industry. A striking contrast is drawn between the Southern plantation with its "capitalistic type of agricultural organization in which a considerable number of unfree laborers were employed under unified direction and control in the production of a staple crop," and the small self-sustaining farms of the North. However, the author points out in greater detail than has been done before that "the great majority of the Southern people lived on small farms and worked with their own hands." The second volume covers the period of transition from colonial to national economy, extending from the American Revolution to the Civil War. It analyzes the development of the national economy, agricultural industries, and methods of husbandry. The statistics, the wealth of footnotes, the extensive bibliography, the many maps, charts, and tables, with the comprehensive index, evidence the years of research (since 1908) and patient organization that went into these volumes. In scholarly fashion, the author has achieved his goal of attempting to interpret "the way of life of a great section of our country, which was almost entirely agricultural, to describe its system of agricultural organization, to discern, if possible, the forces that moulded its socio-economic life, and trace the interrelations of its economy and its institutions."

5824. Hedrick, Ulysses P. A history of horticulture in America to 1860. New York, Oxford University Press, 1950. 551 p. 50–6898 SB83.H4
Bibliography: p. 515–523.

A distinguished horticulturist of New York State undertakes to supply the lack, not only of any general history, but of any thorough regional or State histories of American horticulture. His book "is primarily concerned with gardening, fruit growing, and viticulture; not with gardens, orchards and vineyards . . . The places described in this text are only those that are significant examples of progress." Part 1 covers the colonial period and, after an initial chapter on "Indian Gardens," proceeds geographically, but here and later the author is careful to discriminate the contribution in plants and arts of Spaniards, Dutch, Swedes, and Germans, upon which, in most areas, British Isles horticulture was eventually superimposed. Part 2 covers the years from the Peace of Paris to the Civil War according to a more minute chronological breakdown in the older areas, and to a less minute one in the areas more newly settled. Part 3 has chapters on four topics: botanic explorers and gardens, "The Dawn of Plant Breeding," "Horticultural Literature" from 1700, and "Horticultural Societies" from 1790.

5825. Holt, Rackham. George Washington Carver, an American biography. Garden City, Doubleday, Doran, 1943. 342 p. illus.
43–51106 S417.C3H6

George Carver (1864?–1943) did not know when he was born, but it must have been during the last year or two of Negro slavery. Since his education had to be entirely self-financed, he was about 30 before he obtained his degree from one of the land-grant colleges, the Iowa State College of Agriculture and Mechanic Arts. Two years later Booker T. Washington (nos. 4449–4450) called him to the post he was to hold for the rest of his life, in charge of agriculture at Tuskegee Institute. Effective in his teaching, he was a genius in the laboratory which he had created out of odds and ends. Here, in an extraordinary series of experiments in chemical analysis and synthesis, he revealed the potentialities of the peanut and the sweet potato, and opened the way for a badly needed diversification of Southern agriculture. The peanut, not even regarded as a crop in 1896, stood second to cotton as a source of cash for Southern farmers by 1940. Carver's own writings consisted chiefly of leaflets and articles giving practical hints to Negro and other small Southern farmers; an article of 1915 is typical: "The Fat of the Land—How the Colored Farmer Can Live on It Twenty-one Times Each Week." Mrs. Holt's biography is largely a succession of anecdotes derived from Dr. Carver or his friends, but they are cumulatively impressive. Of Carver's many achievements the greatest was certainly this: the contempt and indignities he had had to endure from ignorant whites did not leave a trace of rancor or resentment in him. (This title also appears as no. 2690 in Chapter IV on Biography and Autobiography.)

5826. Hutchinson, William T. Cyrus Hall McCormick. New York, Century Co., 1930–35. 2 v. illus. 30–30678 HD9486.U4M35

This is a definitive biography of an important inventor, and a history of the influence of the reaper on the agricultural development of the Middle West, and of the building of a great manufacturing dynasty in Chicago. Each volume is complete within itself with bibliographical guide and index. The first volume, "Seed-Time, 1809–1856," traces the life of Cyrus Hall McCormick (1809-1884) from its beginnings in the Valley of Virginia, where he worked with his inventive father in the manufacture and sale of farm equipment, and finally invented the reaper. It carries him to the eve of the Civil War, with a manufacturing business established in Chicago that had brought him recognition as an outstanding entrepreneur. The controversy as to whether Cyrus or his father, Robert McCormick, was the real inventor is reviewed in chapter 5 and is adjudged in favor of the son. The second volume, "Harvest, 1856–1884," carries the narrative of the harvest-machine industry to the inventor's death in 1884, and also describes McCormick's activities in the church, in politics, and in philanthropy. In the centennial year of the invention, Cyrus McCormick, grandson of the inventor, published The Century of the Reaper (Boston, Houghton Mifflin, 1931. 307 p.), which provides a convenient briefer narrative, considerably indebted to Hutchinson's massive research.

5827. Neely, Wayne Caldwell. The agricultural fair. New York, Columbia University Press, 1935. 313 p. (Columbia University studies in the history of American agriculture, edited by H. J. Carman and R. G. Tugwell, 2)
35–27113 S555.A7N4 1935a

Bibliography: p. [265]–290.

Following the English custom, which originated in medieval times, fairs for the sale of agricultural products were held during the colonial period, but owe their crystallization as a distinctive American institution to Elkanah Watson of Pittsfield, Mass., who promoted the first "modern" fair in 1811. The author presents the development of the agricultural fair, with its economic, educational, recreational, and social aspects, against a background of changing society. A period of decline following 1820 was succeeded by one of expansion after 1840. "The core of the agricultural fair is the exhibition of agricultural products for prizes." The county fair, as it is now usually called, illustrates the pride of a people in improving and displaying the products of their labor for the mutual benefit of all.

5828. Phillips, Ulrich Bonnell. Life and labor in the Old South. Boston, Little, Brown, 1929. xix, 375 p. 29–11204 F209.P56

As a student of history and a young instructor, the Georgia-born Phillips (1877–1934) was struck with the idea that the interpretation of the South by historians had been distorted. He believed that a study of the Old South "from the inside" was needed, and by the time he wrote this book had already spent years of research among plantation records, diaries, account books, and correspondence, some of which he found in the garrets of Southern houses. In the first chapter he describes the soil and climate that determined the crops and the organization of labor as well as the habits of life and tempers of men—plantation owners, overseers, and slaves. He describes the plantation as a "homestead, isolated, permanent and peopled by a social group with a common interest in achieving and maintaining social order," and as a factory, a school, a parish, a pageant, and a variety show. He reviews the Southern scene from the "big house" and relates sympathetically the instances of friction that weakened the socioeconomic bonds holding planters and slaves together. Awarded a $2,500 prize offered by Little, Brown and Company in 1928 for the best manuscript on American history, this book was the first in a projected series of three on the South. The second, The Course of the South to Secession (no. 3404), left incomplete at the time of his death, was sponsored by the American Historical Association with deep appreciation of Phillips' "fruitful labor."

5829. Robert, Joseph C. The story of tobacco in America. New York, Knopf, 1949. xii, 296, xxiv p. illus. 49–8562 SB273.R58

The influence of tobacco on the economic, political, and social history of the United States is traced from the time when smoking by the natives of the New World was observed by the earliest explorers to its present position as a big business, in 1948 yielding $1,300,280,000 in Federal excise taxes. The low price of the staple in Virginia of the 1670's led to Bacon's Rebellion, and in the first decade of the 20th century created conflicts, such as the Kentucky Black Patch War, between the tobacco trusts, the farmers, and certain protective associations. Its use as currency in the era before the American Revolution strained the relations between the colonists and England, led to the famous Parson's Cause, and carried Patrick Henry into prominence as a defender of American rights. The staple helped to create the pattern of the Southern plantation based on slave labor, and of sweatshop conditions among the cigar manufacturers in the New York tenements. The author describes the nicotine habits of Americans in all strata of society—from chewing, sniffing, and dipping to smoking cigars and cigarettes—as well as the numerous anti-tobacco movements that have attempted to dictate social habits. Considered a "divinely-sent remedy for virtually all ailments of the human body" in mid-16th century, its effect on health in the 20th is the subject of extensive research by the medical laboratory.

5830. Rogin, Leo. The introduction of farm machinery in its relation to the productivity of labor in the agriculture of the United States during the nineteenth century. Berkeley, University of California Press, 1931. 260 p. illus. (University of California publications in economics, v. 9)
A31–750 H31.C2, v. 9
S751.R6 1931

Issued also as thesis (Ph. D.) Columbia University.
"Index of authors cited": p. 244–251.

This is a study of the machinery used in the tillage of the soil, and in cultivating, threshing, and harvesting wheat, and the resulting effects upon the manhour requirements for crop production. Part 1 relates the development and utilization of the various types of plows, the harrow, and the field cultivator. In sections 1–3 of part 2, the introduction and use of harvesting machinery, the threshing machine, and seeding machinery are traced. The author has ascertained the man-labor requirements as affected by the various types of machinery, and in the last chapter compares those requirements at the beginning with those at the end of the 19th century. For instance, in 1830 it took over 64 hours to put in and secure an acre of winter wheat by hand; in 1895 the same operations could be effected by machinery in little more than two hours! The numerous illustrations, statistical tables, extensive footnotes, and bibliography are of special value for the research worker.

5831. Saloutos, Theodore, and John D. Hicks. Agricultural discontent in the Middle West, 1900–1939. Madison, University of Wisconsin Press, 1951. 581 p. 51–4287 HD1773.A3S3

This is an enlargement of Dr. Saloutos' doctoral dissertation, to which his teacher Dr. Hicks has contributed chapters 1, 2, and 4. Wisconsin, Illinois, Minnesota, Iowa, Missouri, the Dakotas, Nebraska, and Kansas are described as the center of discontent where movements for agrarian reform flourished. In the early years of the 20th century, the antimonopolistic philosophy of the Middle Western farmers was voiced in Congress by such leaders as Robert M. LaFollette of Wisconsin, George Norris of Nebraska, and Henrik Shipstead of Minnesota, who sought reforms in railroad regulation, the tariff, taxation, conservation, and other spheres. The authors analyze the economic and political role of the American Society of Equity, the Nonpartisan League, the Farmers Union, and the American Farm Bureau Federation. They describe the efforts of the cooperative movement, the Farm Bloc, third-party ventures, and the New Deal to get higher prices, better credit facilities, surplus-control regulations, cooperative methods of marketing and purchasing, and other measures to better the farmer's position. During this period the "trust busting" tactics of the agrarians were abandoned in favor of building "restrictive devices patterned to a great degree after those of industry."

5832. Schafer, Joseph. The social history of American agriculture. New York, Macmillan, 1936. 302 p. 36–27407 HD191.S4

This book originated in a series of lectures given at the University of London by Dr. Schafer (1867–1941), superintendent of the State Historical Society of Wisconsin for 20 years. While each chapter was prepared as a rounded treatment of a distinct topic, the whole is "a comprehensive survey of the social history of agriculture." Chapter 1, "Land for Farmers," traces the continuing conflict between squatters and speculators, and the attempts made from time to time to democratize the land laws so as to favor actual settlers. Chapters 2 and 3 contrast the "Primitive Subsistence Farming" which characterized the advancing frontier with the "Big Business Farming" which is as old as the tobacco plantation, and prevailed in Middle Western wheat growing and Great Plains ranching. "Improved Farming" describes the movement, which acquired momentum in the older sections of the country about 1830, to halt soil exhaustion, diversify crops, and breed better livestock. "Professional Farming" describes the application of scientific analysis and experimental methods to American agriculture, the decisive step in which was the Morrill Act of 1862 providing for agricultural education in the land-grant colleges. "Social Trends in Rural Life" describes the old landholding aristocracies, the rise of an agricultural democracy of "worker-farmers," and the problem of maintaining it in the face of a large influx of European immigrants of peasant status and mentality. The concluding chapters are "Political Trends in Rural Life" and "The Outlook for Farmers," the latter of which has hardly been borne out by subsequent developments.

5833. Taylor, Carl C. The farmers' movement, 1620–1920. [New York] American Book Co., 1953. 519 p. (American sociology series)
53–9515 HD1761.T25

Bibliography: p. 501–508.

A volume which achieves an exceptionally large perspective by running "a conceptual thread through an elaborate and diverse body of recorded history." Mr. Taylor maintains that a farmers' movement has existed not merely since the 1870's but since early colonial days, for it is as old as commercial agriculture in America. It arose out of and still revolves about the issues of prices, markets, and credits, originated "with the awareness of farmers that they had become a part of the price and market economy," and has been "continued by the more or less organized efforts of farmers either to protect themselves against the impact of the evolving commercial-capitalist economy or to catch step with it." The various farmers' revolts, only a few of which have been marked by violence or bloodshed, are the high tides in a movement unified by a continuing body of ideologies and sentiments, and taking the form of a series of recurrent farmer "publics." Although Mr. Taylor calls his book "a sociological analysis," it is primarily a historical characterization of successive forms of protest, from the plant-cutters of Stuart Virginia to the Nonpartisan League and the cooperative marketing movement. In fact only the first 87 pages are concerned with developments prior to the Civil War.

5834. Taylor, Henry C., and Anne (Dewees) Taylor. The story of agricultural economics in the United States, 1840–1932; men, services, ideas. Farm finance section by Norman J. Wall. Ames, Iowa State College Press, 1952. xxvi, 1121 p.
52–14651 HD 1761.T28

The Taylors present in one large and comprehensive volume the development of thinking about the business phases of farming. They analyze the contributions of schools, experiment stations, colleges, and the Federal Government to the various practices that determine success or failure in agrarian industries and play an important part in the national welfare. The taking of the first agricultural census in 1840 marks the beginning of Government information services to meet the needs of farmers, and 1932 is the "dividing line between two eras." Dr. Taylor (b. 1873) is particularly well qualified to write a book of this scope: he was the first professor of agricultural economics in a land grant institution, the organizer and first chief of the U. S. Bureau of Agricultural Economics, and the author of the first book (1905) to bear "agricultural economics" in its title. The subjects of marketing, rural finance, agricultural labor and wages, transportation, and taxation, which were omitted in his early work but have come to importance since, are adequately covered in the present study. The authors have made "writers of the period tell the story," and afford direct access to the source material which, until now, has been widely scattered. The very thorough index by Adelaide R. Hasse serves also as a bibliography.

5835. Thornton, Harrison John. The history of the Quaker Oats Company. Chicago, University of Chicago Press, 1933. 279 p.
33–14986 HD9039.Q3T5 1933

Bibliography: p. 258–267.

The Quaker Oats Company, which was incorporated in 1901 as a New Jersey holding company, but one unit of which goes back to 1832, is typical of the many processing enterprises that have grown out of agricultural production. The author of this University of Chicago dissertation had access to company records for his account of the individuals, the technological changes, the financial growth, the expanding markets, and the advertising methods that have consolidated several smaller business units into a great industry. He begins his story with the cultivation of oats as it spread westward from the Eastern seaboard, describes the processes of the early millers, inspired by Ferdinand Schumacher (1822–1908), the "Oatmeal King," and narrates the expansion of the company as manufacturers of rolled oats, "puffed rice" and "puffed wheat," animal feeds, and related products. From the conquest of the American breakfast table by cereals hot or cold to the building of world markets, "the story of the Quaker Oats Company is part of the unfolding economy of American life."

5836. True, Alfred Charles. A history of agricultural education in the United States, 1785–1925. Washington, U. S. Govt. Print. Off., 1929. 436 p. illus. (U. S. Dept. of Agriculture. Miscellaneous publication no. 36)
Agr. 29–1377 S533.T837
S21.A46, no. 36

Contribution from Extension Service.

Bibliography: p. 397–420.

As Director of the Office of Experiment Stations (1893–1915) and of the States Relations Service (1915–23), Dr. True of the U. S. Department of Agriculture was intimately associated, during the period of their greatest expansion, with agencies of agricultural education whose history he wrote in two other works issued as Department of Agriculture Miscellaneous publications, nos. 15 and 251 respectively, by the U.S. Government Printing Office: A History of Agricultural Extension Work in the United States, 1785–1923 (Washington, 1928. 220 p.), and A History of Agricultural Experimentation and Research in the United States, 1607–1925, Including a History of the United States Department of Agriculture (Washington, 1937. 321 p.). The present history of agricultural education in its relation "to the general development and progress of science and education and to the background of economic conditions and of organizations of various kinds for the promotion of agriculture and country life," begins with the post-Revolutionary period, when the foundations of the American system were being modeled upon European schools and literature. From 1820 to 1860 the growth of agricultural societies and publications, fairs, state boards of agriculture, and of general education evoked a movement for public support which resulted in the establishment of land grant colleges under the Morrill Act of 1862. The book deals in large part with agricultural education since the passage of that act and extends to an analysis of agriculture in the elementary curriculum of the 1920's.

677676 O–63–57

5837. U.S. Dept. of Agriculture. Farmers in a changing world. [Washington] U.S. Govt. Print. Off., 1940. 1215 p. illus. (Its Yearbook of agriculture, 1940) Agr 55–7 S21.A35 1940

A brief chronology of American agricultural history: p. 1184–1196.

This noteworthy volume of the distinguished series of agricultural yearbooks which has been appearing since 1894 has the largest scope of any. More than 70 authors contribute to an analysis of the economic, social, and technological changes which have been taking place especially since 1920, and of the farmer's reactions to them. The seven parts into which the symposium is divided indicate its scope: "The Farmer's Changing World," "Agriculture and the National Welfare," "The Farmer's Problems Today and the Efforts to Solve Them" (p. 385–937), "Farm Organizations," "What Some Social Scientists Have to Say," "Democracy and Agricultural Policy," and "Essentials of Agricultural Policy." The contents are summarized in a long preliminary essay by the editor, Gove Hambidge, "Farmers in a Changing World—a Summary" (p. 1–100). The final essay, by the then Chief of the Bureau of Agricultural Economics, Howard R. Tolley, "Some Essentials of a Good Agricultural Policy" (p. 1159–1183), sums up the ideas and the objectives of the farm policies of the New Deal. An idea that recurs throughout the volume is expounded by Louis H. Bean in "The Farmer's Stake in Greater Industrial Production": if the latter could be increased to a point near capacity, "not all farm problems but many of the worst of them would disappear." That increase was on the point of taking place.

5838. Wilcox, Walter W. The farmer in the Second World War. Ames, Iowa State College Press, 1947. 410 p.
Agr 47–260 HD1761.W44

This Government-sponsored study aims to give "an integrated picture of the important economic forces affecting United States farmers during the second World War." It brings together from scattered sources, including interviews and correspondence with Government officials, the significant facts relating to agricultural production, marketing, manpower, and farm prices and wages. In many instances it makes comparisons with similar factors during World War I. To a great extent it is an interpretation of Government programs as they affected agriculture, and of farmer reaction to those programs. World War II brought about a shift from programs created to help the farmer in a depressed period to programs for meeting war-created scarcities. After describing price policies in general and in the several fields of agriculture, the author analyzes the economic implications of such policies for the future, examines Government management of the food supply in relation to winning the war, and describes the technological processes that increased output in spite of reduced manpower. He concludes: "Though substantial progress has been recorded in farm families' standard of living and in the legislation designed to improve and stabilize their income, the basic problems remain unsolved."

C. Agriculture: Practice

5839. Black, John Donald. Farm management [by] John D. Black [and others]. New York, Macmillan, 1947. 1073 p.
Agr 47–314 S561.B53

"Further reading" at end of most of the chapters.

A massive textbook for advanced courses in agricultural colleges by John D. Black, Marion Clawson, Charles R. Sayre, and Walter W. Wilcox; the advantage of quadruple authorship is that each author is most familiar with the farming of a different major region of the United States. The manager of a farm business, who in the United States is usually also a farm laborer, has "to organize it, to plan the work and direct it from day to day, and to plan, and on most farms actually conduct, the buying and selling and the financing or credit operations." He should analyze his problems in terms of his farm as a whole, and according to the methods of Farm Management, which "is applied Science—not just applied Economics, but also applied Biology, Physics, Chemistry, Geology, Meteorology, Psychology and even Sociology." Part 2, "Systems of Farming," distinguishes between one-crop, specialized livestock, diversified-crop, feed-and-livestock, and crop-and-livestock farming. Part 3, "Principles and Methods of Analysis," includes a chapter on "Measures of Success and Factors of Success in Farming." Part 4, "Problems of Management," has chapters on the management of farm equipment, of labor on farms, and of land. Part 5 is on "Management by Types of Farming" determined by the product such as wheat or sheep, but it also has chapters on "Irrigation Farming," "The Management of Farm Woodland," and "Part-Time and Self-Sufficing Farming." The authors emphasize that farm management is essentially the farmer's reaction to external factors, principally weather, prices and costs, and technological advance.

5840. Black, John Donald. The rural economy of New England, a regional study. With the assistance of the Committee on Research in the Social Sciences and the Graduate School of Public Administration of Harvard University. Cambridge, Harvard University Press, 1950. xxiv, 796 p. diagrs., maps. 50–9844 HD1773.A2B5

This substantial volume is the result of 30 years' intensive study of the rural land-use economy of New England by a Harvard professor of economics, drawing upon successive national censuses and "the whole research effort of the six New England Agricultural Experiment Stations since they were founded, and of the federal research agencies cooperating with them." It is presented as "a case study in regional analysis," showing what can be achieved for other areas by the same kind of detailed study. Dr. Black regards it as particularly significant because New England has undergone the maximum of industrial and urban development, and "the distribution of land uses between rural and urban which one finds in New England—among crops, pasture, woodlot, and forest, among pleasure ground, country home, and suburban home—is likely to characterize, in some future period, almost as large a part of our national domain as is the more largely agricultural distribution" of the Midwest and South. Chapter 14 (p. [250]–271) is a sketch of New England agricultural history aiming to show how and when it acquired its present characters: "largely a region of dairy cows and fluid milk, hay and pasture, and poultry and vegetables for local consumption," and "a region mainly of ordinary family-sized farms interspersed freely in many sections with part-time, country-home, and other residential farms." The author concludes that "the great retrogression that set in before the Civil War" in New England agriculture leveled out about 1920, that its forestry should soon "round the turn," and that residential and recreational use should continue to expand. But all these depend upon New England industry and trade maintaining themselves, and all will go better if active policies replace the recent tendency to drift and stagnate.

5841. Davis, John H., and Kenneth Hinshaw. Farmer in a business suit. New York, Simon & Schuster, 1957. 241 p. 57–7308 HD1761.D35

Dr. Davis was Assistant Secretary of Agriculture in President Eisenhower's first administration, and has since been with the Harvard Graduate School of Business Administration; his collaborator handles publications and public relations for Eastern States Farmers' Exchange. Dr. Davis has been engaged in working out a new approach, of which he has given a technical and statistical analysis with another collaborator, Ray A. Goldberg: A Concept of Agribusiness (Boston, Division of Research, Graduate School of Business Administration, Harvard University, 1957. xiv, 136 p.). With Mr. Hinshaw he aims at a popular presentation of the idea by means of a fictional narrative of three generations of an Oregon family farm, with interlarded commentary. "The Earthbound Era" lasted from about 1880 to 1920. "The Transition," from about 1920 to 1940, saw farmers overwhelmed by problems, because "confronted with the necessity of buying a modern standard of living instead of being able to create it to a considerable degree directly from the soil of their farms." In the present "Agribusiness Era" the supply of farms, productive operations on farms, and the preparation of farm products for the market are three inseparable and interdependent stages of a single economic process. The greatest needs are for "versatile, better, and more appealing ways to market agricultural products," and for more research to find new crops or new uses for present overproduced crops. There is no master plan for agricultural salvation, but "little by little we can win the battle of the farm problem by developing successful agribusiness programs for each type of farming or each farm product."

5842. Fetrow, Ward W., and Ralph H. Elsworth. Agricultural cooperation in the United States. Washington [U. S. Govt. Print. Off.] 1948. 214 p. (U. S. Farm Credit Administration. Bulletin 54) Agr 48–486 HG2051.U5A574, no. 54

"This publication is designed to provide information on some of the more general phases of the cooperative movement among farmers and also a description of the organizations and the methods of operation of associations in the various fields of cooperative endeavor." The introductory matter includes a brief historical sketch, a statement of principles, and a statistical treatment of the extent of cooperative activity. "Cooperation in Farm Production" (p. 17–28) is a relatively minor aspect, but does include the mutual irrigation companies of long standing and various product-improvement groups. "Cooperation in Marketing Farm Products" (p. 29–135) is much the longest section and describes the area of greatest success. In 1945 there were 7,400 marketing associations, with an estimated membership of 2,895,000 and an estimated annual business of $4,835 millions. "Cooperative Purchasing of Farm Supplies" (p. 141–154) became a major development only after 1920. In 1945 it numbered 2,750 groups, 1,610,000 members, and an annual business of $810 millions. "Cooperative Farm Business Services" (p. 155–185) includes financing, insurance, and telephone organizations. Cooperation flourishes, but the mortality of cooperative organizations has been and remains high; 15,530 defunct marketing or purchasing groups are of record. The reasons for this are only very tentatively arrived at.

5843. Haystead, Ladd, and Gilbert C. Fite. The agricultural regions of the United States. Norman, University of Oklahoma Press, 1955. xx, 288 p. 55–9620 S441.H35

"Notes on sources and additional reading": p. 276–280.

5844. Mighell, Ronald L. American agriculture, its structure and place in the economy. For the Social Science Research Council in cooperation with the U. S. Dept. of Agriculture, Agricultural Research Service, and the U. S. Dept. of Commerce, Bureau of the Census. New York, Wiley, 1955. 187 p. (Census monograph series)
55–8179 HD1761.M48

The first title is a concise economic geography of American agriculture which emphasizes its diversity and its efficiency. It is intended for all "interested in why the greatest industrial nation in the world should also have the largest farm output and be one of the most varied in agricultural production." The average American farm of 1950 included 215.3 acres, each worth $64.96 (as against figures of 133.7 and $19.02 for 1880) but no one could point to a typical American farm. There is, however, a typical American farm product, corn, which "has something over six hundred uses, ranging all the way from bourbon whiskey to the sizing that makes the paper in magazines slick." The remaining 11 chapters survey as many regions, from "New England: Land of Abandonment" to "The Western Slope: Land of Tomorrow." Sketch maps, dot maps, and 89 well-constructed statistical tables permit a very rapid apprehension of essential factors. Dr. Mighell of the Agricultural Research Service of the Department of Agriculture provides a statistical view of American agriculture based upon the 1950 census (for other volumes in the series see no. 4395). He furnishes a number of dot and other maps, but for the most part his tabulations of "Agriculture in the Total Economic Process," "Dimensions of the Agricultural Plant," "Structure of Commercial Farms" by scale and type, "Farm Tenure and Debt," and "Social Features of the Structure of Agriculture" apply to American agriculture as a whole.

5845. Larson, Adlowe L. Agricultural marketing. New York, Prentice-Hall, 1951. xiv, 519 p.
51–3575 HD9006.L28

A simply written textbook by a professor of agricultural economics at Oklahoma State University of Agriculture and Applied Science. Marketing is defined as "the performance of business activities that direct the flow of goods and services from producer to consumer"; it becomes a subject for separate study as the degree of specialization in the economy increases. Part 1 is a general discussion of the market for agricultural products as determined by population, employment, national and family income, consumption, and export outlets, and this market's place in the national economy. Part 2 describes the several types of marketing agencies, local, wholesale, and retail. Part 3 analyzes the operations or marketing functions of these agencies under two categories: monetary handling which includes buying and selling, risking, and financing; and physical handling, which includes storage, transportation, and standardization. Part 4 describes the marketing process in four major commodities: grain, cotton, livestock, and dairy products. Part 5 introduces the theory of pricing, and assesses the effect of monopolistic tendencies in recent price developments. The sixth and last part has chapters on seven "problem areas": marketing costs, information, and research; trade barriers; futures trading; agricultural cooperation; and Federal policies.

5846. McWilliams, Carey. Ill fares the land; migrants and migratory labor in the United States. Boston, Little, Brown, 1942. 419 p.
42–5664 HD1525.M35

Bibliography: p. [391]–411.

The plight of the migratory workers was little noticed until they began arriving in California by the tens of thousands. Attention was focused on them by John Steinbeck's novel of 1939, Grapes of Wrath (no. 1777), which was followed in quick succession by the investigations of the La Follette and Tolan Committees, the inquiry of the Temporary National Economic Committee into technological changes in agriculture, and other forms of publicity. As chief of the Division of Immigration and Housing for the State of California from 1938 to 1942, the author was directly concerned with problems of migratory labor. He emphasized the people and their plight in this book, but also indicated the forces which had produced two types of agricultural migrants—those displaced from their own farms and those who were habitual migratory workers. Book 1 deals with the problems of migrants in the highly industrialized agriculture found in California and Arizona. Book 2 is documented from the Congressional investigations which revealed that the California situation was paralleled in many respects by conditions in Colorado, Ohio, Indiana, the east coast, and elsewhere. Book 3 describes conditions in the homes from which the California migrants came, and argues that the dust storms of Oklahoma and Texas had been given too much of the blame for a manmade situation. Book 4 is concerned with the agricultural revolution of the 20th century, during which technological advances have brought about a swing from farm ownership and family operation to farm tenancy, and have turned the hired hand into the migrant laborer. It reviews measures taken by State and Federal governments to relieve the situation and considers long-range programs for its solution. Most of this dislocation was resolved by the manpower shortage of World War II, but the bad days described in this indignant book have remained a potent factor in all subsequent measures to maintain American agriculture.

5847. Malott, Deane W., and Boyce F. Martin. The agricultural industries. New York, McGraw-Hill, 1939. 483 p.
40–1402 HD9005.M3 1939
"Selected bibliography": p. 463–476.

The handling and processing of agricultural products have grown during the past century from household industries into fully developed elements of our economic structure. This volume "is designed to present the business aspects of purchasing, processing, financing, and marketing the chief agricultural raw materials entering into American industry and commerce, and to analyze the business problems peculiar to those industries." The industries that use such raw materials as milk, livestock, cotton, grain, sugar, tobacco, and wool are treated in separate chapters. In developing their thesis the authors have used not only Government documents and other published data, but also over 150 actual business problems collected by them from these industries for use in a course on agricultural industries in the Harvard Business School. The authors emphasize that these industries handle the essential food and clothing requirements of the American people, and provide the cash income for our farm population. Their 9th and last chapters, "Summary and Conclusions," argues the similarity if not identity of interest between farmer and "processor": "Both are concerned with making the farmer's product more attractive to the consumer and encouraging the use of it in greater quantities," so that "it is extremely shortsighted for the farmer to consider the processor and handler of agricultural products as an inevitable antagonist." Government programs which help the farmer only by multiplying difficulties for the processor are neither democratic nor economically sound.

5848. Murray, William G. Agricultural finance; principles and practice of farm credit. 3d ed. Ames, Iowa State College Press, 1953. 419 p.
53–12178 HG2051.U5M88 1953

This third edition of a comprehensive textbook originally published in 1941 is a study of the credit principles which guide or should guide the borrowing of funds by farmers, and of the lending organizations which have grown in number and complexity since the Federal Farm Loan Act of 1916 added Federally sponsored agencies to the banks, insurance companies, and individuals already in the field. A new chapter on risk insurance and investment and a second chapter on commercial banks have been added to this third edition. Other changes take account of new legislation, recent statistics, and farm credit changes which have occurred since the second edition (1947). Part 1 seeks to consider credit principles from the vantage points of both borrower and lender, and includes a chapter on "Buying a Farm on Credit." Part 2 now requires 19 chapters to describe the sources and varieties of credit available to the farmer; 12 of them deal with Federal sources as against 5 for other lenders. The Federal Government's battle against farm tenancy in the United States and its measures taken to turn tenants into owner-operators are summarized in the last chapter. The author concludes that, despite the small success of earlier measures, the recent conservative policy of restricting loans during periods of high prices, "plus a widespread movement on the part of farmers generally to pay debts rather than to increase them," will promote a movement up the ladder from tenancy to ownership.

5849. White, John M. The farmer's handbook. New ed., rev. by N. W. Sellers. Norman, University of Oklahoma Press, 1952. 462 p.
52–14154 S501.W54 1952

Mr. White says in his preface: "I have endeavored to condense and put into this book the results of my own experience of fifty years as a farmer, a county agent, a district agent, and a specialist of the United States Department of Agriculture and the Agricultural and Mechanical College of Oklahoma." The first edition of 1948 went through seven printings and rapidly became a standard reference work. The book aims to present in concise form and simple language the most up-to-date information on farm methods gathered from the most reliable sources, and is "intended to be as useful to the farmer as a good cookbook is to the housewife." The material is arranged in topical sections, and alphabetically by subtopics within each section. The first nine sections deal with agriculture, from grain crops to berries, and the next six with stockraising, from beef cattle to poultry and rabbits. Diseases and pests and their antidotes are regularly described. There follow "Feeds and Feeding," "Soil Management," "Beekeeping," "Fish and Wildlife," "Farm Engineering," and "A Little about a Lot," from agricultural colleges to weights and measures. The text is interspersed with numerous photographs, diagrams, and tables, and there is both a glossary of farm terms (p. 433–441) and a substantial index. The Farmer's Handbook provides a rapid overall view of the best farm practices in the United States.

5850. Wilcox, Walter W., and Willard W. Cochrane. Economics of American agriculture. New York, Prentice-Hall, 1951. 594 p.
51–6252 HD1761.W435

A textbook for general courses in agricultural economics which seeks to give a comprehensive picture of its subject by first describing each segment or problem area in American agriculture, and then introducing modern economic analysis to further the understanding of each. These analyses, the authors say, have been kept at an elementary level, but the average reader will find them abstruse enough. Part 1, "Developing Efficiency in the Production of Farm Products," presents the nine major type-of-farming areas into which farm management specialists have classified the country, discusses the most profitable level of capital and labor input and of crop production, and finds that "most farms in the United States are smaller than optimum according to economic standards," but that the average size is steadily rising. Part 2, "Problems in Acquiring and Managing Land," discusses the distribution of farm people (owners, tenants, hired workers), the economic classes of farms (large-scale, part-time, etc.), the problems of tenancy and the extent of inheritance, and the economic effects of taxation. Part 3, "Marketing Farm Products in an Interdependent Economy," concludes that, although more than half the consumer's farm-product dollar goes for processing and distributing, he is in fact choosing to spend his money for additional services (such as packaging) making for greater convenience. The remaining three parts are "Toward an Understanding of Farm Prices," "Farmers in the National and World Economy," and "What Government Aid Do Farmers Need?" References for further study occur at the end of each of the 32 chapters.

D. Agriculture: Government Policies

5851. Bailey, Joseph Cannon. Seaman A. Knapp, schoolmaster of American agriculture. New York, Columbia University Press, 1945. 307 p. (Columbia University studies in the history of American agriculture, no. 10)
A 45–5256 S417.K6B3 1945a

"Selected bibliography": p. [281]–290.

Knapp (1833–1911) began life as a schoolmaster, and was vice president of Ripley Female College at Poultney, Vt., in 1866, when an accident in a softball game nearly cost him a leg and drove him to an Iowa farm for the restoration of his health. Here his strength of mind and character led to a brilliant series of achievements, as leader of the Iowa stockbreeders, professor of agriculture and then president of Iowa State College, director of the colonization experiment at Lake Charles, La., and creator of the rice industry of the Southwest. From 1898 he was associated with the U. S. Department of Agriculture, and in the course of introducing oriental crops into the lower South, and combating the boll weevil menace which became acute in 1903, he hit upon the demonstration farm technique, or Terrell [Tex.] plan, whereby a local farmer who volunteered to adopt the recommended methods was guaranteed against financial loss. "The right psychological key which unlocked the door to the farmer's cooperation had been found." During Dr. Knapp's remaining years he spread this method through the South as "the Farmer's Cooperative Demonstration Work" of the Department, and three years after his death Congress established it on a national scale by the Smith-Lever Act (1914). Dr. Bailey's Columbia dissertation is in large part based on original records of the Department of Agriculture and gives a vivid picture of a strong personality and a public-spirited career that deserves to be remembered.

5852. Baker, Gladys. The county agent. Chicago, University of Chicago Press, 1939. xxi, 226 p. (Studies in public administration, v. 11)
39–21222 S533.B17 1939a

Prepared as a dissertation at the University of Chicago, and in large part based on observation and interviews in the field, especially in Iowa, this is an administrative study of the key man in recent agricultural organization, who began about 1906 "as an adult itinerant vocational teacher" and by 1939 brought national agricultural programs to localities "as a promoter, adviser, semiadministrator, and even as an administrator." He simultaneously represented the Federal, State, and county governments, and might also be "closely allied with a semiprivate farm organization which he has in part built up." The first four chapters describe the origins and evolution of the office from the invasion of the Mexican boll weevil through the peacetime measures of the Roosevelt administration. The remaining four describe the divided responsibility of and for the county agent, the financial support which he received from private as well as public funds, the selection, training, and emoluments of agent personnel, and the Negro county agents who in 15 states paralleled among their own people, on a lower technical level and for less pay, the work of the white agents, but were usually dependent upon "the tolerance and at least mild support" of the latter, and were confronted by tremendous obstacles.

5853. Benedict, Murray R. Farm policies of the United States, 1790–1950; a study of their origins and development. New York, Twentieth Century Fund, 1953. xv, 548 p.
53-7172 HD1761.B37

5854. Benedict, Murray R. Can we solve the farm problem? An analysis of Federal aid to agriculture. With the report and recommendations of the Committee on Agricultural Policy. New York, Twentieth Century Fund, 1955. xix, 601 p.
55-8796 HD1761.B35

5855. Benedict, Murray R., and Oscar C. Stine. The agricultural commodity programs; two decades of experience. New York, Twentieth Century Fund, 1956. xliii, 510 p.
56-12417 HD9006.B42

These three volumes incorporate the most detailed analysis and critique of the farm policies of the United States during the last three decades (roughly, since the enactment of the McNary-Haugen Act in 1927) that has been made. In 1951 the Twentieth Century Fund undertook "to give the general public an impartial, over-all picture of the vast governmental operations in the field of agriculture and of their causes and effects," and engaged Dr. Benedict, professor of agricultural economics at the University of California, as research director and Dr. Stine, a former assistant chief of the U. S. Bureau of Agricultural Economics, as associate director. Since Dr. Benedict had been at work for some time on a general history of United States farm policies, he was commissioned to complete it under the fund's auspices. The result is the first and largest volume, which is not, however, so much more retrospective in scope as its title seems to indicate. The first seven chapters (p. 3–137) are a topical survey of developments down to 1913, largely derived from secondary works, and the detailed narrative begins only with the Wilson administration. The thorough-going chronological treatment of agitation, legislation, administration, and production and price statistics that follows is the counterpart of the analytical treatment in the two following volumes. Dr. Benedict's part of Can We Solve the Farm Problem? defines the changing nature of the problem since 1920, describes eight different sorts of programs in as many chapters, and concludes with one entitled "Two Decades of Experience: What Conclusions Are Warranted?" It is followed by the "Report of the Committee on Agricultural Policy" (p. 483–530); this committee of 12 appointed by the fund to study the research findings was headed by Jesse W. Tapp, chairman of the board of the Bank of North America, and included representatives of farm organizations, professors of economics, and others. Its report speaks of "the overrigidity of the policies and programs of the past few years," and suggests in several places that price supports and stored surpluses have been excessive, and that there has been too little "reliance on automatic adjustments in the market." The Agricultural Commodity Programs, in which Dr. Stine appears as co-author, opens with a substantial "Introduction and Summary" (p. xvxliii), and proceeds to a detailed analysis of 11 programs from cotton and tobacco to potatoes and fluid milk. August Heckscher, director of the Fund, notes its "particular interest which derives from showing the extremely subtle variations, both of method and effect, which arise in the application of farm policy."

5856. Deering, Ferdie. USDA, manager of American agriculture. Norman, University of Oklahoma Press, 1945. xvi, 213 p. illus.
Agr 45-370 S21.C9D4

An interesting and well-organized inquisition into the organization and policies of the Department of Agriculture, conducted from the outside by the editor of The Farmer-Stockman of Oklahoma City. "The USDA has failed," the author says, "primarily because its 'solutions' have been based on the theory of providing an artificial foundation for farm prices, and its methods have been to build more and bigger agencies to handle the problems." The author makes concrete suggestions for streamlining the Department into "a comprehensible and efficient" unit of government with the primary purpose of providing the farmer with know-how and services not otherwise available. It should be noted that this book was published at a time when the Department was in an abnormal situation brought about by World War II.

5857. Harding, Thomas Swann. Two blades of grass, a history of scientific development in the U. S. Department of Agriculture. Norman, University of Oklahoma Press, 1947. xv, 352 p. illus. Agr. 47–159 S21.C9H3

The Department of Agriculture was created in 1862 "to acquire and to diffuse among the people of the United States useful information on subjects connected with agriculture in the most general and comprehensive sense of that word." The author, associated with the research activities of the Department since 1910, presents a popular account of the scientific investigations and publications through which the Department has fulfilled its "general designs and duties" since its activities were started in the Patent Office in 1839. Against a background of expanding organization and shifting bureaus, he emphasizes research in the fields of food and drugs, economic entomology, plant sciences, forests, animal diseases, soil analysis, nutrition, household appliances, and textiles. He also describes, somewhat in detail, the bulletins, circulars, journals, and other publications of the Department on subjects closely allied with daily living and available to the public.

5858. Huffman, Roy E. Irrigation development and public water policy. New York, Ronald Press, 1953. 336 p. 53–10006 HD1735.H8

Bibliography: p. 309–326.

The author first summarizes the history of irrigation and public policy concerning it in the United States, and then proceeds to develop analytically such subjects as the nature and administration of water rights, the relation of irrigation to land policy, the organization and operation of irrigation projects, the development of irrigated farms, the integrated use of irrigated land, and programs of river basin development. The emphasis throughout is on their social as well as their economic aspects. He believes that "as a nation, we should be mature enough to map out a long-range policy regarding land reclamation which will assure the continued strength of the nation and be acceptable to most of its citizens." He first isolates 14 factors which should be determinants for irrigation policy, from national and Western population growth to national security and our foreign trade policies, and concludes by suggesting 20 components of a sound irrigation policy for the United States. They are necessarily rather abstract, as may be seen from no. 5: "The family farm should remain as a basic objective in the expenditure of public funds for irrigation development but it should be a concept consistent with modern agriculture."

5859. McConnell, Grant. The decline of agrarian democracy. Berkeley, University of California Press, 1953. 226 p. 53–9387 HD1484.M25

The striking title conceals a subject considerably more limited in scope: the American Farm Bureau Federation and its influence on recent farm policies. The creation of the county "bureaus" was the work of the county agents originated by Seaman A. Knapp and systematized by the Smith-Lever Act of 1914 (nos. 5851 and 5852); the name, little appropriate for an organization of farmers, was accidental in origin but was officially adopted in 1916. State federations were formed beginning in 1915, and the national federation of State federations was organized in 1920. The membership fluctuated until 1934, but steadily increased thereafter, reaching 1,452,000 in 1951. Dr. McConnell seeks to demonstrate that an organization which was called into being to further technical instruction by the county agent has become his master and the greatest power structure in rural America, and that it represents the large-scale and prosperous farmers rather than the small-scale and marginal farmers. Its new strength conferred by the New Deal farm policies was employed to destroy the Farm Security Administration, the New Deal's device to assist the small farmer. Its influence is traced in the postwar struggles over the administration of agricultural programs (the federation's favorite agency is naturally the Extension Service, which it controls) and in the defeat of the Truman administration's Brannan Plan in 1948. The author regrets that "an intensified social stratification has occurred within agriculture, the source of much of our equalitarian tradition."

5860. Schickele, Rainer. Agricultural policy: farm programs and national welfare. New York, McGraw-Hill, 1954. 453 p. 53–9004 HD1761.S22

The chairman of the Department of Agricultural Economics at North Dakota Agricultural College has written this book "for the student of rural America, be he farmer, businessman, labor leader, public servant, college student, or instructor." He aims "to explore how agricultural policies can improve living conditions for farm families and serve the economic welfare of the community at large." The first two parts discuss the general problem of policy-making in a free society and other fundamentals. Part 3 is concerned with programs in production credit, soil conservation, and other land-use policies. Much the largest is part 4, "Farm Price Policy" (p. 136–307), which justifies Government support of farm prices on the ground that farmers are peculiarly vulnerable to price fluctuations, and "could not apply the price support devices which industry, trade, and labor had developed so effectively through their own private collective action." Part 5, "Programs for Improving Income Distribution," defines the family farm as the goal of land tenure policy and calls the Farmers Home Administration established in 1937 "a break for the small farmer." The background of Federal price support policies is illuminated by Gilbert C. Fite in his life of a man whose concept of agricultural equality triumphed in 1933 and has remained basic ever since: George N. Peek and the Fight for Farm Parity (Norman, University of Oklahoma Press, 1954. 314 p.).

5861. Soth, Lauren. Farm trouble. Princeton, Princeton University Press, 1957. 221 p. diagrs. 57–5459 HD1761.S79

Mr. Soth has taught economics at a land-grant college and been an editor for the Department of Agriculture; he now handles the editorial page of the Des Moines Register and Tribune. His sharply written little volume takes a darker view of the agricultural situation and of recent trends and policies than do most commentators. Agriculture, he is convinced, remains a sick industry, with per capita farm income running about half of per capita nonfarm income. The lower third of American farmers, on the more isolated, small, and technologically backward farms, suffer real poverty and are out of the stream of the 20th-century American life. Acreage controls have not been successful, for the supply of farm products has been growing faster than the relatively inelastic demand for them, and seems likely to go on doing so. There are "too many farmers"; in spite of the relative and absolute shrinkage of farm population, too many persons have to share agriculture's share of the national income. Acreage control and price supports have been in conflict with a freer foreign trade policy. Soil conservation programs have been carried through, but only with the effect of increasing production; true conservation should take land out of use. Mr. Soth refrains from dogmatism, but suggests that the program of price supports limited to a few basic crops has not been a success, that "a strait-jacket of monopoly controls" has been created, and that direct payments to farmers or a general food subsidy are alternatives more consistent with free enterprise.

E. Forests, National Parks

5862. Allen, Shirley W. An introduction to American forestry. 2d ed. New York, McGraw-Hill, 1950. 413 p. (American forestry series) 50–4768 SD371.A6 1950

As a professor of forestry and sometime president of the Society of American Foresters, the author has been asked numerous questions about forestry which he here attempts to answer for the benefit of students, teachers, and practicing foresters. This new edition brings up to date changing techniques and policies, while the background material has been little altered. In general it covers the nature of forest resources; the development of the science, art, business, and public policy of forestry in the United States; and the shares of Federal, State, and local governments in practicing forestry. The chapter on education, with its survey of opportunities, will be of special interest to those who plan to pursue forestry as a profession. References for further study are given at the end of chapters.

5863. Boerker, Richard H. D. Behold our green mansions; a book about American forests. Chapel Hill, University of North Carolina Press, 1945. xv, 313 p. illus. Agr 45–148 SD143.B6

The emphasis throughout this book is on "forest reservation for multiple use, with human welfare as the ultimate object." Following a description of the forest and timber regions of the United States, chapters are devoted to the beneficial uses of our forests for recreation, wildlife conservation, and livestock range, for the control of the water supply and soil erosion, and for the sustained supply of lumber and other forest products. The ravages of fire, insect enemies, and tree diseases are reviewed against a background of State and Federal programs for the protection and development of the forests. The peculiarities and potentialities of forests in the Southern States are summed up in a separate chapter. In a final plea the author urges that the logging industries and the public cooperate to conserve our forests and "to produce permanent communities of healthy, happy, busy [forestry] workers with all the social, cultural, and recreational benefits they have a right to expect from a great democracy."

5864. Horn, Stanley F. This fascinating lumber business. Indianapolis, Bobbs-Merrill, 1951. 313 p. illus. 51–14101 HD9755.H6 1951

The lumber business, based on the "product of the saw and planing mill," is described as the biggest and most important of the forest-products industries. It is widely scattered in logging camps and sawmills throughout the vast timber regions of the North, South, East, and West, with outlets in the retail lumber yards of the 48 States. The author, who has been associated with lumbering for 30 years, presents the highlights of the whole industry. Allied forest products, the economics of the industry from transportation to grading and inspection, the importance of lumber in wartime, and recent advances in equipment and techniques are among the subjects discussed. The last chapter, which reviews research projects on the best possible utilization of wood, illustrates the importance of the industry to the national economy.

5865. Shirley, Hardy L. Forestry and its career opportunities. New York, McGraw-Hill, 1952. 492 p. illus. (The American forestry series) 52–6001 SD371.S5

Based on materials used in a course in general forestry for freshmen at the State University of New York, College of Forestry, this book is intended to help beginning students to decide if forestry is to be their work. The author first traces the development of forestry, the lumber industry, the manufacture of wood products, and their importance in the national and world economy. He further points out the social benefits derived from forestry—wildlife, soil, and watershed protection, and recreation—which justify the care of the forests and therefore the profession. The chapters that follow describe the employers of foresters, employment opportunities, education and research, and programs in progress which afford worthwhile compensation and opportunities for service. On the 50th anniversary of its founding, the Society of American Foresters published a history of the growth of the profession in America: Fifty Years of Forestry in the U. S. A., edited by Robert K. Winters (Washington, 1950. 385 p.).

5866. Tilden, Freeman. The national parks, what they mean to you and me; introd. by Newton B. Drury, Director of National Park Service, 1940–51. New York, Knopf, 1951. xviii, 417, xxi p. illus. 51–11226 E160.T5 1951

The national parks appealed to Alfred Knopf, the publisher of this book, "as an element in our culture and a symbol of the American way of life regarding which the public should be made more aware," and he asked the National Park Service to suggest an author to prepare a definitive work on them. Freeman Tilden, a veteran writer, was selected as the man who "knew the national parks and 'what makes them tick.'" Describing the national monuments and parks from Washington to Florida, and from California to Maine—the forests, canyons, caves, deserts, glaciers, and volcanoes—the author points out the spectacular creations of nature which may be found in those recreational areas. He analyzes the structure and operation of the National Park Service in its efforts to conserve wildlife and the forests from commercial exploitation, and "to provide for the enjoyment of the scenery, the natural wonders, and historic objects . . . in such manner and by such means as will leave them unimpaired for the enjoyment of future generations." The fourth edition of Devereux Butcher's Exploring Our National Parks and Monuments (Boston, Houghton Mifflin, 1954. 288 p.) has a slighter text, but is more copiously illustrated. It appears under the auspices of the National Parks Association, and the first edition was published in 1947. In the fall of 1914 Stephen Tyng Mather (1867–1930), a wealthy Chicago manufacturer of borax, wrote a letter of complaint concerning the national parks, and was invited by his old classmate Franklin K. Lane, Secretary of the Interior, to come to Washington and run them himself. His tenure, first as assistant to the Secretary and then as first Director of the National Park Service (1917–29), saw the establishment of principles for their acquisition, maintenance, and administration, and the development of a true service to handle the host of tourists brought by the new automobiles. Robert Shankland's Steve Mather of the National Parks, 2d ed., rev. and enl. (New York, Knopf, 1954. xii, 346, xxii p.) describes and assesses his achievement, and indicates subsequent progress along the lines he laid down.

F. Animal Husbandry

5867. Crowell, Pers. Cavalcade of American horses. New York, McGraw-Hill, 1951. 311 p. illus. 51–12662 SF284.U5C7

Recognizing the companionship between horse and man through the ages, and the usefulness of the horse in opening up the American wilderness to civilization, the author tells the story of individual breeds against a background of history, anecdote, and legend. He presents the bloodlines, training, and records of great American saddle horses, Arabian horses, quarter horses, Morgan horses, standard bred horses, Tennessee walking horses, thoroughbred horses, and Western horses. This procession of racers, trotters, riding horses, carriage teams, show horses, cow ponies, cavalry mounts, and plain utilitarian horses leads to a better understanding of all breeds, and the place which they occupy or have occupied in American life.

5868. Dale, Edward Everett. The range cattle industry. Norman, University of Oklahoma Press, 1930. 216 p. 30–25282 SF196.U5D18
Bibliography: p [197]–208.

The author narrates the rapid growth and sudden decline of the ranch industry on the Great Plains from the close of the Civil War to the 1920's. He begins with Texas, the original home of large-scale ranching in the United States. He describes the close relationship that developed between the Great Plains and the corn belt of the East, through the exchange of cattle for breeding and feeding, and through Eastern credit channels. "Whatever may have been the ranchmen's faults," says the author, "they were in many areas advance agents of civilization, and their contribution toward the upbuilding of the West has been enormous." It is pointed out that careful scientific study should be given to the utilization, conservation, and restoration of ranges, the improvement of water facilities, the optimum size of one-family ranches, and to marketing and financing—much of which has been accomplished through Federal legislation since the publication of this book.

5869. Dowell, Austin Allyn, and Knute Bjorka. Livestock marketing. New York, McGraw-Hill, 1941. 534 p. illus. 41–5423 HD9433.U4D6

This book has been prepared for the use of students, county agricultural agents, marketing agencies, packers, and others concerned with the production and marketing of livestock and the distribution of meats. It analyzes the business activities involved in the flow of animal products from producers to consumers. The various methods of slaughtering and marketing livestock are described as they have been changed by new techniques, economic forces, and legislation. Chapters deal with grade standards for livestock and meats; prices; the regulation and supervision of the packing industry; cold-storage lockers; and the distribution of meats through wholesale and retail outlets. "Selected Readings" appear at the end of chapters.

5870. Gabrielson, Ira Noel. Wildlife management. New York, Macmillan, 1951. 274 p. Agr 51–501 SK361.G13

Out of his experience as Director of the U. S. Fish and Wildlife Service from 1940 to 1946, and as president of the Wildlife Management Institute since that date, the author has produced a book about a new profession—the wildlife manager, who "as the business manager of a great resource, must first maintain the resource, and second, utilize it to the greatest possible advantage of the nation and its people." The place of research and the education of both the public and the technician in wildlife management are reviewed, as well as the need for regulation of the human harvest of the wild population, and of regular inventories. Chapters 6 to 10 deal with wildlife itself—refuges, artificial propagation, population control, and the manipulation of environment. Noting a decline in standards of conduct among sportsmen, the author suggests some rules that should be followed and points out the need for more personnel, law enforcement, and cooperation to preserve the economic and recreational value of the Nation's wildlife.

5871. Hohman, Elmo Paul. The American whaleman; a study of life and labor in the whaling industry. New York, Longmans, Green, 1928. xiv, 355 p. illus. 28–29321 SH381.H6
Bibliography: p. 336–347.

A colorful work based on a wide range of original sources—logbooks, consular letters, crew lists and accounts, and other whaling manuscripts. The major section (part 2) is the story of the whaling industry at its height during the years 1833 to 1860. Part 1 gives the background with its origins in Europe, and part 3 traces the decline of the industry from a position of economic and industrial importance to New England and the whole Nation until its disappearance in the early years of the 20th century. The author gives us an insight into the lives of the crews, their working conditions and wages, the dangers encountered, and the discipline demanded by the rigors of their trade. Whaling is one of those industries which have played their part in the growth of the Nation only to succumb to the ravages of war and weather, and to technical and economic developments resulting in alternative products. The early stages of this picturesque industry are portrayed by Edouard A. Stackpole: The Sea-Hunters; the New England Whalemen during Two Centuries, 1635–1835 (Philadelphia, Lippincott, 1953. 510 p.).

5872. McFarland, Raymond. A history of the New England fisheries. [Philadelphia] University of Pennsylvania, 1911. 457 p. ([Publications of the University of Pennsylvania. Series in political economy and public law])

11–2088 SH221.M3

Bibliography: p. 338–363.

Aside from books on whaling there is little literature, except diffuse government publications, on the history of the fishing industry. This book was written to fill in the story of the cod, mackerel, and inshore (including shellfish) fisheries. It shows the development and importance of the New England fisheries from early colonial days to the time of publication, with full attention to their role in commerce, legislation, and international affairs. Chapter XVIII, "The Evolution of the Fishing Schooner," goes into the changes in the furnishings of vessels, in the equipment used for fishing, and in the methods of curing the catch. Donald J. White's The New England Fishing Industry (Cambridge, Harvard University Press, 1954. 205 p. Wertheim Fellowship publications) is "a study in the interrelations of wages and prices and factor and product markets" limited to the fresh and frozen finny fish sector of the industry in Boston and four other Maine and Massachusetts ports; it nevertheless throws much light on recent developments in the New England fisheries as a whole.

5873. Osgood, Ernest Staples. The day of the cattleman. Minneapolis, University of Minnesota Press, 1929. 283 p.

29–19222 SF196.U5O7

Thesis (Ph. D.)—University of Wisconsin, 1927.

Bibliography: p. 259–268.

The author of this Wisconsin dissertation used an important collection of manuscript material in the office of the Wyoming Stock Growers' Association at Cheyenne, Wyoming, as well as public documents, newspapers, and other published sources. It studies a great enterprise which grew up on the High Plains between 1845 and the early 1900's. In narrating the rise and fall of the Open Range, it treats of the Indian barrier and its overcoming, the cattle boom of the early 1880's, the development of cattlemen's organizations, the cattlemen's attempts to monopolize the public domain, and, finally, the climatic and economic disaster of the late eighties. This brought about a transition from the great range outfits to smaller ranches with controlled pasturage and irrigation. The range cattle industry had attracted outside capital to aid in the development of a new area, had stimulated railroad building to carry its products to the Eastern markets, and had done much to lay the economic foundations for the settlement of the West.

5874. Towne, Charles Wayland, and Edward Norris Wentworth. Shepherd's empire. With drawings by Harold D. Bugbee. Norman, University of Oklahoma Press, 1945. 364 p.

Agr 45–331 SF376.T6

Bibliography: p. 335–347.

The role of sheep in opening up the Southwest, including California, is traced against a colorful background of history from the days of the Conquistadors to the mid–20th century. The authors point out that the natural endurance of sheep under harsh physical conditions, their grazing habits, and their flocking instincts have provided nourishment for explorers, soldiers, miners, and emigrants in their penetration of the region. They vividly portray the problems of sheep husbandry—trailing the flocks; lambing and shearing; and protecting the herds from Indian raids, range wars, preying animals, and poisonous plants. The last chapter introduces the "Men behind the Flocks," the pioneer sheepmen responsible for the great ranches and herds and the improvement of breeds. Based on a thorough combing of printed material as well as many unpublished personal contributions, and incorporating many striking anecdotes, it has interest for student and general reader alike. Ten sketch maps, each illustrating a single topic, facilitate the reader's task. Three years later Mr. Wentworth, who, in his quarter-century of service with Armour and Co., was able to visit all the livestock-producing areas of the country and obtain veteran sheepmen's reminiscences and personal records, brought out his own massive volume, America's Sheep Trails; History, Personalities (Ames, Iowa State College Press, 1948. xxii, 667 p.). It deals with all parts of the United States from the earliest times, and concludes with a series of topical chapters such as "Financing the Sheep Business," "The Disease Problem," "The Public Lands," and "Cattle-Sheep Wars." There are statistical, biographical, and bibliographical (p. 622–632) appendixes. While it goes considerably beyond the needs of the ordinary reader, it contains materials of immense interest, and abundantly fulfills its object of recording "the part sheep played in building the United States."

XXVIII

Economic Life

A.	General Works: Histories	5875–5883
B.	Other General Works	5884–5900
C.	Industry: General	5901–5906
D.	Industry: Special	5907–5919
E.	Transportation: General	5920–5925
F.	Transportation: Special	5926–5943
G.	Commerce: General	5944–5950
H.	Commerce: Special	5951–5964
I.	Finance: General	5965–5975
J.	Finance: Special	5976–6002
K.	Business: General	5976–6002
L.	Business: Special	6011–6030
M.	Labor: General	6031–6042
N.	Labor: Special	6043–6058

"THE BUSINESS of America is business," said Calvin Coolidge, a prophet of much honor in his own country and era. If we amend his dictum a little and say, "The business of American scholarship is business"—meaning by the last word, of course, the whole economy energized by managerial enterprise—we are merely stating a statistical truism. The output of American books, periodicals, documents, reports, etc., concerned with economics in general and with the American economy and its constituent parts in particular not only far exceeds that for any other of the arts and sciences, but falls not too far short of equalling their combined total. This is therefore the chapter in which we have from the outset realized the complete impossibility of our task—the hopelessness of representing either the literature or the facts lying beyond it in any selection of volumes which can be contained within the framework of this volume. We have therefore been, from necessity not perversity, considerably more arbitrary than usual in choosing and ordering our material. This is clear enough from our section headings, which, once general works have been cleared, simply take six of the largest and most abstract categories and divide the books under them into "general" and "special" works. We shall make no determined defense against those who find that some of our "general" titles should have been "special," or vice versa. We shall do no more against those who find Sections K and L on business holding titles which should have gone elsewhere: in them we have merely sought to bring together a number of books particularly concerned with the problems which were once said to confront capitalists or entrepreneurs, and are now said to confront management. The distinction between "general" and "special" does, to be sure, reflect one of our concerns, which has been to represent, not only the larger forms and currents of economic activity, but the concrete units—companies, individuals, and even machines—in which these abstractions have their only being. Thus we have not only The Transportation Industries and Economics of Transportation, but books on General Motors, Commodore Vanderbilt, and the steam locomotive. Our desire to present sample units in each of the categories has led us to include a substantial number of "business histories," and so to give what some may regard as undue prominence to the Harvard School of Business Administration, which was one of the earliest and has remained one of the largest producers in the field. That a multitude of types and forms in each of the six categories, each of great statistical, monetary, or human importance, remain unrepresented we are only too well and painfully aware, but we could not make another volume out of this chapter. A final word is probably needed in recognition of the fact that American economic life is and has always been a battlefield, in books and out. We seek to hold no position and to draw nobody's fire, but we should find it difficult to contradict Mr. Bray. Hammond when he says (in no. 6000 below) that business enterprise has been "the most powerful continuing influence in American life ever since Independence." Recent policies, arising in the economic as well as the political sphere, have not striven to shut off this great primary source of wealth and welfare, but rather, in the first place, to keep it from being self-defeating and, in the second, to make it work for the prosperity of as many as possible instead of as few as possible. While such aims are not universally approved, they are very widely so, and to the majority, therefore, economic arguments now turn about matters of degree and of the efficiency of means rather than about absolute principles of natural law or abstract ethics.

A. General Works: Histories

5875. Cochran, Thomas C., and William Miller. The age of enterprise, a social history of industrial America. New York, Macmillan, 1942. 394 p. 42–22792 HC103.C6

Bibliography: p. 359–368.

A dramatic rendition of American history from 1800 to 1930 as propelled by the ventures of free enterprise, which in a century transformed village America into the richest urban and industrial power of the world. The authors describe the expanding frontier and swelling population, the machine-age revolutions in transport and industry, and the exploitation of the country's vast natural resources. They examine broad trends of business and investment and their reflection in social and cultural life. As climax of the age of unlimited free opportunity, they point to the moral justification of the entrepreneurs and their empires of railroads, oil, and steel, by means of the creed of the survival of the fittest provided by Herbert Spencer, evolutionary apostle of laissez faire. They next trace the downfall of the system in which seeds of decay were already planted: "The machine, an instrument of competition, tended always to become mother to monopoly." In their analysis free enterprise, running a downward path through panics, depressions, and labor troubles, before the turn of the century gave way to finance capitalism. This in turn reached its climax of Big Business in the 1920's. By the time the crash came, according to the authors, individual initiative in America had "surrendered" to institutional enterprise, and now survives only as "the language of free competition."

5876. Dorfman, Joseph. The economic mind in American civilization. New York, Viking Press, 1946–49. 3 v. 45–11318 HB119.A2D6

"Bibliographic notes" at end of each volume.

CONTENTS.—v. 1–2. 1606–1865.—v. 3. 1865–1918.

A work of basic scholarship, summarizing and synthesizing economic theories expressed by individual American spokesmen. The first two volumes cover "the age of commerce," from Governor Winthrop and the Puritans to the crushing of aristocratic agrarianism in the Civil War. In the author's view, the heritage of concepts brought over by the colonists prevailed into the 19th century, with foreign commerce thought of as the chief source of wealth, to be pursued in a society of rigid classes, motivated or justified by "the traditional sanctions and rhetoric of religion and humanitarianism." Writers were both men of affairs and of thought, like Penn, Franklin, Hamilton, Jefferson, Thomas Paine, and Robert Fulton. In the early 19th century the Old World pattern was again followed, as "systematic" economic doctrine emerged among academic writers on political economy, who interpreted the teaching of Ricardo and Malthus in differing Southern and Northern versions of laissez faire. The third volume, published three years later, covers the economic thought of "the age of industry," when, against a background of turbulent and unrestrained individualism, the rise of labor problems, and the growth of monopoly, new currents of reform—radicalism, liberalism, or "marginalism,"—were expressed by the trained professional economists of the new century. Dr. Dorfman closes with the first attempts to integrate sociological thought with orthodox economics, in the "disturbing voice" of Thorstein Veblen and his chief heir, Wesley C. Mitchell, the two masters to whom the study is dedicated. Volumes 4 and 5, covering 1918–33, are announced as this chapter goes to press.

5877. The Economic history of the United States. New York, Rinehart, 1945–51. 5 v.
45–7376 HC103.E25

A cooperative history, to which a group of noted scholars are contributing, planned in 1929 as a nine-volume series, and still in process; it was conceived as a full, balanced, and readable survey of American economic history for the general reader and to supplement college texts. Each volume has for its concluding chapter a full bibliographical essay. Four volumes, 1, Colonial Period to 1775; 2, 1775–1815; 3, Agriculture, 1815–1860; and 6, Industry, 1860–1897, are still in preparation (in 1959). The first of the self-contained volumes to appear was The Farmer's Last Frontier, Agriculture, 1860–1897 (v. 5, 434 p.), by Professor Fred A. Shannon of the University of Illinois, one of the editors of the series. Two more were published in 1947, George Soule's Prosperity Decade; from War to Depression, 1917–1929 (v. 8, 365 p.), and Broadus Mitchell's Depression Decade; from New Era through New Deal, 1929–1941 (v. 9, 462 p.). In 1951 there appeared The Transportation Revolution, 1815–1860, by George Rogers Taylor (v. 4, 490 p.), and The Decline of Laissez Faire, 1897–1917, by Harold U. Faulkner (v. 7, 433 p.). Professor Faulkner of Smith College, whose standard one-volume college text, American Economic History, first published in 1924, is now in its 7th edition (New York, Harper, 1954. 816 p. Harper's historical series), is also one of the board of editors of the Rinehart series.

5878. Hacker, Louis M. The triumph of American capitalism; the development of forces in American history to the end of the nineteenth century. New York, Columbia University Press, 1946. 460 p. 47–3113 HC103.H146 1946

"Authorities cited in the text": p. 439–445.

For the great triumph in America of the capitalist system, initiated in and inherited from Europe, Professor Hacker offers three fundamental explanations: from the earliest settlements the climate of ideas was capitalistic; the state, established by revolt against oppressive authoritarianism, has aided instead of restricting private enterprise; and the ideal of equal economic opportunity for all has never been lost from sight. He traces the development of capitalism from the city-states of medieval Italy through the Age of Discovery to its participation in the settlement of the thirteen Colonies. He analyzes in this continent the course of American mercantile capitalism, which long remained in fetters to British mercantilism, but after 1783 "had the whole world, productively and geographically, . . . over which to range." The transition to industrial capitalism did not gain momentum until after the depression of 1837–43, but during the Civil War the new capitalists "succeeded in capturing the state and using it as an instrument to strengthen their economic position." By 1900 the "grand design" of industrial capitalism in the exploitation of the continent was essentially complete: heavy industry and the urban network were in being, and both producer and consumer goods were being turned out in an endless stream. Professor Hacker's success story is written in general terms, with only occasional references to individuals; his protagonist throughout is American capitalism itself, which in one century "created the potentialities of physical abundance and left behind the legacy of political freedom."

5879. Janeway, Eliot. The struggle for survival; a chronicle of economic mobilization in World War II. [Roosevelt ed.] New Haven, Yale University Press, 1951. 382 p. illus. (The Chronicles of America series, v. 53)
52–158 HC1806.4.J.33 1951

"Bibliographical note": p. 362–372.

This "chronicle" of the war on the home front is written in administrative rather than economic terms. The author, a business analyst and writer formerly connected with Time and Fortune, is less concerned with the stages and processes of economic mobilization than with the "Battle of Washington." His thesis is that Roosevelt, the inspired politician, guided the war effort, and incidentally left behind an unprecedented complexity of governmental organization, "by the techniques of pure democracy —by provoking participation from the people instead of by imposing discipline upon them." It was the momentum of production achieved through the anonymous energies of the people that carried the day, despite rather than because of the expendable leaders with whom the President experimented in his appointments to the successive agencies. Mr. Janeway's account of these, from the War Production Board and the suppressed Baruch Plan for Industrial Mobilization to Byrnes' Office of War Mobilization and Reconversion, dwells largely upon the personalities and maneuvers of the leaders, and their manipulation by the President.

5880. Josephson, Matthew. The robber barons; the great American capitalists, 1861–1901. New York, Harcourt, Brace, 1934. 474 p.
34–4665 HG181.J6

Bibliography: p. 455–460.

The apt phrase that Mr. Josephson chose for the title of this book on the outstanding industrialists of the latter 19th century is now well fixed in the vocabulary of American economic history. The Robber Barons, published in the second year of the New Deal, marked its writer's shift from his earlier preoccupation with such literary crusaders as Rousseau and Zola; his style remains that of the romantic biographer. He acknowledges in the preface the inspiration of Charles and Mary Beard in his attempt to depict these "prime actors in the drama" of the age, and his use of his enormous and lively research material is clearly influenced by his reading of Thorstein Veblen (no. 4538). In his picture the captains of industry—Jay Gould, Andrew Carnegie, Cornelius Vanderbilt, J. Pierpont Morgan, James Fisk, James J. Hill, and the rest—emerge unvarnished as Veblen's "pecuniary man" in his "kinship with the delinquent." The antisocial aspects of their acquisition and use of power are illustrated on every page, and the building of their empires is chronicled as "the fearful sabotage practiced by capital upon the energy and intelligence of human society." Their positive economic functions receive little notice.

5881. Kirkland, Edward C. A history of American economic life. 3d ed. New York, Appleton-Century-Crofts, 1951. 740 p. maps, diagrs. 51–10989 HC103.K5 1951

Bibliography: p. 683–728.

A textbook first issued in 1932, now in its third revision; the author for many years has been professor of American history at Bowdoin College. It surveys comprehensively the progress of American economic life from the voyages of discovery to the "day before yesterday." Its concern is with human activity rather than with policies or politics, which are subordinated to the lifelike detail of economic fact in accounts of the development of commerce, agriculture, industry, labor, and finance. The original work ended with the First World War, and in 1939 Professor Kirkland added a section called "Technical Change and Government Polity" to the older ones, "The Colonial Age," "The Agricultural Era," and "The Industrial State." Much emphasis is given to the relations of government and business, particularly in the last chapters where, as with most conscientious historians looking at the immediate past, the narrative is speeded up and illustration that might suggest personal judgment held to a minimum. All three editions have an excellent critical bibliography, arranged by chapters; that of 1951 has increased only three pages over that of 1932, but is completely reworked to omit outdated material and include the latest scholarship.

5882. Myers, Gustavus. History of the great American fortunes. New York, Modern Library, 1936. 732 p. (The Modern Library of the world's best books) 36–31209 HC103.M8 1936

Previously published in three volumes.

This well-known book was brought out originally in 1910, two years after the copyright had been filed, by a Chicago publisher, Charles H. Kerr & Co. The author's previous book, on Tammany Hall, had dealt with political corruption, and in a period of muckraking, none of the established New York publishers would touch his new history. Myers, however, had based his work, a study of capitalism from the Marxist standpoint, on painstaking and abundant research which, while not always accepted as the whole truth, has influenced and provided documentation for two generations of writers. His aim was to show "that the great fortunes are the natural, logical outcome of a system based upon factors the inevitable result of which is the utter despoilment of the many for the benefit of a few." In this frame of reference and beginning with colonial dispossessions of the Indians, he tells the stories of the most conspicuous fortunes built up by land speculation, and from railroads, trusts, banks, and industry—J. J. Astor, C. W. Field, Cornelius Vanderbilt, Jay Gould, J. P. Morgan, and J. J. Hill, with a host of lesser multimillionaires woven in. The evidence he quotes all goes to support the "inevitable burden" of his work, an unrelieved tale of fraud and plunder.

5883. Wright, Chester W. Economic history of the United States. 2d ed. New York, McGraw-Hill, 1949. xxi, 941 p. maps, diagrs. (Business and economics publications)

49–8742 HC103.W98 1949

Bibliography: p. 911–926.

In 1944 the author retired as professor emeritus from the University of Chicago where he had taught economics for 30 years. His book was first published in 1941; in the present edition an additional chapter brings the narrative down to 1947. His primary purpose is to explain the efforts of the American people to raise their standards of living, and through analysis of causes and results to arrive at precepts for the future. The book is intended for students of economics, and because of its size is probably more suited to reference than to classroom use. It covers the entire course of the American economy from that of the Indians, with chief attention to the period since 1860. Many statistical tables and graphs are used throughout. These are particularly interesting in the last two chapters, where Professor Wright summarizes and evaluates the achievement of the American people, comparing standards of living in 1770 and 1930. In spite of the attainment in this country of the highest standard for the average man that the world has known, the conclusions drawn for the future are sobering.

B. Other General Works

5884. Coyle, David Cushman. Conservation, an American story of conflict and accomplishment. New Brunswick, N. J., Rutgers University Press, 1957. 284 p. illus.
57-10962 HC103.7.C68

Serious efforts to conserve the natural resources of America began only toward the close of the 19th century with the first legislation for Federal forest reserves, and the association of "the Prophet," the forester Gifford Pinchot, and President Theodore Roosevelt in the establishment of the U.S. Forestry Service. The first two parts of this book, by a writer known for his forceful popularizations of public economic questions, go deeply into the controversy which was stirred up by Pinchot's idea of public intervention to prevent waste, not only of forests, but also of farm and range lands, groundwater, irrigation, river basins, and waterpower. The "gospel of conservation" enunciated in 1907 made little headway against "reaction, war, and 'normalcy'" until 1933. Under the New Deal the public works program was planned so as to forward many branches of conservation. Mr. Coyle describes the activities of the Civilian Conservation Corps and the Soil Conservation Service, the programs and resultant battles over irrigation and hydroelectric power projects and policies, rural electrification, and the TVA and subsequent attempts at river basin development. In the same terms of accomplishment and opposition he outlines the conservation of fuels, minerals and metals, and wildlife. His last section examines the world situation. Franklin D. Roosevelt and Conservation, 1911-1945, compiled and edited by Edgar B. Nixon (Hyde Park, N. Y., General Services Administration, National Archives and Records Service, Franklin D. Roosevelt Library, 1957. 2 v. (1314 p.)), documents Roosevelt's long connection with the conservation program. It is a selection from the mass of papers in the Roosevelt library dealing with conservation of soil and water, forests, wildlife, and scenic areas, with footnotes referring to the whole body of relevant material. The standard textbook for class use in agricultural colleges, Conservation in the United States, by Axel F. Gustafson and three colleagues at Cornell, is now in its third edition (Ithaca, N. Y., Comstock Pub. Co., 1949. 534 p.). It is a straightforward and well-illustrated exposition of the principles of conservation, the establishment of policies and laws with respect to public and private lands, and the elements involved in the conservation of soil, water, forests, national parks, grazing lands, fish, wildlife, and mineral resources. A truly beautiful book on the historic, literary, and artistic background of conservation is by the curator of research at the Art Institute of Chicago, Hans Huth: Nature and the American: Three Centuries of Changing Attitudes (Berkeley, University of California Press, 1957. 250 p.). The ideas regarding Nature of Puritans, poets and philosophers, novelists and travelers, artists and scientists are traced, with abundant quotation, from the ruthless days of the pioneers to our own times. The fascinating illustrations include 64 full-page reproductions of paintings, drawings, and photographs, and half as many vignettes and woodcuts scattered through the text.

5885. Fainsod, Merle, and Lincoln Gordon. Government and the American economy. Rev. ed. New York, Norton, 1948. xvii, 935 p.
48-4472 HD3616.U47F3 1948

"Selected readings": p. 893-908.

By two Harvard professors, one of government, the other of business administration, this long text is a comprehensive survey of the influence of the American government on the national economy. An introductory section reviews the economic background, the politics of business, labor, agriculture, and pressure groups, and provisions of constitutional law relevant to the economy. The authors then rehearse the policy and action of the Government as promoter of business, agriculture, labor, and consumer interests. Their central and longest section explains government regulation of private enterprise in general historical perspective and in application to special fields—railroads, public utilities, investment and securities, trusts and monopolies, fair trade, and others. The last group of chapters treats of the Government itself in business, through public corporations, measures for conservation of natural and human resources, and the planning and control of the war economy. Final consideration goes to the problems of the "mixed" economy of government enterprise, partially government-regulated private enterprise, and relatively uncontrolled free enterprise which characterizes the postwar period. Throughout, emphasis is laid on the evolution of government activities in harmony with the public interest.

677676 O-63-58

5886. Galbraith, John Kenneth. The affluent society. Boston, Houghton Mifflin, 1958. 368 p. 58-8512 HB171.G14

A challenge to the usual demand for ever-increasing production as the solution of most economic ills is here eloquently and controversially voiced. In his usual provocative style Professor Galbraith argues that the "greater production" concept is a myth established in days of scarcity and no longer valid in the contemporary American society of abundance. He traces its background as "conventional wisdom" from Ricardo down to present-day thinkers. Then he examines the ancient preoccupations of economists: productivity, inequality, insecurity. Today, he says, production has come to be regarded as the indispensable remedy, and equality and security are identified with it. But production has now reached the point where it must first create the consumers' wants it seeks to satisfy—the "Dependence Effect" he calls this—and the urgency of the wants can no longer be used to defend the urgency of the production. He makes unorthodox comments on such "illusions" as national security, consumer credit, etc., and suggests that the pressure for more production leads to inflation, price instability, and higher unemployment without helping our social imbalance. "The line which divides our area of wealth from our area of poverty is roughly that which divides privately produced and marketed goods and services from publicly rendered services." Among the solutions he offers are: increasing unemployment compensation in times of rising unemployment; raising money through sales taxes; placing greater emphasis on spending for public purposes.

5887. Galbraith, John Kenneth. American capitalism; the concept of countervailing power. Rev. ed. Boston, Houghton Mifflin, 1956. 208 p. 56-4515 HB501.G3 1956

This brilliant essay on modern economic theory is written in an epigrammatic style uncommon to the profession, and may be read with pleasure as well as profit by the layman. Professor Galbraith's fellow economists have accused him of oversimplification, but since the first publication of the Harvard economist's book in 1952 it has received much attention from them. He joins other postwar thinkers (Berle, not in itself undesirable in an "opulent" economy. Drucker, Lilienthal) in defending big business as His thesis is that the American capitalist economy is no longer regulated by free competition, regarded as indispensable in the tradition of the classical economists. According to orthodox theory, the present American system of oligopoly, in which the chief industries are controlled by a few large units that dictate prices to any smaller competitors, is bound to work out in disaster. The fact that it has not, Professor Galbraith attributes to the replacement of competition by what he calls "countervailing power." The competitors may regulate policy by agreement among themselves, but their power is balanced by power on the opposite side of the market: by the big trade unions, and by government regulation. Because of countervailing power and the use of the Keynesian formula against depression, the author is confident that in time of peace, if not in case of war, American capitalism will not break down.

5888. Gruchy, Allan G. Modern economic thought; the American contribution. New York, Prentice-Hall, 1947. 670 p. 47-4709 HB119.A2G7

Bibliography: p. 631–655.

The contributions to modern economic thought of six 20th-century economists form the subject matter of this close analysis. Professor Gruchy writes six interrelated essays on the "institutional economics" of Thorstein Veblen, the "collective economics" of John R. Commons, the "quantitative economics" of Wesley C. Mitchell, the "social economics" of John M. Clark, the "experimental economics" of Rexford G. Tugwell, and the "administrative economics" of Gardiner C. Means. In introductory and concluding chapters he defines their common orientation, for which he borrows from the South African philosopher-statesman, Jan Christiaan Smuts, the adjective "holistic." He describes this as constituting a new school of economic theory for which orthodox economics, based on the concept of every economic system as "a simple and stable mechanism" in which fixed laws for the separate parts can be deduced, gives place to the view of economic order as a dynamic process of evolution. In the approach of the new theorists the findings of cultural anthropology, sociology, and social psychology are utilized. The writer's digests of the six economists are less controversial than his claim that their interrelated theories constitute a unitary school of American economic thought.

5889. Harris, Seymour E. The economics of mobilization and inflation. New York, Norton, 1951. 308 p. 51-13080 HC106.5.H318

Bibliography: p. 288–291.

Professor Harris, who has taught economics at Harvard since the twenties, is well known to his profession. To a wider public his name is familiar as an adviser on financial matters to the Federal Government in many capacities since 1942, when he joined the Policy Committee of the Board of Economic Warfare. This book, written in the second year of the Korean War, and addressed to a specialist audience, is his tenth work—and, he hopes, his last—relating to mobilization and war. To the problem of balancing the increase of output, the primary end of mobilization, by the stabilization of prices, his answer is a vigorous fiscal policy embodied in sharply increased taxation, with a minimum of price and other direct controls. He examines in this context questions of resources, material and human, public finance, the effectiveness of controls, and the inevitably uneven and unfair incidence of inflation. He suggests that the mistakes of 1950–51 might have been avoided by a more thorough study of the well-documented lessons of World War II.

5890. Harris, Seymour E. The economics of New England; case study of an older area. Cambridge, Harvard University Press, 1952. xvii, 317 p. maps. 52–5031 HC107.A11H3

Among the many official committees on which Professor Harris has served was the Committee on the New England Economy of the U.S. Council of Economic Advisers, appointed in 1950 to study the causes of the severe business recession of the previous year in New England, and to recommend measures for long-range improvement of the regional economy, particularly as to job opportunities. The Committee submitted a report, The New England Economy; a Report to the President ([Washington] 1951. xxxvi, 205 p.), in July 1951, shortly before Harris' book went to press. The two cover much the same ground, analyzing the general decline of this old economic region, its loss of industries and population to more newly developed areas, its resistance to technological change and to Federal aid, its shortages of raw materials, its high costs of transportation and power, its unfavorable tax structure, and many related factors. Professor Harris' book presents somewhat greater detail on certain points, such as the desirability of the St. Lawrence seaway, and has a different arrangement and emphasis from the official report. Although there are many difficulties, he is hopeful that an absolute decline in New England may be averted, and that he may be able to tell his students, as he has not during the last few decades, that "there is no strong economic reason for migrating to the South or West." Another and still more comprehensive report on The Economic State of New England was brought out in 1954 by the National Planning Association's Committee of New England (New Haven, Yale University Press, 1954. 738 p.). Five economists worked with two successive directors of research to produce the 18 chapters of the survey. The authors look to "upgrading"—increasing the value of output per man-hour—as a means of expanding personal and regional income, and view the future with confidence.

5891. Hoover, Calvin B., and Benjamin U. Ratchford. Economic resources and policies of the South. New York, Macmillan, 1951. xxvii, 464 p. diagrs. 51–2037 HC107.A13H64

Bibliography: p. 441–453.

This comprehensive assessment of Southern economic resources and policies was authorized by the National Planning Association's Committee of the South in 1946, and carried out by the Committee's Director of Research and a fellow economist of Duke University. A general statistical review of land, population, and retarding factors is followed by an analysis of the change in living standards between 1929 and 1948 in the region often referred to as "the Nation's Number One Economic Problem." During these years the per capita income rose from 47 percent to 65 percent of the non-Southern average (in 1956 it was above 70 percent), a decline in agricultural income, due largely to the fall in cotton, having been balanced by an increase in manufacturing wages and salaries, and a notable boost from Federal payrolls, military and civilian. Specific developments and trends in the various sectors of the economy are next examined: if cotton is down, tobacco and other crops are up. The text is illustrated by a hundred-odd statistical tables and charts; in most of those relating to human beings there is no analysis by race.

5892. Lilienthal, David E. TVA; democracy on the march. 20th anniversary ed. New York, Harper, 1953. xxiv, 294 p. illus. 53–7202 TK1425.M8L53 1953

When the Tennessee Valley Authority was created by Act of Congress on May 18, 1933, Mr. Lilienthal was named one of its directors. In 1941 he became chairman, and after the first decade of TVA he expounded it in a book, first published in 1944, which appeared in American and British pocket book editions and was translated into 10 or more languages before this "twentieth anniversary edition." It is not a full account of the development of TVA, but an eloquent statement of the writer's faith in the principles, procedures, and success of this plan for unified development of natural resources and raising living standards, under public control but with the cooperation of local bodies. TVA before and since its creation has been a subject of controversy in the United States, defended or attacked in the long-continuing struggle over the public versus the private ownership of power—a favorite phrase of its enemies is "creeping socialism." But after 10 years it had attracted worldwide interest and had become a symbol of what man can do to change his physical environment. In the 1953 edition Mr. Lilienthal added a chapter on "The TVA Idea Abroad," and, besides the completely revised bibliography, two appendixes, one of which is a digest and bibliography of TVA-type developments in many countries. The writer, who served for four years as chairman of the Atomic Energy Commission and is now chairman of the Development and Research Corporation of New York, published in the same year a book advocating new concepts: Big Business: a New Era (New York, Harper, 1953. 209 p.). Here his argument is that, with government's expanded role in economic affairs as safeguard, the actual benefits of Big Business to social and economic advancement should now be recognized, without the "prejudice created by abuses long since corrected . . . an antiquarian's portrait of another America."

5893. National Industrial Conference Board. National income in the United States, 1799–1938, by Robert F. Martin, director Economic Research Division, the Conference Board. New York City, National Industrial Conference Board, 1939. xv, 146 p. (Its Studies, no. 241)

39–27201 HB601.N35

"This study offers the most complete estimates of national income in the United States that are available for the 140-year period beginning in 1799 . . . Though in the nature of such estimates they are not comprehensive and perfect, they are the best approximations possible in the present state of our information in this field, and they present in the most compact form a composite picture of America's economic development such as no other series of statistics can." These estimates occupy 46 tables and 11 charts, arranged in a briefer explanatory text whose chapters include "The National Income Totals," "Kinds of Private Production Income," "Industrial Sources" of such income, and "Government as a Source of Income." The "total realized national income," in dollar figures adjusted by the general price level, rose from 1,092 millions in 1799 to 69,130 millions in 1938. During the same period the per capita realized income, again in adjusted figures, rose from $211 to $531, but the latter figure was regularly exceeded, sometimes by as much as $100, during the years 1910–1931. A long appendix (p. 105–146) explains the sources and the methods used in constructing the estimates. The text is simply and clearly written, and adapted, as the studies of the Conference Board usually are, for wide use by businessmen.

5894. Slichter, Sumner H. The American economy, its problems and prospects. New York, Knopf, 1948. vii, 214, ix p.

48–8583 HC106.5.S47

A revision and expansion of five lectures given at a Stanford University business conference the previous summer by the Lamont Professor of Economics at Harvard, well known as an adviser to government and private organizations on economic trends and business prospects. In a glance at the basic characteristics of our system he stresses the change of recent years to what he calls "a laboristic economy," with wealth and power increasingly in the hands of the employee class. The first problem he examines is that of labor relations, for many years the field of his chief study (see no. 6038), and of measures needed to keep the rapid rise of modern trade unionism from bringing about conflict in industry. He considers economic stability, expressing approval of credit and fiscal controls, and international economic policy, speaking for greatly increased imports and reduced tariffs. He analyzes our prospects from both a pessimistic and an optimistic outlook, and finally attempts to answer the question, "How Good Is the American Economy?" The answer is: "far better than most people realize." A further group of lectures by Professor Slichter at Stanford in July 1950 was published as What's Ahead for American Business (Boston, Little, Brown, 1951. 216 p.). As in the earlier talks, he set forth in clear outline, sometimes with figures, his views of problems, causes, effects, and prospects. A chapter was added on the implications of defense economy resulting from the Korean War. He was still optimistic, ready to accept the idea of more government regulation without fear of socialism. He also contemplated without worry a period of rising prices and a certain degree of inflation, an attitude which he retains a decade later.

5895. Taylor, Horace, and others. The American economy in operation. New York, Harcourt, Brace, 1949. xiv, 846 p. diagrs.

49–8736 HC106.T46

A composite work by members of the department of economics of Columbia University, revised almost yearly between 1932 and 1941, replacing earlier texts for a course in contemporary civilization. Essentially a study in political economy, its account of the purely economic aspects is interwoven with the political elements involved. There are nine sections, each with several chapters and many subheadings within chapters. The basic facts of national economic resources and national product, organization and control of production, management-labor and other intergroup relations, money and credit, public finance, and international relations are set forth, with regular attention to current trends. Special emphasis is laid on factors making for stability and on patterns of control. The concluding section examines the values of a mixed economy of private enterprise and government participation, especially with regard to economic planning and full employment. The long time-lag between the predecessor work and this new volume was deliberate, so as to permit an adequate perspective on problems and policies arising in the postwar world.

5896. Twentieth Century Fund. America's needs and resources, a Twentieth Century Fund survey which includes estimates for 1950 and 1960. By J. Frederic Dewhurst and associates. New York, 1947. xxviii, 812 p. tables, diagrs.
47-3562 HC106.5.T9

5897. Twentieth Century Fund. America's needs and resources: a new survey, by J. Frederic Dewhurst and associates. New York, 1955. xxix, 1148 p. illus., maps, tables.
55-6987 HC106.5.T9 1955

The Twentieth Century Fund's comprehensive source book of measurements of the American economy in all its fields is described by the director in his foreword as "a moving picture of accomplishments and probabilities," one from which we will "begin to realize America's vast economic and social potential." Dr. Dewhurst, an authority in the field of economic statistics, was aided in the huge research project by 26 economists, and most of the chapters are cooperative rather than individual efforts. The six sections cover in lucid statistical analysis, with supporting tables, "Basic Trends," "Consumer Requirements," "Capital Requirements," "Government Costs and Foreign Transactions," "Resources and Capacities," and, as a final summary, "Needs vs. Resources." There are 225 tables in the text, over 40 graphic "figures," and 32 appendixes of additional data. The 22-page index reveals the all-embracing scope of the inquiry. After eight years the Twentieth Century Fund, of which Dr. Dewhurst is now executive director, brought out a revision: America's Needs and Resources: a New Survey. Whereas the first survey had been centered on the changes from the depression economy to that of the full war effort, and the reflection of consumer shortages on the postwar scene, the later volume "finds its major focus in the phenomenal postwar boom, in the long-range upsurge of the economy which this latest boom accentuated, and in the significance of our expanding economy for the future well-being of our nation." The chief change in arrangement is the addition, in the section on "Resources and Capacities," of two new chapters: "Technology: Primary Resource," and "Productivity: Key to Welfare." The tables have increased to 352, and the figures to 105.

5898. U. S. National Resources Committee. The structure of the American economy. Washington, U. S. Govt. Print. Off., 1939-40. 2 v. maps, tables, diagrs. 39-29155 HC106.3.A5 1940

Part 2 issued by the National Resources Planning Board.

CONTENTS.—1. Basic characteristics. A report prepared by the Industrial Section under the direction of G. C. Means.—2. Toward full use of resources. A symposium by G. C. Means, D. E. Montgomery, J. M. Clark, A. H. Hansen, [and] Mordecai Ezekiel.

One of the best known publications of the National Resources Committee, which in 1935 succeeded earlier committees that formed part of the planning apparatus of the New Deal. In mid-1939 the Committee was in turn succeeded, under the Reorganization Plan of that year, by the National Resources Planning Board, the change occurring between issuance of the first and second volumes of this report. The document was presented by Secretary of the Interior Ickes to the President as "the first major attempt to show the inter-relation of the economic forces which determine the use of our natural resources." Director of the project was Dr. Gardiner C. Means, known as joint author with Adolf A. Berle of The Modern Corporation and Private Property (no. 6011). Part 1 has 400 pages, of which fewer than half are text analyzing through statistics the structure of wants and resources; of production in geographical, functional, and financial aspects; and of organization, price, and controls. There follow over 200 pages of appendixes giving detailed statistics. The much shorter part 2 (48 p.) contains five essays by Dr. Means and other economists, offering suggestions for the more effective use of resources. A more recent look is taken by the National Planning Association in a concentrated survey by Gerhard Colm and Theodore Geiger, with the assistance of Manuel Helzner: The Economy of the American People; Progress, Problems, Prospects (Washington, National Planning Association, 1958. 167 p. Planning pamphlet no. 102). Their informative analysis of the high productivity and consumption achieved by the American economic system includes the factors of national resources, labor, business management, capital, values, and institutions. Problems weighed are the balance in economic growth, the residue of poverty still with us, concentration of power in industry, and the role of the United States in the world economic picture. Summing up, the authors consider whether the new American economic system with its large-scale organization in business and government can offer the greatest possible freedom of choice and opportunity to the individual. Their conclusion is that, while the American system cannot be defined as capitalistic or socialistic in the traditional sense of these terms, it serves the national interests of the American people.

5899. Ward, Alfred Dudley, ed. Goals of economic life. New York, Harper, 1953. 470 p. ([The Ethics and economics of society])
52–12049 HB72.W3

This symposium introduced a series undertaken by a study group of the Federal Council (later the National Council) of the Churches of Christ in the United States of America, investigating modern economic life in relation to spiritual and moral values. Fifteen essays, by as many distinguished authors, are focused on problems in achieving a less materialistic society. These are arranged in three groups; the first, by leading economists, is on "The Role of Values in Our Economy." The second group is by political scientists who examine "Our Economy in Democratic Perspective"—in its dependence upon government, and its relation to law and to principles of freedom and justice. The third group, "Our Economy in Other Perspectives," studies economic man from the viewpoints of biology, anthropology, psychology, philosophy, and the Christian faith. The five other volumes in this Harper series consider particular aspects of the economy in relation to ethics. These are: Kenneth E. Boulding, The Organizational Revolution (1953. 286 p.); Howard Bowen, Social Responsibilities of the Businessman (1953. 276 p.); American Income and Its Use, by Elizabeth E. Hoyt and others (1954. 362 p.); Christian Values and Economic Life, by John C. Bennett and others (1954. 272 p.); and one based on extensive polling, The American Economy—Attitudes and Opinions, by Alfred Dudley Ward (1955. 199 p.). Not included in the series, but prepared in connection with it, in part as a summarization, is Ethics in a Business Society, by Marquis W. Childs and Douglass Cater (Harper, 1954. 191 p.). The series is being continued with a slight change in title (Series on ethics and economic life), three new volumes having been brought out by Harper in 1956–57: Walter W. Wilcox, Social Responsibility in Farm Leadership (1956. 194 p.); John A. Fitch, Social Responsibilities of Organized Labor (1957. 237 p.); and Wilbur L. Schramm, Responsibility in Mass Communication (1957. 391 p.).

5900. Whitaker, Joe Russell, and Edward A. Ackerman. American resources, their management and conservation. New York, Harcourt, Brace, 1951. 497 p. illus., maps.
51–2124 HC106.W56

Intended for wider educational use than in college courses, American Resources, by two geographers, offers the general public a readable account of American problems and accomplishments in the field of conservation. The approach, they show, was for long negative: "Many of the countries settled by Europeans rank with the United States in intensity of resource destruction, but none reaches the range and magnitude of the destruction found in this country . . . [which] stands among the foremost examples in the damage done to its natural-resource base during the comparatively short span of three centuries." Now, and particularly because of the studies and plans of the 1930's, "recognition of the need for conservational resource management has led to remedial programs on local, regional and national levels." The authors examine five major groups of resources: cultivable lands, grassland and forests, water resources, mineral resources, fish and wildlife, and other recreational resources. The last chapter is written as a guide to action by the individual citizen, urging his cooperation through personal effort against waste, through support of official programs, and through social pressures.

C. Industry: General

5901. Adams, Walter, ed. The structure of American industry; some case studies. Rev. ed. New York, Macmillan, 1954, 590 p. illus.
54–10831 HC106.A34 1954

"Suggested readings" at end of chapters.

Fourteen economists here analyze individual major industries that present varying degrees of free competition, monopoly and oligopoly, government price support programs or controls, and government regulation. Thirteen case studies follow a systematic outline, each in three sections: 1, historical background and present institutional patterns, including modifications in the war and postwar periods; 2, marketing structure and price policy; 3, public policy and government programs or recommendations. The first industry treated is the highly competitive one of agriculture. Then follow: the chronically "sick" industries of cotton textiles and bituminous coal; residential construction, which, although the nation's second largest industry, is so diversified that it "deserves the title 'industry' as a matter of courtesy only"; the monopolistic industries of steel, chemicals, petroleum, automobiles, cigarettes, motion pictures, tin cans; the regulated air transportation industry; and last, the newspaper industry, symbol of free enterprise and a free press, but whose market structure now "exhibits the familiar patterns of local monopoly, monopolistic competition, oligopsony, and oligopoly." (These terms both imply control of market price of a particular commodity by a few big units acting more or less in concert: oligopoly by the sellers, oligopsony by the buyers.) In the last two chapters an attempt is made to formulate patterns of public policy and labor union activity consonant with a free-enterprise economy.

5902. Alderfer, Evan B., and Herman E. Michl. Economics of American industry. 2d ed. New York, McGraw-Hill, 1950. 716 p. illus., maps. 50–11314 HC106.4.A58 1950
Bibliography: p. 691–707.

A textbook on American manufacturing, based on material used in courses on industrial management and economic theory at the Wharton School of Finance and Commerce, University of Pennsylvania, and first published in 1942. The second edition includes an appraisal of trends of the wartime and postwar expansion of the entire economy. The writers take the individual industry approach, glancing first at the field of manufacturing as a whole, in which over a quarter of American wage-earners are engaged, and concluding with a study of changing industrial patterns. The competitive factors which govern variations in stability are a chief point of their analysis of each separate form of enterprise. They also discuss the relation of each to the economic order in general, and its institutional structure, technical processes (described in simple language), and historical evolution. Eight major groupings are distinguished, and within these sections are chapters on individual industries: e.g., the part on chemical process industries is divided between the chemical industry (including a brief reference to atomic energy), the petroleum industry, the paper industry, and the rubber industry.

5903. Allen, Edward L. Economics of American manufacturing. New York, Holt, 1952. 566 p. illus. 52–7011 HD9725.A65

A textbook by a professor at American University in Washington who is concerned with the present-day industrial plant of the nation and makes little use of historical perspective. Out of the 450-odd general types reported in the 1947 Census of Manufactures he has chosen 19 individual industries for discussion. His treatment is systematic, with several subdivisions within chapters; for each industry, with slight variations, he examines its relative size and importance, use patterns, export-import relations, relations with the Federal Government, corporate ownership and control, location and capacity, technology, input and cost factors, financial factors, private investment, profits, and future outlooks. Illustrations, in part of technical processes and in part graphic charts, assist in keeping the presentation clear and factual. Besides the selected bibliography (p. 542–555), there is a useful final chapter rehearsing sources of data from government statistics and reports, trade association releases, trades publications, and financial services.

5904. Clark, Victor S. History of manufactures in the United States. New York, Published for the Carnegie Institution of Washington by McGraw-Hill, 1929. 3 v. illus. 29–10065 HD9725.C52
Bibliography: v. 3, p. 400–442.

This full-scale general history is one of the distinguished series sponsored by the Carnegie Institution of Washington, Contributions to American economic history (see also Commons, no. 6033; Johnson, no. 5948; and Meyer, no. 5923). The first volume, covering 1607–1860, was published in 1916, and had become standard by the time it was reprinted to accompany the two concluding volumes. Dr. Clark, an economic analyst whose basic area studies of Australia, the Far East, and Latin America had been prepared for the Bureau of Labor Statistics before the First World War, used for this work a quantity of original source material, identified in extensive footnotes. The presentation, on classic lines, paints a broad picture of the development, organization, and economic interactions of manufacturing as a whole and of its more important branches. The second volume, 1860–1893, has three chronological divisions: the Civil War, Reconstruction, and "Big Industry in the Making"; volume 3, 1893–1928, is called "The Industrial State." In the last two volumes special attention is given to the iron and steel industry, "by which the progress, prosperity, and developmental tendencies of manufacturing in general were determined and illustrated."

5905. Fabricant, Solomon. The output of manufacturing industries, 1899–1937, by Solomon Fabricant, with the assistance of Julius Shiskin. New York, National Bureau of Economic Research, 1940. xxiii, 685 p. tables, diagrs. (Publications of the National Bureau of Economic Research, no. 39) 41–4080 HD9724.F3

Text and statistical tables analyze total American manufactured product during three decades of great expansion and one of depression. The writer is an authority in this field, having been with the research staff of the National Bureau of Economic Research since 1930, and its director since 1953. The statistics are focused on long-term changes in volume and composition of the output of manufacturing industries. The beginning date was chosen as the first year for which "reasonably adequate" data were collected by the United States Census of Manufactures. The first chapters are on manufacturing in general and give first a summary of output, next an explanation of the statistical methods and materials used for the computation of relative numbers, and then a review of changes and trends in output of major and other industries. Part 2 examines the output of individual manufacturing industries. There are 66 tables and 24 charts in the text, and appendixes concerned largely with index numbers. A second volume in the series, by Dr. Fabricant alone, is Publication no. 41 of the Bureau: Employment in Manufacturing, 1899–1939, an Analysis of Its Relation to the Volume of Production (New York, 1942. 362 p.). This analyzes the statistics of factory employment and of labor per unit (interchangeably the number of men used in production of a unit of goods, or the volume of production per man employed) in relation to the growth of output. A later study by Dr. Fabrican measures The Trend of Government Activities in the United States since 1900 (no. 6136).

5906. Glover, John George, and William Bouck Cornell, eds. The development of American industries, their economic significance. 3d ed. New York, Prentice-Hall, 1951. xxvii, 1121 p. illus., maps. 51–2589 HC103.G5 1951

A survey of American industrial life, assembled and edited by New York University specialists in industrial management, now in its third edition within 20 years and well established as a reference work. It consists of encyclopedic articles on some 40 leading industries, contributed by representative agencies in each field. The first chapter, by the American Federation of Labor, with the name of President William Green attached, is on "Labor's Contribution to Industry." The articles follow a general pattern, each devoting some space to historical development and presenting facts on the present position, including such aspects as raw materials, processes and technological advances, location, marketing, competition, legislation, financing, and chief centers or in some cases names of leading firms. Many statistical tables are used. The following industries, some of which are not manufactures, are treated: agriculture, meat packing, fishing, lumber, textiles, leather, petroleum, coal, iron and steel, copper, zinc, aluminum, magnesium, lead, chemicals, pharmaceutical products, sugar, pulp and paper, rubber, glass, paint, varnish and lacquer, machine tools, electricity, power, shipbuilding and shipping, railroads, automobiles, aeronautics, telegraph, telephone, motion pictures, radio and television, newspapers, book publishing, retailing, banking, and travel.

D. Industry: Special

5907. Barger, Harold, and Sam H. Schurr. The mining industries, 1899–1939, a study of output, employment and productivity. New York, National Bureau of Economic Research, 1944. xxii, 452 p. diagrs. (Publications of the National Bureau of Economic Research, no. 43)
44–3218 HD9506.U62B3

This statistical study of a single sector of industry forms part of this Bureau's series dealing with trends of productivity in American industry (like no. 5905 in the preceding section). The authors attempt to assess in total output and manhours of labor the results of technological change, new methods of production, shorter workdays, and other factors affecting productivity. The analysis is in three parts: "Output and Employment," "Technological Change," and "Technological Change and Production in Individual Industries" (coal, petroleum, iron, copper, stone quarrying). Part 4, a résumé, concludes that "mining, alone among types of economic endeavor, must reckon with depletion of its resources," and that the level of productivity will inevitably deteriorate unless continually buttressed by technological advances. The appendixes include statistical tables, technical questions of measurement, and a glossary of minerals and mining terms.

5908. Carr, Charles C. Alcoa, an American enterprise. New York, Rinehart, 1952. 292 p. illus. 51–14776 HD9539.A7U53

The story of the Aluminum Company of America, commonly known as Alcoa, began with the "electrolytic fusion of aluminum oxide by twenty-two-year-old Charles Martin Hall, in an Ohio woodshed in 1886." This experiment "touched off an industrial chain reaction which . . has been a classic example of American enterprise at work." The narrator of this case history of a major industry was a newspaperman and for 15 years director of public relations for Alcoa; he has used the Company's records as sources. In 1888 a small group of young Pittsburgh businessmen founded the Pittsburgh Reduction Company, with patents giving a legal monopoly of the Hall process and a capital of $20,000. In 1907, with the Mellon family as bankers and large stockholders, the name was changed to the present form. Alcoa's first taste of trouble with the Federal government came with the Wickersham wave of trustbusting in 1912. In 1922 the Federal Trade Commission began an exhaustive probe into the Company's affairs, which ended to Alcoa's satisfaction in 1930. Lawsuits were brought by competitors; in 1937 the Department of Justice filed 140 charges of monopolistic practices, and the antitrust case went on till 1950. "The Company came out of it as a law-abiding concern and as an asset to the life we know as the 'American Way.'" Mr. Carr ends his 62-year history of Alcoa with an appendix detailing labor negotiations from 1935 to 1950; its labor relations, he says, had "a better-than-average rating."

5909. Chapman, Herman H. The iron and steel industries of the South, by H. H. Chapman with the collaboration of W. M. Adamson [and others] University, Ala., University of Alabama Press, 1953. 427 p. maps, diagrs. (Alabama University. Bureau of Business Research. Printed series, no. 17) 53-62620 HD9517.A2C45

Bibliography: p. [418]-423.

A report occasioned by the approaching exhaustion of the high-grade Lake Superior ores, carried out with the collaboration of the Tennessee Valley Authority by a staff of geologists and economic statisticians. A general introduction reviews the iron and steel industry of the United States, including such aspects as ownership concentration, the effects of government policy, and the location of raw materials and producing centers. Part 2 examines the natural resources of the South, particularly the Southeast, and part 3 surveys the iron and steel industries of the region, their history, recent trends, ownership, mining and operating problems, etc. Part 4 deals with the market for the Southern iron and steel processing and fabricating industries. Part 5 considers possibilities and offers very tentative conclusions concerning the future of the industry in the South.

5910. Cole, Arthur Harrison. The American wool manufacture. Cambridge, Harvard University Press, 1926. 2 v. illus. 26-5173 HD9895.C6

Bibliography: v. 2, p. 303-314.

This remains the standard work tracing the growth of the wool industry from its colonial infancy to the mass production of the large-scale modern factory. The author gives a full account of processes, technological advances, changing industrial form, markets, foreign competition, the labor force, and the influence of the tariff upon development. His sources are cited, with frequent elaboration of detail, in long footnotes. The first volume covers the household industry of the colonies, with handicraft fullers, carders, or weavers playing a minor part; the first factories with the newly invented power-driven machinery introduced from England in the 1790's; the period of transition down to 1830, with Americans making technical advances in power looms, and especially in the "carde américaine," the condensing apparatus for wool-carding invented by John Goulding in the 1820's; and the development of distributing agencies stimulated by expanding communications and the Western market. Between 1840 and 1870 the industry increased between 12- and 15-fold, in spite of a heavy increase in importation of wool and worsted. The period of industrial maturity, after 1870, to which Dr. Cole's second volume is devoted, is concerned largely with the protection by tariff of the American industry from foreign competition and innovation. During this half-century new processes as a rule were introduced from abroad, the American innovations residing in the standardization of the fabric and in mass-production techniques, which have permitted high-quality production on a large scale.

5911. Davis, Pearce. The development of the American glass industry. Cambridge, Harvard University Press, 1949. xiv, 316 p. (Harvard economic studies, v. 86) 49-9758 HD9623.U45D3

Bibliography: p. [295]-305.

An academic study by a professor in the department of business and economics at the Illinois Institute of Technology, reviewing approximately 300 years of American glassmaking. The introductory chapter of general history begins with Pliny, the second chapter with a glass-making venture in Virginia in 1608 or 1609. A chronological account of development to the time of the Civil War is followed by an outline and evaluation of tariff policy from 1820 to 1860. In the succeeding period the author is concerned largely with improved processes, labor problems, and tariff policy, and gives separate chapters to individual branches: the window glass industry, the glass container industry, pressed and blown glass, and plate glass. The writing is for a professional audience.

5912. Dutton, William Sherman. Du Pont; one hundred and forty years. [3d ed.] New York, Scribner, 1951. 408 p. illus.

52-648 HD9651.9.D8D8 1951

The brilliant record of the Du Pont Company of Wilmington, Del., founded by the French émigré Eleuthère Irénée du Pont in 1802 for the manufacture of gunpowder, and now holding world leadership in production based on chemical research, is in no way dimmed by the writer of this "business biography." He states forthrightly that his account is an "inside" view, "the Du Pont Company as seen by Du Pont men." From romantic scenes of family history in Revolutionary France to the end of the First World War, the narrative reads like a novel through whose pages move the lofty and dramatic figures of four generations of Du Ponts. Powdermasters and patriots, they followed, at least until the 1870's, "a road of work, sweat, and grimy hands." With the development of industrial dynamite and the formation in 1872 of the Powder Trust, and guided by the organizing genius of General Henry A. Du Pont and the inventor's vision of Lammot Du Pont, the road turned into a network leading to new regions, the hands to the cleaner work of signing checks that bought up patents and competitors. The tremendous contribution of Du Pont to Allied victory in the First World War is here emphasized with statistics that controvert any hint of "war profits." From 1919 on, the story becomes a dramatic description of the new fields opened in Du Pont's great research laboratories: dyes, plastics, cellulose, rayon, nylon, cellophane—altogether more than 10,000 separate items, "a bewildering array of chemical progeny contributed to the welfare and security of the United States in peace, and also to its great might in war."

5913. History of Standard Oil Company (New Jersey) [New York] Harper, 1955–56. 2 v. illus. 55–8055 HD2769.O4H5

"A study by the Business History Foundation, Inc."

CONTENTS.—[1] Pioneering in big business, 1882–1911, by R. W. Hidy and M. E. Hidy.—2. The resurgent years, 1911–1927, by G. S. Gibb and E. H. Knowlton.

In 1947 the Standard Oil Company of New Jersey granted unrestricted access to the company's records and complete freedom of publication to the Business History Foundation, as well as a substantial gift of money. The volume by the Hidys is the first in a series of thoroughly documented histories and studies, and narrates the general history of the Company from its organization in 1882, through the period when it became the holding company and operating unit for the complex of enterprises popularly known as Standard Oil, to the trustbusting decision of the U.S. Supreme Court in 1911 which lopped off 33 affiliates. The corporation's confidence is justified, for what emerges is no diabolical conspiracy, but a group of able administrators clearheadedly pursuing the logic of capitalistic enterprise, and reducing costs through the economies of large-scale operations, while keeping profits high through differentiation of products, and the development of new producing areas, new machinery, and new processes. Naturally, men of their generation were slow to learn "that dominance in power brought the responsibility of applying that power with restraint." The second volume of this series, The Resurgent Years, 1911–1927, appeared in 1956. In it much attention is given to labor policy, new processes, and the search for sources of oil abroad. The list of companies through which the Standard Oil Company (New Jersey) operated in the United States and abroad in these 17 years fills an appendix (p. 631–664). They fall into 3 groups: 60 closely affiliated, whose earnings were consolidated with those of New Jersey Standard; 58 non-consolidated, in which New Jersey held stock; and 124 affiliates of the "consolidated" companies, over which the New Jersey company exercised remote control.

5914. McLean, John G., and Robert W. Haigh. The growth of intergrated oil companies. Boston, Division of Research, Graduate School of Business Administration, Harvard University, 1954. xxiv, 728 p. illus. 54–6417 HD9565.M282

A survey of the oil industry with regard to its predominant structural form, vertical integration. This is defined as "the process of increasing the number of distribution and processing steps in an industry's cycle of activities which are under the ownership, management, or control of a single company." To such a structure the oil industry, with its comparatively simple steps from natural resource to consumer—production of crude oil, transportation, refining, marketing—is especially adapted. The authors offer this contribution to the technical study of consolidation in industry as a case history, establishing the underlying facts through a detailed examination of integration decisions with extensive statistical exhibits. Part 1 describes the situation in 1950, while the later parts are concerned with how it got that way. In parts 2 and 3 the industry is considered first as a whole and then through the particular cases of seven large integrated companies, four of them former components of the Standard Oil Trust. The last section, before a final summary, studies the decline of the small refining companies, which in 30 or 40 years sank from 28 to 15 percent of the total output. The writers avoid expression of "moral and economic judgment on the performance of the large integrated companies," but their facts suggest that the managements have been less concerned with maximum profits than with assurance of raw materials and markets.

5915. Nevins, Allan. John D. Rockefeller; the heroic age of American enterprise. New York, Scribner, 1940. 2 v. (683, 747 p.) illus. 41-649 CT275.R75N4

5916. Nevins, Allan. Study in power: John D. Rockefeller, industrialist and philanthropist. New York, Scribner, 1953. 2 v. (441, 501 p.) illus. 53-9394 CT275.R75N42

Bibliographical references included in "Notes" (v. 1, p. 403-441; v. 2, p. 437-466). "Bibliography of official documents": v. 2, p. 483-484.

Two versions of the author's highly praised biography, in his long study for which he enjoyed full access to the Rockefeller family papers, as well as to those of some of Rockefeller's chief opponents. The new version has been substantially shortened, especially in the part relating to Rockefeller's early years, while new material is added on the benefactions; it is still, "emphatically," a biography, not a business history. From the author's objective viewpoint, and with the perspective of almost half a century since Ida M. Tarbell wrote her History of the Standard Oil Company (New York, McClure, Phillips, 1904. 2 v.), the destructive and exploitative aspects of the swift transformation of the American economy from 1865 to 1900 are far outweighed by the importance of the final constructive gains. "Had our pace been slower and our achievement weaker . . . the free world might have lost the First World War and most certainly would have lost the Second." The two parts of Rockefeller's career, the organization of a colossal industry and the distribution of an enormous fortune (his gifts in organized undertakings which have set models for philanthropy ran to 550 million dollars), Professor Nevins sees as "dominated by logic and plan." "Innovator, thinker, planner, bold entrepreneur, [Rockefeller] was above all an organizer—one of the master organizers of the era . . . By virtue of this organizing power, backed by keenness of mind, tenacity of purpose, and firmness of character, he looms up as one of the most impressive figures of the century which his lifetime spanned."

5917. Rickard, Thomas Arthur. A history of American mining, by T. A. Rickard. New York, McGraw-Hill, 1932. 419 p. illus. (A. I. M. E. series) 32-20628 TN23.R45

A general history, published under the auspices of the American Institute of Mining and Metallurgical Engineers, and adapted to a student audience. The author had been editor of several mining journals, and his style combines feature-story writing, suited to tales of discovery and exploits of pioneers, with the reportage of economic facts. The treatment is neither chronological nor systematic, and gives evidence of being a reworking of separate articles. Gold, silver, copper, and lead are the metals on which attention is focused. The chapters are for the most part on regions; California, Alaska, Arizona, the Comstock Lode of Nevada, Lake Superior, the Great Salt Lake, the Black Hills of South Dakota, Butte, and other mountain areas are glanced at in relation to prospecting and their celebrated mining enterprises. One chapter tells of "The Great Diamond Hoax," when in 1872 two prospectors "salted" a mysterious region vaguely located in Arizona, Colorado, or Wyoming, and realized large sums from excited investors in the East.

5918. Schroeder, Gertrude G. The growth of major steel companies, 1900-1950. Baltimore, Johns Hopkins Press, 1953. 244 p. illus. (The Johns Hopkins University studies in historical and political science, ser. 70, no. 2) 53-11175 HD9515.S35 H31.J6, ser. 70, no. 2

Bibliography: p. 237-239.

The author of this doctoral thesis has devised techniques of statistical analysis through which she studies 12 major firms in the iron and steel industry that together control over 80 percent of the country's total steel capacity. She approaches them in two groups: first the "Big Three" which account for over half the total, U. S. Steel, Bethlehem Steel, and Republic Steel, all formed through major mergers near the turn of the century; and then nine smaller independent firms. For each she gives a brief narrative history and then discusses factors of external expansion through consolidation and acquisition, internal expansion through additions to plant and equipment, and the direction, purposes, and financing of the expansion. She analyzes the income of each firm and its distribution, with illustrative tables of gross and fixed assets, long-term investment, and distribution through taxes, reinvestment and dividends. Her summary points out similarities and dissimilarities between the firms and attempts to establish objective patterns of growth. The technological processes of iron and steel production, rather than the economic aspects, form the subject matter of a series of articles written for the trade journal Steel, and arranged in book form by an associate editor of that publication, Dan Reebel: ABC of Iron and Steel, 6th ed. (Cleveland, Penton Pub. Co., 1950. xv, 423 p.). The 27 separate papers are by as many experts—executives, technical directors, or research consultants of large firms. The first two explain the mining, reserves, transportation, and handling of iron ore. Other chapters describe operations involved in the production of scrap iron, pig iron, open-hearth steel, Bessemer steel, etc., and in the construction of various finished products, from bars to high-alloy steel castings. There is a subject index.

5919. Tryon, Rolla Milton. Household manufactures in the United States, 1640–1860; a study in industrial history. Chicago, University of Chicago Press, 1917. 413 p. tables.
17–13932 HC105.T7

Bibliography: p. 377–397.

An economico-political study of clothing and other textile products, house furnishings and necessities, and utensils and tools for home and farm, as made in the households of America before the triumph of mechanization. Throughout the Colonial period, except for a few expensive imported luxuries, almost everything was made at home. This condition persisted on the frontier well into the mid-19th century, although in the towns the replacement of homemade articles by goods made by workers in shops or by machines in factories was well under way by 1810 and generally complete by 1860. Professor Tryon analyzes the political and economic factors affecting home industries during the Colonial period, and traces the gradual but steady changes occurring from the Revolution to the first census of manufactures in 1810 (when, according to a table reproduced from "notably fallible census figures," the total value of textiles made in the home was as twelve to one against those made elsewhere). The household products are viewed, with some description of the techniques and ingenious contraptions used by our ancestors. Finally the stages of the transition to commercial production are studied, with statistics that reveal the final passing of home industry as a factor in the economic life of the country.

E. Transportation: General

5920. Barger, Harold. The transportation industries, 1889–1946; a study of output, employment, and productivity. New York, National Bureau of Economic Research, 1951. xvi, 288 p. diagrs. (Publications of the National Bureau of Economic Research, no. 51) 51–2346 HE203.B3

A statistical analysis of changes in commercial transportation over nearly 60 years, including the Second World War period. The author, an expert of the National Bureau of Economic Research, uses tables and charts to show comparative amounts of traffic carried, the roles of the various agencies of transportation, the number of employees, their individual output, and the trends of technological progress which account for the greatly expanded productivity. From 1889 to 1939 the combined passenger and freight traffic of all commercial carriers increased fivefold, and from 1939 to 1946 it almost doubled again. Output per worker in 1946 was four times the 1889 level, and productivity from 1889 to 1939 increased at an average annual rate of 2.2 percent, most strongly in the newer industries of airlines and pipelines. The first part of the text surveys the whole field of transportation for hire; the second separately treats five industries: steam railroads, electric railroads, pipelines, waterways, and airlines. Basic statistical tables for the five industries are given in appendixes, as are the techniques of measurement used. The work is a companion volume to Hultgren's below.

5921. Dearing, Charles L., and Wilfred Owen. National transportation policy. Washington, Brookings Institution, 1949. xiv, 459 p.
49–11772 HE206.D4

A critical study of the role of the Federal Government in relation to transportation, undertaken at the request of the Hoover Commission on governmental reorganization. The authors first examine Federal promotion of transportation facilities and services, such as control of airways, maintenance of airports, air-mail payments, comparable aid to transport on waterways and highways, and special needs for national defense. They then turn to the question of government regulatory action, centering attention on railroads. In conclusion they summarize what they regard as the defects of national transportation policy and make detailed recommendations for reorganizing the Federal agencies involved. They consider that in neither the executive nor legislative branches of government is any overall view taken of transportation policy; that promotional activities are confused with regulatory measures; that the railroads are discriminated against by continuing patterns of rate regulation set up to prevent monopoly in the days before the rise of heavy competition from highways and air transport. They recommend the establishment of a department of transportation, under which all Federal promotional, operating, and programing activities would be coordinated, and of a regulatory commission which would administer a revised program applicable to all forms of transportation.

5922. Hultgren, Thor. American transportation in prosperity and depression. [New York] National Bureau of Economic Research, 1948. xxxiii, 397 p. diagrs. (National Bureau of Economic Research. Studies in business cycles, no. 3)
49–643 HE2751.H84

"Note on sources": p. 383–386.

The Bureau's contributions on business cycles were initiated in the 1920's by its director, Wesley C. Mitchell, the chief exponent of business cycle theory. In this study railroads receive major attention, as the chief agency of transportation for which statistics are available to illustrate cyclical changes over a large number of years. Of the 12 chapters, 10 relate to aspects of the railroad industry, 1 to all "Other than Steam Railroad Transportation," and 1 to future prospects for booms or depressions. Over 150 tables and many graphs give statistics of freight carried, passenger-miles, traffic units, number of workers, man-hours, revenue, etc. Data begin with 1882, when a record of tonnage handled by all railroads was initiated, and for the most part end with 1938; "the trough in that year was followed by one of the longest of all business cycles, swollen in amplitude and extended in time by a great war." The writer considers it unduly optimistic to expect unbroken full employment and prosperity through the next few decades.

5923. Meyer, Balthasar Henry, ed. History of transportation in the United States before 1860; prepared under the direction of Balthasar Henry Meyer, by Caroline E. MacGill and a staff of collaborators. Washington, Carnegie Institution of Washington, 1917. xi, 678 p. 5 maps. (Carnegie Institution of Washington. Publication no. 215 C)
17–17412 HE203.M4
HC101.C75, no. 3

Bibliography: p. 609–649.

Number 3 in the large-scale series of Contributions to American economic history prepared by the Department of Economics and Sociology of the Carnegie Institution (see also Clark, no. 5904). Dr. Meyer, an authority on railroad legislation and a member of the Interstate Commerce Commission, acted as editor, the text being put together by Miss MacGill of the University of Wisconsin from special studies, published or in manuscript, furnished by over 20 contributors. All their material, much of which is regional in scope, was used; it is rich in details of local records, descriptions of construction, tables of costs and of goods carried, and the like; but the volume as a whole lacks the unity of a closely-studied work from a single hand. It is heavily documented, with long footnotes and chapter bibliographies drawing extensively on regional sources. The first half of the text is on land routes and waterways before the coming of the railroads: roads, trails, and highways; rivers and canals. The second half is mostly railroad history, again in large part by regions: New England, New York, the Middle Atlantic States, the South and "the West." The latter is, of course, the Middle West, for the book ends with railways to the Pacific still in the project stage.

5924. Van Metre, Thurman W. Transportation in the United States. 2d ed. Brooklyn, Foundation Press, 1950. 401 p. maps. (University business-economics series)
50–14639 HE203.V3 1950

Includes reading lists.

A textbook by the professor (now emeritus) of transportation in the Graduate School of Business of Columbia University, for use in general transportation courses, covering the entire field of domestic transportation, with the greatest space devoted to railroads. The initial chapters are historical, glancing at early highways and canals, and going more deeply into railroads: their beginnings, development, present system, consolidation, and mechanical advances. "Other agencies" are lumped: motor vehicles, airplanes, shipping, and pipe lines. The business of transportation is explained, again with chief emphasis on railroads; here are covered organization; the carriage of freight, passengers, express packages, and mail; and, cursorily, their financial aspects. The third part treats shippers and carriers, and rates and theories of ratemaking. In the last part the history of Federal regulation is reviewed, with the stress once more on railroads. Professor Van Metre sees little hope for a speedy achievement of coordination and cooperation in the transportation business. He finds one important reason for this in "the profound distrust with which railroad interests and the 'government' usually regard each other"; he views darkly the possible solution of government ownership.

5925. Westmeyer, Russell E. Economics of transportation. New York, Prentice-Hall, 1952. 741 p.
52–9966 HE203.W4

In 1950 the railroads of America were still carrying about 60 percent of the nation's freight, although passenger traffic had shifted heavily (over 84 percent) to the private automobile. Professor Westmeyer concludes his introductory chapter with two statistical tables published annually since 1937 by the Interstate Commerce Commission, showing the volume of intercity traffic handled by various agencies—railroads, motor carriers, inland waterways, pipelines, airlines, and private autos. His book, a text for advanced study, interprets the significance of these figures chiefly in terms of economic and public utility aspects of the transportation field. As in all general studies of this subject, railroads have pride of place, because of their longer history and greater area of controversy as between public and private interests, as well as their continuing predominance as carriers; furthermore, the patterns developed for their regulation have formed the basis for regulating the newer agencies of transport. In a concluding analysis of the basic transportation problems of the United States, and canvassing of possible solutions, the writer emphasizes the "crying need" for a comprehensive national policy, in which railroads, airlines, motor carriers, and the rest would be coordinated as parts of a national transportation system.

F. Transportation: Special

5926. Bruce, Alfred W. The steam locomotive in America; its development in the twentieth century. New York, Norton, 1952. 443 p. illus. 52–14477 TJ605.B78

A technological history, "with special reference to improvements in basic elements of the steam locomotive, different forms of power transmission from steam cylinder to rails, and the development of individual locomotive types in both main-line and special services." Except for a chapter on early history and two chapters outlining the development of steam locomotives and of power transmission from 1901 to 1950, the arrangement is functional rather than chronological. A chapter on the steam locomotive industry reviews the larger commercial building firms, and information on companies and output as well as technical matters is given in tables and charts. The illustrations are photographs of locomotive types and sketches of their basic elements, such as fireboxes, cylinders, and mainrods. In the last chapter the author, himself a steam locomotive builder, explains today's competitors, among them the diesel-electric engine which is now forcing the steam locomotive into retirement. A popular account of the engineering aspects of railroads is presented by Robert Selph Henry, vice-president of the Association of American Railroads, in This Fascinating Railroad Business, 3d ed., rev. (Indianapolis, Bobbs-Merrill, 1946. 521 p.). The first chapters describe the rails and the business of laying them out, the construction of bridges and tunnels, systems of rail control, etc. Next the steam engines in their various phases are explained, and the types of cars. There are chapters on railroad shops and their work, stations, supplies, the freight service and its growth, and the principles of ratemaking. Organization and management are described in general terms. An "Anatomy" of American railroads lists the Class I lines and their intercorporate relationships, with brief statements of ownership and miles of track. Statistics are of 1943.

5927. Cochran, Thomas C. Railroad leaders, 1845–1890; the business mind in action. Cambridge, Harvard University Press, 1953. 564 p. maps. (Studies in entrepreneurial history) 52–9383 HE2752.C6

The author and his wife have searched special collections and the archives of several major railroads, and analyzed the letter files of 61 managing executives of the chief railroads of the country between 1845 and 1890. The opinions expressed on business concepts are offered as "a cross section of the ethics or 'spirit' of developing capitalism," as well as new material for railroad history. ("Irresponsible" operators are excluded.) Sixteen chapters are devoted to separate aspects of the analysis, such as "Ownership and Control," "Innovation," and "Some Social Attitudes." These account for less than half the text. The rest consists of samples of correspondence of the 61 executives, from William R. Ackerman of the Illinois Central to George Henry Watrous of the New York, New Haven, and Hartford. Brief biographical data head each selection. In 1950 there were published two special histories of individual railroad systems. Main Line of Mid-America; the Story of the Illinois Central, by Carlton J. Corliss (New York, Creative Age Press. 490 p.) is written to commemorate the centennial of the company's charter, obtained in 1851. It is a full and well-rounded account of the conception, building, organization, and operation of the Illinois Central. Interest beyond that of railroad specialists is supplied by the inclusion of many personal stories, from a Lincoln anecdote to the "Saga of Casey Jones." The other work is John Debo Galloway's The First Transcontinental Railroad: Central Pacific, Union Pacific (New York, Simmons-Boardman. 319 p.). The author was a railroad engineer, and his book concentrates on engineering aspects: the background, projects and surveys, and location and construction of the two great lines during "a decade of heartbreaking effort." In 1863 the Central Pacific was begun in Sacramento, the Union Pacific in Omaha, and the two met in 1869 at Promontory, Utah, linking East with West.

5928. Harlow, Alvin F. Old towpaths; the story of the American canal era. New York, Appleton, 1926. 403 p. illus.
26–22668 TC623.H3

Bibliography: p. 391–403.

A history of the now almost completely abandoned artificial waterways which before the railroad age carried a heavy proportion of the nation's freight and played a crucial part in the opening of the interior. Most famous was the Erie Canal, "Clinton's Ditch," 364 miles long, built in 1817–25 under Governor DeWitt Clinton of New York. "It directed the movement of populations, fixed the destinies of cities, States and whole sections of America and left traces, still visible, of its handiwork upon the nation." The peak of canal-building enthusiasm came in the 1820's, when over 800 miles of canals were opened to navigation in New York, Pennsylvania, Delaware, and Maryland, with 1300 miles more nearing completion in 1830; by mid-century the system was already passing. Mr. Harlow chronicles, with detail of local and human interest, the state-by-state construction of canals, their operation, and their gradual replacement by railroads. "Life on the Canal" and "Traveling by Canal" are fascinating chapters of social history. When the book was written, "the last of their race," a two-boat "fleet" drawn by three horses on the towpath, still moved on the Delaware and Raritan Canal from New Brunswick to Trenton. The ride is described: "Probably nowhere else in all the neurotic whirl of our present-day business and social life may we find so real a motion picture of America as it was a century ago." Most of the delightful illustrations are contemporary prints.

5929. Hunter, Louis C. Steamboats on the Western rivers; an economic and technological history, by Louis C. Hunter with the assistance of Beatrice Jones Hunter. Cambridge, Harvard University Press, 1949. xiii, 684 p. illus. (Studies in economic history) 50–5138 HE627.H8

A monumental survey of steam navigation on the Ohio, the Mississippi, the Missouri, the Arkansas, and their tributaries, footnoted exhaustively from a wide variety of documents and reports, journals and newspapers, histories and travel memoirs. The first steamboat, the New Orleans, commanded by Nicholas Roosevelt, made the voyage from Pittsburgh to New Orleans in 1811–12, and by 1817 traffic by steam was well established on the Western rivers. Dr. Hunter presents its rise, flowering, and decline on a topical rather than a chronological basis. His work has three parts: "The Steamboat as an Economic Instrument," which includes the introduction, structural evolution, and mechanical development of the boats and the techniques of their operation, the improvement of rivers, and the gory chapter of accidents; "The Steamboat as a Business Institution" including organization and finances, the experiences of passengers in cabins and on deck, and crews and officers; and finally, "Peak and Decline," carrying developments through the Civil War and the fatal postwar competition from the railroads.

5930. Hutchins, John G. The American maritime industries and public policy, 1789–1914; an economic history. Cambridge, Mass., Harvard University Press, 1941. xxi, 627 p. (Harvard economic studies, v. 71) A 41–3915 VM23.H85

Bibliography: p. [583]–606.

A substantial history of shipbuilding and the shipping industries in America, with special emphasis on national maritime policy. The first part is on the general question of public regulation of maritime industries, with two chapters respectively on policy and techniques. Part 2, chapters 3–11, study comprehensively the era of wooden ships and small-scale enterprise, covering timber resources, methods of shipbuilding, the industry in Colonial days and from 1789–1830, the great shipbuilding boom of 1830–56, and the international position of our merchant marine from 1830 to the Civil War. The third part is on metal ships and large-scale enterprise, 1863–1914. Here attention is paid to international competition, the organization of the big shipbuilding industries and shipping lines, and government controls, contracts, and subsidies. The long bibliography includes sections on official documents, Federal, state, and foreign, and on general works by subject.

5931. Jordan, Philip D. The National Road. Indianapolis, Bobbs-Merrill, 1948. 442 p. illus. (The American trails series)
48–6393 HE356.C8J6

"Bibliographical note": p. 415–431.

A narrative history of the great Cumberland Road, the first turnpike constructed by the Federal Government. The trail followed by the young surveyor, Major Washington, and by Braddock's army was projected by Act of Congress of 1806 as a national highway, to run from Cumberland, Md., to the fast-opening Old Northwest. Built as far as Wheeling by 1818, it was pushed on to incorporate in Ohio the pioneer road known as Zane's Trace. Political opposition in the East to the "mismanagement" of Federal funds held up construction of the western half; in Jackson's time maintenance and repairs were taken over by the States, and the building and ownership of the western part were later assumed by Indiana and Illinois. By the time its broken-stone surfacing had been laid to Vandalia, Ill., canals and railroads had already cut into its importance as chief route of travel to the Mississippi. In the 1920's this importance was revived in U.S. Route 40. Mr. Jordan's account was written before that, too, had waned, overshadowed by the Pennsylvania Turnpike. The sources for his spirited if none too clearly arranged study include many personal journals and local records, and he enlivens his economic and political account of the building and use of the road with colorful anecdotes of frontier days. Not pioneer roads but the means of travel over them form the subject of another lively contribution to transportation history, Six Horses, by Captain William Banning and George Hugh Banning (New York, Century, 1930. 410 p.). The first-named author had himself been a stagecoach driver for Western Union. The stories assembled in this volume are mostly of individual heroes of the days of overland travel to the Pacific by stagecoach. The first illustration is a modern photograph of "The Old Typical," familiar from a thousand "Westerns," the Concord Coach, drawn by six horses along a prairie road.

5932. Kennan, George. E. H. Harriman, a biography. Boston, Houghton Mifflin, 1922. 2 v. illus. 22–9508 HE2754.H2K36

The most detailed biography of Edward Henry Harriman (1848–1909), who directed the policies of the Union Pacific from 1898 until his death, and extended its control over other lines so as to create an imposing railroad empire. The author, a journalist who had earlier written on several controversial phases of Harriman's career, here vigorously defends "certain transactions which, during Mr. Harriman's life, were widely misrepresented or misunderstood." Much of these volumes is devoted to rebutting accusations against the financier growing out of the stock market crisis of 1901, the New York State investigation of the Equitable Life Assurance Society, of which Harriman had been a director, and the Interstate Commerce Commission's investigation of his purchases of railroad stock in 1906–7. Kennan of course shared in the general appreciation of Harriman's extraordinary mastery of railroad management and finance, which had been applied to smaller New York State lines and to the Illinois Central for two decades before he assumed command of the Union Pacific. Besides railroad matters, the book tells of the boys' club which Harriman founded and maintained, his scientific expedition to Alaska in 1899, and his bequest of wild lands along the Hudson River to the State of New York. Two concluding chapters eulogize the tycoon's character and business methods, and quote tributes from friends and colleagues.

5933. Kirkland, Edward Chase. Men, cities and transportation, a study in New England history, 1820–1900. Cambridge, Harvard University Press, 1948. 2 v. illus., maps. (Studies in economic history) 48–7564 HE207.K5

"Published in cooperation with the Committee on Research in Economic History, Social Science Research Council."

"The story of eight decades, wherein New England shifted from a network of waterways and roads to one of steel rails and railroad consolidation" is here told by a professor of history at Bowdoin College. His scheme of reference is comprehensive, taking in turnpikes, coastal shipping, waterways and canals, and the rise of the steamboat, as well as "the new world of the railroad." Professor Kirkland's research into local and institutional records has been deep, and the flavor of New England history permeates his broad survey. He examines many aspects of railroad history: the "railroad scheme" which began indoctrination in the new mode of transport, the first railroads of Vermont, New Hampshire, and Maine, the routes to New York, regulation, crises, failures, monopoly, and the final consolidation of 1900 into three main systems: the Boston and Albany, Boston and Maine, and New York, New Haven, and Hartford. There are chapters on railroad commissions, financing, rates and services, labor, and leaders. Illustrations are from contemporary portraits or records. The result is the most thorough and illuminating regional study of transportation history that has been made.

5934. Labatut, Jean, and Wheaton J. Lane, eds. Highways in our national life; a symposium. Princeton, Princeton University Press, 1950. xvi, 506 p. illus., maps. 50–7728 HE355.L3

"Under the editorial sponsorship of the Bureau of Urban Research, Princeton University."

Bibliography: p. 476–493.

Forty-five specialists, including historians, sociologists, economists, engineers, landscape architects, city planners, and of course officials, contribute these essays covering practically all phases of the highways of our "nation on wheels." The first nine are historical, following the road as a fundamental institution of mankind from the prehistoric trails of early man to the age of the automobile. The rest of the papers are analytical, beginning with a sociological group which examine the effects of spatial mobility on American urban, suburban, and rural society, as well as on relations across national borders. There follow papers on economic and legal aspects, and on the problems of highway engineering and highway operation. Mr. Labatut in his final summation calls for a better sense of proportion regarding highways—"more horse sense brought up to the HP level."

5935. Lane, Wheaton J. Commodore Vanderbilt; an epic of the steam age. New York, Knopf, 1942. xiv, 357, xii, p. illus.
42–36093 CT275.V23L3
"Bibliographical note": p. [326]–357.

In 1810 young Cornelius Van Derbilt (1794–1877), son of a Dutch farmer on Staten Island, borrowed from his mother $100 for a small boat and started a ferry service to Manhattan. Using his tiny earnings as venture capital in coast-wise shipping, "a field notorious for ruthless competition and crude trickery," he built up fleets which controlled the Eastern coast and by the Nicaraguan transit linked New York with the Pacific. In 1853 the "Commodore," now one of America's richest men, took a pleasure cruise in European waters on his yacht, the North Star, was feted extensively, and was eulogized in the London press: "It is time that the millionaire should cease to be ashamed of having made his fortune. It is time that parvenu should be looked upon as a word of honor." By the sixties the septuagenarian Vanderbilt's interests had shifted from ships to railways, and from his epic battles in the stock market with Daniel Drew, Jim Fisk, Jay Gould, and the other giant speculators of his day, he emerged in control of the New York Central and Hudson River, as well as lines to Chicago. This biography of the self-made builder of steamship and railroad empires is focused on the business aspects of a spectacular career. By a Princeton specialist in transportation history, and based on such primary sources as exist, supplemented by a "judicious" use of secondary works, it is full, readable, and without marked sensationalism.

5936. Morison, Samuel Eliot. The maritime history of Massachusetts, 1783–1860. Boston, Houghton Mifflin, 1941. 420 p.
41–27782 H3161.M4M6 1941
Bibliography: p. 399–[410].

5937. Albion, Robert Greenhalgh. Square-riggers on schedule; the New York sailing packets to England, France, and the cotton ports. Princeton, Princeton University Press, 1938. 371 p. illus.
38–16737 HE767.N5A7
Bibliography: p. [345]–353.

Professor (since 1951, Rear Admiral, Ret.) Morison's history of Massachusetts ships and seamen, merchants and shipowners, shipbuilders, and the towns that lived by the East-India and China trade, the "sacred codfish," or whaling, really deserves a place on the shelves of seafaring adventure rather than among ponderous and often technical works on "transportation." To be sure, it is solid and well-rounded history of an important era and mode of commerce, with appendix of statistics and bibliography, but his material is of the stuff of romance, and his writing—as he said in his 1921 preface—"for your enjoyment." The 1941 edition has a supplement of letters received from readers, of "correction and supplement"; the "supplement" is largely anecdotal, childhood memories or family seafaring tradition, and the "corrections" are the technicalities of the devotees of sail. The author himself is sailorman and prose poet as well as historian. In his final word picture he evokes nostalgically the vision "vouchsafed our fathers, when a California clipper ship made port after a voyage around the world." With the passing of the clipper came to an end the maritime history of Massachusetts, as distinct from that of America. "It was a glorious ending! Never, in these United States, has the brain of man conceived, or the hand of man fashioned, so perfect a thing as the clipper ship." Another noted American maritime historian, Professor Albion of Princeton University, undertook an intensive survey of the history of the port of New York (no. 5951). Square-Riggers on Schedule is a detailed expansion of part of the material covered in the larger work. It is an exhaustive research study of the earliest packet lines, combining narrative with well-documented facts and figures, and enlivened by picturesque and romantic anecdote. Illustrations are well-chosen contemporary maritime prints and portraits.

5938. Morris, Lloyd R., and Kendall Smith. Ceiling unlimited, the story of American aviation from Kitty Hawk to supersonics. New York, Macmillan, 1953. 417 p. illus. 53–11423 TL521.M58

The writers produced this book to coincide with the 50th anniversary of powered flight. It is a popular history of inventors, plane designs, flyers, and the achievements of aviation in peace and war. The business aspects of the aeronautics industry receive slight attention. Part 1, "Dawn of the Aerial Age," is almost entirely devoted to the Wright Brothers, and begins at Kitty Hawk with the first plane raised by its own power for a 59-second flight in 1903. Part 2, "Men Try Their Wings," continues with the Wrights, Curtiss, and other experimenters, and with patents and early flights. The airplane was ready for the First World War, its part in which is chronicled in part 3, "War in the Skies," ending with a chapter on the "dishonored prophet," General Billy Mitchell. The interwar years were "The Era of Expansion," and here government policy, the organization of aircraft firms and airlines, and questions of competition versus monopoly share the interest with the record-making flights of many pilots, "Lindbergh and His Contemporaries." The last part of the story, "The Second World War and After," pictures America in the age of air travel when the "spaceship" is no longer science fantasy but an experimental problem. The many excellent photographs are grouped in sections following the five parts.

677676 O–63–59

5939. Nevins, Allan. Ford. By Allan Nevins with the collaboration of Frank Ernest Hill. New York, Scribner, 1954–57. 2 v. illus.
54–6305 CT275.F68N37

Bibliography: v. 1, p. 653–664.

CONTENTS.—1. The times, the man, the company.—2. Expansion and challenge, 1915–1933.

The Ford Archives at Dearborn contain the largest collection of Fordiana, as well as of Company records, in existence. All has been opened to the two distinguished authors for the unlimited research needed for this monumental work, which is at once full biography of the eccentric genius Ford and detailed history of the Ford Motor Company—in essence, through the Company's affiliations and rivalries, a history of the automotive industry, and of "mass production [which] has changed the lineaments of our economic and social life more profoundly than any other single element in the recent history of civilization." Ford: the Times, the Man, the Company covers the years through 1915, describing Ford's childhood and early life; the epoch of pioneering in horseless carriages; Ford's first experiments with racing cars; the founding of the Company with Malcomson, Couzens, the Dodge Brothers, and others; and the Model A in 1903. The battle to bring the automobile within the reach of the common man was won in 1908 with the Model T, the epochmaking "ungraceful, bouncing, noisy, tough-looking, and endlessly useful new Ford." Then came victory over monopoly in the Selden patent suit, removal of the plant to Highland Park, and the revolutionary technology of the moving assembly line. The trinity of mass production, low prices (in 1914, $440), and high wages was consummated in 1914 with the five-dollar day. The Sociological Department was established to investigate the workers, mostly recent immigrants, as to their economic, social, and moral qualifications for the minimum wage. Up to that point the book is entirely factual, with documentation for almost every paragraph; it ends with analysis of Ford's character and the dangers implicit in his paternalistic control. Ford: Expansion and Challenge continues the work through the First World War and the twenties, "the crowded years of war, boom, and incipient depression." As before, the story of Ford, his associates, and the industry is told in fully rounded and absorbing detail as to technological, social, political, and personal aspects. In his fervent faith in mass production, lower prices, and high wages as moulders of a better age, in his appearance and personality around which clustered anecdote and legend, in his place at the center of the "epochal controversy" between capitalism and socialism, Ford became a worldwide symbol of the second industrial revolution. His dictatorial sway as one of the last great despots of the industrial world made inevitable the comparison often drawn with Mussolini. "Happily, the Ford Motor Company was far greater than its chief author. That complex and powerful corporation represented a pooling of the energies and brains of countless men." Late in the same year as the first volume, which represented "the best documentation and . . . the most complete work on the subject thus far attempted," there was published Roger Burlingame's Henry Ford, a Great Life in Brief (New York, Knopf, 1955 [i.e. 1954] 194 p.). A paperback edition was issued as a Signet key book by the New American Library in 1956 ([New York] 1943 p.). As concise as the Nevins and Hill volumes are detailed, the writer in his pointed pages has highlighted the essentials of the Ford epic and brilliantly interpreted the man who had called history bunk, and "never once allowed the impossibilities of the past to limit the possibilities of the future."

5940. Pound, Arthur. The turning wheel; the story of General Motors through twenty-five years, 1908–1933. Garden City, N.Y., Doubleday, Doran, 1934. xvi, 517 p.
34–6016 HD9710.U52P6

Bibliography: p. 491–499.

The frontispiece of this anniversary volume is a medal by Norman Bel Geddes commemorating the 25th birthday of the General Motors Corporation. The author, working from company records, has written a popular history of the firm and its products—Oldsmobile, Buick, Oakland and Pontiac, and Cadillac; their consolidation in General Motors; the rise of Chevrolet and its merger with General Motors in 1918; and subsequent developments. He begins with two preliminary chapters on the predecessors of the automobile, given added interest by the amusing drawings by William Heyer with which the book is illustrated. He includes chapters on research and construction ("Body by Fisher"), on stockholder interest, marketing, financing and insurance for buyers, employee benefits, and public relations. The first appendix is a chronology of significant dates in the evolution of self-propelled vehicles and of General Motors; other appendixes are lists of officers and directors and notes on subsidiaries and affiliates.

5941. Smith, Henry Ladd. Airways abroad, the story of American world air routes. [Madison] University of Wisconsin Press, 1950. 355 p. illus. 50–14738 TL521.S52

The establishment of America's share of today's world-covering network of commercial airlines began with government monopoly. Its first 10 years are the history of Pan American Airways, which was organized by Juan Trippe in 1927, and granted exclusive overseas airmail contracts. This "chosen instrument" policy permitted the line's great expansion, its trans-Pacific service initiated in 1935, a trans-Atlantic one in 1939, and a magnificent contribution during the war. Competition was called for in the Civil Aeronautics Act of 1938, and from then on the story of international airways becomes one of involved conflict, bilateral and multilateral, between rival lines, executive agencies, Congress, foreign airlines and the United States and foreign governments. The postwar industry has emerged from international conferences and Federal action as one of regulated competition at home and abroad, supervised by American authorities and the International Civil Aviation Organization. The present vivid account is focused on enterprises and policy-making; if not always crystal clear, the fault is the subject's rather than the author's. Each chapter is followed by references and a useful note on sources, a large proportion of which are Civil Aeronautics Board, Congressional, and ICAO documents. The writer had published an earlier history, similarly concerned with competition, financial intrigue, and government regulation: Airways; the History of Commercial Aviation in the United States (New York, Knopf, 1942. 430 p.).

5942. Taff, Charles A. Commercial motor transportation. Rev. ed. Homewood, Ill., R. D. Irwin, 1955. 673 p. 55–9353 HE5623.T3 1955

A textbook on the industry of transportation by truck and bus, by a professor of transportation at the University of Maryland. The mushroom growth of the motor carrier during the last 30 years, the extension of hard-surfaced highways, and the methods of financing highways are outlined, with striking graphic illustration, in part 1. The bulk of the text is devoted to "property-carrying aspects," with chapters on the various types of trucks, their management and operations, classification, financing, rates and ratemaking, regulation and control by Federal and state governments, and policies of the Interstate Commerce Commission, under whose authority trucks were brought by the Motor Carrier Act of 1935. Part 3 is on buses, with two chapters explaining the elements of intercity passenger operations, and one on urban bus transit. At the end is an 8-page bibliography.

5943. Wilson, George Lloyd, and Leslie A. Bryan. Air transportation. New York, Prentice-Hall, 1949. ix, 665 p. illus., maps. 49–49212 TL552.W48

A general treatment of the subject for students of the economic aspects of air transportation. The historical background and modern development of aviation, types of aircraft, airports and civil airways are outlined in the first part. The longer second part explains the system of commercial air transportation, domestic and international, carrying mail, passengers, and freight. Among the aspects discussed are organization, services, rates and charges, coordination, safety, insurance, and employee and public relations. There is a short survey of the principal airlines of Europe, Asia, Africa, Australasia, and the Western Hemisphere. The last chapters discuss government aid and regulation on the municipal, State, Federal, and international levels. The appendix is a digest of the "charter" of American aviation, the Civil Aeronautics Act of 1938. The same field of business aspects is covered in Commercial Air Transportation, by Professor John H. Frederick of the University of Maryland, now in its fourth edition (Homewood, Ill., R. D. Irwin, 1955. 547 p.). Less attention is paid to historical development and to international air transportation, and rather more to policies of the Civil Aeronautics Board and to the practical details of financing airlines, handling passengers and cargo, etc. A bibliography follows the text, and the appendixes give the Act of 1938 and changes proposed in the Senate Bill of 1954. Last may be mentioned a specialized study of air transportation in relation to a single but important sector of fiscal policy: Richard W. Lindholm's Public Finance of Air Transportation, a Study of Taxation and Public Expenditures in Relation to a Developing Industry (Columbus, Bureau of Business Research, College of Commerce and Administration, Ohio State University, 1948. 178 p.). This is a technical and statistical analysis of the effects of specific taxes and tax rates, which still amount to a substantial subsidy of air transport. The taxes are of four sorts: gasoline taxes, property taxes, taxes on corporate net income and capital stock, and social security taxes. The author offers a number of findings and recommendations, some of a general nature, some specific to the airlines.

G. Commerce: General

5944. Barger, Harold. Distribution's place in the American economy since 1869. Princeton, Princeton University Press, 1955. xviii, 222 p. diagrs. (National Bureau of Economic Research. General series, no. 58) 55-10677 HF3021.B3
Bibliography: p. 152–215.

It has not infrequently been noticed that today more people are needed to get food, clothes, and other commodities from the farmer or manufacturer to the customer than in the days of our grandfathers. This fact has been statistically demonstrated in impressive detail by Professor Barger and his staff, from sources whose enumeration requires over 60 pages. For the past three decades, they demonstrate, there has been little change in the merchant's share of the retail sales dollar. A sharp increase in the percentage of salesmen in the total labor force and a corresponding decline in the percentage of farmers, miners, factory workers, etc., have been balanced by a very much larger rise in output per manhour among the latter than among workers in the wholesale and retail trades. Reliable figures were available for these decades, but for the years before World War I the Bureau has had to piece together scraps of information. What emerges is the conclusion that ever since the Civil War the role of the distributor has been rising in proportionate importance and that of the producer falling, while the output of the latter has increased, just as in the last 30 years; and the buyer's dollar between 1869 and 1919 turned definitely, though slowly, in the direction of the salesman. The Bureau presents these conclusions through tables, charts, and text addressed to a professional audience.

5945. Converse, Paul D., and Harvey W. Huegy. The elements of marketing, by Paul D. Converse and Harry W. Huegy, with the collaboration of Robert V. Mitchell. 5th ed. New York, Prentice-Hall, 1952. 968 p.
52–8794 HF5415.C55 1952

In accordance with the great increase of workers in distribution recorded by Professor Barger (above), marketing has become increasingly a subject of study in American universities and business schools. This textbook, first published in 1921, has as authors and collaborator two full professors and an assistant professor of marketing of the University of Illinois. They begin with a definition of marketing: it is often called distribution; it "makes goods and services more valuable by getting them where they are wanted" (place utilities), "when they are wanted" (time utilities), "and transferred to those people who want them" (possession utilities); a simplified definition says "marketing is the business of buying and selling." The various elements of the marketing process are then expounded in detail. Over 100 pages at the end set problems related to individual chapters, written in the concrete style of case histories: e. g., how the Orangeburg Company pays its salesmen. Short bibliographies follow the chapters. That on "General Marketing" lists 30-odd works, of much the same character, a number of them similarly going through periodic revision for class use. Typical are two, both revised since the present work appeared: Harold H. Maynard, Theodore N. Beckman, and William R. Davidson, Principles of Marketing, 6th ed. (New York, Ronald Press, 1957. 798 p.); and Charles F. Phillips and Delbert J. Duncan, Marketing; Principles and Methods, 3d ed. (Homewood, Ill., R. D. Irwin, 1956. 789 p.).

5946. Heck, Harold J. Foreign commerce. New York, McGraw-Hill, 1953. 512 p.
52–11511 HF3031.H4

Four of the five parts into which this volume is divided deal with foreign commerce as an aspect of the economy of the United States, while the last part reviews intergovernmental organizations— the International Monetary Fund, International Bank, etc.—and international trade agreements. The transactions carried on abroad by American merchants, the services that facilitate them, and the conditions that restrict them are the focus of the study. First the significance of foreign commerce is examined, wih a statistical analysis of the patterns of world trade. Export and import businesses are explained, and the parts played in connection with them by banks, brokers, transportation, insurance, postal services, government, and other agencies described. Financial considerations discussed include balances of payments, foreign exchange, and foreign investments. The fourth part is on customs, tariffs, restrictions on exports, and government promotion of foreign trade. The book is designed for college courses, with section headings within chapters and a 9-page bibliography.

5947. Humphrey, Don D. American imports. New York, Twentieth Century Fund, 1955. xviii, 546 p. diagrs. 55-8798 HF3031.H86

This analysis of the "import deficit" of the United States was authorized in 1950 by the Twentieth Century Fund and the National Planning Association; as the statistical data in general reflect the scene of 1949, its importance is now largely historical. The American export surplus and the resulting worldwide dollar shortage are shown to result from the great expansion of domestic industry rather than from restrictions on products from abroad. The tariff, trade agreements, and other barriers to importation are historically reviewed, and a chapter contributed by Professor Calvin B. Hoover, a colleague of the author's at Duke University, gives the viewpoint of the European exporter. Individual imports that might be increased are statistically studied—such raw materials as hides and skins, wool, fats, and oils; various agricultural items; minerals and petroleum; and "luxuries," tourism, and shipping. Domestic industries that might suffer thereby are shown to be "relatively stagnant, low-wage industries," such as fur felt hats, blue-mold cheese, handmade glass, and watches. The summing up ends with a policy statement by the NPA's Committee on International Policy. Its recommendations for a substantial reduction of the tariff and more liberal trade agreements are aimed at improvement of the economic health of the free world. A more recent and less technical study is by Samuel Lubell: The Revolution in World Trade and American Economic Policy (New York, Harper, 1955. 143 p.). In an attempt to disprove the widespread "illusion" that lowering United States tariffs and removing international trade restrictions would go far to solve the world's economic problems, the author analyzes the world picture. Asia's dollar crisis is caused by its greatly increased need for imports, he finds; the British troubles come from concentration on the sterling bloc; Western European efforts are aimed at integrating the resources and markets of the overseas areas with the home countries; the trade policy of the Soviets is aimed above all at splitting the free world. He outlines certain desirable objectives and offers some suggestions for their attainment.

5948. Johnson, Emory R., and others. History of domestic and foreign commerce of the United States, by Emory R. Johnson, T[hurman] W. Van Metre, G[rover] G. Huebner, and D[avid] S. Hanchett. Washington, Carnegie Institution of Washington, 1915; reprinted 1922. 2 v. (363, 398 p.) maps. ([Carnegie Institution of Washington. Publication no. 215A])
30–23704 HF3021.J6 1922

This valuable reference work is one of the notable series of Contributions to American economic history sponsored by the Carnegie Institution's Department of Economics and Sociology (see also Clark, no. 5904; Meyer, no. 5923; Commons, no. 6033). The late Professor Johnson of the University of Pennsylvania, an expert on transportation, was editor, and contributed most of the first part, a history of commerce in the Colonial era and through the Revolution. Two chapters on fisheries and the coastwise trade in this period were by Dr. Van Metre, who was responsible also for the second and third parts, which complete volume 1: "Internal Commerce of the United States," and "The Coastwise Trade," both extending from 1789 to the early 20th century. The second volume contains "The Foreign Trade of the United States since 1789," by Professor Huebner, with a preliminary chapter by Professor Johnson; "American Fisheries," by Dr. Van Metre; and "Government Aid and Commercial Policy," by Dr. Hanchett, with a chapter on tariff provisions by Dr. Huebner. The contributors were all on the faculty of the University of Pennsylvania. A number of unpublished monographs by other collaborators were used in preparing the final text. The work is heavily documented, with footnotes, a formal classified bibliography (v. 2, p. 363–386), and a bibliographical essay on sources (p. 352–362).

5949. Richert, Gottlieb Henry. Retailing, principles and practices. 3d ed. New York, Gregg Pub. Division, McGraw-Hill, 1954. 498 p. illus.
53–12060 HF5429.R52 1954

The writer is identified as a specialist in distributive education of the U. S. Office of Education. In his preface explaining the need for teaching this subject he speaks of the retail store as "a romantic enterprise," as well as a complex business. The textbook is for the young person who intends to go to work in a store, and it is all the more concrete for that. It includes an account of the "Merchants of America—Hall of Fame" opposite the Chicago Merchandise Mart, and scattered throughout it are pictures and brief biographical sketches of America's most successful retail merchants. The chapters cover all aspects of the retail business, even to illustrations of "proper wrapping methods." An appendix lists trade associations. A comparable textbook addressed to college students is Retailing; Basic Principles, by Pearce C. Kelley and Norris B. Brisco, 3d ed. (Englewood Cliffs, N. J., Prentice-Hall, 1957. 620 p.). The authors are respectively a professor of marketing at the University of Oklahoma and the general operating manager of a large department store. A long bibliography (p. 585–609), referring largely to periodical material, is arranged to follow the individual chapters, on such subjects as "Inventory and Stock Control," "Effective Retail Personnel," and "That All-Important Person [the customer]." The standard textbook on wholesaling is by Professor Theodore N. Beckman of Ohio State University and Nathanael H. Engle, formerly assistant director of the U. S. Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce: Wholesaling, Principles and Practice, rev. ed. (New York, Ronald Press, 1951. 746 p.). It has four parts: "The Nature and Evolution of Wholesaling," "Modern Wholesaling in the United States and Abroad," "Operation and Management of a Wholesale Business," and "Economic and Governmental Aspects of Wholesaling."

5950. Rosenthal, Morris S. Techniques of international trade. New York, McGraw-Hill, 1950. xv, 554 p. 50–8041 HF1007.R6 1950

This volume of basic information about the techniques of importing and exporting, written by the president of the National Council of American Importers, rehearses and explains the practical matters involved in international trade. The author discusses the significance and form of the written contract, methods and instruments of shipment, customs procedure and tariffs in the United States and abroad, marine insurance, packing, financing through consignment and open account, drafts and letters of credit, foreign monetary systems, air freight, and communications. Many examples of individual transactions and facsimiles of typical documents are included. The appendixes include a number of international agreements, and the "Revised American Foreign Trade Definitions" of 1941 issued by the National Foreign Trade Council. The work is a revision of Technical Procedure in Exporting and Importing published in 1922.

H. Commerce: Special

5951. Albion, Robert Greenhalgh. The rise of New York port (1815–1860) by Robert Greenhalgh Albion, with the collaboration of Jennie Barnes Pope. New York, Scribner, 1939. xiv, 458 p. 39–27172 HE554.N7A6

Bibliography: p. [423]–470.

The whole history of the port of New York, says Dr. Albion, is too complex for compression into one volume. In this work he surveys "the significant middle period when New York definitely drew ahead of its rivals and established itself as the chief American seaport and metropolis." The author had already published Square-Riggers on Schedule (no. 5937), which expands a portion of the material here covered; his plans for histories of New York as a port before 1815 and after 1860 were interrupted by the war, and his later contributions have been in naval history. The present volume is broad in its scope, describing the operations of trade in New York itself, in domestic and foreign markets and in ports of call; the activities of the waterfront; the ships, their routes and mariners; the personalities of "merchant princes"; and travelers' impressions. For the general reader there are provided "shipwrecks, slavers, and pirates"; for the scholarly, analysis of the growth of commerce and statistical data, much of the latter being tabulated in appendixes. The book is profusely illustrated with reproductions of contemporary prints and portraits.

5952. Baer, Julius B., and Olin Glenn Saxon. Commodity exchanges and futures trading; principles and operating methods. [New York] Harper, 1949. 324 p. 49–7144 HG6046.B3 1949

Revision of 1929 publication with the title Commodity Exchanges, by Julius B. Baer and George P. Woodruff.

Commodity exchanges such as the New York Cotton Exchange, the Chicago Board of Trade (wheat and corn), the Rubber Exchange, the Silk Exchange, the Cocoa Exchange, and the National Metal Exchange, are associations of traders organized for buying and selling their particular commodities, chiefly through futures contracts. These are contracts for "to arrive" deliveries drawn up according to the rules of the organization as to unit of amount (e. g., a standard bale of cotton), quality, and time of delivery. This involves a form of insurance for producer, dealer, and processor, which takes the form of "hedging." Hedging is the device whereby the purchaser who has contracted to deliver a processed commodity—e. g., a miller promising a quantity of wheat flour—and is buying a quantity of wheat at today's price, contracts to sell a like quantity of unprocessed wheat at the going market price on the date when he delivers his flour. He will thus be protected against loss if the market has fallen, and if the market has risen, his profits on the first purchase will be offset by the price he will have to pay for the future purchase of wheat. This technical study, by two specialists in business law, describes the mechanics of futures trading on the American exchanges with emphasis on their legal aspects. Little attention is given to international markets. The role of the speculator is defended as of social value.

5953. Brown, William Adams. The United States and the restoration of world trade; an analysis and appraisal of the ITO charter and the General agreement on tariffs and trade. Washington, Brookings Institution, 1950. 572 p. 50–7703 HF55.B7

A study of the primary instruments of international commerce proposed under United Nations auspices. The late author, an economist at the Brookings Institution, had served in the State Department and acted as an observer at conferences for a proposed International Trade Organization. After a glance at our fundamental foreign trade policies and at the background of international efforts toward multilateral agreement on commercial relations, he reviews the history of ITO and the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade (GATT). The UN Economic and Social Council (ECOSOC) in 1946 set up a Preparatory Committee on Trade and Employment which met at London and Geneva and drew up a draft charter, which was presented to ECOSOC at a conference in Havana in November 1947. Here the so-called Havana Charter for an International Trade Organization was promulgated, to be submitted for ratification to member states. As a means of immediate partial implementation, GATT was signed by 23 countries at the Geneva meeting of the preparatory committee, and has subsequently received several amendments. Dr. Brown explains the content and implications of the two instruments, and then appraises them in terms of United States policy. In the last chapter he reviews the unsatisfactory alternatives of action if the United States should reject the Charter. Its text is analyzed provision by provision in the appendix. [The United States has not been willing to accept the provisions of ITO, and as of 1959 it is a dead letter. GATT is in force as an informal agreement on certain limitations of restrictions; it has no administrative apparatus beyond an annual meeting of the signatories. In 1955 an Organization for Trade Cooperation (OTC) was agreed upon to serve as an administrative body for GATT; it has not yet been ratified by all member states.]

5954. Campbell, Persia C. The consumer interest: a study in consumer economics. New York, Harper, 1949. 660 p. 49–2885 HB801.C3

An evaluation from the consumer's viewpoint of America's "total economic activity in terms of the end results in consumer goods, and the satisfactions derived from their use by the different families and individuals in the community"—in other words, "What comes from all our getting and spending? And do we want what we get, or get what we want?" First, the standard of living is defined in material and subjective ways, for instance, in terms of purchasing power, social status, and personal satisfaction. The writer discusses "Consumers at Market," indicating patterns of choice in expenditure, with many interesting details and statistics. Shopping for price advantage is set against shopping for quality, and the advantages and disadvantages of buying on credit are analyzed. The last section, "Factors in Supply," appraises the relation to the consumer of the retail store, farm production, and industry, with special regard to the part played by government in regulation and control. In a final chapter Miss Campbell surveys the "consumer movement" for educating the buyer and forming an enlightened public opinion in the field.

5955. Carson, Gerald. The old country store. New York, Oxford University Press, 1954. 330 p. 54–5290 HF5429.C296

The past tense prevails in this engaging account of the typical institution which tied together the rural community of 19th-century America and provided its full-time social center. For his material the writer has drawn on such sources as old ledgers and journals, newspapers, diaries, "drummers'" cards, local history, folksay, and personal reminiscence. The narrative is studded with anecdotes and verses, illustrated with facsimiles and gay pen drawings. Chronologically, Mr. Carson divides his account into two halves at the Civil War. The chapters have pleasant titles: "How to Live without Money" (your cordwood in trade for cigars), "The Thrivingest People in the World" (peddlers), "A Man of Many Parts" (The storekeeper, hero of local legend). "The Drummers of Pearl Street" describes the country merchant's buying trip to New York, before the day of the traveling salesman. The latter, "The Man Who Brought the News," arrived about the middle of the century. "From Cradle to Coffin" is the country-store inventory; "Sittin' Round the Old Store Stove" is the lore of the cracker-barrel colloquium. Patent medicines are looked at in "One for a Man, Two for a Horse." The story ends with the coming of the dissolvents: the mail-order catalog and the Model T. "With the departure of the country store—counter, stove, and settle—there is no longer any point of assembly. The congress has adjourned, sine die."

5956. Emmet, Boris, and John E. Jeuck. Catalogues and counters; a history of Sears, Roebuck and Company. [Chicago] University of Chicago Press, 1950. xix, 788 p. illus. 50–7387 HF5467.S4E5

Bibliography: p. [753]–773.

Sears, Roebuck and Company, according to its former retail merchandise manager, Dr. Emmet, is "perhaps the outstanding example of mass merchandizing"; in 1948, $2,296,000,000 worth of goods were sold through its 632 retail stores, 11 mail-order plants, and 341 order offices. The authors present here a full business history, with special attention to the policies and methods by which the firm has cut the high cost of distribution to the benefit of the American consumer. The Sears, Roebuck story falls into three chronological stages. The first extends from 1886, when Richard W. Sears (1863–1914) started a little business in Chicago advertising the sale of watches by mail, to his resignation as president of the $50 million company in 1908. A. C. Roebuck, watchmaker and cofounder, had sold out early, and his place had been filled by Julius Rosenwald, who succeeded Sears as president. The middle period of maturity in selling by catalog lasted from 1908 to 1925; hard hit by the business crisis of 1921, the Company had been saved only by Rosenwald's "grand gesture" of advancing $20 million of his own fortune, and had undergone an extensive reorientation in sales methods and operation. The third period, from 1925 to 1948, saw the development of retail stores, a great expansion of over-the-counter sales, and the many other changes that have come with the growth of the American economy in general, and of Sears, Roebuck in particular.

5957. Gibbons, Herbert Adams. John Wanamaker. New York, Harper, 1926. 2 v. illus. 26–18311 E664.W24G4

Bibliography: v. 2, p. 469–481.

John Wanamaker's long and eventful life, from 1838 to 1922, is one of the brilliant success stories of America's age of enterprise. To this biographer, friendly though not eulogistic, it was "the spirit of radiant adventure" that animated the great merchant in his many activities in business, religion, and politics. Dr. Gibbons gives equal attention to all sides of Wanamaker's career: in religious endeavor, the Y. M. C. A., the Bethany Chapel, the Moody and Sankey and other revivals; in State, municipal, and national politics (he was rewarded by Benjamin Harrison for his zeal in the campaign of 1888 with the Postmaster Generalship); and in business, with the establishment of one of America's first great department stores. The modest shop for men's clothing, Oak Hall, which he and his brother-in-law began in 1861, became in 10 years the biggest retail store of its kind in the country, largely through Wanamaker's genius for publicity. In 1876, taking advantage of the many visitors to Philadelphia for the Centennial Exhibition, Wanamaker converted the old Pennsylvania Railroad freight depot into the Grand Depot, a combination of drygoods and clothing store. In 1877 it became "a new kind of store," with departments for drygoods, notions, and "all things for the ready-dress needs of the people." Its rise to the huge establishment in Philadelphia and New York was not, the writer emphasizes, automatic growth, but the result of Wanamaker's combination of bold venture, foresight, and faith.

5958. Hower, Ralph M. The history of an advertising agency: N. W. Ayer & Son at work, 1869–1949. Rev. ed. Cambridge, Harvard University Press, 1949. xliii, 647 p. illus. (Harvard studies in business history, 5)

49–10653 HF6181.A8H6 1949

First edition, 1939.

A case study in the history of advertising, based on "inside materials"—the firm's records, interviews with employees and clients—by an independent researcher, a professor at the Harvard Graduate School of Business. The record of N. W. Ayer & Son, Inc., of Philadelphia, one of the oldest advertising agencies in America, is presented as illustrative of "the creative work of the business man," its success "a synthesis of the ideal and the useful, of the right and the profitable." The book is in two distinct parts, the first 200 pages tracing the general history of the agency from its small beginning in 1869 with a list of 11 religious newspapers for which to procure advertisements, to the big organization of the present day. The second part is an objective analysis of particular aspects of the Ayer development as typical of the rise of professional advertising, with stress on their social significance. To the library profession, the company is most familiar as publishers of the famous guide, now called N. W. Ayer & Son's Directory, Newspapers and Periodicals, which has come out annually since 1880.

5959. Hower, Ralph M. History of Macy's of New York, 1858–1919; chapters in the evolution of the department store. Cambridge, Harvard University Press, 1943. xxvii, 500 p. diagrs. (Harvard studies in business history, 7)

A 43–1889 HF5465.U6M27

The first 60 years of America's largest single retail store comprise its founding and early development by Rowland H. Macy and his first partners (1858–87), and its expansion under the direction of two generations of Strauses (1888–1919). A second volume to cover later years was projected but has not been published. In this history of the great "cheap store," the author's second contribution to this Harvard series in business history, the style is semipopular, and the pages lightened with personal names and stories, quotations of sprightly advertising in verse and prose, and portraits of store personalities. Emphasis is on the functions of retailing, and Dr. Hower offers evidence to prove that Macy's was "among the two or three stores in both Europe and America which first completed the transition from specialized stores to modern department stores," with an ever-increasing variety of goods for sale in quantity at the lowest unit price. An interesting central chapter describes the composition and working conditions of the sales force of the eighties. In the era of direction by Isidor and Nathan Straus and their sons, the author's attention is focused on the evolution of store facilities and of policies of expansion, advertising, competitive pricing, and employee relations.

5960. Jones, Fred Mitchell. Middlemen in the domestic trade of the United States, 1800–1860. Urbana, University of Illinois, 1937. 81 p. (Illinois studies in the social sciences, v. 21, no. 3)
37–27875 HF3027.3.J62
H31.I4, v. 21, no. 3

University of Illinois Bulletin, v. 34, May 25, 1937.
Bibliography: p. 72–77.

A historical monograph describing the operations of middlemen—wholesalers, jobbers, commission merchants, selling agents, brokers, auctioneers, retailers, public markets, and peddlers—in the commerce of the United States before the Civil War. It gives special attention to regulation of their operations by Federal, State, and local authorities. There is much interesting detail, which incidentally shows that few modern devices are new; even the chain store had its prototype in the three or more stores owned in different parts of Tennessee by Andrew Jackson. Where available, statistics have been gathered. In the appendix are tables of auction sales over a period of years, and of retail stores (57,565 in all) in the United States in 1839.

5961. Lebhar, Godfrey M. Chain stores in America, 1859–1950. New York, Chain Store Pub. Corp., 1952. 362 p. diagrs.
52–7108 HF5468.L332

A history of the chain store system by the editor of the trade journal, Chain Store Age. Mr. Lebhar chronicles the birth of the chain stores (the date chosen is 1859, the year of the founding of the Great Atlantic and Pacific Tea Company) and their rise through the years to the strength shown in the census of 1948; its figures indicate that of 1,770,000 stores in the United States, only 105,000 or 6 percent are chain stores, but they account for 23 percent of the total retail volume. The struggle against the opposition of the independent stores in regard to price cutting is reviewed, with citation of many legal cases and decisions, anti-chain-store tax bills, acts of the Federal Trade Commission, etc. The crusade against the chains began in the 1920's and rose in intensity until the passage of the Robinson-Patman Act in 1936, after the American Retail Federation had been investigated as a "superlobby." The tide turned when the Patman bill of 1938, which attempted to impose a punitive tax on chains, was killed in 1940, the hearings contributing importantly to a public understanding of the economic and social value of the chain-store system of distribution. In his last chapters the author discusses this value in relation to the community, the farmer, and the employees of the chain store, and the chain stores' prospects for the future.

5962. Sandage, Charles H., and Vernon Fryburger. Advertising: theory and practice. 5th ed. Homewood, Ill., R. D. Irwin, 1958. 690 p.
58–9767 HF5823.S25 1958

This college textbook examines advertising, "a dynamic force in our economy," in all its facets. The first part, "Basic Value Functions," outlines the history of advertising and discusses its social and economic aspects, among them the factor of truth, the role of advertising as a buyer's guide, and the advertising of ideas rather than products (including "advertorials"). Next its practical aspects are treated: the background of fact gathering, consumer research, product and market analysis, the stages in preparing and reproducing the advertisement, and the advertising media. The methods of testing the effectiveness of advertising provide interesting chapters which range from the comparatively simple technique of submitting samples to a consumer jury to such complicated mental feats as "unaided-recall" and "psychological scoring." Finally, the organization and functions of the modern advertising agency are analyzed. As might be expected, the illustrations are spirited and of great variety.

5963. Seligman, Edwin R. The economics of instalment selling; a study in consumers' credit, with special reference to the automobile. New York, Harper, 1927. 2 v. tables, diagrs.
27–24759 HF5568.S4

Bibliography: v. 1, p. 339–346.

A thorough historical and theoretical study by a well-known Columbia University economist, which remains the most authoritative examination of the nature and operations of instalment selling in America. This form of consumer's credit began in 1807 with "high-grade business," instalment sales of furniture, sewing machines, pianos, and books; but a period of "low-grade selling," carried on particularly in New York City by unscrupulous peddlers, brought the system into disrepute. It was revivified by the largest and most significant application, to automobiles, after which there developed the special instruments of the finance company and the Morris Plan banks. Professor Seligman explains methods of instalment credit, estimates the extent of instalment selling, and analyzes instalment sales as to their nature and characteristics. He examines the question of luxuries and necessities in connection with the automobile, and the effects of instalment credit on the consumer, on business conditions, and on the credit structure. In each case the institution is defended as one that, when abuses and improper practices are cleared away, will be reckoned as constituting "a signal and valuable contribution to the modern economy." The large second volume, prepared by the author's associates, contains a group of specialized statistical studies, several of them concerned with instalment sales of automobiles. A more recent work, The Economics of Instalment Buying, by Reavis Cox (New York, Ronald Press, 1948. 526 p.), is a comprehensive reference guide to the structure, organization, and management of instalment buying (or selling), its economic functions and consequences, and its future outlook. The author, professor of marketing at the University of Pennsylvania, was director of research for the Retail Credit Institute of America, by which the volume was sponsored.

5964. Warbasse, James P. Co-operative democracy through voluntary association of the people as consumers; a discussion of the co-operative movement, its philosophy, methods, accomplishments, and possibilities, and its relation to the state, to science, art, and commerce, and to other systems of economic organization. 5th ed. New York, Harper, 1947. 324 p. 47-11741 HD2965.W3 · 1947

Bibliography: p. 316–319.

The most considerable American contribution to cooperation literature is this book by one of its leading exponents. The late Dr. Warbasse was founder and for many years (1916–41) president of the Cooperative League of the U. S. A.; on the title page of this fifth edition of the work he appears as president emeritus. He presents cooperation as a world development. After consideration of its meaning and methods, and a short chapter on the Rochdale pioneers, he reviews in summary form the status of cooperative societies in about 60 countries. Then he considers the forms of expression of cooperation, its relationship with government, and its significance in regard to politics, profit business, the labor movement, etc., using world experience for illustration. The book has been translated into nine languages. Dr. Warbasse had himself lectured and given courses on cooperation in a hundred universities in eight countries. The purely American aspects of cooperation are recorded with extensive detail in a recent book by a government specialist on cooperatives, Florence E. Parker: The First 125 Years; a History of Distributive and Service Cooperation in the United States, 1829–1954 ([Chicago, Cooperative League of the U. S. A.] 1956. 462 p.). Less fully, but with notable clarity, the subject of cooperation and its particular manifestations in America are set forth in a guide for public school teachers by Charles Maurice Wieting: The Progress of Cooperatives, with Aids for Teachers (New York, Harper, 1952. 210 p.).

I. Finance: General

5965. Blough, Roy. The Federal taxing process. New York, Prentice-Hall, 1952. 506 p. (Prentice-Hall economics series) 52-8597 HJ2381.B55

Bibliography: p. 481–494.

Professor Blough, a tax expert long connected with the U. S. Treasury Department and congressional tax committees, prepared this book while teaching at the University of Chicago in 1946–50. He is now principal director of the Department of Economic Affairs of the United Nations. In this closely written study of the making of tax policy he is particularly concerned to show how policy is formulated amid the fundamental and clashing disagreements of its framers about the public interest it is to serve. He examines tax programs and pressure groups, the passage and application of the tax laws, and the administration of taxation by the Bureau of Internal Revenue. "Considerations Relating to the Level of Taxation" include the controversy over deficit spending and a balanced budget; "Considerations Relating to the Distribution of Taxes" include national prosperity, the problem of fairness, regulatory taxation (e. g., on alcoholic liquors), and Federal-State tax relations. The last chapter examines the bearing of the Federal taxing process on the carrying out of national policies.

5966. Dewey, Davis Rich. Financial history of the United States. 12th ed. New York, Longmans, Green, 1934. xxxviii, 600 p. diagrs. (American citizens series) 34-36570 HJ241.D4 1934

A standard work since 1903, in its final edition covering in highly compressed form the whole course of public finance from Colonial days to the depression of the 1930's. The author, elder brother of John Dewey, was professor of economics and statistics at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology from 1893 to 1933, and, among other distinguished posts, editor for many years of the American Economic Review. His text is preceded by a 20-page bibliography divided into subject sections, and short lists of references are put at the heads of chapters. The themes followed chronologically in his history are taxation and internal revenue, coinage and paper money, the banks, the tariff, the silver question, and the administration of the Treasury. The volume is of lasting interest; Professors Studenski and Krooss in their new Financial History of the United States (no. 5973) acknowledge their debt to it and declare it "will continue to be a classic in the field."

5967. Guthmann, Harry G., and Herbert E. Dougall. Corporate financial policy. 3d ed. New York, Prentice-Hall, 1955. 766 p. illus. 55–5754 HG4011.G85 1955

Two professors of finance begin by defining and charting the field of corporation finance. Their exposition covers lucidly and in detail legal forms of business organization other than corporations, the formation and control of the corporation, its stock and bonds, factors determining the pattern of long-term financing, and the financial aspects of promotion. Next various branches of corporation finance are examined: public utilities, railroads, investment banking, security exchanges, the subscription sale of securities, and employee and executive stock ownership. Techniques of budgeting and short-term financing are explained. Then the writers proceed to the advanced stages of the corporation's career: expansion and consolidation, mergers, holding companies, refinancing and recapitalization, failure, receivership, reorganization, and so on to corporate dissolution and liquidation. That note is too sad on which to end, even in a text for advanced study, so the final chapter becomes a soothing and hopeful review of the social aspects of corporate financing. The long bibliography (p. 724–766) is arranged in the form of chapter references.

5968. Hansen, Alvin H. Fiscal policy and business cycles. New York, Norton, 1941. 462 p. 41–7728 HB3711.H315

In his introduction to this book on fiscal policy as an instrument for regulating the national income and its distribution, the author gives emphatic voice to the conviction that for a decade has dictated his vigorous advocacy of the Keynesian doctrine. "The twin scourges that afflict the modern world—Depression and War—are not altogether unrelated. Bad as the Treaty of Versailles was, a steady improvement in international political relations could have been expected had we had the vision and courage to stop the Great Depression dead in its tracks and move forward to higher levels of real income and employment. . . . The ultimate causes of the failure to achieve a world order in the political sphere must be sought in the facts of economic frustration." Professor Hansen, who held the Littauer Chair of Political Economy at Harvard from 1937 until his retirement, has been the leader of the American theorists who believe in a dual economy of Federal spending and private investment, and in increasing the public debt as a way of combating depression. He here develops these views in an examination of the economic situation of the 1930's; the changing role of fiscal policy and its application to the full use of resources through "compensatory" spending and taxation; incentives to investment; and wartime financing. Like other economists at home and abroad, he predicted a postwar slump.

5969. Kendrick, Myron Slade. Public finance; principles and problems. Boston, Houghton Mifflin, 1951. 708 p. illus. 51–9072 HJ257.K4

A text for advanced study by a professor at Cornell University, who attempts to balance the older views of the orthodox laissez-faire economists and those of the enthusiastic followers of J. M. Keynes who advocate heavy government spending in order to maintain a high level of employment and national income. The main exposition is in three parts, "Public Expenditures" (their increase, the causes thereof, and how to control them), "Public Revenues," and "Fiscal Policy." The second is by far the longest, with 21 chapters covering the historic development and present status of State, local, and Federal taxation, the taxation of property, estate and inheritance taxes, the taxation of motor vehicle transportation (called "taxes as price equivalents"), the taxation of business, income tax, and the general problems of tax administration and (with charts) the incidence of taxes. The last chapter warns of dangers in a policy of expansion spending: "Only after the possibilities of correcting the known defects of the economy have been explored has the policy of spending for its general effect any claim to consideration." Another useful textbook, Public Finance, by Alfred G. Buehler, is now in its third edition (New York, McGraw-Hill, 1948. 740 p.). In straightforward expository chapters the author defines public finance and describes the range of Federal, local, and State expenditures and grants, fiscal organization, budgetary procedure, government accounting, and the tax system in its many phases. The volume ends with a consideration of Federal methods of borrowing and the economic significance of the public debt.

5970. Paul, Randolph E. Taxation in the United States. Boston, Little, Brown, 1954. 830 p. 54–6282 HJ2362.P35

The late writer, a tax lawyer who had served as advisor to the President and the Treasury Department in New Deal days and who during the war was Assistant to the Secretary of the Treasury in charge of foreign funds control, was influential in the formation of recent tax policy in America, on which he wrote extensively during three decades. This book is addressed to the informed general reader, as well as to economic historians and tax experts, in an urbane style as little difficult as possible considering the subject matter. Although the main themes are the income tax and estate and gift taxes, other aspects of the Federal tax system are not neglected in the comprehensive historical analysis of the basic issues involved in tax and fiscal policy. Except for a rapid 100-page review of tax history before World War I, the treatment is full, with a detailed account of the economic climate and of the political and legal struggles accompanying the introduction of each new tax. The final chapters are a theoretical study of the judicial process in relation to taxes, and an appraisal of the existing system, including Mr. Paul's views on progressive (i. e., graduated) taxation. Taxation is naturally a primary interest of American thinkers on financial problems, and notable studies of the whole subject or of special aspects are numerous. Sidney Ratner's American Taxation, Its History as a Social Force in Democracy (New York, Norton, 1942. 561 p.) is a comprehensive historical survey from 1789, in which the cumulative developments in tax reform are shown in relation to general social conditions. The emphasis is on "the endeavor of the American people . . . to forge taxes which should be not only sources of revenue but also instruments of economic justice and social welfare." A standard historical work with chapters grouped around individual revenue acts from 1909 to 1939 is Roy G. and Gladys C. Blakey's The Federal Income Tax (New York, Longmans, Green, 1940. 640 p.). A useful analysis of tax problems at the end of the war, published as a research study of the Committee for Economic Development, is Postwar Taxation and Economic Progress, by Harold M. Groves (New York, McGraw-Hill, 1946. 432 p.). The publications of the U. S. Congress Joint Committee on the Economic Report are important for the genesis of tax legislation. A particularly valuable compendium representing the views of many leading spokesmen is Federal Tax Policy for Economic Growth and Stability; Papers Submitted by Panelists Appearing before the Subcommittee on Tax Policy (Washington, U. S. Govt. Print. Off., 1955. 930 p. 84th Cong., 1st sess. Joint Committee Print).

5971. Poole, Kenyon E., ed. Fiscal policies and the American economy. New York, Prentice-Hall, 1951. 468 p. illus. (Prentice-Hall economics series) 51–9449 HJ263.P6

A group of essays interpreting modern theory in regard to fiscal policy, which reflect the changing thought of the years of depression and wartime inflation. The first paper, by the editor of the symposium, is a brief historical treatment, "Background and Scope of American Fiscal Policies." There follow: "Monetary Aspects of Fiscal Policy," by Roland I. Robinson; "Fiscal Policy, Employment, and the Price Level," by Henry M. Oliver; "Debt Management," by Henry C. Murphy; "Government Expenditures and Their Significance for the Economy," by John F. Due; "Financial Institutions as a Factor in Fiscal Policy," by Harry C. Guthmann; "Repercussions of the Tax System on Business," by E. Gordon Keith; "The Fiscal System, the Distribution of Income, and Public Welfare," by John H. Adler, with an appendix, "The Statistical Allocation of Taxes and Expenditures in 1938/39 and 1946/47," by Eugene R. Schlesinger; and "International Aspects of Fiscal Policy," by Frank W. Fetter. Each essay is followed by a short list of references. The editor of the symposium, a professor of economics at Northwestern University, published in 1956 a treatise on this subject: Public Finance and Economic Welfare (New York, Rinehart. 640 p.). The complex field of government finance and fiscal policy is fully covered, with special stress on the cyclical and long-term effects of fiscal policy upon economic stability and social security.

5972. Prochnow, Herbert V., ed. American financial institutions. New York, Prentice-Hall, 1951. 799 p. 51–11568 HG181.P73

This collective work covering the entire American financial structure is designed as an integrated text in the fields of finance, money, banking, etc. Seventeen of the 25 contributors are connected with universities and schools of business administration, while the other 8 are executives of banks or other financial institutions. Among the subjects treated, with special attention to their interrelations and their bearing on the national economy, are commercial banks, the Federal Reserve system, savings and loan associations and mutual savings banks, real estate and agricultural financing institutions, commodity exchanges, stockbrokerage and stock exchanges, investment banking, trust companies, international banks, the United States Treasury, insurance companies, institutions for consumer credit, personal finance, and government regulation. The last chapter reviews the leading trade associations in the financial field. The treatment in all is expositional, with clarity the first objective.

5973. Studenski, Paul, and Herman E. Krooss. Financial history of the United States: fiscal, monetary, banking, and tariff, including financial administration and state and local finance. New York, McGraw-Hill, 1952. 528 p.
51–12649 HG181.S83

The first general history of American finance published since the Second World War, this textbook by two professors at New York University deals with government policies and the administration of taxation, money and banking, and the tariff, stressing the political and economic issues involved. The chapters are in mainly chronological sequence, grouped in three periods: from Colonial times to the Civil War; from 1861 to 1916; from World War I to 1950. Nonfederal finance receives attention throughout, and in each section a chapter is devoted to state and local government finance. Almost half the text is given to the third section, which lucidly sets forth the financial aspects of the New Deal, World War II, and the first postwar years. The many statistical tables are exceptionally easy of comprehension by the nonspecialist reader, to whom, as well as to students, the work is directed.

5974. Westerfield, Ray Bert. Money, credit and banking. Rev. ed. New York, Ronald Press Co., 1947. 1096 p. maps, diagrs.
47–11360 HG153.W42

5975. Chandler, Lester V. The economics of money and banking. Rev. ed. New York, Harper, 1953. 742 p. illus.
53–5076 HG221.C448 1953

Dr. Westerfield, now emeritus professor of political economy at Yale where he held a chair for 30 years, is also a practicing banker. This treatise has been a standard text and reference work for several decades. In accord with the author's interests, it covers comprehensively both financial theory and practice, philosophy and institutions. Its three themes, money, credit, and banking, are developed simultaneously in his argument as they are in the world of finance. The nature of money and monetary systems, the history of national coinage and paper money, the instruments of credit, the functions, management, and operations of banks, the history of banking, the Federal Reserve System, and foreign exchange are among the many aspects treated at length. In the same general field but more definitely focused on the relationship of the monetary and banking system to the present-day functioning of the American economy is The Economics of Money and Banking by Professor Chandler of Princeton. This text is designed as a general introduction to monetary studies for college undergraduates, and lays much emphasis on elementary principles. After 21 chapters explaining the functions and kinds of money, monetary standards, banking, the Federal Reserve System, and other financial institutions, the author devotes 7 chapters to a discussion of monetary theory, using equations and symbols. The most formidable in appearance are those of national income analysis, GNP (gross national product) and other concepts, to measure which there are constructed mathematical functions, schedules, or curves. The last few chapters explain postwar international transactions and relationships involving money.

J. Finance: Special

5976. Abbott, Charles C. The Federal debt, structure and impact. With policy recommendations of the Committee on the Federal Debt. New York, Twentieth Century Fund, 1953. xvii, 278 p.
53–5982 HJ8119.A58

5977. Murphy, Henry C. The national debt in war and transition. New York, McGraw-Hill, 1950. 295 p. 50–6930 HJ8119.M8

From the national debt of about a billion dollars that remained stable through the period from 1895 to 1916, the United States through two major wars, a depression, and the cold war, has increased the figure of what it owes to about $260 billion, or "close to $1,700 for every man, woman and child in the country." These statistics are reported in 1953 in a survey started by the Twentieth Century Fund in 1948 but postponed because of the tax increase brought about by the Korean War and rearmament. The study, directed by Dr. Abbott of the Harvard Business School, involved an examination of the post-World War II situation, the impact of the debt on the Treasury and the Federal Reserve, and the effect of Korea, and then an analysis of the debt problem and conclusions. The last section, as in most Fund studies, is a report by a committee which reviewed the research findings, summarizing and offering recommendations as to Federal debt management for steady economic growth. The story of war finance is told by Mr. Murphy, former assistant director of research and statistics of the Treasury Department. Although the viewpoint is that of the government, the author reasserts that "the government represents the whole people," and that officials of the Treasury and the Federal Reserve System make a conscientious effort to hear and adapt themselves to the points of view expressed by representatives of all segments of the economy. After giving a brief review of the depression, he discusses "Setting the Pattern of War Finance," against the realization that taxation is preferable to borrowing, but insufficient to finance a major war. He then explains the techniques of borrowing through war loans, savings bond programs, etc. His final appraisal is that, though the job could have been done better—"What job couldn't?"—there is no doubt that the war borrowing program was a success.

5978. Allen, Frederick L. The great Pierpont Morgan. New York, Harper, 1949. 306 p. port. 49-8274 CT275.M6A6

"Sources and obligations": p. 283-297.

A biography which is less economic history than personal interpretation of the preeminent banker (1837-1913) who, it was widely believed, controlled American finance in the early 1900's. The late editor of Harper's Magazine speaks of his book as an attempt at a middle course between earlier extremes of "one-sidedly laudatory and one-sidedly derogatory" accounts. He begins with Pierpont Morgan's appearance, a few months prior to his death, before the Pujo congressional committee which in 1912 was investigating the "money trust." The famous statement of the financier, that commercial credit is based primarily on character—"a man I do not trust could not get money from me for all the bonds in Christendom"—is the author's point of departure to which he returns in his conclusion. On the way he has followed Morgan from his youth through his natural entrance into the banking world via his father's firm; his partnerships first with C. H. Dabney and then with Anthony J. Drexel; the establishment of J. P. Morgan and Company in 1895; his victories over competitors; his great role in government financing; his reorganization of railroads; and his consolidation of the U. S. Steel Corporation. The great monetary dealings are outlined against a sympathetically drawn background of Morgan's personal life, tastes, princely travels, and activities as a prodigious collector of art and literature. All these matters are related in much greater detail—often of high interest—and with much less reflective commentary, by his admiring son-in-law, Herbert L. Satterlee, in J. Pierpont Morgan; an Intimate Portrait (New York, Macmillan, 1939. xvi, 595 p.).

5979. Brown, John Crosby. A hundred years of merchant banking, a history of Brown Brothers and Company, Brown, Shipley & Company and the allied firms, Alexander Brown and Sons, Baltimore; William and James Brown and Company, Liverpool; John A. Brown and Company, Browns and Bowen, Brown Brothers and Company, Philadelphia; Brown Brothers and Company, Boston. New York, Priv. print, 1909. xxxiii, 374 p. plates. 9-27455 HG2613.B24B7

5980. Hidy, Ralph W. The House of Baring in American trade and finance; English merchant bankers at work, 1763-1861. Cambridge, Harvard University Press, 1949. xxiv, 631 p. illus. (Harvard studies in business history, 14) 49-11255 HG4910.H5

"Notes and references": p. [483]-616.

The frontispiece of Brown's classic history of the growth of a private banking firm in foreign business shows four old gentlemen, with white hair and spectacles, grouped about a table beneath the portrait of a fifth—Alexander Brown and his four sons. The father came from Ireland and in 1800 began a small business in Baltimore importing Irish linens, and rapidly expanded to other goods. He had to pay in sterling, and accepted payment in sterling bills, drawn against shipments of tobacco, etc., from Baltimore to England; he became a free buyer of commercial sterling, and built up "a goodly share of the Sterling Exchange business in this country." His four sons, who compensated with business acumen for their weak sight, were taken into partnership and established in branches or allied firms. The oldest son opened a firm in Liverpool in 1810, and Brown acquired ships, and issued credits on the Liverpool house for other American merchants. The Philadelphia branch, under the third son, was established in 1818, and in 1825 the New York branch was opened under the youngest son. This book, which combines the charm of well-written family history with a revealing account of the methods of private banking and the transition from mercantile to industrial capitalism, is by the son of the New York Brown, who had himself been a partner in the firm for almost half a century. Dr. Hidy studies in detail the operations of a famous London house of merchant bankers which for about 25 years specialized in financing American trade and marketing American securities. His principal source was the Baring papers in the Public Archives of Canada, selected materials dealing primarily with the business of the house in the United States and Canada. Notwithstanding the dates in Dr. Hidy's title, his narrative is detailed only after the Peace of Ghent (1815). America was the major interest of Baring Brothers and Company only from 1828 to 1842, after which year the repudiation of their financial obligations by so many American States led the house to reduce its dealings, and to curtail them drastically in 1853. "The London firm felt that it assumed responsibility to both buyer and seller when it publicly marketed the securities of any government or corporation," and the boom-and-bust character of the American economy, and the wildcat outlook of so many American promoters, led the Barings to give preference to Canadian, European, and Latin American bond issues after 1853.

5981. Dice, Charles Amos, and Wilford John Eiteman. The stock market. 3d ed. New York, McGraw-Hill, 1952. 460 p. illus.
51–12601 HG4551.D5 1952

5982. Leffler, George L. The stock market. 2d ed. New York, Ronald Press Co., 1957. 629 p. illus. 57–6811 HG4551.L35 1957

The first of these two expository works on the stock market is addressed to investors, students of the market, and the general public. The various kinds of securities offered, the relations of brokers with customers, the operations of the New York Stock Exchange, the various types of stock purchasing (on margin, short sale, stop-loss order and hedge, averaging and pyramiding, calls, puts, spread, straddle, etc.), and all other aspects of the stockbroker's trade are explained in as simple terminology as the subject allows. The second volume is of the same general type, although more strictly in textbook presentation. First published in 1951, it has been revised to reflect "substantial changes" in the stock market during the intervening years.

5983. Goldenweiser, Emanuel A. American monetary policy. New York, McGraw-Hill, 1951. xvi, 391 p. diagrs. (Committee for Economic Development. Research study)
51–5868 HG538.G64

A study of the policymaking of the Federal Reserve System, by the late former director of the division of research and statistics for the Board of Governors of FRS (1926–45). The examination of Federal Reserve instruments of monetary management, of policy decisions through four defined periods (1917–32, 1933–39, World War II, postwar), and of institutional operations and relationships of the Federal Reserve is set in a theoretical framework. Dr. Goldenweiser discusses the role of money in the economy, the objectives of monetary policy, and the evolution of FRS ideas before he begins his chronological account. He follows this with a review of principles of monetary policy in which he sets down "certain simple and unequivocal rules" in line with FRS practice, the last of which involves the general aim of "contributing to economic stability." The appendix contains tables of statistics. A note is added on the research program of the Committee for Economic Development, listing and describing the studies published in the series of which this volume forms a part. In 1948 Professor George Leland Bach of Carnegie Institute of Technology in Pittsburgh, a former staff economist serving the Board of Governors of FRS, conducted a study of the System for the Hoover Commission (Commission on the Reorganization of the Executive Branch of the Government). His monograph, Federal Reserve Policy-Making (New York, Knopf, 1950. 282 p.), is a report on that study. It is in four parts, of which the first is a historical outline of "Federal Reserve Organization and the Policy Responsibilities." Parts 2 and 3 are discussions of "Internal Policy Formation" and "External Relations in Policy-Making." Part 4 is an analysis of "The Lessons of Monetary Experience." The writer is particularly concerned to show that official policymaking is not carried out in accord with the clear theories formulated by professional economists in the agencies, but is influenced by the pressures of other officials and of special interest groups, and the de facto policy of the administration. An interpretation of the workings of the Federal Reserve through the case history of an individual bank during the first 20 years of the System was prepared as a doctoral thesis at Columbia University by Lawrence E. Clark: Central Banking under the Federal Reserve System, with Special Consideration of the Federal Reserve Bank of New York (New York, Macmillan, 1935. 437 p.). His analysis stresses the function of the bank as a public service.

5984. Gras, Norman S. B. The Massachusetts First National Bank of Boston, 1784–1934. Cambridge, Harvard University Press, 1937. xxiv, 768 p. plates. (Harvard studies in business history, 4) 38–1639 HG2613.B74F54

The late author of this scholarly history of the second bank established in the United States was professor of business history at Harvard from 1927 to 1950, and editor of the series in which his book appeared. The study, based on unpublished records in the Baker Library and in possession of various New England banks, is in three parts. The first is a general introduction, which in just over 200 pages gives a running account of the Bank's history, prefaced by an 8-page chronology. Part 2 presents documents illustrating that history from its origins to 1865, when the Bank entered a period of stagnation: the letter and petition that launched it in 1784, the original charter and its modifications in 1792 and 1812, extracts from the "Stockholders' Minute Book" and the "Directors' Records" (p. 221–529), and lists of officers. Part 3 gives tabulated statistics for the same period, including comparative figures for other Massachusetts banks. The venerable Bank was rejuvenated after 1903; Dr. Gras thus diagnoses its long period of decline: "The Bank responded to the opportunities for gain from sea traffic and from purely local trade, but it failed in the early part of the nineteenth century to participate in the development of New England as a whole and it failed in helping Boston secure the financial dominance in New England that its commercial position justified."

5985. James, Frank Cyril. The growth of Chicago banks. New York, Harper, 1938. 2 v. (1468 p.) ports. 38–33677 HG2613.C4J3
Bibliography: v. 2, p. 1127–1157.

A history of the country's second largest money market, treated under the broad aspects of Chicago finance in its interrelations with the political and economic development of the community from a frontier outpost to a great metropolis. The narrative is divided chronologically, the two volumes being The Formative Years, 1816–1896, and The Modern Age, 1897–1938. The Chicago banks, growing with the region, were deeply involved in Illinois politics; by 1871 they had made the city the financial center of the West. In the later period the banks tended to lose their regional character and to become "so intimately woven into the structure of the national money market that the financial independence of Chicago tended to decline," even as the city became one of the financial capitals of the world. This study was sponsored by the First National Bank of Chicago. Written by a distinguished financial historian, it is designed for the enjoyment of a specialist audience; the typeface is luxurious, there are color reproductions of portraits of individual bankers, and exhaustive documentation is given in notes following the chapters. Among the appendixes is a 250-page "Summary of Historical Data Regarding the Creation, Growth and Dissolution of Banks and Financial Houses Operating in Cook County from 1863 to 1938." A heavily statistical study of Chicago as a financial center is The Chicago Credit Market, Organization and Institutional Structure, by Melchior Palyi (Chicago, University of Chicago Press, 1937. 448 p.). It was published as no. 33 of the Social science studies directed by the Social Science Research Committee of the University of Chicago. The text deals strictly with the organizational aspects of the leading Midwestern credit market and shows the interrelation of savings institutions, security exchanges, call-loan and commercial paper markets, and unit and branch banks. The many tables in the appendix go far beyond analysis of market structure, and present data relating the Chicago market to the economic growth of the area and to the country as a whole.

5986. Kemmerer, Edwin Walter, and Donald L. Kemmerer. The ABC of the Federal Reserve System. 12th ed. New York, Harper, 1950. 229 p. 50–6526 HG2563.K4 1950
Bibliography: p. 215–220.

Professor Edwin W. Kemmerer of Princeton University published the first edition of this famous work in 1918. The 12th edition, revised by his son, keeps the same character of a guide in nontechnical language, making as plain as possible to the lay reader the complexities of the Federal Reserve System. It begins with a short explanation of banking systems and their main defects, most serious of which in 19th-century America was decentralization. Then there is outlined the framework of the Federal Reserve System, which was superimposed in 1914 on many thousands of independent banks. There follows an examination of the methods and history of the Federal Reserve Banks, through the Act of 1913 and its subsequent amendments, in the First World War, the "open market" of the 1920's, the period of bank failures and the Great Depression, the New Deal and its reforms in banking, and the Second World War. In the last chapter suggestions are given "the intelligent citizen" as to what writings to consult and what to look for in them in order to understand trends of the national economy. Another and briefer simplified story of the Federal Reserve System and its influence on the flow of credit and money is presented in an official pamphlet well illustrated with charts: The Federal Reserve System, Its Purposes and Functions, by the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System, 2d ed. (Washington, 1947. 125 p.). The last chapter summarizes: "Experience over four decades shows that reserve banking is of vital importance to the national economy. Provision of bank reserves has come to be the major Federal Reserve function."

5987. Lamont, Thomas W. Henry P. Davison; the record of a useful life. New York, Harper, 1933. xxii, 373 p. ports. 33–15632 HG2463.D3L3

This biography of "Harry" Davison (1867–1922), written by "his friend and partner," devotes fully as much attention to the subject's character, personal affairs, and distinguished public services as to his brilliant banking career. From the bottom step in a village bank he rose in 10 years to the presidency of a New York bank. Founder of the Bankers' Trust Company, a director of the First National Bank, influential in curbing the money panic of 1907, a designer of the Federal Reserve System, a Morgan partner, and chairman in 1910 of the Six-

Power Chinese Loan Conference (Chinese Consortium) in Paris, he became one of America's most powerful figures in national and international finance. His outstanding public service was as chairman of the Red Cross War Council during the First World War, when in two annual drives he raised first $115 million, and then $170 million for the Red Cross war chest. Mr. Lamont's admiring, intimate, affectionate, and readable story has for its last appendix the citation accompanying the award of the Distinguished Service Medal to Davison.

5988. Larson, Henrietta M. Jay Cooke, private banker. Cambridge, Harvard University Press, 1936. xvii, 512 p. illus. (Harvard studies in business history, 2) 36-36152 HG2463.C6L3

Jay Cooke's private banking partnership, formed in Philadelphia in 1861, sprang into rapid prominence through the sale of Civil War bonds. He sold Treasury notes in Pennsylvania in 1861, and in October 1862 was appointed by Secretary of the Treasury Chase as special agent for the "five-twenties," a 6 percent loan callable in 5 years and maturing in 20. His high-pressure salesmanship, reaching the small investor through advertising and agents, marked "a notable achievement in the history of American finance." In 1864, after the Treasury had failed in its own attempt to float a large loan, Cooke was again called upon to act as government subscription agent, and his campaign for the victory loan resulted in an unprecedented over-subscription. After the war he turned to financing business undertakings, and in 1869 became heavily involved in active promotion of the Northern Pacific Railroad. Through overextension and other errors, his firm failed in 1873, precipitating the panic and depression which ended the postwar boom. In this business biography, extensively documented from Cooke's voluminous manuscripts and other contemporary sources, Dr. Larson ranks the "Tycoon," as his partners called him, as an outstanding leader in the history of American business. "He was the first in America to stand out dramatically and efficiently as an active investment banker operating on a large scale . . . Though he himself failed, those who later followed his general strategy succeeded."

5989. Lewis, Cleona. The United States and foreign investment problems. Washington, Brookings Institution, 1948. xviii, 359 p. maps. 48-4989 HG4538.L45

This investigation of the outlook for American private investment abroad was written by a Brookings Institution specialist in 1948, the year that saw the inception of the Marshall Plan, and published just as the Truman Plan (Point Four Program) was announced. Dr. Lewis' standard work, America's Stake in International Investments (Washington, Brookings Institution, 1938. 710 p. The Institute of Economics of the Brookings Institution. Publication no. 75), is brought up to date in the present volume, with statistical data and other information showing the post-World War II position of the United States as the world's principal creditor nation. The first part explains the nature of foreign investments and reviews America's capacity for foreign investment, and the respective positions of debtor and creditor countries in 1938 and in 1947. Part 2 is on opportunities for developmental capital abroad, obstacles to future investors from the policies of foreign countries, and the responsibility of the private investor. Part 3 explains the United States Government's part in foreign investment—the war an dpostwar lending agencies, culminating in the European Recovery (Marshall) Plan. In her summary and conclusions Dr. Lewis states that, although the government encourages export of American capital, private investment cannot compete with government loans and grants. Since the publication of this work official policy has turned increasingly toward the stimulation of private investment abroad, particularly in the underdeveloped areas. A series of useful handbooks of "basic information for United States businessmen" has been in course of publication by the U. S. Bureau of Foreign Commerce since 1953, of which the 17th is Investment in Nigeria (Washington, 1957. 182 p.).

5990. Mowbray, Albert H., and Ralph H. Blanchard. Insurance, its theory and practice in the United States. 4th ed. New York, McGraw-Hill, 1955. 569 p. illus. (McGraw-Hill insurance series) 54-12254 HG8051.M75 1955

5991. Stalson, J. Owen. Marketing life insurance; its history in America. Cambridge, Harvard University Press, 1942. xl, 911 p. illus. (Harvard studies in business history, 6) A42-939 HG8876.S73

"Notes and references": p. [649]-714.

5992. James, Marquis. The Metropolitan Life, a study in business growth. New York, Viking Press, 1947. 480 p. illus. 47-30046 HG8963.M52J3

Bibliography: p. 457-464.

These three books represent three distinct approaches to the subject of insurance. The first has been a standard college text since 1930, and is now revised after the death of Professor Mowbray by the editor of the McGraw-Hill insurance series. It covers all branches of insurance, beginning with a discussion of the theory of risk, insurance, and prevention, and explaining in detail the various types of insurance contracts, the kinds of insurance companies, their market, premium rates, and other financial and organizational arrangements, together with the elements of governmental supervision and the question of risk management. Dr. Stalson's thick volume is a scholarly history of the life insurance business in America, in detail from the "revolution of 1843" which introduced mutuality (the policyholders are the shareholders) and led to a vastly expanded volume of business. It emphasizes the roles of the soliciting agents and the general agents (wholesalers), and their evolving relationships to the home offices. Like the rest of this Harvard business history series, it includes important appendixes of statistical and other tabulated data. The third book, by a Pulitzer prize-winning biographer recently deceased, is more lively writing, geared to a general audience. It sketches briefly the origins of the insurance business, reaching after two chapters the foundation of the Metropolitan Life Insurance Company in 1868. The rest of the narrative tells of the rise, development, and organization of the great company, its relations with other insurance firms and with government investigators and legislation, its trusteeship methods, and its influence on the economic and social welfare of the country.

677676 O-63-60

5993. The New York money market. New York, Columbia University Press, 1931–32. 4 v. illus. 31–32268 HG184.N5N4

Bibliography at end of each volume.

A series of studies produced under the auspices of the Columbia University Council for Research in the Social Sciences. The scope is broad, the term money market being defined to include "all the funds available for productive, commercial, or speculative purposes, as well as the mechanism by which these funds are gathered together from holders not immediately requiring their use, and redistributed in answer to the needs of various classes of borrowers." It comprises the call loan market (the salient feature), the commercial paper market, the investment market, and relationships with the banks and the Treasury. The first volume, prepared as a thesis, is by Margaret G. Myers: Origins and Development. This is a historical study divided into two distinct periods, from before 1800 to the National Bank Act of 1863, and from 1863 to the passage of the Federal Reserve Act of 1913. Within these periods the treatment is topical: e. g., "The Origin of the Investment Market," "The Government and the Money Market before 1863," "The Commercial Credit System from 1863 to 1913." The three other volumes deal with aspects of the money market from 1913 to 1932. Volume 2, Sources and Movements of Funds, contains a discussion of "The Basis of Money Market Funds," by Benjamin Haggott Beckhart, and one of "The Ebb and Flow of Money Market Funds," by James G. Smith. Volume 3, by Mr. Beckhart, is Uses of Funds, covering bankers' loans, the commercial paper market, and the acceptance market. The last volume, External and Internal Relations, contains contributions by Mr. Beckhart on "Federal Reserve Policy and the Money Market, 1923–1931," by William Adams Brown, Jr., on "The Government and the Money Market," and by James G. Smith on "Money Market Periodicities and Interrelationships." Although obviously meant for a specialized audience, this thoroughly documented work is notably clear and readable.

5994. Pickett, Ralph R., and Marshall D. Ketchum. Investment principles and policy. New York, Harper, 1954. 820 p. 53–11678 HG4521.P5

This textbook, focused on the problems of the individual investor, is not for the beginner in the financial field; the authors assume that "the student has knowledge of the basic principles of economics, accounting, and corporation finance." There are three parts; the first, "The Background of Investment," includes a discussion of the management of savings, a review of the chief aspects of corporate financing, and general considerations on the selection and analysis of investments. Part 2 describes fully the individual "Instruments of Finance"—life and other types of insurance, securities of Federal, local, and foreign governments, real estate investments, and common-stock investment in the securities of various kinds of enterprise: manufacturing, merchandising, mines, railroads, public utilities, etc. The last part, "Investment Policy," explains the mechanics of investing, the regulation of securities, and factors to be considered such as political risks, taxation, and general business conditions. The final chapter is direct advice to the investor concerning his over-all program. Each chapter is followed by a short list of selected readings.

5995. Smith, Darrell Hevenor. The General Accounting Office, its history, activities and organization. Baltimore, Johns Hopkins Press, 1927. 215 p. (Institute for Government Research. Service monographs of the United States Government, no. 46) 27–23158 HJ9802.S6

Bibliography: p. 196–205.

5996. Mansfield, Harvey C. The Comptroller General; a study in the law and practice of financial administration. New Haven, Yale University Press, 1939. 302 p. 39–8570 HJ9802.M3

5997. U. S. Congress. House. Committee on Government Operations. The General Accounting Office; a study of its organization and administration with recommendations for increasing its effectiveness; seventeenth intermediate report. Washington, U. S. Govt. Print. Off., 1956. 133 p. diagrs. (84th Cong., 2d sess. House report no. 2264) 56–61520 HJ9802.A522 1956

"The General Accounting Office, according to the Budget and Accounting Act of 1921, is an independent establishment of the United States Government with auditing, quasi-judicial, investigating, and other duties." So begins Mr. Smith's history and description of the activities and organization of this Federal service. The General Accounting Office comes under the legislative branch, and reports to Congress its findings as to financial conditions of government agencies. The Comptroller General is appointed for a term of 15 years, probably in agreement with the dictum of Fisher Ames in the debate upon the Treasury Department Act of 1789: "The science of accounts is at best but an abstruse and dry study; it is scarcely to be understood but by an unwearied assiduity for a long time." Mr. Mansfield quotes this sentence as a motto for his analysis and appraisal of the General Accounting Office. His book was written shortly after the term of the first Comptroller General had ended (in 1936, when the retiring official shook the dust of the place from his feet, emitting to the press blasts against New Deal fiscal policy). The author is highly critical of the administration of the office, suggesting that the Comptroller General has functioned, not as the independent critic of and useful check on the executive use of public funds that he was intended to be, but as a "petty tyrant." During the depression and World War II the use of government corporations for many types of enterprise was greatly expanded, most of them operating on budgets and programs not subject to congressional approval and with expenditures which were not audited by the General Accounting Office. In 1945 two pieces of legislation, the George Act and the Government Corporation Control Act, brought the corporations under uniform controls, which included provision for auditing and reports by the General Accounting Office. Legislation in 1946, 1949, and 1950 has further affected the development of the Office. Its present status is succinctly explained in the 1956 Report of the House Committee on Government Operations, The General Accounting Office.

5998. Smith, James G. The development of trust companies in the United States. New York, Holt, 1928. xxi, 613 p. (American business series) 28–5049 HG4352.S6 1928

The corporate fiduciary or trust company in America had its phenomenal development in the wake of the huge fortunes accumulated in the age of enterprise, as an instrument for the conservation of that wealth. In the 50 years before 1928, the number of such companies in the United States had increased from 39 to 2,731. The present monograph, prepared as a doctoral thesis at Princeton, is a substantial study analyzing the nature and functions of trust companies, reviewing the origins of trusteeship and the history of corporate fiduciaries in the United States from 1818, when "the embryo of the modern corporate fiduciary emerged as a collateral feature of a [Boston] life insurance company," and explaining the problems of trust companies in America in the late 1920's. To arrive at current practice and problems, the author in 1925 sent an 11-point questionnaire to 2,500 banks and trust companies, and received 255 useful replies, upon which his analysis is based. The author appends a long bibliography (p. 487–563) in two parts, first a general list, and then a list of periodical articles arranged by topics.

5999. Smith, Walter B. Economic aspects of the Second Bank of the United States. Cambridge, Harvard University Press, 1953. 314 p. (Studies in economic history) 52–5408 HG2525.S6

Bibliographical references included in "Notes" (p. [265]–307).

6000. Hammond, Bray. Banks and politics in America, from the Revolution to the Civil War. Princeton, Princeton University Press, 1957. 771 p. 57–8667 HG2472.H3

Bibliography: p. 747–760.

"The Second Bank of the United States was founded in 1816 under a charter from the United States Government and functioned under this charter until March 3, 1836. The Treasury needed such an institution as a depository for the revenue and as an agency for the transfer and disbursement of its funds." It was favored by business groups and financiers, and opposed by agrarian interests. After early troubles, it operated smoothly through 1829. "The years between 1830 and 1836 were dominated by the struggle to prolong its life by a renewal of its Federal charter. Failing to secure this authorization from Washington, the Bank did business under a charter from the state of Pennsylvania from 1836 to 1841. During these last five years its career was spectacular, and it ultimately failed early in 1841." Dr. Smith's scholarly study relates the history of the Second Bank to its place in the broad economic history of the United States, subordinating the political aspects of the spectacular contest between Nicholas Biddle, its leader and president, and its enemy, President Jackson, and his followers, to the statistical analysis of American financial development throughout the period. The Bank War of the 1830's is also central to Mr. Hammond's impressive synthesis of banking history with general history, for it was the desire to interpret that war properly that embarked him upon his protracted researches. He formulates the essence of his book thus: "It reflects the political and cultural force of business enterprise, which seems to me to have been the most powerful continuing influence in American life ever since Independence. The rival force in the early 19th century was agrarianism, formerly dominant but no longer so. These two fought about banks, because banks provide credit, and credit is indispensable to enterprise." Notwithstanding this broad outlook, Mr. Hammond is well aware that his book's value is strictly dependent upon his mastery of all the technical aspects of early banking, and this it abundantly displays. He brings multiple and cumulative evidence for his conclusion that "the Jacksonian revolution" was in fact the conquest of the economy by a group of self-made men born on farms, whose "skill in propaganda, in cant, and in demagogy" employed the agrarian ideology to accomplish aims the opposite of agrarian. "From possession of what was generally considered the best monetary system in the world, the country fell back into one of the most disordered." It was rich and expansive enough to bear the consequences.

6001. Smithies, Arthur. The budgetary process in the United States. New York, McGraw-Hill, 1955. xxi, 486 p. (Committee for Economic Development. Research study)

54–11767 HJ2051.S58

In 1929 Federal expenditures were slightly less than $3 billion, but in the fiscal year 1954 the United States Government spent $68 billion. The budgetary techniques, however, had evolved from earlier procedures with little change to fit the transformed economy. The present work prepared for the Committee for Economic Development is a comprehensive survey of the budgetary process with specific proposals for its improvement. The author, now a professor at Harvard, served as chief of the economic branch of the Bureau of the Budget from 1943 to 1948. His basic presupposition, he says, is "that government decision-making can be improved by the clear formulation of alternatives—regardless of the extent to which the final decisions are influenced by bargains between the President and the Congress, the influence of organized groups, or the pressure of local and regional interests." He examines the process in detail, reviewing its historical development (including the reforms recommended by the Hoover Commission in 1949–50) and the budget in operation, as prepared by the President, considered by Congress, and executed and reviewed by both the legislative and executive branches. He then sets forth general proposals for reform. The second half of the study deals with specific areas of the budget, defense and nondefense programs, and the significance for the national economy of balancing or failing to balance. Speaking of the present process, he considers it "not far short of miraculous that [it] works as well as it does."

6002. Stern, Siegfried. The United States in international banking. New York, Columbia University Press, 1951. 447 p.

51–14805 HF3031.S8

Bibliography: p. [427]–431.

During and after the First World War American banking houses began to take over from England "the world's purse strings," and by the end of the Second World War the United States was securely established as the predominant power in world finance. The operations of international banking are carried out mainly in a few large institutions. The author for many years headed the foreign departments of various New York banks, and his work is aimed at specialists in finance. It includes a rapid historical review of United States international banking from 1914 to 1945; discussion of the problems of foreign credit, foreign exchange, foreign fund control, etc., in wartime; description of government corporations in this field (the Export-Import Bank and such war agencies as the Defense Supplies Corporation); and a review of silver policy during the 1930's. The longest part, which accounts for over half the text, is a country-by-country analysis of the relations of American banks with the rest of the world. Finally, the organizational aspects are explained, and a short chapter speculates on the outlook for the future.

K. Business: General

6003. Bright, James R. Automation and management. Boston, Division of Research, Graduate School of Business Administration, Harvard University, 1958. 270 p. illus.

58–5968 HD45.B67

Professor Bright has been engaged since 1954 in research on the implications for management of the new technological developments called automation, insofar as they relate to factory productivity. The first part of his book explains the nature of automatic manufacturing, how it is coming about, and where: it can be done profitably with electric lamps but not with shoes. Part 2 covers the data of research into the programs of 13 plants that have adopted automation systems. Part 3 is the author's analysis of the critical areas of automation as affecting management, based essentially on the study of these 13 plants. Here are chapters on how most economically to manage "downtime," when the interdependent machines for any reason stop; on what happens to the productivity and skilled status of the automated work force; on personnel problems; on sales—holding up to the light in each case satisfactory and unsatisfactory factors. Finally the author offers a mainly optimistic "Interpretation of Automation, Its Effect on the Factory and Its Impact on Management." A typical warning is that automation newly installed always needs "debugging"; the system invariably begins by breaking down.

6004. Clark, John M. Social control of business. 2d ed. New York, Whittlesey House, McGraw-Hill, 1939. xvi, 537 p. (Business and economics publications) 39–27584 HD45.C5 1939

"References for further reading" at end of each chapter.

In the first half of this philosophic study of the control exercised by society on the individual businessman or corporation, Professor Clark analyzes into their fundamentals the conceptions, growth, and purposes of social control, and the legal aspects of formal and informal institutions that serve as agencies of control. The entire second half of the first edition (1926) dealt with the particular major field of public utilities and trusts. Eventful years passed before the present edition, to which the author added a section examining the policies of the "new era" of depression, of New Deal experimentation in state control, and of the full development of totalitarianism abroad. His goal for the American people is "democratic efficiency," and his preferred method one of "democratic gradualism," in which the social order and the individualistic man may move together toward cooperation. "By developing cooperative features and organizations within our system, we may develop cooperative impulses, habits, and customs, and these may enable us to develop more cooperative institutions, and so on, as far as our inherent capacities will carry us. First steps must be tried without waiting for human nature to be fully ready for them, but complete revolutions on this principle are precarious."

6005. Cochran, Thomas C. The American business system; a historical perspective, 1900–1955. Cambridge, Harvard University Press, 1957. 227 p. (The Library of Congress series in American civilization) 57–12964 HC106.C638

Professor Cochran's concentrated historical perspective of the 20th century falls naturally into two eras, divided by the spectacular collapse of 1929–30. His theme is the relation of business to society; his treatment of it is in general terms. In 1900 American businessmen, he says, were an elite group who believed in a self-regulating economy in which they could take care of themselves without responsibility for the welfare of others. Technological change, especially in mass production and transportation, has been the chief cause of a shift in industrial management from owner to professional executive, whose broader outlook involves social accountability. The collapse of the age of industrial control by giant corporations and of financial control by big investment houses was followed by the fundamental revisions of the 1930's. "Political and social innovations, fathered by depression, were passed on to a period of war and prosperity where they took on new meanings and gave a new form to American society." The spread of bureaucracy in both government and business has proceeded hand in hand with managerial enterprise; public relations have become a primary concern; it is accepted that governmental controls must stabilize the economy. With an ever-rising standard of living the social prestige of great wealth has declined, and the big businessman is hardly distinguishable from the average American.

6006. Dimock, Marshall E. Business and government. 3d ed. New York, Holt, 1957. 559 p. illus. 57–5696 HD3616.U47D5 1957

Professor Dimock, who has held a variety of Federal administrative positions of consequence, now heads the graduate department of government at New York University. His widely used textbook, originally issued in 1949, has followed an opposite course to that normally taken by the successful college manual in our day: successive editions have become smaller instead of larger. In this third edition he has made a special effort "to convey an insight into the inner workings of government because students of economics and business administration have little time in their formal education to acquire this kind of knowledge, and yet it stands them in good stead once they graduate into the world of practical economic affairs." This edition stresses public policy formation, institutions, and pressure groups more than did its predecessors, but the policy areas dealt with remain the same: "pressure groups and big government; the independent enterprise system and concentrated economic power; organized labor and industrial disputes; agricultural policy, which also includes the cooperative movement and the conservation of natural resources; the cold war, tariff policy, technical assistance, and the international and domestic aspects of atomic energy; public-utility regulation and public ownership and operation; the public control of banking, investment, and insurance; general methods of coping with depressions," etc.

6007. Gras, Norman S. B., and Henrietta M. Larson. Casebook in American business history. New York, Crofts, 1939. 765 p.
39–31004 HF1118.G7

In his courses at the Harvard Graduate School of Business Administration Professor Gras regularly used the case method for instruction. This volume illustrates American business history through 38 cases of individual businessmen or companies, presented in analytical narrative and in excerpts from letters, records, and other primary sources. The cases are American, with only five exceptions; these include the first, Sir Thomas Smythe (1558(?)–1625) and the Virginia Company, and the last, the Hugo Stinnes Konzern which was liquidated in Germany in 1925–26. In between are some of the most famous names of men, firms, banking houses, speculations, etc., in the American economic scene from early Colonial days to 1938. Each case is developed at considerable length, with additional pieces of information crammed into long footnotes. The cases are put in three groups, distinguished as mercantile capitalism (ending with J. J. Astor in 1848), industrial capitalism, and finance capitalism and combination in business. The last hundred pages analyze business trends, with chronological periods as "cases," showing the rise of specialization and the tendency toward combination in periods of varying price movements. A varying number of references are appended to each case.

6008. Owens, Richard N. Business organization and combination. 4th ed. New York, Prentice-Hall, 1951. 562 p.
51–5302 HD2741.O85 1951

An exposition of the various forms of noncorporate and corporate business enterprise. The former include the single proprietorship, the partnership, the joint-stock company, and the business trust, which are described in clear and easily understandable terms. Regarding corporations, Professor Owens gives their historical background and then discusses the theory of legal entity, the charter, the kinds and uses of stocks and bonds, the legal regulation of issue and sale of securities, the role of directors, and procedures in corporate dissolution and reorganization. A special section explains the investment company, which may be a joint-stock company, a business trust, or a corporation. A long part on industrial combinations considers trade associations, gentlemen's agreements, pools, cartels, consolidated companies and holding companies, leased companies, cooperatives, and the general economic significance of combination. A final part is on government regulation, with some background from the common law preceding a review of state and federal antitrust legislation. There are short reading lists at the end of chapters. A somewhat different approach to his subject matter is used by Professor Owens in a more recent book, Introduction to Business Policy (Homewood, Ill., R. D. Irwin, 1954. 474 p.). He is concerned here with theoretical and practical aspects of business policies and objectives—their meaning and significance, their formulation and administration, the organizational roles of stockholders and directors, and policies governing production, sales, public relations, and finance.

6009. Petersen, Elmore, and Edward Grosvenor Plowman. Business organization and management. 3d ed. Homewood, Ill., R. D. Irwin, 1953. 634 p. illus. 53–2866 HF5351.P48 1953

"A definitive treatment of the principles of organization and management that are the energizing elements of all types of business, large or small, and wherever managerial leadership is required." The authors, who both write from long experience as business executives, explain management as consisting essentially of directives and controls, with its various levels of authority—directors' level, executive level, supervisory level—being determined by the factor of efficiency in control. Departmentation and functionalization, to which chapters are devoted, are not such formidable concepts as the terms suggest; they lead directly to organization charts, with which the text is well provided. Managerial responsibilities are scrutinized in the realms of centralization, decentralization, communication, efficiency, and incentive. The last chapter is direct advice to the student preparing for a career in management.

6010. Sutton, Francis X., and others. The American business creed, [by] Francis X. Sutton, Seymour E. Harris, Carl Kaysen, [and] James Tobin. Cambridge, Harvard University Press, 1956. 414 p. 56–8553 HC106.S88

In this study a sociologist, Mr. Sutton, has collaborated with three economists to examine the ideology of American business as expressed by its spokesmen. The content of the "creed" is expounded in the first 12 chapters according to its chief themes—the American system of business enterprise, the functions of ownership, the relations of businessmen with labor and with customers, the relations of government with business, the value of competition, business cycles, money, and the values of a good society. The illustrations are quotations or digests of public statements of business leaders in speeches, writings, and testimony before congressional committees, and examples from advertising and the literature of business associations. In comparison with the normal tenets of modern social science, the creed is revealed as essentially conservative, individualistic, and moralistic. In the last six chapters the authors seek to show that this business ideology is determined largely by "deeplying motivational forces." They suggest that it is less real belief than symbolical expression, intended to resolve the strains inherent in American business institutions and the tensions of the business executive, in conflict with other demands of society. But, they point out, "the rigidity of the business creed should not be exaggerated. American business now gives at least de facto acceptance to a multitude of laws and practices which it earlier opposed as dangerous to the commonwealth or morally repugnant."

L. Business: Special

6011. Berle, Adolf A. The modern corporation and private property, by Adolf A. Berle, Jr., and Gardiner C. Means. New York, Macmillan, 1937. 396 p. diagrs.
38–11139 HD2795.B53 1937

In 1932, at the darkest point of the Great Depression, this epoch-making book appeared. Its authors, both to become prominent in the "Brain Trust" of the New Deal, were respectively a finance lawyer and professor of corporation law at Columbia Law School, and a practicing and research economist. Based on a series of technical and statistical studies of corporation development and finance, the book presented their conclusions concerning the "unrecognized" but "far advanced" "corporate revolution" through which, the writers believed, America was passing. Their first table lists, with their gross assets, the 200 largest nonbanking corporations in the United States, which "form the very framework of American industry." "The translation of perhaps two-thirds of the industrial wealth of the country from individual ownership to ownership by the large, publicly financed corporations vitally changes the lives of property owners, the lives of workers, and the methods of property tenure. The divorce of ownership from control consequent on the process almost necessarily involves a new form of economic organization of society." The evolution and legal position of the corporate system in which economic power is now concentrated are studied, and the virtues and dangers of the system examined. The dangers, in the authors' view, lay in the corporations' lack of legal responsibility, which permitted them to turn aside all efforts at Federal regulation, and even to attempt to dominate the national government. The influence of this study was evident in the Temporary National Economic Committee's hearings during 1938–40, and in the antitrust actions of Thurman Arnold, Assistant Attorney General during 1938–43; and its views have entered into the substance of practically all later discussions in its field.

6012. Berle, Adolf A. The 20th century capitalist revolution. New York, Harcourt, Brace, 1954. 192 p. 54–11327 HD2731.B4

In 1954 Professor Berle expanded a lecture series on the corporation as a quasi-political institution into this thought-provoking book. He joins several other recent appraisers (for instance, Galbraith, no. 5886, and Lilienthal, no. 5892) in suggesting that the modern corporation is beneficial to society. The old checks of free competition and "the judgment of the market place" (the influence of investors) have been replaced by the force of public opinion and by the competition among the giants of the "oligopoly" to give the best service to their "constituency," a public which must be kept satisfied. Otherwise, nationalization! "The real guarantee of nonstatist industrial organization in America is a substantially satisfied public." The writer compares the unwritten but developing laws of the corporation for the protection of individual rights (as in cases of security hearings) to the medieval institution of the Curia regis, the King's Court, through which the king redressed grievances according to his conscience. He shows the corporation to be a powerful instrument in international affairs, where hope may be brighter for economic than for political agreement. In conclusion he describes the social role of the corporation, which through huge planned expenditures for public welfare, education, and community development, may be shaping the "City of God" of the future. One of the first economists, after World War II, to voice the idea that big business was not a force for evil in social and political life was Peter F. Drucker, whose much-quoted Concept of the Corporation (New York, John Day, 1946. 297 p.) was written after 18 months' experience as an outside consultant on management to General Motors.

6013. Bonbright, James C., and Gardiner C. Means. The holding company, its public significance and its regulation. New York, McGraw-Hill, 1932. 398 p. diagrs.
32–8783 HD2795.B65

A study of a special aspect of the problem of combination in business, which appeared a few months before Mr. Means' more far-reaching work in collaboration with Professor Berle (no. 6011). Particularly during the 1920's, the public utility enterprises of the nation had been largely centralized through a few great holding company systems—for instance, in gas and electricity, the United Corporation Group, the Electric Bond and Share Group, and the Insull Utility Group—which were powerful enough to evade or disregard laws for their control by public service commissions. The authors examined the theory of the holding company and its status as an alternative to other forms of combination. Then they scrutinized the record of the public utility holding companies, the railroad holding companies (the Van Sweringen system was at that time particularly in the public eye), and the bank holding companies. In their final evaluation they suggested that the holding company system is popular with business promoters, first, in that it is the most facile of all the possible legal devices for combining independent enterprises, and second, that it is the least subject to social control. The latter aspect they considered a danger justifying "grave public concern and criticism."

6014. Davis, Joseph Stancliffe. Essays in the earlier history of American corporations. Cambridge, Harvard University Press, 1917. 2 v. diagrs. (Harvard economic studies, v. 16)
17–12885 HD2785.D3

6015. Evans, George Heberton. Business incorporations in the United States, 1800–1943. [New York] National Bureau of Economic Research, 1948. 184 p. illus. (Publications of the National Bureau of Economic Research, no. 49)
48–10514 HD2785.E85

Dr. Davis' four long historical essays on corporations in 18th-century America have attained the rank of a classic in business history. Three are in the first volume: "Corporations in the American Colonies," "William Duer, Entrepreneur," and "The 'S. U. M.': the First New Jersey Business Corporation." All are interesting narratives, with historical fact interpreted in its legal, economic, and social significance. The writer first describes the several types of public and private corporations chartered either by the British government or, the great majority, by the Colonial governments: they were boroughs, towns, local administrative boards, colleges, churches, library companies, marine societies, etc. The essay on William Duer (1742–1799), the New York patriot, financier, and land speculator, who was prime mover in the abortive Scioto land enterprise and whose failure and arrest for debt initiated the panic of 1792, studies "a typical bull operator in a boom period," one besides of doubtful morality whose career ended in deserved disaster. The S. U. M. was the Society for Establishing Useful Manufactures, incorporated by the New Jersey Legislature in 1791, promoted by Alexander Hamilton, raison d'être of the town of Paterson, and still in existence at the time of writing. In volume 2 the fourth and longest essay, "Eighteenth Century Business Corporations in the United States," describes banking companies, corporations for improving communications, for insurance, water supply, manufacturing, and other matters. The list of charters is given in an appendix. The published and unpublished sources for the four essays fill a 50-page bibliography. A very different approach to the subject is made in Professor Evans' study. Nine chapters of running analysis are accompanied by 44 tables and 26 charts compiled by the National Bureau of Economic Research. The first chapters explain the nature of the study, of particular interest for its implications as to business cycles, and the significance of an incorporation. During the first three quarters of the 19th century most incorporations were effected by special charter; they have a chapter to themselves. Next trends in business incorporations from 1875 to 1943 are examined, followed by statistical tabulations: the number of incorporations and their authorized capital stock; large, medium, and small business corporations; and an industrial classification. The last two chapters examine the fields of corporate enterprise and the relationship of the number of incorporations to business cycles. Further statistics of incorporations by separate States, periods, etc., are set forth in 90 pages of appendixes.

6016. East, Robert A. Business enterprise in the American revolutionary era. New York, Columbia University Press, 1938. 387 p. (Columbia University. Faculty of Political Science. Studies in history, economics and public law, no. 439)
39–2808 HC105.E24 1938a
H31.C7, no. 439

Bibliography: p. 330–356.

A history of business undertakings in America from 1775 to 1792, in the preparation of which the author used an overwhelming array of material, published and unpublished—public records, family papers, business papers, letters, diaries, memoirs, travels, biographies, local histories, and specialized historical studies. His special interest lies in the transition from the individual mercantile enterprise of the late Colonial period to the beginnings of industrial capitalism. The change was evidenced most clearly in new mechanisms and opportunities for investment: joint-stock companies, factory projects for textile manufactures, companies for land speculation, communication projects, the new commercial banks of the 1780's, and the like, which were superseding the earlier partnerships or personally supervised investments. Much of the study concentrates upon the individual promoters who grasped the opportunities offered by the new economic forces of the Revolution, and prepared the way for a more developed capitalist system. Noteworthy among the many whose transactions the author records are the Connecticut trader and Commissary General of the Continental forces, Jeremiah Wadsworth, and the Philadelphia merchant and financier, Robert Morris.

6017. Haynes, Benjamin R., and Harry P. Jackson. A history of business education in the United States. Cincinnati, Southwestern Pub. Co., 1935. 159 p. 35–2923 HF1131.H3

On cover: Monograph 25.

A clearly written and organized outline which draws upon a considerable number of monographs, articles, and other secondary works for its facts. The private business school or "commercial college" sprang up in our Eastern cities during the second quarter of the 19th century; it is "peculiarly American; nothing exactly like it is known in other countries." It enjoyed a practical monopoly of business education for decades, but from about 1890, after some 15 years of tentative beginnings, the public high schools moved into the field in a vigorous manner, and were soon offering a wide variety of courses designed to train young people for a business career. Several cities established high schools of commerce, with their whole curriculum focused upon efficient business training: the first was opened at Washington, D. C., in 1890, and enrolled 160 boys and 150 girls for its first year. The first venture at the college level was the Wharton School of Finance and Commerce at the University of Pennsylvania, founded in 1881; it had no imitators until 1898. The authors follow the spread of commercial training in junior high schools, correspondence schools, denominational schools, and other varieties, in a regularly concise and instructive manner.

6018. Holden, Paul E., Lounsbury S. Fish, and Hubert L. Smith. Top management organization and control. Stanford University, Calif., Stanford University Press, 1941. xvii, 239 p. diagrs. ([Stanford business series])

41–5421 HD31.H6

6019. National Institute for Commercial and Trade Organization Executives. Trade association management; textbook for trade association management curriculum. Editor: Delbert J. Duncan; assistant editors: Paul H. Sullivan [and] Minita Westcott. Rev. ed. [Chicago] 1948. 190 p. 48–4488 HD2421.N25 1948

The subtitle of the first work explains its nature: "a research study of the management policies and practices of thirty-one leading industrial corporations, conducted under the auspices of the Graduate School of Business, Stanford University." The arrangement reverses the work of research; the last section is provided by the data sheet used in the field interviews on which the study was based, while the book begins with a succinct summary and conclusions regarding the findings. These have been collated in a general treatment without reference to individual companies. The long central sections explain organization practices concerning top management, operations, staff, and committees; all phases of control practices; and the functions, composition, organization and procedure of the board of directors. A textbook for executives in a more specialized field is Trade Association Management. This ready reference guide has 7 parts, the first 4 giving the history, objectives, and policies of trade associations and analyzing their membership and (in the longest section of 14 chapters) their activities and services. The last 3 parts contain advice for management concerning operating problems, financial budgeting and control, and the qualifications of the executive. The 21 chapters are by as many "leading association executives."

6020. Kaplan, Abraham D. H. Big enterprise in a competitive system. Washington, Brookings Institution, 1954. 269 p.

54–4577 HC106.5.K36

6021. Kaplan, Abraham D. H. Small business: its place and problems. New York, McGraw-Hill, 1948. xiv, 281 p. diagrs. (Committee for Economic Development. Research study)

48–10456 HC106.K27

The first entry grew out of an investigation conducted by Brookings Institution with the aim of clarifying the role of big business in the American system and helping to establish a rational basis for public policy in this area. Big business is supported in practice by the public, but at the same time excites constant suspicion lest it may bring about a breakdown of the competitive system. Dr. Kaplan reviews lucidly the development of public opinion and policy in this regard, and the factors underlying the concept of competitive enterprise. He sums up statistical evidence as to concentration of industry in production, markets, and financial power, taking a particular look at the performance of the hundred largest industrial corporations. Then he analyzes the performance of the big corporations in relation to competition. In his summary and conclusions he states forthrightly that "the business of the American industrial giant is still primarily that of a competitor producing and distributing for the market," and that, rather than stifling competition, big business has contributed to the "scope, vitality, and effectiveness" of the system. The same writer had a few years earlier prepared a thorough report for CED on Small Business. Although the statistical data need revision, it remains useful as a reference work for definitions, and on the patterns of small business, its management, financing, and competitive techniques. The last topics considered are education and public policy in relation to small business.

6022. Maurer, Herrymon. Great enterprise; growth and behavior of the big corporation. New York, Macmillan, 1955. 303 p.
55–13880 HD2785.M37

A popular "general perspective" of the large corporation, based on an examination of the behavior of 50 large companies. The extensive checking of the life histories of these companies was performed by the research staff of Fortune, in which parts of the book appeared as articles. The 50 firms are listed on pages 18–19, with statistics for the year 1953: total assets almost $82½ billion; total earnings almost $4 billion; close to 4 million employees. Mr. Maurer describes "The Look of the Large Corporation," traces the history of early enterprise, examines the activities of the "corporate center," and explains corporate organization and management. He concludes with a chapter on the relation of the corporation to society, emphasizing the basic need of the big business enterprise to understand and explain itself "in such a way that the public understands that [its] social responsibilities and economic activities . . . are so inextricably intermingled as to amount to the same thing."

6023. Miller, William, ed. Men in business; essays in the history of entrepreneurship. Cambridge, Harvard University Press, 1952. 350 p.
52–5037 HF3023.A2M5

A set of readable and well-documented essays, published under the auspices of the Research Center in Entrepreneurial History at Harvard University. The 11 writers are young economists and historians whose work reflects recent theories of psychology and sociology as well as of the Schumpeter school of economics. The first three are on entrepreneurship abroad. The others, in roughly chronological order, study selected American promoters and family or elite groups engaged in new forms of business enterprise from the time of the Revolution. The emphasis throughout is on the personality and social standing of individuals, and their impact upon the political, social, and economic affairs of their day. Among those treated are the Lowell-Higginson-Cabot, Brown, and other family groupings that dominated the beginnings of Massachusetts industry; John Stevens of Hoboken and of the first steamboats; Henry Noble Day, the militant Christian railroad promoter of the new Middle West; Frank Julian Sprague, the "father of electric traction"; and Henry Varnum Poor, "philosopher of management," whose railroad manuals introduced an information service for investment. In the last essay Mr. Miller looks at the 20th-century change from "individualistic, innovative, venturesome" entrepreneurship to an orderly and restrained "Business Elite in Business Bureaucracies."

6024. Porter, Kenneth Wiggins. John Jacob Astor, business man. Cambridge, Harvard University Press, 1931. 2 v. illus. (Harvard studies in business history, 1)
31–28561 CT275.A85P6

"Bibliographical note": v. 2, p. [1299]–1305.

John Jacob Astor (1763–1848), whose career exemplifies the double transition from petty trader to mercantile capitalist to industrial entrepreneur, has long served as archetype of the self-made man of business in America, the land of boundless opportunity. He arrived by steerage from Germany via England in 1784, with a stock in trade of seven flutes. A shipboard acquaintance led him into the fur trade; he soon established himself as a leading fur merchant trading to Europe, and by constant new ventures, hard work, and hard bargaining built up a huge fortune. In 1800 he ventured a cargo to China, and as the China trade prospered used his capital to organize the American Fur Company and the Pacific Fur Company, intended to monopolize the fur trade of the Far West. The latter and its central depot of Astoria on the Columbia River were casualties of the War of 1812, but the war brought other opportunities of large profit. His fortune of at least $20 million, the greatest of his era in the United States, came in large part from his real estate investments in New York City. Dr. Porter's rounded narrative of Astor's life is a solidly based business biography, for which he had access to voluminous collections of primary sources. Each volume includes an extended section of "Documents," reproducing letters, agreements, contracts, and other business papers. Further light on Astor's Pacific venture is afforded by Washington Irving's Astoria (no. 391).

6025. Silberling, Norman J. The dynamics of business; an analysis of trends, cycles, and time relationships in American economic activity since 1700 and their bearing upon governmental and business policy. New York, McGraw-Hill, 1943. 759 p. diagrs. 43–6816 HB3711.S48

This work, posthumously published, was by a professor of business research who had also headed his own research corporation. It is a study in measurement, analyzing long-term trends of the American economy through quantitative data, mostly as represented in index numbers. With mathematical formulae and graphic charts, in a style difficult for nonspecialist readers, the writer has studied trends of population growth, production and trade, price levels, national and farm income, building and real estate, transportation, banking, international monetary policy, interest rates and stocks, corporate earnings and capital investment, consumer income, wage income, and business forecasting. In a final chapter on "The Future of Production and Capital" he expresses anti-Keynesian views, declaring that programs of public works, etc., express a "philosophy of stagnation" with a "corollary of bureaucratic capitalism."

6026. Stocking, George W., and Myron W. Watkins. Monopoly and free enterprise. With the report and recommendations of the Committee on Cartels and Monopoly. New York, Twentieth Century Fund, 1951. xv, 596 p. 51–9279 HD2731.S765

The final product of a major investigation of the problems of international cartels and domestic monopoly undertaken by the Twentieth Century Fund in 1944. The research was directed by Professors Stocking and Watkins, both specialists in industrial economics. Two volumes of the same authorship and publisher preceded this, Cartels in Action (1946. 533 p.), a case history of international cartels in eight important fields, and Cartels or Competition? (1948. 516 p.), which appraised the international cartel movement in terms of its effect on the economic life of the United States. The present work embodies a well-organized review of the theory, history, and experience of industrial concentration in America, of oligopolistic competition in practice, of antitrust legislation, of government regulation of trade, and of the policies of big business. For this it makes use of many scholarly studies of the two previous decades as well as of the findings of TNEC and other congressional investigating committees, and of Supreme Court decisions. Its argument is a notable assertion of the doctrine that the economic goal of a democratic society is a competitive private enterprise system, genuinely free alike from bureaucratic and from monopolistic control. The appended program of the Fund Committee calls for vigorous enforcement of the antitrust laws.

6027. Taussig, Frank W., and Carl S. Joslyn. American business leaders; a study in social origins and social stratification. New York, Macmillan, 1932. xiv, 319 p. 32–25438 HF5353.T3

6028. Newcomer, Mabel. The big business executive; the factors that made him, 1900–1950. New York, Columbia University Press, 1955. 164 p. illus. 55–10287 HF5500.N37

6029. Warner, William Lloyd, and James C. Abegglen. Big business leaders in America. New York, Harper, 1955. 243 p. illus. 55–8545 HF5500.W25

In the first-named, long-standard work a noted Harvard economist collaborated with a colleague in the department of sociology. Their data were assembled from over 7,000 answers to a questionnaire returned by individual business leaders selected from Poor's Register of Directors for 1928. The respondents are classified as to business status, geographic distribution, type of business, size of business, and age and time factors. Their occupational origins for two generations back are examined in comparison with studies of social mobility made by Professor Pitirim Sorokin and others. Environmental conditions are analyzed with regard to influential connections, financial aid, general schooling, and special business education. (A high percentage is shown to have had college training, but over 70 percent had no formal business training.) These two sets of factors are correlated with business achievement. The authors conclude that, although 70 percent of the business leaders come from the business and professional classes representing only 10 percent of the American population, the sons of laborers are handicapped by lack of innate ability rather than of opportunity. Among the appendixes is an interesting selection of "remarks" made by respondents. A later study in this field is that of Professor Newcomer of Vassar College. Her sample is drawn from the controlling groups of three generations (1900, 1925, 1950) in over 400 of the largest railroad, public utility, and industrial corporations. The introduction explains the purpose, scope, method, and sources of the work, and two chapters treat the nature and functions of the board of directors of a big company. Next the origins of the leaders are statistically analyzed as to nationality, religion, politics, income, fathers' occupations, and family income. The education of executives is discussed in a long chapter, and then their early business careers and executive service are surveyed. The last three chapters bring forward evidence on incentives, on qualifications of the executives, and on trends in the education of business administrators. In giving reasons why leadership has become professionalized, the author places first the greater degree of education now required for executives. Her conclusion for the future is that standards will increasingly be set by the graduate schools of business administration. In the same year a comparable book was addressed to a general audience by two sociologists of the University of Chicago, Professors Warner and Abegglen. In this the statistical analysis is limited to a few charts, and the emphasis is on personal qualities. The leaders are characterized as a "birth and mobile class," their "Royal Road: Higher Education." Factors in successful careers, such as personalities, wives, and public activities, are examined, and getting ahead is regarded as a calculated, cold-blooded and dog-eat-dog process.

6030. [Thorp, Willard L., and Walter F. Crowder] The structure of industry. Washington, U. S. Govt. Print. Off., 1941. xv, 759 p. ([U. S.] Temporary National Economic Committee. Investigation of concentration of economic power. Monograph no. 27)

41–50311 HC106.3.A5127, no. 27

At head of title: 76th Congress, 3d session. Senate committee print.

Running title: Concentration of economic power.

This is one of the most substantial of the 40-odd monographs prepared by economists to assist the investigations of the TNEC into industrial concentration. Dr. Thorp, Mr. Crowder, and their assistants studied American industry from 1890 to 1937 with the aim of segregating trends that lead to monopoly. In the first part general trends in the size and scale of operations of manufacturing industries are examined. Part 2 analyzes the structure and functions of integrated manufacturing operations. A short chapter summarizes the progress of the merger movement with graphic representation. Brief notes are given on the history of concentration in seven selected industries. Part 5 is on "The Concentration of Production in Manufacturing," indicating the extent and areas of concentration, leading producers, the relation of concentration to various product characteristics, and changes in concentration. Part 6 analyzes the product structure of the 50 largest manufacturing companies. Each of the two last sections have long appendixes of statistics. The presentation of the whole is quite objective, and based on scientific techniques of economic measurement.

M. Labor: General

6031. Barbash, Jack. The practice of unionism. New York, Harper, 1956. 465 p.

56–9325 HD6508.B353

References, comments, and suggested readings: p. 411–446.

6032. Hardman, Jacob B. S., and Maurice F. Neufeld, eds. The house of labor; internal operations of American unions. New York, Prentice-Hall, 1951. xviii, 555 p. (Prentice-Hall industrial relations and personnel series)

51–2599 HD6508.H27

The Practice of Unionism is a survey of the principles and working rules of the modern trade union. General concepts are illustrated with cases of union practice since 1933 and particularly since passage of the Labor-Management Relations (Taft-Hartley) Act in 1947. The incentives for joining and organizing labor unions are Mr. Barbash's first consideration. There follow expositions of the organization, administration, and structure of unions; an examination of the terms and procedures in the union's central business of collective bargaining under the Taft-Hartley provisions; and an account of its utilization of the weapons of strikes, picket lines, and boycotts. Union efforts to influence government and politics are explained as following a public policy of which the welfare state is "a shorthand description." The author writes severly of racketeering and communism in unions, calling them "labor pathology." In describing the functions and services of the group of "union technicians" to which he himself belongs, he emphasizes that the labor specialist does not make policy. Another work by the professional branch of the labor movement is The House of Labor, prepared under the auspices of the Inter-Union Institute, as the result of a cooperative study by leading staff members of a number of national unions. Mr. Hardman was chairman of the Institute, and Professor Neufeld is with the New York State School of Industrial and Labor Relations at Cornell University, where many of the "labor technicians" receive their training. The 45 chapters, to which almost 50 specialists have contributed, are in 8 groups. First is a general appraisal of the current state of the unions, their leaders and membership, and the labor movement as a whole. The succeeding parts cover political activities at home and abroad, union publicity and public relations, research and industrial engineering, welfare, health and community services, union administration, educational activities, and the functions and aims of the union staff.

6033. Commons, John R., and others. History of labour in the United States. New York, Macmillan, 1918–35. 4 v. 18–9293 HD8066.C7 HC101.C75, no. 4

Bibliography: v. 2, p. [539]–587; v. 3, p. 701–741; v. 4, p. 639–661.

CONTENTS.—v. 1. Introduction, by J. R. Commons. Colonial and Federal beginnings (to 1827) by D. J. Saposs. Citizenship (1827–1833) by Helen L. Sumner. Trade unionism (1833–1839) by E. B. Mittelman. Humanitarianism (1840–1860) by H. E. Hoagland.—v. 2. Nationalisation (1860–1877) by J. B. Andrews. Upheaval and reorganisation (since 1876) by Selig Perlman.—v. 3. Introduction to volumes 3 and 4, by J. R. Commons. Working conditions, by D. D. Lescohier. Labor legislation, by Elizabeth Brandeis.—v. 4. Labor movements, by Selig Perlman and Philip Taft.

The first two volumes of this classic work constituted the fourth study in the Carnegie Institution series of Contributions to American economic history (see Clark, no. 5904; Johnson, no. 5948; Meyer, no. 5923) and appeared in 1918 (reprinted last in 1935). Like the rest of the series, it was preceded by the preparation and publication of various monographs and documents. Most notable was A Documentary History of American Industrial Society, edited by Dr. Commons and associates under the auspices of the American Bureau of Industrial Research (Cleveland, A. H. Clark, 1910–11. 11 v.). This compilation of records has provided basic source material not only for the present work but for all subsequent studies in American labor history. Volumes 3 and 4 of the History of Labour continued the original study from 1896 to 1932, and were prepared by colleagues and former students of Professor Commons at the University of Wisconsin. In his introduction this distinguished student of industrial relations gives his own witness to changes in labor organization: "In the course of twenty-five years I saw an industry evolve not only from merchant capitalism to employer capitalism, but also from struggles for 'proletarian dictatorship' to the concerted regulations of constitutional government."

6034. Dulles, Foster Rhea. Labor in America, a history. New York, Crowell, 1955. 421 p. (The Growth of America series)

55–11009 HD8066.D8 1955

The voluminous studies of Professor Commons and his associates have been drawn on heavily by Professor Dulles in his history for the general reader. In 21 fast-moving chapters he narrates the whole story of American labor from the indentured servant system of Colonial days to the merger of the A. F. of L. and the C. I. O. in 1955. He traces the growth of the national organization of labor—the precursors, the National Labor Union, the Knights of Labor, the American Federation of Labor, the Congress of Industrial Organizations—in perspective against national socioeconomic and political development. Before turning to the teaching of history Mr. Dulles had been a newspaperman, and his training is reflected in his objective and balanced selections from the inexhaustible source material of the modern labor unions. An introduction to trade-union history designed for a wide audience including school and workers' education groups is Labor in America, by Harold U. Faulkner and Mark Starr, new rev. ed. (New York, Oxford Book Co., 1957. 330 p.). Most of it is a simple retelling of the story of labor from the medieval guilds to the great unions of World War II and the postwar passage of the Taft-Hartley Act. A chapter explains in simplest terms the structure and functions of unions. The last two chapters, on current union activities and on trends and prospects of 1949–56, take into account the AFL–CIO merger.

6035. Peterson, Florence. American labor unions, what they are and how they work. Rev. ed. New York, Harper, 1952. 270 p. illus.

51–11948 HD6508.P42 1952

6036. Dankert, Clyde E. Contemporary unionism in the United States. New York, Prentice-Hall, 1948. xv, 521 p. diagrs. (The Prentice-Hall industrial relations and personnel series)

48–10478 HD6508.D25

By a former chief of the industrial relations division of the U. S. Bureau of Labor Statistics, American Labor Unions is a handbook of noteworthy conciseness and clarity. The historic growth of the labor movement is outlined in less than 50 pages. The structure and internal government of federated organizations (A. F. of L., C. I. O., and the railroad brotherhoods) and of national and local unions are next explained, with precise details as to membership rules, finances, and dues. Benefit programs, public relations, and educational activities are given a separate section. The relations of unions and management are discussed as regards collective bargaining, disputes, strikes, and settlements under the National Labor Relations Act, the Taft-Hartley Act, and the mediation of Federal agencies. The last part examines the international relations of American trade unions. At the end are a glossary of labor terms and a directory of unions in 1951. The same general field is covered in greater detail in the earlier work by Professor Dankert, addressed to a college or professional audience. This objective analysis includes a review of American trade union history, and separate treatments of the structure, government, principles, and activities of the A. F. of L. and the C. I. O. The labor legislation of the New Deal and the wartime and postwar position of labor are taken into account. The text was largely completed before the passage of the Taft-Hartley Act in 1947, and although the writer describes its major features, experience had not yet revealed its full significance.

6037. Reynolds, Lloyd G. Labor economics and labor relations. 2d ed., with revisions. Englewood Cliffs, N. J., Prentice-Hall, 1956. 722 p. illus. 56–44059 HD4901.R47 1956

This serviceable text by a Yale professor of economics has two distinct parts. The first is a thorough discussion of trade unions, their history, growth, and philosophy, and of the processes of collective bargaining, the public control of labor relations, and the role of labor in politics. The new edition covers conditions and events of 1955. The second part is a study of "The Economics of the Labor Market." Here the author leaves the field of organized labor to examine the broader questions of labor supply and the labor market, of employment and unemployment, of wages and wage determination, and of minimum standards of real income. Throughout he stresses public policy in these fields. A short epilogue aims to sum up the entire labor problem, arriving at a "balance-sheet" of trade-unionism. It is, Dr. Reynolds decides, "a conservative social force and becoming increasingly so as it grows older." He is inclined to consider that, despite many deficiencies, trade-unionism tips the scale on the side of social usefulness. Reference may be made here to a still more recent study of the role of trade unions in the welfare state: John A. Fitch's Social Responsibilities of Organized Labor (1957), mentioned above as one of Harper's Series on ethics and economic life (no. 5899).

6038. Slichter, Sumner H. The challenge of industrial relations; trade unions, management, and the public interest. Ithaca, N. Y., Cornell University Press, 1947. 196 p. (The Messenger lectures on the evolution of civilization, 1946) 47–3448 HD8072.S6165

One reviewer said that this little book, embodying six lectures given by Professor Slichter at Cornell University, "may be regarded, by all odds, as the best single volume on modern industrial relations." The author's writing on labor questions goes back to his thesis at the University of Chicago in 1918, The Turnover of Factory Labor, with foreword by John R. Commons (New York, Appleton, 1919. 460 p). A major work, Union Policies and Industrial Management (Washington, Brookings Institution, 1941. 597 p. The Institute of Economics of the Brookings Institution. Publication no. 85), is a well-rounded examination of collective bargaining. In the present lectures he looks at the labor movement in general, the effect of unions on management, union wage policies, the government of unions, the problem of industrial peace, and the control of unions in the public interest. Central to his discussion is his view that trade unions constitute the greatest private economic power in the community, and that their policies are a major determinant of national prosperity and industrial democracy.

6039. Taft, Philip. The structure and government of labor unions. Cambridge, Harvard University Press, 1954. xix, 312 p. tables. (Wertheim Fellowship publications in industrial relations) 54–8633 HD6508.T27

A close study of the internal aspects of unions, which begins with a survey of radicalism in American labor. Professor Taft takes a cross-section of union history to show that the membership of the unions, in spite of vigorous attempts by Communist leaders, has always rejected radical philosophy. He examines on the same pattern elections and competition for office, dues, initiation fees, and salaries of officers, and "does not shy away from investigating the most intimate aspect of union life, namely, how and for what reasons unions discipline their members" ("Foreword" by S. H. Slichter). Three chapters are case histories of particular unions. "The Unlicensed Seafaring Unions" have been important targets for Communist agitation and the scene of incessant intra- and interunion battles. The two largest unions of C. I. O., the Automobile Workers' Union and the Steel Workers' Union, are compared in detail. An individual case study is made of the expanding and aggressive Teamsters' Union (three years too early for comment on its disciplinary expulsion from AFL–CIO). The author returns to the theme of democratic theory in a last look at the present state of the unions: "Far from perfect, unions fundamentally reflect the will of their members. They not only fulfill a vital need for the workers' representation and protection in industry, but they are the most effective guarantee against Communist infiltration into American labor."

6040. Twentieth Century Fund. Employment and wages in the United States, by Wladimir S. Woytinsky and associates. New York, 1953. xxxii, 777 p. 53–7170 HD8072.T8

This extensive survey presents a tremendous array of data on American labor and its remuneration, past and present (from before 1870 to and including 1950), which is set down statistically in tables (242 in the text, 118 in the appendix) and 86 graphs and maps. These are embodied in a full expository text, documented in footnotes. The whole is designed to provide reliable source material for future studies. The coverage is indicated in the foreword: "The working people of the United States and their conditions of labor: the size, make-up and distribution of the labor force; the various occupations represented and the numbers of workers employed in each; the ebb and flow of employment and unemployment; the wages that American workers are paid and how their wages are determined; their hours of labor and other working conditions and the regulations and controls that government has imposed upon them; labor unions and the role they play in the vast drama of wages and employment; the underpinnings of insurance which have been set up to make the worker's life more secure; and finally, the relation of all these basic facts to the operation of the economy as a whole."

6041. Ulman, Lloyd. The rise of the national trade union; the development and significance of its structure, governing institutions, and economic policies. Cambridge, Harvard University Press, 1955. xix, 639 p. diagrs., tables. (Wertheim publications in industrial relations) 56–5175 HD6508.U4

In the first five parts of this long and scholarly monograph the writer analyzes the historical development of the trade union movement in the late 19th and early 20th century. By the turn of the century, he finds, the nationally organized union had achieved maturity as to its governing institutions, its relationships with local unions and other labor bodies, its strike and wage policies, and its work rules. Among causes for nationalization he emphasizes the important factor of geographical mobility—the "traveling member" who moved to new ground for a job—and the financial and other coordinated assistance which the national organization could provide to support local strikes. His special research sources were the constitutions, proceedings, and journals of five national unions, the Bricklayers', Carpenters', Printers', Molders', and Bottle Blowers'. In his sixth part he examines the wage and strike policies of these and other national unions and compares them with employers' policies. In the seventh he proceeds to the theory of labor unions, criticizing the older views of J. R. Commons and Selig Perlman, and offering his own hypothesis based on a profit motivation of labor matching the individualism of American enterprise; it is this which has produced a dynamic "business unionism" concentrated upon collective bargaining.

6042. Yoder, Dale. Manpower economics and labor problems. 3d ed. New York, McGraw-Hill, 1950. 661 p. illus. 50–8119 HD8072.Y6 1950

Previous editions published under title: Labor Economics and Labor Problems.

A comprehensive work on manpower as "the most versatile, valuable, and complicated resource of modern societies," and on the problems arising out of the use of this resource in our society. The first four chapters are devoted to theoretical and historical examination of the general theme. Then particular aspects are studied as to practice and policy: wages; employment and unemployment; the labor of such special groups as women, children, the aged, and the handicapped; and questions of status in industry. It is only in the last third of the book that Professor Yoder focuses his attention on organized labor. He examines American trade unions (in 1949 amounting to approximately one-fourth of the total labor force) in respect to the practices, policy, and economic implications of collective bargaining. Last he looks at industrial relations, reviewing such devices for "maximized cooperation" as profit sharing, employee stock ownership, employee representation, and union-management collaboration, but suggesting that the "simple virtues" of honesty, sincerity, and integrity are more important in establishing mutual confidence. The author is director of the Industrial Relations Center at the University of Minnesota and a frequent consultant to government agencies on manpower problems. His big textbook, Personnel Management and Industrial Relations, 4th ed. (Englewood Cliffs, N. J., Prentice-Hall, 1956. 941 p.), has been a standard work in its field since its first appearance in 1938.

N. Labor: Special

6043. Anderson, Hobson Dewey, and Percy E. Davidson. Occupational trends in the United States. Stanford University, Calif., Stanford University Press, 1940. 618 p. tables, diagrs.
HB2595.A6

——— Recent occupational trends in American labor; a supplement. Stanford University, Calif., Stanford University Press, 1945. vii, 133 p. incl. tables.
40–35443 HB2595.A6 Suppl.

This useful study brings together and interprets statistics from the decennial Census of Occupations; the original volume and the supplement together cover Bureau of the Census records from 1870 through 1940. After a 70-page introduction summarizing general occupational trends and causal factors, the arrangement is by major occupational groups: agriculture, fishing and forestry, extraction of minerals, manufacturing and mechanical industries (with 14 subgroups), transportation and communications, trade, public service, professional service, domestic and personal service, and clerical occupations. The tables and charts reveal a great variety of facts regarding the distribution of American manpower over 70 years. The supplement draws upon the Sixteenth Census of the United States: 1940. Population. v. 3. The Labor Force (Washington, U. S. Govt. Print. Off., 1943. 5 pts.), and also upon an important statistical monograph of the Bureau of the Census prepared by Dr. Alba M. Edwards: Sixteenth Census of the United States: 1940. Population. Comparative Occupation Statistics of the United States, 1870 to 1940 (Washington, U. S. Govt. Print. Off., 1943. 206 p.).

6044. Bridenbaugh, Carl. The Colonial craftsman. New York, New York University Press, 1950. 214 p. (New York University. Stokes Foundation. Anson G. Phelps lectureship on early American history)
50–7479 HD2346.U5B7

Although the author declares in his preface that he writes because everything else on Colonial crafts is from the antiquarian viewpoint, still this little work for "the casual reader" stands out in a selection of writings on American labor as a rare example of antiquarian charm. The focus of interest, it is true, is the skilled workman and his economic progress, but plenty of detail about his product finds its way into the pages. Part of the antiquarian flavor may be attributed to the illustrations, all reproductions of engravings in the French Encyclopédie of 1762–76 showing the work of the several crafts. The several lectures are on the craftsman of the rural South and of the rural North, the urban craftsman (two lectures), the craftsman at work, and the craftsman as a citizen. At the outset the author warns against "surrounding the artisan with the haze of romance," and reminds us that only the best 18th-century craftwork has been preserved in modern collections, and that many articles were distinctly inferior in quality.

6045. Brissenden, Paul F. The I. W. W.; a study of American syndicalism. [2d ed.] New York, Russell & Russell, 1957. xxii, 438 p.
57–6911 HD8055.I5B55 1957

Bibliography: p. 387–428.

The Industrial Workers of the World held its 27th convention in 1955, 50 years after its launching in 1905. The outstanding example of the anarcho-syndicalist union in America, it was a direct successor of the militantly radical Western Federation of Miners, and was promptly joined by the extremer element of the American Federation of Labor. Its membership was drawn largely from unskilled labor of alien origin, and it openly avowed Marxist doctrine and favored the use of violence and sabotage. Its founders included its best-known leaders, Eugene V. Debs, "Big Bill" Haywood, Daniel DeLeon, and Vincent St. John. The "Wobblies" or the "Bummery" (their "red book" song, "Hallelujah, I'm a Bum," is familiar at least to the older generation today) conducted innumerable strikes, the most famous of which was at Lawrence, Mass., in 1912. They opposed World War I, and were violently suppressed after Congress passed the Anti-Espionage Act in 1917. Their influence and membership have since considerably declined. In his new preface to a history standard since 1919 Professor Brissenden comments that one of the most remarkable things about the I. W. W. is its survival. He denies that it is a Communist organization.

6046. Chamberlain, Neil W. Collective bargaining. New York, McGraw-Hill, 1951. 534 p. illus.
51–2201 HD6483.C48

6047. Chamberlain, Neil W., and Jane Metzger Schilling. The impact of strikes, their social and economic costs. New York, Harper, 1954. 257 p. (Yale Labor and Management Center series) 53–11958 HD5324.C42

Dr. Chamberlain, well known as a writer in the labor field, is assistant director of the Labor and Management Center at Yale University. His textbook, Collective Bargaining, was the first to be devoted exclusively to the subject. In it, he says, he has consciously stressed "the developmental character of collective bargaining, its change over time," and he finds a surprisingly modern instance among the printers of New York City as early as 1809. The source material incorporated includes a verbatim report of a bargaining conference in chapter 3, and sample agreements on grievance procedure and on collective bargaining (both between General Motors and the United Automobile Workers, 1950) in the appendixes. Two chapters discuss the bargaining unit, which is by no means necessarily coextensive with company or union, and another the factors which enter into the "tricky" concept of bargaining power. The politics of bargaining are viewed both from the union and the management side; and its economics are investigated with respect to the problem of relative wage rates, the effect on national income levels, and the degree to which the bargaining process raises the specter of monopoly. In a final chapter on "The Role of Collective Bargaining in American Society," the functions and values of competition and cooperation are appraised, with the conclusion that a healthy economy requires "a proper admixture of the two." In The Impact of Strikes Dr. Chamberlain collaborated with a research assistant who had worked with him on a book in the same series published the year before: Social Responsibility and Strikes (New York, Harper, 1953. 293 p.). Both books are concerned with the social and economic effects of strikes on union members, management, and the public. In the earlier study a method was devised for rating the impact of strikes on consumers, industrial users, suppliers, and public opinion. In the later one the same procedure is again described, and used to analyze strikes in coal mines, railroad service, and the steel industry. Conclusions are based upon the overall cost of strikes and whether their effect on the public is so damaging as to warrant government intervention. The writers offer their strike-rating procedure as an example of the kind of analysis that will aid the executive branch in making decisions of public policy.

6048. Douglas, Paul H. Real wages in the United States, 1890–1926. Boston, Houghton Mifflin, 1930. xxviii, 682 p. diagrs. (Publications of the Pollak Foundation for Economic Research, no. 9) 30–12884 HD4975.D6

"Bibliographical note": p. [655]–667.

The author has been a professor of industrial relations at the University of Chicago since 1920; his career as United States Senator began in 1948. This authoritative 35-year study of rising living standards is introduced by a thorough discussion of the problem of ascertaining real wages as determined by purchasing power, through measurement of money wages and living costs. Professor Douglas then analyzed statistically the movement of living costs from 1890 to 1926, and, for the same period, the movement of wage-rates and hours of work, the movement of actual money and real earnings of employed workers, and of unemployment and the real earnings of the wage-earning class as a whole. A concluding chapter summarizes findings.

6049. Goldberg, Arthur J. AFL–CIO: labor united. New York, McGraw-Hill, 1956. 319 p. (McGraw-Hill labor management series) 56–11047 HD8055.A5G66

In 1935 the issue of craft versus industrial unions, which had been a main jurisdictional problem of the A. F. of L. from its earliest days, came to a head. The labor policies of the New Deal, protecting the right of workers to organize and bargain collectively, had opened the way for unionization of the great number of unskilled workers in the mass-production industries. After the 1935 A. F. of L. convention, which refused to grant unrestricted industrial union charters, the Committee for Industrial Organization was formed, headed by John L. Lewis, Charles P. Howard, Sidney Hillman, David Dubinsky, and other leaders of industry-wide unions. Although repudiated by the A. F. of L. Executive Council, the C. I. O. launched successful organizational drives and by 1938 could transform itself into the federated Congress of Industrial Organizations, with Lewis as first president. Raiding, fussing, and feuding with the A. F. of L. ensued, but with the coming of war rivalry diminished and the policies of the two movements drew closer. Preliminary negotiations for unity began in 1953 with a no-raiding agreement, and in 1955 the merger was accomplished. This study is by the former general counsel of the United Steelworkers, now special counsel of AFL–CIO. He begins with a succinct historical review of these developments. He then analyzes the new joint constitution and its implications, devoting chapters to the labor monopoly question, communism and corruption, racial discrimination, public policy, and the future role of labor. Appendixes give texts of the new constitution, the merger agreement, and other documents.

6050. Gompers, Samuel. Seventy years of life and labor; an autobiography. New York, Dutton, 1925. 2 v. ports. 25–5990 HD8073.G6A3

677676 O–63–61

Appendix: His last year, an epilogue, by Florence Calvert Thorne: v. 2, p. [527]–557.

New one-volume ed. 1943. 557, 629 p.
44–638 HD8073.G6A3 1943

As a small boy in East-side London, Samuel Gompers (1850–1924) heard the tramp of the unemployed silk weavers of his neighborhood, whose jobs had been swept away by new machinery. Their cry, "My wife, my kids want bread and I've no work to do," taught him "the worldwide feeling that has ever bound the oppressed together in a struggle against those who hold control over the lives and opportunities of those who work for wages. That feeling became a subconscious guiding impulse that in later years developed into the dominating influence in shaping my life." Much of the history of the A. F. of L. is revealed in this autobiography of the great labor pioneer. As one of its creators and its president, save for the one year of Socialist domination, 1895, from 1886 to his death in 1924, he was chief architect of its growth, and its character and policies were largely determined by his convictions. The posthumously published work included a biographical appendix by Miss Thorne, who had been his assistant in the research needed to check and supplement his recollections. In 1957 Miss Thorne published Samuel Gompers, American Statesman (New York, Philosophical Library. 175 p.), principally concerned with setting forth, in large part in his own words, Gompers' philosophy of the labor movement.

6051. Lombardi, John. Labor's voice in the Cabinet; a history of the Department of Labor, from its origin to 1921. New York, Columbia University Press, 1942. 370 p. (Columbia University. Faculty of Political Science. Studies in history, economics and public law, no. 496)
43–461 HD4835.U4L6 1942
H31.C7, no. 496

Bibliography: p. 359–366.

In his first 70 pages Dr. Lombardi summarizes the precursors and origins of the Department of Labor. The new Department charged with representing the interests of the workers was established in 1913, crowning over a half-century's efforts on the part of organized labor. William B. Wilson of Pennsylvania, a former labor leader and Congressman, was named the first Secretary of Labor. The Department absorbed the Bureau of Labor Statistics, created in 1884 in the Department of the Interior, and from the former Department of Commerce and Labor (1903) took over the Bureaus of Immigration and Naturalization, now consolidated, and the Division of Information of the Immigration branch, now reorganized as the U. S. Employment Service. Finally it took from the same Department the Children's Bureau, which had been set up, after a hard legislative battle, only the year before. Dr. Lombardi gives fuller treatment to his chapters on the organization of the Department, and to the succeeding part on "War Activities." In 1917 the Department was put on a war footing, and the Secretary of Labor appointed War Labor Administrator in charge of an independent war agency. After the armistice came the "return to normalcy," which the author calls "Reaction." His study ends in 1921 with the retirement of Secretary Wilson, whose final report to the President spoke of the workers' dream fulfilled.

6052. Lorwin, Lewis L. The American Federation of Labor; history, policies, and prospects, by Lewis L. Lorwin, with the assistance of Jean Atherton Flexner. Washington, Brookings Institution, 1933. xix, 573 p. (The Institute of Economics of the Brookings Institution. Publication no. 50) 33–16879 HD8055.A5L6

"References for further reading": p. 548–555.

The late Dr. Lorwin was an internationally known expert on labor economics, who served as advisor to the International Labor Office as well as to the American Government in the 1930's and '40's. His standard history of the evolution of the A. F. of L. was written in the dark days of unemployment just before the passage of the National Industrial Recovery Act, while the author was on the staff of the Brookings Institution. He views the A. F. of L. as "shaping and molding many human relations which are the very essence of our individual and social life." The first four parts are chronological: "Foundations, 1864–98" (the Federation was not organized until 1886, but Dr. Lorwin carried his account of its precursors back to an abortive International Industrial Assembly of North America projected in 1864); "National Expansion, 1899–1914"; "World War and Industrial Democracy, 1914–24"; and "Prosperity and Depression, 1925–33." The last part is an analysis of policies, problems, and prospects at the outset of the New Deal. The appendixes include groups of tabulated statistics from 1850 to 1932 and a summary of trade union organization and status in the various industries.

6053. Millis, Harry A., and Emily Clark Brown. From the Wagner Act to Taft-Hartley; a study of national labor policy and labor relations. [Chicago] University of Chicago Press, 1950. 723 p. 50–7091 HD7834.M55

Bibliography: p. 679–687.

This study of labor legislation and government policy is in three parts and an epilogue. First there is a careful analysis of the Wagner Act and of 12 years' experience of collective bargaining under its provisions. This section was written entirely by Dr. Brown, who had begun the study while working as an analyst for the National Labor Relations Board in 1942–43. Part 2 tells "How the Taft-Hartley Act Came About," and part 3 analyzes critically the Labor-Management Relations Act of 1947, to give it its formal title. These two parts were planned and in part written by Dr. Millis, who retired as Chairman of NLRB in 1945, but died in 1948 before the text was completed. His rich experience in the administration of the Wagner Act and as arbitrator in many industrial disputes formed part of the source material for the book. The epilogue, "What Industrial Relations Road for the United States?" had been drafted as his last chapter by Dr. Millis and was made up without expansion from his notes. He speaks of the Wagner Act as the Magna Carta of American Labor. He sees in collective bargaining the hope not only for better wages, hours, and working conditions, but for increased stability and regular progress in democratic society.

6054. Powderly, Terence V. The path I trod; the autobiography of Terence V. Powderly, edited by Harry J. Carman, Henry David, and Paul N. Guthrie. New York, Columbia University Press, 1940. xiv, 460 p. illus. (Columbia studies in American culture, no. 6)

40–9071 HD8073.P69A3

An outstanding figure of American labor in the 1880's and Grand Master Workman of the order of the Knights of Labor, Powderly (1849–1924) experienced (say his editors) "fame, notoriety, adoration, and detestation" unequalled by any other labor leader of the period. The order, founded in 1869 as a secret society, was the first attempt at a national union of workers in general, not organized by trades. Powderly worked in a Scranton, Pa., locomotive yard, was fired for his activities in the Machinists' and Blacksmiths' Union after the panic of 1873, and joined the Knights of Labor in 1874. He was active in politics as well as in union affairs, and was mayor of Scranton from 1878 to 1884. As leader of the Knights from 1883 to 1893 he followed a conciliatory policy in labor disputes, and resigned when the extremists, who had come increasingly into the order during the labor troubles of the late 1880's, gained control of the executive board. He had become a lawyer, and his campaign work for McKinley led to his appointment as Commissioner-General of Immigration in 1897. With only one 4-year break, he held a succession of Federal offices concerned with immigration or labor until the illness that preceded his death. The Path I Trod was written in his later years, and is concerned almost entirely with the Knights of Labor experience. The standard history of the Knights of Labor for three decades has been Norman J. Ware's The Labor Movement in the United States, 1860–1895; a Study in Democracy (New York, Appleton, 1929. 409 p.).

6055. Purcell, Theodore V. The worker speaks his mind on company and union. Cambridge, Harvard University Press, 1953. xix, 344 p. illus. (Wertheim Fellowship publications)

53–9040 HD9419.S72P8

A unique study of the human problems of industry as revealed in interviews with workers at the Chicago stockyards plant of Swift & Company. This ultramechanized plant for mass production is the center of an important local union of the CIO United Packinghouse Workers; its working community comprises 6,000 men and women, Negroes and whites, native and foreign-born. The author, a Jesuit priest, shared the life of the community for a year and a half, and by arrangement with both the UPWA and the Swift Company management interviewed a carefully selected sample of 300 production workers. His questions centered on the allegiance felt toward the two organizations to which they belonged, the company plant and the local union, and the answers showed that nearly everyone was pulled in both directions. Organized along vertical lines in the UPWA, the local had been dominated for a time from the outside by the Communist Party, but in less than four years the members had won back control for themselves. Father Purcell's questions brought out the thoughts and feelings of workers about their work, hopes, fears, ambitions, satisfactions, and needs, and the part played by company and union in all these. The responses are extensively quoted, and have usually been found more interesting than the conclusions drawn. Another recent work of interest for human relations in industry, also based on interviews, is by Charles R. Walker and Robert H. Guest: The Man on the Assembly Line (Cambridge, Harvard University Press, 1952. 180 p.). The authors were attached to the Institute of Human Relations of Yale University, and their research entailed talks with 180 workers on an automobile assembly line. The talks were conducted in the men's homes, with the aim to bring out their attitudes and opinions about their jobs, their relations to fellow workers and supervisors, their working conditions, pay, promotions, and relations to the union. The focus of interest was the effect of assembly-line work, paced and repetitive, on the satisfactions derived from labor.

6056. Smith, Abbot Emerson. Colonists in bondage; white servitude and convict labor in America, 1607–1776. Chapel Hill, Published for the Institute of Early American History and Culture at Williamsburg, Va., by the University of North Carolina Press, 1947. 435 p.

48–5154 HD4875.U5S5

"Bibliographical note": p. 397–417.

6057. Morris, Richard B. Government and labor in early America. New York, Columbia University Press, 1946. xvi, 557 p.

A 46–961 HD8068.M65

Mr. Smith's account of white indentured servants, redemptioners, political prisoners, and convicts in the American colonies is constructed from contemporary records which he studied at length in libraries and archives of the British Isles, the United States, and the West Indies. From the interesting evidence assembled he concludes that more than half, and perhaps two-thirds, of all persons who came to the colonies south of New England were originally servants; that the notorious "spirits" who lured emigrants away from England and Ireland by deceits ranging from lies to kidnapping were winked at by the merchant-traders and the law; that the emigrants included a large proportion of scoundrels for whom the colonies were the last refuge; that, though the servants were often badly treated, there were many reasonable laws for their protection. Whereas modern writers have magnified the virtues of the indentured servants, all contemporaries denounced them as practically worthless. Of the servants, hardly one in ten, the author estimates, established himself as a solid and useful citizen after his term of service ended. "The fundamental human problem in colonization was simply that of adaptation, and the white servants did not come from the most adaptable levels of society." The redemptioners, who often brought families, were more responsible. The laws relating to bond labor are also set forth in the second part of Government and Labor in Early America. The longer first part, after a general glance at the labor population and labor conditions before and during the Revolution, is concerned with free labor. The relationship between government and the artisan and laboring classes is examined as to the regulation of wages; concerted action, political or otherwise, among workers; terms and conditions of employment; and laws regarding maritime labor and the military service. Most of the book deals with the Colonial period, but one chapter is given to the regulation of wages by the States and Congress during the Revolution. The action of politically minded combinations of mechanics and laborers, masters and journeymen—for instance, the merchant-led Sons of Liberty—during and immediately after the Revolution is discussed, and the chapter on military service includes a section on artificers and laborers in the Continental and British armies.

6058. Updegraff, Clarence M., and Whitley P. McCoy. Arbitration of labor disputes. New York, Commerce Clearing House, 1946. 291 p.

46–4335 HD5504.A3U6

In this useful book the authors had the double purpose of providing lawyers with a reference work on the law of arbitration as applied to labor disputes, and of offering a practical guide for the layman who might be called on to arbitrate. They obligingly point out in the foreword the chapters which will be useful for the general reader, and the heavier chapters to be read by the lawyers, with which they group most of the appendixes containing specimen legal forms and a table of cases. The more easily understood chapters include a general introduction discussing the historic background, scope, and types (whether voluntary or compulsory) of arbitration, and the advantages of arbitration or conciliation over litigation in various types of labor controversies; an examination of the selection of arbitrators, with regard to their qualifications, jurisdiction, and compensation; patterns of agreements to arbitrate and of submissions; standard procedure in hearings; and types of cases commonly arbitrated.

XXIX

Constitution and Government

A.	Political Thought	6059–6072
B.	Constitutional History	6073–6089
C.	Constitutional Law	6090–6105
D.	Civil Liberties and Rights	6106–6130
E.	Government: General	6131–6139
F.	The Presidency	6140–6149
G.	Congress	6150–6169
H.	Administration: General	6170–6180
I.	Administration: Special	6181–6194
J.	State Government	6195–6206
K.	Local Government	6207–6218

THIS and the following two chapters aim to offer a representative sample of the literature dealing with the political institutions and practices of the United States. The judiciary, the third semi-independent branch of the government of the United States and of the state governments, and the laws which it interprets and applies, are put off to Chapter XXX. However, most of the general treatises on American government in Section E below, and some of the general works on state government in Section J, have sections on the national or state judiciaries. The personnel and policies of American government are determined principally by the process we call politics, which depends upon elections held according to fixed rules at regular intervals, and is dominated by political parties organized for the purpose of winning the elections. These and related matters are reserved for Chapter XXXI, but again the general works of Section E below have usually a section concerned with what it is fashionable to call the dynamics of government.

The present chapter is concerned with the literature of American government in general, on the national, state, and local levels. It is also concerned with the political thought which has accompanied our practical development, with the constitutions upon which our national and state governments are based, and with the executive and legislative branches of the Federal Government. Historical works in these sections usually begin no earlier than the Federal Convention of 1787, but some go back to 1775, and some, especially in Section A on political thought, to the 17th century. For the most part, however, works on American governments during the Colonial and Revolutionary periods will be found in Sections D and E of Chapter VIII on General History: We may particularly note, from the first, numbers 3182, 3192, 3195, 3220, and 3221, and from the second, numbers 3242, 3245, 3253, 3256, and 3259.

Section A on political thought represents a subject which was very little studied before 1920, but which has proved increasingly rewarding as it has been more intensively cultivated. The literature has now grown to a point where can be included several examples of general surveys, books of readings, period histories, and treatments of particular topics and tendencies. Constitutional history, the subject of Section B, was of far earlier cultivation, although most of the earlier specimens seem today excessively abstract and formal. It derives its peculiar character from the fact that, beginning in 1776, state and nation committed their constitutional rules to paper for all to read, and made alterations in them more difficult and more solemn than an ordinary act of the legislature. This did not, however, eliminate the necessity for application and interpretation, in which the last word is spoken by the courts and particularly by the Supreme Court of the United States. Thus has developed the elaborate field of constitutional law, the subject of Section C; in it, however, many landmarks of long standing have been swept away by developments since the famous Supreme Court crisis of 1937. Works on particular clauses of the Constitution, however historical in approach, have been entered here rather than in Section B. Most of the civil liberties and rights enjoyed by Americans are based upon the particular wordings of their constitutions, and are therefore made the subject of Section D. Most of the works there entered have arisen out of the conflict between traditional rights and new security measures since the end of the last war, and there has seemed to be little point in trying to minimize their inevitably controversial tone. The general works on American government in Section E will be found to be mostly designed for college courses, and this points to an undesirable but undeniable situation: there are comparatively few books on our government designed for the general reader, and even fewer good ones. Most of the works on the Presidency in Section F emphasize the increasingly crucial nature of the office, and the well-nigh impossible demands it makes upon the man who has to fill it. The books in Section G on the Congress are remarkably varied in character, but they do not begin to exhaust its aspects, historical or contemporary. Sections G and H present another major study of our day which hardly predates the 1920's: the systematic study of public administration, both in its general principles and its Federal manifestations. The literature is already copious, and can only be sampled here; but is doubtless only a fraction of what it is destined to become. Concerning the works on State and local governments in the last two sections, we shall say only that we have had to rely on too large a proportion of titles published before America's entry into World War II. Since 1941 the study of grassroots government has been overshadowed by national and international affairs.

A. Political Thought

6059. Carpenter, Jesse T. The South as a conscious minority, 1789–1861; a study in political thought. New York, New York University Press, 1930. 315 p. 30–30930 F213.C29

"A selection of materials consulted": p. [261]–297.

This Harvard dissertation studies the political thinking of the ante-bellum South which, the author believes, consciously sought protection within the Union from the political power of the Northern majority. Dr. Carpenter conceives of his subject as democracy's greatest and most challenging problem—the relation of numerical majority rule to effective minority protection. He takes the position that the Southern States, united by economic and social bonds, considered themselves a distinct nationality, a separate and different people. He regards the South as having borne an excessive portion of the burdens of the Federal government, while the North was receiving a disproportionate share of the benefits, and as evolving in self-protection a political philosophy of effective minority defense in government. He finds that four major sources of minority protection were in turn relied upon: the principle of local self-government, advanced and defended from the establishment of the Federal government in 1789 to the adoption of the Missouri Compromise in 1820; the principle of the "concurrent voice," relied upon chiefly during the 1820's 1830's, and 1840's; the principle of constitutional guarantees, depended upon from the admission of California in 1850 to the election of Abraham Lincoln in 1860; and, finally, the principle of Southern independence, resorted to after Lincoln's election.

6060. Coker, Francis W., ed. Democracy, liberty, and property; readings in the American political tradition. New York, Macmillan, 1942. xv, 881 p. 42–14710 JK11 1942a

The purpose of this collection is to indicate the main contours of the American political tradition by means of excerpts from a variety of sources—essays, addresses, public documents, revolutionary pronouncements, and formal treatises. The selections have been chosen to represent the classic American discussions concerning the problem of locating political control, the lines to be drawn between governmental authority and individual liberty, the nature and limits of property rights, and the problem of political change. The time span covered is more than 300 years (1630–1941). Professor Coker points out that the major steps toward a liberal democracy were not taken until after the close of the Colonial period. The principal trend has been toward a more general acceptance of the ideal values of democratic government—freedom of opinion, equality before the courts, and freedom of economic enterprise. The editor notes divergences of opinion about these ideals, as well as some downright repudiations of them.

6061. Ekirch, Arthur A. The decline of American liberalism. New York, Longmans, Green, 1955. 401 p. 55–11447 E183.E4

A history of American liberalism which identifies it with the classical philosophical values of the 18th-century Enlightenment, and especially with individual liberty and decentralized government. Professor Ekirch equates the decline of these concepts with the trend, since the American Revolution, toward ever greater political, economic, and social centralization and concentration of control. He views the rise and fall of the liberal tradition in the United States as a succession of crises and an overall decline. The rising Colonial and Revolutionary liberalism was tempered by a conservative reaction after the war. Exemplified partly by Jeffersonian and Jacksonian democrary, a reviving liberalism was smothered by the Civil War and reconstruction. Although the author finds evidence of a liberal recovery early in the 20th century, he consider progressivism in the United States to have been delusive, the reaction after World War I disastrous, and the liberal retreat since World War II nothing less than a rout. He offers no smallest comfort to liberals in this somber book; he sees, rather, the further decline of liberalism "clearly outlined against the future's darkening horizon," and the end of an era of individual and social freedom. A less rigid definition of liberalism, permitting a more hopeful view of the future, could be conceived.

6062. Grimes, Alan P. American political thought. New York, Holt, 1955. 500 p. 55–6047 JA84.U5G7

A history which sets forth the thesis that, in the main, American political thought draws upon ideas that are neither American in origin nor even explicitly political in concept, and to a great extent consists of articulations and modifications by Americans of European political thought. Thus Puritan political thinking derived mainly from Calvinism. American thought of the Revolutionary period stemmed primarily from John Locke. In the author's opinion, late 19th-century liberalism was an offshoot of the theories of John Stuart Mill and the classical economists. Social Darwinism obviously came from England and, for a time, conditioned political thinking here. More recently, the thought of John Maynard Keynes has inspired American economic and political theory and practices. As Mr. Grimes points out, however, American political thought has always employed prevailing theories relevant and applicable to American conditions. Jefferson, for example, used Locke but in respect to a particular situation which imparted to Jeffersonian thinking a quality of its own. Similarly, John Adams reinterpreted Blackstone in the light of his own views of the past and of the American environment. Where American political thinking has been most original, as in the controversies over slavery and the nature of the Union, it has still been relevant to situations peculiar to America.

6063. Hartz, Louis. The liberal tradition in America; an interpretation of American political thought since the Revolution. New York, Harcourt, Brace, 1955. 329 p. 55–5242 E175.9.H37

A learned if somewhat impressionistic interpretation of the American world conceived as "a liberal society, lacking feudalism and therefore socialism and governed by an irrational Lockianism." That society, in the author's view, has been a triumph for the liberal idea, an ideological victory helped forward by the magnificent material setting of the New World, in which the laborer has not felt tied to his situation for life. America, "born free," did not have a feudal structure to destroy, and so developed not a self-conscious proletariat but a victorious middle class. In Dr. Hartz's estimation, this circumstance shattered would-be elites such as the Virginia aristocrats of 1785, the Federalist party, and the reactionaries of the Old South. The Whigs of 1840 transformed the egalitarian thunder of the Democrats, retaining Hamilton's grandiose capitalist dream but combining with it the Jeffersonian concept of equal opportunity. Thus arose a dynamic and competitive social outlook which united the two great traditions of the American liberal community. Even the capitalistic collapse of 1929–33 gave rise, not to a new birth of Marxism, but to a movement within the liberal framework, "which sought to extend the sphere of the State and at the same time retain the basic principles of Locke and Bentham." The uniqueness of the American experience proves, however, a serious disability for the exercise of world leadership, since we cannot understand the necessities of societies which were not born free, and continue to find the alien unduly alarming.

6064. Lewis, Edward R. A history of American political thought from the Civil War to the World War. New York, Macmillan, 1937. 561 p. 37–4045 JA84.U5L4

"References" at end of each chapter.

"Table of cases": p. 537–541.

A survey of the period between the end of the Civil War and America's entry into World War I, which aims at "a consideration of the entire stream of our political thought and not merely the classical and somewhat technical subjects of the theory of the state and of sovereignty." Since this stream "did not flow from the contributions of a few great leaders of thought, but has been made by the contributions of many persons and influences," the author has drawn upon the utterances of public men, judicial decisions, and party platforms as well as the writings of reformers and academic theorists. Among the subjects separately treated are the Civil War Amendments, "The Power of the Courts over Legislation" and the development of opposition to this power, "The Nature and Source of Law," "The Theory of Political Action," "Conservatism," "Socialistic Thought," "The Struggle for Political Control," and "The Tests of Political Action." Mr. Lewis expounds his authorities with great objectivity, but from time to time states his own moderate and balanced opinions, carefully labeling them as such. He does not, for example, concede that the Progressive movement was a failure because it did not anticipate the problems of a later age. It was able "to achieve an equilibrium for the moment, to adjust the conflict of interest and desires of the time, so that there [was] no explosion," which is all that any program can do.

6065. Mason, Alpheus Thomas, ed. Free government in the making; readings in American political thought. 2d ed. New York, Oxford University Press, 1956. 896 p.

56–5765 JK11 1956.M35

First published in 1949.

In order to portray the meaning and significance of the American political tradition, this book samples the ideas and words of the men who helped form it. The 22 chapters, arranged in chronological order, are drawn largely from primary sources, beginning with the writings of such 17th-century English and American political thinkers as John Locke and Roger Williams, continuing with 18th- and 19th-century leaders like Benjamin Franklin, Alexander Hamilton, Thomas Jefferson, Andrew Jackson, and Salmon P. Chase, and concluding with recent utterances by such persons as Franklin D. Roosevelt, Herbert Hoover, and Adlai E. Stevenson. Earlier portions of the book are concerned with the Revolutionary ferment, the establishment of national power, and the extension of the base of popular power. Nineteenth- and twentieth-century individualism, romanticism, liberalism, and dissent are represented by the works of such writers as Emerson, Whitman, Finley Peter Dunne, Edward Bellamy, Brooks Adams, and Russell Davenport. Introductory essays provide historical background for the readings, which "exhibit our best minds in action—opposing, discussing, deliberating, compromising, deciding, building institutions of government." The volume attempts to display divergent views, the issues at stake, and the weight, form, and flavor of the argument.

6066. Merriam, Charles Edward. American political ideas; studies in the development of American political thought, 1865–1917. New York, Macmillan, 1929. 481 p.

30–31103 JA84.U5M5 1929

First published in 1920.

A pioneer study of some of the chief tendencies of American political ideas since the Civil War, which shows them in their relation to each other and to the social and economic conditions out of which they grew. The late Professor Merriam of the University of Chicago looked for the theories as best expressed, whether in political institutions, laws, judicial decisions, administration, or customs; in the utterances of statesmen, publicists, or the leaders of causes; or in the formal statements of systematic philosophers. He regarded them all as parts of the progressive adaptation of democratic ideas to new social and economic conditions. Among the most significant tendencies of the period, he concluded, were the steady concentration of political and economic institutions, and the socialization of the state. The nation gained in power and prestige as the states sank toward the position of subordinate agencies, and the devotion to local self-government declined. The federal executive emerged with increased prestige, as the legislative suffered from popular confidence in its integrity or competence, and the courts from lack of confidence in their impartiality. Another feature of the period was the abandonment of the doctrine of weak government as a necessary defense of liberty. But it proved far from easy to make the transition to the later doctrine of strong and aggressive government, and meanwhile a mushrooming capitalism was able to escape effective control. "Democratic faith was stronger than democratic works."

6067. Rossiter, Clinton L. Conservatism in America. New York, Knopf, 1955. 326 p.

55–5614 JK31.R58

Bibliography: p. [309]–[327].

Professor Rossiter calls his book "a study of the political theory of American conservatism—of the principles that have governed our conservatives in the past, that appear to govern them in the present, and that ought to govern them in the future." He distingiushes temperamental, possessive, and practical conservatism from "the last and highest kind," philosophical conservatism; and his spectrum of political attitudes reads thus: revolutionary radicalism, radicalism, liberalism, conservatism, standpattism, reaction, and revolutionary reaction. His historical survey proceeds from the Puritan oligarchy to the contemporary "middle group" represented by the late Senator Taft and Presidents Eisenhower and Hoover, and the "conservative intellectuals" such as Peter Viereck and Russell Kirk. The book is essentially an attempt to arrive at a formulation of conservatism viable for intelligent and humane Americans conscious of their heritage. Chapter 6 takes "A Hard Look at American Conservatism," and castigates it for its anti-intellectualism, materialism, and indifference to all social values save the freedom of economic enterprise. Chapter 7 asserts the necessity of "A Conservative Theory for American Democracy," which will build "democratic freedom on the solid foundations of co-operative individualism and balanced pluralism." The final chapter, "A Conservative Program for American Democracy," calls for the creation of a new tradition of public service, a sincere defense of civil liberties at every level, and a concerted effort to redeem the three grievous failures of American democracy: in peaceful world leadership, in justice to the Negro, and in the creation of an authentic popular culture.

6068. Rossiter, Clinton L. Seedtime of the Republic; the origin of the American tradition of political liberty. New York, Harcourt, Brace, 1953. xiv, 558 p. 53-5647 JK31.R6

"This book is a study of the political ideas that sustained the rise of liberty in Colonial and Revolutionary America." The leaders of the Revolution, Dr. Rossiter maintains, held, not a doctrine hastily improvised to justify resistance, but rather a noble philosophy that was the product of generations of colonial experience. Part 1 describes the total environment—government. religion, economy, social structure, and intellectual life—of the thirteen Colonies as one favorable to the rise of liberty, and the "factors of freedom" most influential in creating such an environment. Part 2, the core of the book, presents the lives and philosophies of six representative political thinkers of the Colonial period: Thomas Hooker, Roger Williams, John Wise, Jonathan Mayhew, Richard Bland, and Benjamin Franklin. Part 3 analyzes the political thinking of the pre-Revolutionary decade on the rights of man and the pattern of government, which produced no masterwork but was remarkably consistent. In conclusion, the author sums up the guiding faith of the Revolutionists in 11 major tenets. "The political theory of the American Revolution—a theory of ethical, ordered liberty—remains the political tradition of the American people."

6069. Spitz, David. Patterns of anti-democratic thought; an analysis and a criticism, with special reference to the American political mind in recent times. New York, Macmillan, 1949. 304 p. 49-8944 JC481.S65

This Columbia University dissertation is an inquiry into the nature and validity of the arguments leveled against democracy. It posits that the democratic state contains at least two central ingredients which set it apart from all other forms of the state: the free play of conflicting opinions and the constitutional responsibility of the rulers to the ruled. Majority rule, moreover, always fluctuating, temporary, and never fixed, is a necessity of the democratic state, together with free and unhampered minorities. Conversely, the doctrines of antidemocratic thought are viewed here as simply those ideas which deny the possibility or challenge the desirability of democracy. Typical, in recent American thought, of the former are James Burnham's theory of the ruling class as organizational necessity and Lawrence Dennis' theory of the ruling class as a conspiracy of power. Among the doctrines which reject the democratic state as undesirable in its operations and consequences, Dr. Spitz places Ralph Adams Cram's theory of the irrationality and incompetence of the average man, Madison Grant's theory of Nordic racial aristocracy, Edward M. Sait's concept of biological aristocracy, George Santayana's theory of natural aristocracy, and the restrictive authoritarianism of Irving Babbitt. The author refutes each in detail and finds democracy, with its conjunction of order and freedom, alone wholly commendable.

6070. Wilson, Francis Graham. The American political mind; a textbook in political theory. New York, McGraw-Hill, 1949. 506 p. (McGraw-Hill series in political science) 49-8235 JA84.U5W5.

A history of American political ideas from the first English settlements to the atomic era, which emphasizes their close dependence upon the general current of national history. What is fundamental and persistent "in this evolving, fragmentary, conflicting, and changing body of political philosophy that makes up the American mind," and what is superficial and ephemeral, depends upon the interpreter's conception of destiny, his sense of "a predominance in history." Professor Wilson from time to time emphasizes that the conservative case has been as important in the making of the American tradition as its opposite. American liberalism, he believes, took form as a conflict between the Southern agrarians and the Hamiltonian capitalists, and its maturity "was the clarification of this conflict." Without the debate over slavery, "it is hardly possible that the sense of national unity, of the mission of American democracy to the rest of the world, could have been shaped." A chapter on "The Emergence of Modern Conservatism" views it as the counterpart of the industrial revolution which followed the Civil War and created a "new economic aristocracy." Two final chapters, on World War II and its aftermath, indicate that all shades of American opinion are committed to the maintenance of democracy, and that "part of the old and traditional will inevitably remain in the changing democracy of tomorrow." Each chapter is followed by a very useful "Selected Bibliography."

6071. Wiltse, Charles Maurice. The Jeffersonian tradition in American democracy. Chapel Hill, University of North Carolina Press, 1935. 273 p. 36–27502 JC176.J45W48

A study of the political ideas of Thomas Jefferson which assumes that they form a fairly complete and coherent system. Dr. Wiltse has attempted a logical reconstruction of Jefferson's "most mature position" about the fundamental problems of government, basing it upon the mass of Jefferson's writings and public utterances. In the author's opinion, although the Jeffersonian state has passed into history, Jefferson's influence has been one of the most enduring in our national life because, as leader of a school of political thought, he stood for liberalism, for humanitarianism, for freedom, for the welfare of "abstract man," all of which concepts have been transmitted through him into the democratic tradition. Dr. Wiltse views him as preeminently a practical thinker, whose theory of the state was centered in practical solutions to concrete problems, yet who nevertheless drew upon a conscious intellectual heritage. Jefferson's political philosophy is seen to rest upon two basic ethical assumptions—that the end of life is individual happiness and that the purpose of the state is to secure and increase such happiness. It has therefore left to American democracy a dual tradition, on the one hand of democratic individualism, as exemplified by John Taylor, Calhoun, Jackson, and Lincoln. On the other hand, it has given rise to a tradition of social democracy, exemplified by Henry George, the Populists, the Progressives, and the New Deal. "The times may stress now one and now the other, but in historical perspective the two have advanced and will advance together."

6072. Wright, Benjamin Fletcher. American interpretations of natural law; a study in the history of political thought. Cambridge, Harvard University Press, 1931. 360 p. (Harvard political studies) 31–30867 JA84.U5W67

Professor Wright analyzes briefly the various meanings attached to the concept of natural law, evaluates its place in political theory, discusses the writings of certain of the makers of American constitutional law, and surveys illustrative judicial opinions. He traces the few 17th-century American interpretations of natural law directly to the theological-political conceptions of medieval times and of the Reformation. In the century preceding the Civil War, when political speculation was most active in America, the idea of natural law was used in defense of the most diverse causes, and played a part of some importance in most of the controversial and systematic political theories; it was of scarcely less importance in the development of written constitutions. The individual rights phase of natural law received its classic expression in the Declaration of Independence. In the slavery controversy, natural law was the principal theoretical weapon of both sides—the antislavery forces discoursing of the rights of men, the proslavery of the natural laws which ordain inequality. Both a speculative concept and a controversial weapon, the idea of natural law was generally discarded after the Civil War even when not explicitly repudiated.

B. Constitutional History

6073. Boyd, Julian P. The Declaration of Independence; the evolution of the text as shown in facsimiles of various drafts by its author, Thomas Jefferson. Princeton, Princeton University Press, 1945. 46 p. A 45–1832 JK128.B66

Revised edition of the author's contribution to a brochure issued in 1943 by the Library of Congress as a part of the bicentennial celebration of the birth of Thomas Jefferson.

A 46-page textual analysis of the various drafts of the Declaration of Independence showing the genesis and evolution of this state paper, together with 32 pages of facsimiles. These latter, not altogether legible, reproduce all of the known drafts of the Declaration in Jefferson's hand, as well as other documents closely related to the official printed version, which appears here as it was first inserted in the "Rough Journal" of Congress. As Dr. Boyd points out, Jefferson was almost sole author in the sense of phraseology, the contributor of clear and felicitous prose, but this "great apologia of the American Revolution" was formed from many sources, and was, indeed, as Jefferson himself termed it, "an expression of the American mind." What Dr. Boyd finds new in the Declaration is that "here, for the first time, a political society formally declared the purpose of the state, enumerated some of man's natural rights, and affirmed the right of revolution." As prepared by Jefferson and adopted by Congress, the Declaration was a philosophical justification of independence; its author acted as his country's advocate before the tribunal of world opinion.

6074. Dumbauld, Edward. The Declaration of Independence and what it means today. Norman, University of Oklahoma Press, 1950. 194 p. illus.

Bibliography: p. 171–189. 50–9691 JK128.D8

An analysis of the Declaration of Independence, passage by passage, providing a commentary upon the political philosophy propounded in it and upon the historical background of ideas and events against which it was written. An introduction discusses briefly the drafting, revising, and adoption of the Declaration, as well as the three official texts of the document. The commentary supplies precedents for the theoretical portions of the Declaration; for instance, it traces the famous phrase, "all Men are created equal," to Euripides, Ulpian, Milton, Locke, Pufendorf, and Vattel, and notes that "more disposed to suffer" is actually a verbal echo of Locke's Treatises of Government. It is particularly useful in explaining the 28 charges against King George III which form so large a part of the document and are the least self-explanatory to modern readers. Thus the charge, "He has made Judges dependent on his Will alone, for the Tenure of their Offices," is illuminated by the attempts of six colonies during the 1750's and 1760's to give their judges tenure during good behavior, all defeated by the royal disallowance or other prerogative acts. Differing from critics of the Declaration such as Rufus Choate, who in 1856 spoke of its "glittering and sounding generalities," and George Santayana, who in 1945 called it "a salad of illusions," Dr. Dumbauld emphasizes the permanent value of its philosophy of government as a man-made device for promoting human welfare—the servant, not the master, of the people.

6075. The Federalist. The Federalist; a commentary on the Constitution of the United States, being a collection of essays written in support of the Constitution agreed upon September 17, 1787, by the Federal Convention, from the original text of Alexander Hamilton, John Jay [and] James Madison, with an introd. by Edward Mead Earle. New York, Modern Library, 1941. xlv, 618 p. (The Modern Library of the world's best books [139]) 41–51534 JK154 1941 Written to advocate the adoption of the Constitution, these 85 newspaper essays, which first appeared in book form in 1788, are generally considered the most important American contribution to the literature of political science. Together, they form an exposition of the ideas dominant in the political philosophy of the 18th-century Whigs on the means of securing both civil liberty and efficient government, on the principles of federal government, and on the balance of power in such a government among the executive, legislative, and judicial branches, and between the Federal and State governments. This series of essays, setting forth the political needs of the country as well as the principles of the new Constitution, was planned by Hamilton in an effort to persuade the citizenry of New York, a crucial but doubtful State in the matter of ratification. For this purpose he enlisted the aid of Madison and Jay. Hamilton interpreted the needs of the country, the powers of the executive, and the functions of the judiciary. Madison explained the legislative branch of the proposed government, and Jay the conduct of foreign relations. The authorship of a number of the essays is still uncertain, as between Hamilton and Madison. In the forefront of those concerned with the initiation, formulation, and adoption of the Constitution, both were superbly endowed to elucidate it.

6076. Holcombe, Arthur N. Our more perfect union; from eighteenth-century principles to twentieth-century practice. Cambridge, Harvard University Press, 1950. 460 p. 50–9371 JK31.H7

An intensive historical analysis of the American experiment in self-government. Professor Holcombe first examines the principles of the framers of the Constitution, and then interprets and evaluates those principles in terms of contemporary politics and the conditions of the modern world. He affirms his belief that the postulates of 1787, as they have come to be applied in American politics, are sound, and are valid not only for Americans, but for peoples everywhere who feel the need for better political order in the world. In the author's opinion, however, the Constitution is still an unfinished experiment, the principles of which require further extension if the United States is to maintain a satisfactory position in international affairs. The creators of the American republic, he concludes, were aware of the proneness of the holders of power to its abuse. To protect the governed, the framers of the Constitution adopted a system of checks and balances that has worked remarkably well. Two instrumentalities, the separation of powers among the three coordinate branches of government, and the division of power between Federal and State agencies, they incorporated in the Constitution. The third, unforeseen by the founders, the normal operation of a bipartisan system in politics, has made for moderation.

6077. Kelly, Alfred H., and Winfred A. Harbison. The American Constitution, its origins and development. Rev. ed. New York, Norton, 1955. 1037 p. 55-1422 JK31.K4 1955

"Selected readings": p. 949-978.

A massive constitutional history designed for the "average undergraduate student or general reader," orginally published in 1948. The narrative begins with the period 1607-1789, covering the whole Colonial era, the Revolution, and achievement of national unity under the Articles of Confederation and the Constitution, when the principal institutions and ideas of the American constitutional system were developed. It continues through the second period, 1789-1865, when the Federal government was established under the Constitution, and the Confederacy's attempt to destroy the Union was defeated. Finally, the authors survey the third great epoch in American history, the years from 1865 to the present. Most of its constitutional problems have arisen, they indicate, from successive attempts to adjust the constitutional system to the requirements of modern urban industrial society. Professors Kelly and Harbison find one great theme running through all three centuries of American history: the government of laws, not men.

6078. McLaughlin, Andrew C. A constitutional history of the United States. New York, Appleton-Century, 1936. 833 p. 37-3529 JK31.M25 1936a

First published in 1935.

A history of the development of American constitutional principles beginning in 1754 with the Albany Plan of union, which marked the beginning of an effort to single out what should be turned over to a central government or agency of central administration. In the discussion of the years 1754-87, the purpose has been to dwell upon the emergence of the constitutional system, but some attention has been paid to the transformation of the Colonies into self-governing commonwealths and to the principles upon which State constitutions were established. Professor McLaughlin attributes two major creative achievements to this Revolutionary era: the establishment of limited government and the founding of the Federal state. Yet, he finds, the nature of the union, the position of the States, and the authority of the Supreme Court were still matters of dispute in the 1820's. By the 1830's, however, the Court under the leadership of John Marshall had attained a position of judicial authority, and Jackson as national leader of the people had established a "new presidency." The controversy over the constitutional structure of the union was, of course, only resolved by civil war. The last subject treated in detail is the interpretation of the 14th Amendment; the continuation from 1876 to the 1930's is only a sketch (p. 760-794). American history, the author believes, "is the history of a people entering upon the great adventure of popular government and marching forward with a considerable degree of achievement." Professor McLaughlin (1861-1946), who taught at the University of Chicago from 1906 to 1929 and served for many years as an editor of The American Historical Review, produced other works of distinction in this and related fields. Among them are: Lewis Cass (Boston, Houghton Mifflin, 1891. 363 p. American statesmen [v. 24]); The Courts, the Constitution and Parties (Chicago, University of Chicago Press, 1912. 299 p.); and Steps in the Development of American Democracy (New York, Abingdon Press, 1920. 210 p.).

6079. McLaughlin, Andrew C. The foundations of American constitutionalism. New York, New York University Press, 1932. 176 p. (New York University. Stokes Foundation. Anson G. Phelps lectureship on early American history) 33-3303 JK268.M25

A collection of six lectures, which aim to trace briefly the historical origins of some of the basic principles of the American constitutional system. Professor McLaughlin has deliberately emphasized here the influence of New England religious and economic practices and doctrines in the background of the Federal Convention of 1787. These he finds rooted in the creed enunciated by the Puritan Separatists in the late 16th and early 17th centuries: the doctrine of individual liberty and the theory and fact of compact and covenant. This creed, he believes, the Pilgrim Fathers not only asserted but, in simple fashion, rendered concrete He stresses the further fact that the Pilgrims were forced to act cooperatively, and at first entirely as a community, because of their joint-stock arrangement with London merchants. They thus combined business and religion, the church and the corporation, the covenant and the joint-stock agreement. In this duality Professor McLaughlin discovers the "essence of the theory of democracy, as a system of government, and the center of free constitutionalism."

6080. New York (State) Constitutional Convention Committee. Constitutions of the states and United States. [Albany, J. B. Lyon Co.] 1938. 1845 p. (Its [Reports, v. 3])
38–28224 JK3425 1938.A32

A compilation of the complete texts of the constitutions of the 48 States and of the United States, prepared under the direction of Charles Poletti, chairman of the New York State Constitutional Convention Committee, for use by members of the New York State Constitutional Convention of 1938. As published here, the constitutions contain all provisions in force on January 1, 1938. All clauses of the original documents and all amendments are given in full unless they have been repealed. Editorial insertions are indicated by brackets. In his introduction, Mr. Poletti observes that the wealth of constitutional experience presented in this volume may suggest desirable provisions, but may also indicate the dangers inherent in certain clauses. Particularly, he warns against the inclusion of certain types of detailed provision in the basic law, pointing to the regular amendment and reamendment of such clauses, and the danger of turning what should be a fundamental law into a welter of conflicting and overlapping provisions and of breaking down the distinction between a constitution and statute law. Comparison between the average State constitution and that of the United States, he notes, reveals the superior judgment of those who drafted the basic law of the Nation.

6081. Randall, James G. Constitutional problems under Lincoln. Rev. ed. Urbana, University of Illinois Press, 1951. xxxiii, 596 p.
51–1577 JK201.R3 1951

Bibliography: p. 531–563.

A study of the constitutional problems which the Civil War thrust upon the Lincoln administration. Professor Randall regards secession as an extraconstitutional matter. To him, the most practical and serious question of 1860–61 was not the constitutionality of secession but the wisdom and desirability of it. He discusses such problems as the consistency of war powers, both presidential and congressional, with the Constitution, as well as the validity of numerous war measures—the Emancipation Proclamation, the creation of special war courts, the confiscation of property, the creation of special war crimes—and congressional approval of many executive acts which bordered on legislation, notably, of course, Lincoln's suspension of the privilege of habeas corpus. He notes the double nature of the conflict, as both war and rebellion, the existence of the Confederate States as a de facto government with belligerent standing, and, under Lincoln's moderating influence, the reluctance of the Federal government to prosecute for treason. In Professor Randall's opinion, Lincoln went farther than any other President in assuming executive power independently of Congress; the judiciary played a passive rather than an active part in the emergency; but the Constitution, "while stretched, was not subverted."

6082. Read, Conyers, ed. The Constitution reconsidered. New York, Columbia University Press, 1938. xviii, 424 p. 38–39088 JK271.R33

A collection of 27 papers read before a meeting of the American Historical Association at Philadelphia in 1937 to mark the sesquicentennial of the United States Constitution. Organized in three groups, the essays consider the background of political, economic, and social ideas which determined the thinking of the Constitutional Convention and found expression in its work; analyze some portions of the Constitution itself; and study its influence both upon American and upon foreign political thought and action. The consensus is that the Constitution has been successfully adjusted to later times, new problems, and fresh currents of opinion; it has provided a framework for living usages, and a flexible pattern for an economic order, a political state, and a nascent culture. The Constitution is seen as a deliberate and rational effort to shape the world of social relations to humane ends by devising a mechanism of government able to guarantee life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness. Among the writers included are Charles A. Beard, Henry Steele Commager, Robert M. McIver, and Herbert W. Schneider.

6083. Sanders, Jennings B. Evolution of executive departments of the Continental Congress, 1774–1789. Chapel Hill, University of North Carolina Press, 1935. 213 p 35–3939 JK411.S32

Bibliography: p. [193]–203.

A study of how the executive agencies of the Continental Congress developed, how they functioned separately and in cooperation, and how they and the choice of their personnel were affected by congressional politics. Part 1 deals with the period to 1781, during which Congress gradually abandoned the attempt to exercise executive functions exclusively through its own members. Action by the whole body or by special committee was soon supplanted by a system of standing committees for permanent concerns such as war or treasury administration. But this overburdened the abler members and left legislation to the less gifted. The expedient of boards, partly of members of Congress and partly of nonmembers, or of nonmembers subject to a committee of members, was resorted to, without much improvement. Part 2 describes the general reorganization of 1781 whereby three major departments, for finance, war, and foreign affairs, were set up under individual nonmember administrators. When Robert Morris resigned under fire in 1784 he was replaced by a board of three nonmember Treasury commissioners. Chapters concerning the Post Office, 1775–89, and the Secretary of Congress, 1774–89, appear in this part because both were operations headed by individual nonmembers from the beginning. Much of the procedure and personnel of these departments was carried over into the departments set up under the Constitution. Dr. Sanders' book is drier than need be, but indispensable as the only detailed treatment of a very important subject. He had previously described The Presidency of the Continental Congress, 1774–89, 2d printing, rev. (Chicago, 1930. 76 p.); it was chiefly of formal and ceremonial importance and had next to nothing in common with the executive presidency after 1789, with which it has sometimes been mistakenly linked.

6084. Swisher, Carl Brent, American constitutional development. 2d ed. Boston, Houghton Mifflin, 1954. 1145 p.
54–2606 JK31.S9 1954

First published in 1943.

A history which takes the position that the Constitution of the 1950's is much further from the Constitution of the 1870's than was the latter from the Constitution as originally applied. The author therefore devotes approximately half of this volume to an account of American constitutional development in the 20th century. He attempts to show not merely the nature and scope of the Constitution during particular periods, but also the causes of changes and the manner in which they were accomplished. The judiciary, Congress, and the executive branch of the Government, the author believes, have all played important parts, both positively and negatively, in these developments. Accordingly, he has made ample use of congressional debate and maneuver, and of Supreme Court decisions, which often mark "the periphery of permitted constitutional expansion." Among the Presidents who played negative parts or who sought to restrain contemporary constitutional expansion he lists Van Buren, Buchanan, Benjamin Harrison, and Coolidge. Jefferson, Jackson, Lincoln, Wilson, and Franklin D. Roosevelt, who enlarged the powers of their office, he regards as "makers of the Constitution" in a very real sense.

6085. Swisher, Carl Brent. The growth of constitutional power in the United States. Chicago, University of Chicago Press, 1946. 261 p. ([Chicago. University. Charles R. Walgreen Foundation for the Study of American Institutions. Lectures])
A 46–543 JK34.S93

An examination of the American constitutional system which devotes particular scrutiny to the changes induced by war, depression, and the development of mass-production industrialism. Although Professor Swisher is interested primarily in fairly recent events and in the current status of our constitutional system, he makes some use of early history when conditions and climates of opinion differed greatly from those of the present, and demonstrates the shift in ideology from the theories of Edmund Burke and Adam Smith, Alexander Hamilton and Thomas Jefferson, to those of Herbert Hoover and Wendell Willkie, Henry Wallace and Franklin D. Roosevelt. He believes that the Constitution, besides establishing areas of immunity from government control, embodies the spirit of "rightness"—the judges have always interpreted it not only as requiring right procedure but as incorporating the basic moral principles of the period—and has been kept righteous by the infusion of new concepts of rightness as they have matured in the national community. Professor Swisher considers more sweeping operation of government controls inevitable under mass-production industralism, but remains untroubled about the increasing centralization of power in the Federal government, since he finds a variety of checks still standing as barriers to the misuse of power.

6086. Thorpe, Francis Newton, comp. The Federal and state constitutions, colonial charters, and other organic laws of the states, territories, and colonies now or heretofore forming the United States of America. Compiled and edited under the Act of Congress of June 30, 1906. Washington, Govt. Print. Off., 1909. 7 v. (59th Cong., 2d sess. House. Document 357)
9–35371 JK18 1909

List of authorities: v. 1, p. xv–xxxv.

Save for an initial group of Federal documents and commissions, charters, and plans of union, 1492–1754, the materials of this indispensable official compilation are arranged alphabetically by state or territory. Arrangement under the alphabetical headings is chronological. Cetrain acts of Congress and treaties with other nations governing territories acquired by annexation, cession, or conquest are also printed in full. Explanatory footnotes are provided, and an index to the whole appears in volume 7. Here, as in no other work, is contained the whole American experiment with government limited by fundamental law, and the extraordinary variety of means that have been employed to achieve essentially identical ends.

6087. U. S. Constitutional Convention, 1787. The records of the Federal Convention of 1787; edited by Max Farrand. Rev. ed. New Haven, Yale University Press, 1937. 4 v.

37–25324 JK141 1937a

A collection of all available records—previously unpublished, scattered through various printed volumes, or issued in unsatisfactory form, before the first edition of this work (1911)—of the convention which framed the American Constitution at Philadelphia in 1787. The editor's primary aim was to establish and to present his material "in the most trustworthy form possible." All records of each day's session are gathered together, affording maximum convenience for their collation. Cross-references to the more important subjects and an exhaustive general index (v. 4: p. 127–230) take the place of subject headings. A special index (v. 4: p. 107–123) provides, in addition, references enabling one to trace the origin and evolution of every clause adopted. Although the journal of the Convention, kept in the form of minutes by William Jackson, and Madison's notes of the debates are the most important documents published here, other notes and memoranda are included such as those of Robert Yates of New York, Rufus King of Massachusetts, James McHenry of Maryland, William Pierce of Georgia, William Paterson of New Jersey, and Alexander Hamilton. Volumes 1 and 2 contain the proceedings of the Convention. In volume 3 are printed the texts of supplementary records, the Virginia, Pinckney, New Jersey, and Hamilton Plans, and all significant references to the Convention in the letters and other writings of the 55 delegates, of whatever date. In the 1937 revision the three volumes of the original edition are reprinted with only minor corrections, while the additional volume 4 contains "Further Additions and Corrections" (p. 11–89) and the two indexes, greatly improved over those in the original volume 3. The only considerable source that has turned up since 1937 is the notebook of John Lansing, edited by Joseph Reese Strayer under the title The Delegate from New York (Princeton,, Princeton University Press, 1939. 125 p.). It differs little from the well-known notes of Lansing's colleague Robert Yates.

6088. Van Doren, Carl C. The great rehearsal; the story of the making and ratifying of the Constitution of the United States. New York, Viking Press, 1948. 336 p. illus.

48–657 JK146.V3 1948a

"Sources and acknowledgments": p. 321–322.

A history of the framing and ratification of the Constitution of the United States during 1787 and 1788, based mainly upon the original records of the Federal Convention in 1787, and of the State conventions which ratified or rejected the Constitution. Dr. Van Doren has also made expert use of the contemporary press, and of the diaries, letters, and other memorabilia of the principal figures. His method of letting them speak in their own words, of presenting the argument in action, brings alive the great personalities and the complex issues of a crucial moment in American history, when a league of jealous and sovereign States was boldly converted into the Federal government. Both Washington and Franklin, as well as many lesser men, came to the Convention persuaded that the American experiment in self-government could not survive without major changes in its structure. The decisive step in the Convention was "The Federal Compromise" agreed to on July 3: the stalemate between the large and the small States was broken by the solution, anticipated by Roger Sherman but moved by Franklin, of representing States in the lower house in proportion to their population, and giving them equal votes in the Senate. The title and the preface suggest the analogy between the States of the Confederation in 1787 and the sovereign states of the United Nations in 1948, but it is not pursued in the text.

6089. Warren, Charles. Congress, the Constitution, and the Supreme Court. New rev. and enl. ed. Boston, Little, Brown, 1935. 346 p.

35–24270 JK31.W3 1935

First published in 1925

A history which deals with the United States Supreme Court in its relation to acts of Congress, specifically, with the Court's authority to determine when Congress has overstepped the bounds set for it by the Constitution, and to curb attempts by Congress to alter or amend the Constitution. Mr. Warren also presents the views of early Congresses upon the principle of judicial review, a brief description of each case in which the Court had, by 1935, held an act of Congress unconstitutional, and a review of the Court's cases particularly affecting labor, whether or not they were decided on constitutional grounds. Arguing that there had been slight need for changes in these powers of the Court, the author attacks various proposals made to abolish or impair them. The Court, he affirms, in its decisions declaring acts of Congress invalid, has dealt with statutes whose constitutional defects were later remedied by properly drawn legislation or by constitutional amendment, or with cases that involved rights of citizens, States, or other components of the Federal government—rights of extreme importance to maintain, and which would have been abrogated had Congress had the power to set aside the Constitution.

C. Constitutional Law

6090. Association of American Law Schools. Selected essays on constitutional law, compiled and edited by a committee of the Association of American Law Schools. Chicago, Foundation Press, 1938. 5 v. in 4. 38–29140 JK268.A75

A collection of approximately 300 papers by more than 170 professors of law, judges, practicing lawyers, and political scientists reprinted from law reviews and other legal periodicals, bar association reports, political science journals, and, in a few instances, from books out of print or not readily accessible. In selecting the essays, the editorial group headed by Douglas B. Maggs, assisted by several hundred scholars and lawyers, considered the needs especially of judges and practicing lawyers, students and teachers in law schools, and students and teachers in political science departments. The articles and notes published here collect and collate decisions, trace the development of doctrine, and examine critically both decisions and doctrines; many project what their authors believed to be tendencies and trends. Material was sought on all Federal constitutional questions litigable in the courts. Constitutional questions not litigable, constitutional questions in the field of international law, and problems of State constitutional law were disregarded. Book 1, "The Nature of the Judicial Process in Constitutional Cases," includes historical studies deemed of permanent importance and broad treatments of basic ideas. Book 2, "Limitations of Governmental Power," deals with restrictions held to result from the constitutional guarantees of personal and property rights. Book 3, "The Nation and the States," "weighs the constitutional questions which grow out of the federal nature of our governmental system." Books 4 and 5 examine, respectively, the constitutional aspects of "Administration" and "Taxation." Each book carries its own table of contents, its own table of cases, and a subject index, while Book 1 has in addition some bibliographical aids. Caveat: Book 5 is in volume 1; otherwise book and volume numbers coincide.

6091. Cooley, Thomas M. A treatise on the constitutional limitations which rest upon the legislative power of the states of the American union. 8th ed., with large additions, considerations of amendments, and giving the results of the recent cases, by Walter Carrington. Boston, Little, Brown, 1927. 2 v. (cciii, 1565 p.) 27–9874 JK241.C77 1927

"List of cases cited": p. xxiii–cxcv.

Characterized by lucidity of style and organization, this classic work, first published in 1868, is still valuable to the student of constitutional problems. Its purpose was to present such an explication of constitutional principles as should serve, together with its references to judicial decisions, legal treatises, and historical events, as a guide to the study of the powers denied to the States under the Constitution. Although the volume was thus based upon authority and precedent, and its stated aim was to demonstrate the law rather than the views of the author, it was not without a philosophy of jurisprudence or of the social order. Admittedly, Judge Cooley of the Michigan Supreme Court wrote in full sympathy with the restraints imposed upon the exercise of the powers of government, and with faith both in the checks and balances of the republican system and in public opinion. His chapters on the protection of personal liberty and property were exceptionally strong and have been highly influential. In the eighth edition, cognizance was taken of the vast industrial and social changes which had occurred since publication of the seventh in 1903, and some new text was added. Reports of important and pertinent cases were brought forward to June 1, 1926.

6092. Corwin, Edward S. The Constitution and what it means today. [12th ed.] Princeton, Princeton University Press, 1958. 344 p. 58–34767 Law

"Table of cases": p. 311–337.

This edition of a standard work first published in This edition of a standard work first published in 1920 brings decisions of the Supreme Court, which constitute its principal substance, forward approximately to 1958. Explanations of currently prevailing doctrine and practice are accompanied by brief summaries of their historical development. Among the important matters considered are judicial review, the commerce clause, the executive power, the war power, national supremacy, and freedom of speech, the press, and religion. The book shows how powerful and pervasive the doctrine of national supremacy has become since the "Constitutional Revolution" of 1937, when the Court returned to Chief Justice Marshall's concepts. The constantly augmented flow of discretionary power to the President in an era of crisis is noted with the comment that "a vacuum is all that Judicial Review has to offer in such a situation." Judicial review is, nevertheless, regarded here as taking on increasingly "the character of a species of arbitration between competing social interests rather than of adjudication in the strict sense of the term, namely, the determination of the rights of adverse parties under a settled, statable rule of law." The author offers crisp comments upon the "censorship of quite indefinite scope" exercised by the Court, and upon such recent topics as the desegregation cases, the tactics of the Governor of Arkansas, Presidential disability, and the Vice President's status and duty in this event.

6093. Corwin, Edward S. A constitution of powers in a secular state; three lectures on the William H. White Foundation at the University of Virginia, April 1950, and an additional chapter. Charlottesville, Va., Michie, 1951. 126 p.
51–62174 JK303.C65

An analysis of the judicial translation of the power requirements of national crisis—two world wars, the Great Depression, and a fundamentally altered outlook upon the purpose of government—into the vocabulary of constitutional law. "In general terms," says Professor Corwin, "our system has lost resiliency and what was once vaunted as a Constitution of Rights, both State and private, has been replaced by a Constitution of Powers. More specifically, the Federal System has shifted base in the direction of a consolidated national power, while within the National Government itself an increased flow of power in the direction of the President has ensued." This consolidation has been registered in our constitutional law, he believes, through the changed attitude of the Supreme Court, which has in recent years asserted canons favorable to a strongly centralized government of indefinite rather than enumerated powers. "Presidential autocracy" has become the dominant element in our constitutional system. As remedies, Professor Corwin suggests basing public policy on the related ideas of consensus, compromise, and moderation, keeping legislation a still available procedure of government in the meeting of crisis conditions, and reconstructing the Cabinet chiefly from the membership of Congress.

6094. Corwin, Edward S. Liberty against government; the rise, flowering and decline of a famous juridical concept. Baton Rouge, Louisiana State University Press, 1948. 210 p.
48–8664 JC599.U5C66

Constitutional liberty exists if government itself operates under constitutional restraints when it seeks to impose restraints upon the people, and juridical liberty is the kind of constitutional liberty which results from the specialized type of checks and balances known as judicial review. Chapter 2 deals with the Roman and English precedents for this American development, and particularly with the ideas of John Locke, who transmuted the law of nature into the rights of men, and these into the rights of ownership. These were developed by the early American bench and bar into the doctrine of vested rights, which maintained that existing property rights were superior to reform legislation, and reached the apogee in the 1830's. Since the Civil War the history of juridical liberty has been bound up with the due process clause of the 14th Amendment. The Supreme Court was long in realizing its potentialities, but finally in the 1890's it followed the leaders of the American Bar in reading it as an endorsement of economic laissez-faire, "trimmed down to the doctrine of freedom of contract in the field of industrial relations." By this time, as an endorsement of "the prerogative of great corporations in dealing with unorganized workingmen," it had become an anachronism, and fell an easy victim to the constitutional revolution of the 1930's. The author makes clear his regret that "liberty" and "equality" have come to appear as opposed values, and that so great a tradition has had so unworthy an end.

6095. Fenn, Percy Thomas. The development of the Constitution. New York, Appleton-Century, 1948 xix, 733 p. 48–1113 JK268.F4

A casebook for undergraduate students, composed of the doctrines and dicta of the judges of the Supreme Court, excerpted from their decisions or dissenting opinions. It emphasizes the nature of the judicial power, the policy-making functions of high courts in general and of the Supreme Court in particular, and the evolution of constitutional jurisprudence. Parts 1 and 2 isolate and examine the controlling principles of constitutional law. Emphasis is here placed upon the establishment by the Court of the power to invalidate legislative enactments and upon the due process clause of the 14th Amendment. Parts 3 and 4 analyze two great governmental powers: the taxing power and the power to regulate commerce. "The former implements the whole federal system; the latter provides the basis for the national power." Part 5 abandons the topical order so as to deal unitarily with the great cases of the New Deal, but includes some earlier ones in which the Court reviewed federal protection of the general welfare. Professor Fenn places the essentials of the working constitutional system of the country in the fields of due process, taxation, and commerce. "On the exercise of the judicial power in these fields," says he, "the Court bases its supervision of the policies of government." Introductions precede most of the chapters and more or less elaborate notes follow a number of the cases. Unfortunately the only index furnished is a listing of the cases selected.

677676 O–63–62

6096. Frankfurter, Felix. The commerce clause under Marshall, Taney and Waite. Chapel Hill, University of North Carolina Press, 1937. 114 p. (The Weil lectures on American citizenship [1936]) 37–888 HF1455.F7

Three short essays, originally delivered as lectures at the University of North Carolina in 1936, which analyze the direction given to the law of the commerce clause of the Constitution by Chief Justices Marshall, Taney, and Waite, who held office, save for an 11-year break, from 1801 to 1888. He traces the ideas "which they drew out of the commerce clause as the means for limiting state powers in their inroads upon national policy, whether found in the commerce clause itself or expressed in Congressional legislation." All three Chief Justices were preoccupied with the restrictive rather than the affirmative use of the clause empowering Congress "To regulate Commerce with foreign Nations and among the several States, and with the Indian Tribes." The doctrine, first outlined by Marshall, that the commerce clause, by its own force and without national legislation, authorizes the Court to place limits upon state jurisdiction, attained equilibrium in Waite's period. Thereafter the issues concerned application rather than the doctrine itself. Justice Frankfurter places Taney second only to Marshall in our constitutional history, and Waite, though "not of their flight," in the great tradition.

6097. Mott, Rodney Loomer. Due process of law; a historical and analytical treatise of the principles and methods followed by the courts in the application of the concept of the "law of the land." Indianapolis, Bobbs-Merrill, 1926. lxxxi, 702 p. 26–13490 Law

This elaborately theoretical book, which originated as a University of Wisconsin dissertation, traces "the origin and development, as well as the application, of those principles which the courts have developed as part of the concept of due process of law." It occurs in the Constitution, as the requirement that no person shall be deprived of "life, liberty, or property without due process of law," in the 5th and 14th Amendments. The study first reviews the background literature of the Anglo-American tradition of resistance to the exercise of arbitrary power, beginning with "the law of the land" (lex terrae) in the 39th section of Magna Carta, and including the declarations of rights drawn up by the States in their constitutions of the Revolutionary period. Dr. Mott points out that "the simplest and most far-reaching of constitutional phrases" first appeared in the 5th Amendment (1791), which applies only to Federal action. This limitation, together with a desire to protect the loyal citizens and freedmen of the South after Appomattox, led Congress to propose the 14th Amendment (1868), which applies only to the States. Although the courts have greatly broadened the scope of due process and applied it with increasing frequency, they have steadily upheld the concept of the balance of convenience between private rights and public welfare. At the heart of the decisions, rendered chiefly in the spheres of taxation and the police power, have been the principles of "administrative convenience, balance of convenience, or public purpose."

6098. Orfield, Lester Bernhardt. The amending of the Federal Constitution. Ann Arbor, University of Michigan Press, 1942. xxvii, 242 p. (Michigan legal studies) 4 2–36735 JK168.O7

Bibliography: p. [223]–233.

A collection of articles, reprinted for the most part from law journals, which survey from various angles the process of constitutional amendment as developed during the first 150 years of the nation's existence, and which quote many judicial and other official opinions concerning Article Five of the Constitution, which provides for amendments. The book enters the field of constitutional law in its analysis of the genesis, justiciability, and scope of the amending power, and the procedure of amendment. From jurisprudence is drawn the discussion of the relation of the amending power to the concept of sovereignty. The reform of the amending process itself is investigated from the standpoint of political science and legislation. Professor Orfield comments upon the frequently repeated doctrine of the Supreme Court that the people are sovereign, that they adopted the Constitution and may alter it. Before they can correctly be called sovereign, he believes, the Constitution must be amended "so as to permit a majority of the electorate of the entire country to amend the Constitution." The federal principle could be preserved by requiring a majority of the voters in each State, or at least in each of a majority of States. The present arrangement, whereby "the people do not participate in a single stage of the amending process," he regards as an anachronistic survival of the 18th-century distrust of democracy.

6099. Rottschaefer, Henry. The Constitution and socio-economic change; five lectures delivered at the University of Michigan, March 24, 25, 26, 27, and 28, 1947. Ann Arbor, University of Michigan

Law School, 1948 [i.e. 1949] xvi, 253 p. (Michigan. University. Law School. The Thomas M. Cooley lectures, 1st ser.) 49–2548 Law

The chief purpose of this book is "not only to describe and analyze the process by which constitutional adaptation occurred during the crisis induced by the most severe economic depression of modern times, but also to develop the implications of the constitutional theories and doctrines that constitute the constitutional law of today." Although these lectures trace the prior evolution of the constitutional principles invoked by the Supreme Court in support of its decisions affecting depression legislation, for the most part they survey actions taken during the years 1933–48. In this period the Court so construed the Constitution as to sustain a great expansion of Federal power, the relaxation of important limitations on State powers, more extensive and intensive regulation of business, and an increased protection of personal liberty in areas other than business. The real question, in the opinion of the author (1948), was not whether there would be a general retreat from these positions, but how much further the trends were likely to be carried. "The dogma," he wrote, "that government should assume an important and permanent role in achieving economic stability and a more just social order is not likely to be discarded."

6100. Story, Joseph. Commentaries on the Constitution of the United States: with a preliminary review of the constitutional history of the colonies and states before the adoption of the Constitution. 5th ed., by Melville M. Bigelow. Boston, Little, Brown, 1891. 2 v.
2–7028 JK211.S7 1891

"Cases cited": p. [xxi]–xxxiv.

A legal classic of continuing importance and reputation first published in 1833 by Joseph Story (1779–1845), Associate Justice of the United States Supreme Court from 1811. Most of the materials were drawn from the discussions of the Constitution in The Federalist (no. 6074), and Chief Justice Marshall's judgments on constitutional issues. The author disclaimed any ambition to interpret the theory of the Constitution himself, but rather sought to set forth "the true view of its powers, maintained by its founders and friends, and confirmed and illustrated by the actual practice of the government." As originally conceived by Story, his Commentaries had three large divisions. The first sketched the charters, constitutional history, and ante-Revolutionary jurisprudence of the colonies, the principles common to all, and the diversities among them. The second reviewed the constitutional history of the Revolutionary states, and the rise, progress, and decline of the Confederation. The third narrated the origins and adoption of the Constitution and explained all of its provisions, the principles on which they were founded, and the objections with which they had been assailed. Editors of subsequent editions have added references to amendments and adjudications down to January 1891, including a number of decisions from the lower Federal courts and from State courts as well as the Supreme Court, together with some other public papers.

6101. Twiss, Benjamin R. Lawyers and the Constitution; how laissez faire came to the Supreme Court. Princeton, Princeton University Press, 1942. 271 p. 42–19388 JK271.T9

The author's dissertation (Princeton University, 1938), the origin of the present work, was being enlarged and revised at the time of his regrettably early death. The manuscript was prepared for publication by Professor Edward S. Corwin. Its controversial purpose was to "analyze the vital function of the bar as liaison between businessmen and judges, and to show how protests against government interference with private enterprise were translated into formal constitutional limitations." Dr. Twiss aimed to show that the development of American constitutional law during the period 1875–1935 was primarily the work of a relatively small group of lawyers whose clients were great financial and business concerns. These members of the bar sought to insulate the judges from any theories or facts save those consistent with their own doctrines of individualism, laissez faire, and limited government power. The lawyers and the judges brought together the "American political philosophy of government limited by absolute fundamental rights, the theory of non-interference with self-regulating economic laws, and the legal and constitutional devices of property, contract, states rights, and judicial review to form the American constitutional doctrine of freedom of private enterprise. That doctrine flourished in the Supreme Court until the Revolution of 1937." The author found in the law schools and the law-school journals, however, an awakening skepticism toward this judicial doctrine. And in upholding the National Labor Relations Act, he believed, the Supreme Court had "finally recognized that there can be a danger to liberty from private sources as well as from government."

6102. U. S. Constitution. The Constitution of the United States of America. Analysis and interpretation; annotations of cases decided by the Supreme Court of the United States to June 30, 1952. Prepared by the Legislative Reference Service, Library of Congress, Edward S. Corwin, editor. Washington, U. S. Govt. Print. Off., 1953. xxxiv, 1361 p. (82d Cong., 2d sess. Senate. Document no. 170) 53–63530 Law

A revised edition of a publication produced under the same auspices in 1938 and more simply titled The Constitution of the United States (Annotated). It is a large-scale commentary on the Constitution as interpreted and applied by the Supreme Court, and it proceeds through the document and its first 21 Amendments in the most minute manner, section by section, and, for the more complex sections, clause by clause. Thus Article I, Section 1, requires just two and a half lines of print, but it is followed by 15 pages of commentary, organized under 3 main headings and 21 subordinate ones. For all provisions of the Constitution it gives "the currently operative meaning," but for the most important ones it also traces "the course of decision and practice whereby their meaning was arrived at by the Court's official interpreters." Supreme Court decisions are the major source for the commentary, but they are supplemented by acts of Congress, executive orders and regulations, the proceedings of the 1787 Convention, dissenting opinions, and legal or historical treatises. In Dr. Corwin's view, the Constitution's capacity for growth has resided far more in the Supreme Court's power of judicial review than in the process of amendment. He therefore gives special attention to certain broader doctrines, especially of the nature of the Federal system and the relation of governmental power to private rights, which have influenced the Court and concerning which it has on occasion changed its mind. His "Introduction" (p. ix–xxxi) is particularly concerned with such doctrines. The commentary is followed by a list of the 73 acts of Congress which the Court has held unconstitutional in whole or part (p. 1241–1253), a massive alphabetical "Table of Cases" (p. 1257–1333), and an "Index" (p. 1337–1361), which is less detailed because of the elaborate tables of contents that, in the commentary, precede each Article and each Amendment.

6103. Weaver, Samuel P. Constitutional law and its administration. Chicago, Callaghan, 1946. xxxvii, 684 p. 46–6268 JK268.W4

A 1-volume textbook intended for colleges, universities, and law schools which do not use the casebook system of education, or as a supplement to the many casebooks available, and as a handbook for lawyers and others who desire a better understanding of the Constitution and its application to modern conditions. Briefly considered are: the fundamental law of 1787; the 21 Amendments in force in 1946; statutes implementing this law; decisions of the courts interpreting and construing it; and the established customs and usages of the Federal government, as well as certain inherent powers. The book traces the evolution of the fundamental law of 1787 into an "Enlarged Constitution," and the development of a new federalism. Emphasis is placed upon the recent recognition of new powers supported by new doctrines. This process of change has included "the overruling of precedents upon the subject of taxation, and precedents defining many of the limitations and guarantees of individual rights; the expansion of the war powers of the President; the increase of the powers of the Chief Executive; the enlargement of the economic powers of the Federal Government"; the creation of many new administrative boards and commissions; and the recently evolved doctrine of inherent powers of the Federal Government in external and foreign affairs. A final part analyzes the three major powers remaining to the States: the police power, the power of taxation, and eminent domain. The author provides many quotations from opinions and statutes, but considers that casebook method in the field has become too unwieldy.

6104. Willoughby, Westel Woodbury. The constitutional law of the United States. 2d ed. New York, Baker, Voorhis, 1929. 3 v. (lxvii, 2002 p.) 29–13658 JK268.W6 1929

First published in 1910.

"Table of cases" prepared by Leon Sachs: v. 1, p. xix–lxvii.

A systematically arranged and, as of 1929, complete exposition of the constitutional law of the United States, whose purpose is "to ascertain and to discuss critically the broad principles upon which have been founded the decisions rendered by the Supreme Court of the United States in the leading cases, and thus to present, as a systematic whole, a statement of the underlying doctrines by which our complex system of constitutional jurisprudence is governed." This work sets forth the processes of judicial reasoning by which they have been established, suggests corollaries that may be drawn from them, and indicates the relations which they bear to each other and to the more general doctrines of American public law. Extensive quotation is made from the language of the Supreme Court. By an examination of the statutes of Congress, Professor Willoughby has attempted to show the increase of Federal regulation and the manner in which the Federal government exercises the constitutional powers vested in it. Among the principal subjects dealt with are: the division of powers between the United States and the states, Federal supremacy and its maintenance, citizenship and naturalization, Federal powers of taxation, the powers of Congress, regulation of commerce, the Federal judiciary, the powers and duties of the President, the separation of powers, and due process of law.

6105. Wright, Benjamin Fletcher. The contract clause of the Constitution. Cambridge, Harvard University Press, 1938. xvii, 287 p.
39–4050 JK371.C6W7

"Cases cited": p. [261]–277.

A study of the nature and the significance for American constitutional and economic history of Article I, Section 10, Clause 1, of the Constitution, which forbids the States to pass laws impairing the obligation of contracts. The author accepts Dr. Corwin's view that the doctrine of vested property rights has, from the beginning, been the basic doctrine of American constitutional law, and adds that, so far as the Supreme Court was concerned, during the 19th century this doctrine was identified with the contract clause. His book is based upon all of the contract clause cases (about 500) brought before the Court, and while the leading decisions are emphasized, the lesser ones are treated in bulk for their economic significance. He considers that the limited, relatively specific meaning which the clause bore in 1787 was developed by judicial expansion into one far more inclusive and of much greater economic significance by 1835 or 1864, but he thinks that this expansion fitted in remarkably well with the democratic sentiment of the times. The important interpretations—that the clause includes contracts to which a State is a party, that a corporate charter is a contract, that it protects a contract for tax exemption, and that it prohibits retrospective bankruptcy or stay laws—were laid down while the Court was headed by Marshall and Taney (1801–64). After 1890 the contract clause was overshadowed by the due process of law clauses in the Court's mediation between property rights and public requirements.

D. Civil Liberties and Rights

6106. American Academy of Political and Social Science, Philadelphia. Civil rights in America, edited by Robert K. Carr. Philadelphia, 1951. 238 p. (Its Annals, v. 275)
58–4188 H1.A4, v. 275 JC599.U5A323

These 19 articles provide a summation of the mid-20th-century status of American civil liberties. The conscious and deliberate attempt to give practical meaning to the specific guaranties of the Bill of Rights has found expression chiefly in Supreme Court decisions handed down since 1920. These decisions, especially those concerning freedom of speech and press, have placed the States under Federal judicial discipline in areas within which the States have been the main offenders. The Supreme Court has also defined and protected religious liberty. The Civil Rights Division of the Department of Justice, set up as a section in 1939, has devoted itself to enforcement of the peonage laws, the laws protecting citizens in their right to vote for Federal officers, and laws punishing such crimes as police brutality or official participation in lynchings. Beginning with New York in 1945, some States have enacted antidiscriminatory legislation—fair employment practice laws, fair educational practice laws, prohibitions of discrimination in places of public accommodation. A number of private organizations operate primarily in the field of civil liberties and rights, among them the American Civil Liberties Union, the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, and the American Jewish Congress. This is all taken here as evidence of progress in "social engineering." On the debit side, however, are listed private discrimination against the American Negro and other minority groups, rigid local censorship of books, magazines, and motion pictures, and, most serious, the threats posed to civil liberty by unwisely chosen and operated policies and procedures for combating communism.

6107. Brown, Ralph Sharp. Loyalty and security; employment tests in the United States. New Haven, Yale University Press, 1958. xvii, 524 p. (Yale Law School studies, 3)
58–6536 HF5549.5.R44B7

"The purpose of this book is first to explore and synthesize our disorderly growth of loyalty and security measures, and then to suggest ways of correcting or eliminating their apparent excesses." It surveys the standards, procedures, and effects of nearly every kind of employment test used as an internal security technique in the United States. Among them are the administrative arrangements of of the Federal government for dealing with its employees, with military personnel, and with defense contractors' employees, the various State and local test oaths and administrative programs, and tests administered by private employers and labor unions. These tests are actually "concerned with disloyalty, and essentially with one form of disloyalty: a preference for communism," or, put another way, "a treasonable state of mind that may lead to a treason-able act." Professor Brown examines the justification for loyalty and security tests and makes recommendations for restricting them to "the limited circumstances in which political employment tests are necessary and defensible." Loyalty and security tests have been practiced, he believes, with too much rigor and too little humanity, and have needlessly impaired the freedoms of belief, speech, and association protected by the First Amendment.

6108. Chafee, Zechariah. The blessings of liberty. Philadelphia, Lippincott, 1956. 350 p.
56-6563 JC599.U5C48

The late Professor Chafee (1885–1957) taught at the Harvard Law School for 40 years, and was esteemed as one of the most disinterested defenders of American civil liberties. In the present volume he collected his addresses and articles of 1944–56 on the subject. The third paper reviews freedom of speech and of the press since 1917, postulating a period of struggle and criminal prosecutions, 1917–20; a period of growth, 1920–30; a period of achievement, 1930–45; and a recent period of renewed struggle and subtle suppressions. The first essay, "Watchman, What of the Night?", lists 11 encroachments upon liberty which have taken place since 1945; asserts that the present trends, if continued into an indefinite future, will produce "more indirect and subtle suppressions of liberty"; but expresses confidence that the American people will bring about a major reversal in the near future. Other papers discuss the McCarran Act (the Subversive Activities Control Act of 1950) in relation to the Bill of Rights; the proposed loyalty oath of the American Bar Association; "The Right not to Speak" under the Fifth Amendment; and the diverse forms of attack upon academic freedom. Professor Chafee's last thought was: "The blessings of liberty, though weakened, are ours if we want them, to hold and make strong. The flag still flies, and the city is not yet fallen."

6109. Chafee, Zechariah. Free speech in the United States. Cambridge, Harvard University Press, 1946. xviii, 634 p.
48-3488 JC591.C52 1946

"Bibliographical note": p. [569]–571.

A synthesis of all of Professor Chafee's ideas on freedom of speech, and a discussion of the major court decisions upon it, mainly from 1920 to March 31, 1941. A number of the chapters are reprinted, some revised and some not, from other publications. "This book is an inquiry into the proper limitations upon freedom of speech," states the author, "and is in no way an argument that any one should be allowed to say whatever he wants anywhere and at any time." More specifically, he examines the nature and scope of the First Amendment to the Constitution. Its framers, he believes, sought to preserve the earlier victory abolishing censorship, and to win a new one by abolishing prosecutions for sedition. "The true boundary line of the First Amendment," he writes, "can be fixed only when Congress and the courts realize that the principle on which speech is classified as lawful or unlawful involves the balancing against each other of two very important social interests, in public safety and in the search for truth." In his opinion, every reasonable attempt should be made to maintain both interests unimpaired. The great public interest in free speech should be sacrificed to censorship or punishment only when it really imperils the public safety by direct and dangerous interference.

6110. Cornell University. Cornell studies in civil liberties. Robert E. Cushman, advisory editor. Ithaca, Cornell University Press, 1946–57. 15 v.

A group of 15 studies (nos. 6111–6125) concerning civil liberty and security made under the general direction of Professor Robert E. Cushman of Cornell University and supported chiefly by a grant from the Rockefeller Foundation. Beginning in 1948 a number of scholars, working independently under Professor Cushman, began investigation of the impact upon our civil liberties of current government programs designed to ensure internal security and to expose and control disloyal or subversive conduct. The seven reports issuing from this particular research, one edited and one written by Walter Gellhorn, and one each by Edward L. Barrett, Jr., Vern Countryman, Lawrence H. Chamberlain, Robert K. Carr, and Eleanor Bontecou, cover the work of Federal and State un-American activities committees and the operation of Federal, State, and local loyalty and security programs. Stimulus for these inquiries was presumably furnished by President Truman's Loyalty Order of 1947, which forms the hard core of the program to assure the loyalty of Federal employees, although it was preceded by less far-reaching measures and has since been supplemented in important ways.

6111. Barrett, Edward L. The Tenney Committee; legislative investigation of subversive activities in California. Ithaca, 1951. 400 p.
51-11118 HX91.C3A5 1949ac

Covers the work of the "Little Dies Committee" of the California State Senate, which employed the doctrine of association to identify Communists and their sympathizers, and sought to punish them by publicity and other means during the period 1941–49.

6112. Bontecou, Eleanor. The Federal loyalty-security program. Ithaca, 1953. 377 p. 53–10749 JK734.B6

Appendixes (p. 272–366): 1. Executive orders.—2. Statutes and regulations relating to the employment, dismissal, and investigation of employees of the executive branch of the Federal government.—3. Extracts from exhibits accompanying report of the President's Temporary Commission on Employee Loyalty.—4. The training of investigators.—5. Sample rules and regulations.—6. The Attorney General's list.—7. Listing of subversive organizations.

An objective study, copiously documented, which relates the development of the loyalty-security program to the work of the Dies Committee in the late 1930's, and to subsequent piecemeal efforts to deal with suspected subversives in Federal employment through the Civil Service Commission and the Federal Bureau of Investigation. The mechanics of adjudicating charges of disloyalty and security risk under the full formal program initiated in 1947 are dealt with, as are problems arising from the investigative process, and the techniques and standards of judgment involved.

6113. Carr, Robert K. Federal protection of civil rights; quest for a sword. Ithaca, 1947. 284 p. 48–5117 JC599.U5C35

An analysis of the work of the Civil Rights Section (now Division) of the United States Department of Justice, which was established in 1939 to pursue a course of "aggressive protection of fundamental rights inherent in a free people." Chapter 1 notes that although the function of the Constitution in protecting civil rights against interference by government is in general that of a shield, some provisions can serve as a sword. In some instances, the Federal government can take positive measures to safeguard civil liberties by prosecuting State and local officials, or private individuals who infringe them. Chapters 1–4 deal with the Civil Rights Section's early efforts to discover, clarify, use, and develop the existing Federal law of civil liberty, both constitutional and statutory, most of which was vague, inadequate, and dating from the Reconstruction period. Chapters 5–6 outline the development of administrative techniques and legal strategy by the Section and classify the kinds of cases handled by it, such as police brutality, election irregularities, peonage, freedom of communications, and conflicts between labor and management. A final chapter discusses as of 1947 "The Sword and the Future."

6114. Carr, Robert K. The House Committee on Un-American Activities, 1945–1950. Ithaca, 1952. 489 p. 52–14423 E743.5.C3

"List of publications of the House Committee on Un-American Activities": p. 464–469.

A history of the first six years of the Committee's existence after its establishment as a permanent agency of Congress by "one of the most remarkable procedural coups in Congressional history." Two of its more celebrated episodes were the hearings on the Hollywood writers and the Hiss-Chambers controversy. Sober and reflective in its review of the Committee's activities, this inquiry concludes with the comment: "On balance the good things the . . . Committee has done are outweighed by the bad," and the suggestion that its work be handled by other standing committees of Congress.

6115. Chamberlain, Lawrence H. Loyalty and legislative action; a survey of activity by the New York State Legislature, 1919–1949. Ithaca, 1951. 254 p. 51–14490 JC599.U52N52

A detailed and carefully documented examination of the Lusk, McNaboe, and Rapp-Coudert investigations of disloyalty, and of associated events and consequences, including dismissals of teachers by the Board of Higher Education of New York City.

6116. Countryman, Vern. Un-American activities in the State of Washington; the work of the Canwell Committee. Ithaca, 1951. 405 p. 51–14732 HX91.W3C6

An appraisal as well as a thoroughly documented report of the work during 1947–50 of the Joint Legislative Fact-Finding Committee on Un-American Activities in the State of Washington and of the University of Washington's Committee on Tenure and Academic Freedom. Both groups attempted to determine whether certain "radical" professors were academically incompetent, or were guilty of deliberately seeking to undermine the foundations of the republic and therefore of the abuse of academic freedom.

6117. Cushman, Robert E. Civil liberties in the United States; a guide to current problems and experience. Ithaca, 1956. 248 p. 56–13957 JC599.U5C82

"Selected readings" at end of chapters.

A comprehensive outline of the practice which obtained in the whole field of civil liberties during the decade following World War II. Professor Cushman, an authority on the subject and advisory editor of the series, has sought to do three things: to indicate the status of each civil liberty at the close of the war; to summarize the principal developments which occurred regarding each in the period covered; and to point out the unsolved problems, together with some of the more important proposals for dealing with them. Venturing neither opinion nor solution but admitting to a bias in favor of the protection of civil liberty, he presents his material under nine headings: "Freedom of Speech, Press, Assembly, and Petition"; "Academic Freedom"; "Freedom of Religion: Separation of Church and State"; "The Right to Security and Freedom of the Person"; "Military Power and Civil Liberty"; "The Civil Liberties of Persons Accused of Crime"; "Civil Liberties and National Security"; "Civil Liberties of Aliens"; and "Racial Discrimination."

6118. Gellhorn, Walter. Security, loyalty, and science. Ithaca, 1950. 300 p.
50–14649 UB270.G42

An examination of Federal government and university actions regarding security of technical information and the loyalty of scientists, which concludes that national policies on secrecy in scientific matters were, as of 1950, intelligently formulated but too rigidly applied, and were hindering the advance of scientific knowledge.

6119. Gellhorn, Walter ed. The states and subversion. Ithaca, 1952. 454 p.
52–10508 Law

Condensed reports by seven contributors on legislation and other official actions of States and municipalities to control subversion, which indicates that by 1952 the States had departed from the idea of guilt as personal to the accused. There was a widespread admission of the doctrine of guilt by association in both legislation and investigations. The reports on California, New York, and Washington receive book-length treatment elsewhere in the series (nos. 6111, 6115–6116).

6120. Konvitz, Milton R. The alien and the Asiatic in American law. Ithaca, 1946. xiv, 299 p. 47–30101 JX4265.K65

Bibliography: p. 280–283.

Although it draws substance from the decisions of other Federal courts and from State and national law, this is a study primarily "of how the United States Supreme Court has reacted to problems relating to the alien and to the American citizen of Asiatic descent. It is also a study of the past and present legal status of these groups, and an attempt to make a contribution to the field of legal and political sociology." Among the subjects considered are: the right of citizenship, the retention of it, the right of land ownership, work laws, segregation, miscegenation, and the World War II relocation of persons of Japanese extraction, including American citizens. The author is severely critical of the discriminations found in American law.

6121. Konvitz, Milton R. Bill of Rights reader; leading constitutional cases. Ithaca, 1954. xix, 591 p. 54–12758 Law

PARTIAL CONTENTS.—2. The rule of law.—3. Freedom of religion.—4. Freedom of assembly and petition.—5. Freedom of speech and press: some basic principles.—6. Freedom of speech and press: the clear and present danger doctrine.—7. Freedom of speech and press: the problem of loyalty.—8. Freedom of speech and press: censorship and contempt by publication.—9. Personal security.—10. Freedom from race discrimination.—11. Freedom of labor.

Intended for "the average, educated American who is interested in the great issues and the great debates of his day." Of the nearly 80 cases included, all but a few were decided by the Supreme Court. They deal with all provisions incorporating civil and political liberties in the original Constitution and the Civil War Amendments, as well as in the Bill of Rights proper (Amendments 1–10). In order to show some decisions in their context of disagreement and conflict, Professor Konvitz has included concurring and dissenting opinions.

6122. Konvitz, Milton R. Civil rights in immigration. Ithaca, 1953. 216 p.
53–12660 Law

A critique of American immigration policy, more particularly of discrimination enacted into, and hardships and inequities arising under, legislation relating to the admission, exclusion, deportation, and naturalization of immigrants. Dr. Konvitz considers the problems of whom to admit, making special reference to the system of quotas by national origin; of whom to send back to the country of origin, paying special attention to the questions of fair hearings and proper grounds for deportation; and of whom to make citizens.

6123. Konvitz, Milton R. Fundamental liberties of a free people: religion, speech, press, assembly. Ithaca, 1957. 420 p.
57–13950 JC599.U5K6

A topical history of the First Amendment freedoms which argues that they stand in intimate relation to each other, "that freedom of conscience and religion implies freedom of thought and freedom of teaching, and that freedom of speech and press is indispensable to religious beliefs which may be laden with unpopular judgments about the conduct of political and economic affairs in the city of man." Besides these, such others are considered as the freedom not to speak and not to listen, and the right to privacy. In discussing literary freedom, Professor Konvitz distinguishes works of artistic purpose from "dirt for dirt's sake," and pleads for the right of the former to the protection of the First Amendment. He urges public support of the press in its claims to freedom of information. He argues against invasion of the First Amendment freedoms by coercive or restrictive legislation because he regards them as indispensable means to the effective and intelligent operation of the democratic process, essential to the foundations and the security of the republic.

6124. Sibley, Mulford Q., and Philip E. Jacob. Conscription of conscience; the American state and the conscientious objector, 1940–1947. Ithaca, 1952. 580 p. 52–12673 UB342.U5S52

"Selected and annotated bibliography": p. 549–566.

An inquiry into the treatment accorded conscientious objectors in the United States during World War II. It investigates such matters as the classification of objectors, the church-operated Civilian Public Service camps, and the objectors' work in forestry, agriculture, medical research, and hospitals for the insane. It finds little but problems unsolved and failures: the disappointments in religious, educational, and self-government programs; the erosion of morale; economic hardships; and an uneasy partnership between the "Historic Peace Churches" and the Selective Service. Conditions were particularly bad in the government camps, operated primarily for "troublemakers"; here rebellious objectors engaged in slowdowns and other forms of obstruction, and were naturally met by increased repression. Substantial classes of conscientious objectors, such as nonreligious objectors, remained outside the limits of official tolerance, and were given terms in Federal prisons. The authors remark that the "c. o.'s" neither had nor developed any unity of outlook or program, that the measures of restraint adopted proved futile and pernicious, and that "the conflict between conscience and the state" was far from being resolved during World War II.

6125. Smith, James Morton. Freedom's fetters; the Alien and Sedition laws and American civil liberties. Ithaca, 1956. 464 p. 56–2434 E327.S59

See no. 3308.

6126. Emerson, Thomas I., and David Haber, eds. Political and civil rights in the United States; a collection of legal and related materials. Foreword by Robert M. Hutchins. Buffalo, Dennis, 1952. xx, 1209 p. (United States case book series) 52–4386 Law

A comprehensive collection of cases and other materials taken from nearly all areas in which the freedom of American individuals and private groups is of juridical concern. The editors are concerned with the following rights: security of the person from bodily harm, involuntary servitude, and the fear of physical restraint; procedural safeguards for individuals who come into conflict with the law; the right to exercise the franchise; the right of full freedom of political organization and political expression; freedom of all other forms of expression; academic freedom; freedom of religion and the separation of church and state; and, finally, equality of legal status and opportunity for all persons. Professors Emerson and Haber find that a steady expansion and refinement of political and civil rights took place between 1787 and the close of World War II, reaching a peak during the late 1930's and early 1940's, but that between 1945 and 1952 the trend was reversed. This retreat from the practices of democratic freedom the editors attribute to a variety of factors, both internal and external, particularly to the increasing complexity of our industrial society and to the turbulence of world conditions. The retrogression may be temporary, they observe with restrained optimism, since the legal tools for maintaining these rights are significantly improved over those of any past period.

6127. Ernst, Morris L. The first freedom. New York, Macmillan, 1946. xiv, 316 p. 46–1639 JC599.U5E7

"Partial bibliography": p. 272–278.

The "first freedom" is that of communication and thought guaranteed by the Bill of Rights. Although Mr. Ernst believes this country to be remarkably free from that political censorship of the press, radio, and motion pictures which characterizes so many nations under dictatorship, he finds real danger in the rise of "monopolies of the mind." In only 117 cities of America, for example, did competing daily newspapers exist as of 1946; one-third of all regular radio networks were interlocked with newspapers. Thus there had been concentration of control in these "separate" industries, and the firm interlacing of what should be competitive media of communication. The market place of free competition for motion pictures was destroyed through interaction between a combination of the five major companies and the Hays office. The author finds the causes of the concentration economic, the dangers essentially spiritual, menacing "our greatest contribution to the history of mankind." He offers a number of practical suggestions for the restoration of "competition of thought" in the United States. As the greatest proponents of the first freedom, says Mr. Ernst, we "must get our own house in order before we can rightfully assume that place of leadership in the family of nations which our rich tradition warrants." Another New York lawyer, who specialized in rights cases and was for many years national director of the American Civil Liberties Union, was Arthur Garfield Hays (1881–1954). In Let Freedom Ring (New York, Liveright Pub. Corp., 1937. 475 p.), originally published in 1928 and enlarged nine years later, he gave witty but earnest accounts of cases in which he had been concerned as counsel for the Union over a 15-year period.

6128. Kelly, Alfred H., ed. Foundations of freedom in the American Constitution. New York, Harper, 1958. xviii, 299 p.
58–7976 Law

Bibliography: p. 251–257.

PARTIAL CONTENTS.—Introduction, by J. B. Oakes.—What liberty means to free men, T. V. Smith.—Where constitutional liberty came from, by A. H. Kelly.—The great liberty: freedom of speech and press, by Z. Chafee.—Constitutional liberty and the communist problem, by J. W. Peltason.—Constitutional liberty and congressional investigations, by R. K. Carr.—Constitutional liberty and loyalty programs, by A. F. Westin.

Six essays on constitutional liberty, prepared originally as pamphlets for the Freedom Agenda program of the Carrie Chapman Catt Memorial Fund in 1954–56. This program was designed to combat the nationwide sense of fear, suspicion, and hostility aroused by the tensions and frustrations of the world situation and by sensational charges of widespread communist infiltration into government and the professions. Affirmatively, the plan was designed to promote a greater awareness of the meaning of the Bill of Rights and all our constitutional guaranties, a greater relaxation in our attitude toward nonconformity, and a greater appreciation of the basic values of liberty, freedom, and individual liberty. The last three papers have been extensively rewritten, and demonstrate the great improvement in the state of American civil liberty which has been brought about since 1954 by the healthy correctives of politics, law, public opinion, and, especially, the decisions rendered by the Supreme Court. The reaction described in these essays forms strong testimony to the continued vitality of the ideal of constitutional liberty in the United States.

6129. Konvitz, Milton R. The Constitution and civil rights. New York, Columbia University Press, 1947. 254 p. A 47–1116 JK1726.K6

A discussion of the legal aspects of Federal and State legislation for the protection of the civil rights of minorities in the United States. Civil rights in their limited and technical sense refer "to the rights of persons to employment, and to accommodations in hotels, restaurants, common carriers, and other places of public accommodation and resort," as enumerated in the Federal Civil Rights Act of 1875 and in various acts against discrimination on the statute books of 18 States. The author noted that in 30 American States, as of 1946, no civil rights legislation had been enacted, and that, as the Constitution and statutes had been construed by the Supreme Court, the scope of the Federal civil rights acts was extremely narrow. He analyzed significant Supreme Court decisions on racial discrimination from the Civil Rights Cases of 1883 to the Screws Case of 1945. He discussed the extent of Federal authority in cases of lynching and of discrimination in employment. The final chapter glanced hastily at the large body of laws which, in 20 States, imposed discrimination or segregation, and at the even larger body of local custom behind it. Appendixes give samples of proposed Federal laws and of existing State ones. The book is now chiefly useful as a background for the debates and sweeping changes of the past decade.

6130. Stouffer, Samuel A. Communism, conformity, and civil liberties; a cross-section of the nation speaks its mind. Garden City, N.Y., Doubleday, 1955. 278 p. illus.
55–7160 JC599.U5S82

"Notes on materials from other surveys as related to the findings in this volume": p. 274–278.

An analysis and interpretation of American attitudes toward "the communist conspiracy" both inside and outside the country, and toward those "who in thwarting the conspiracy would sacrifice some of the very liberties which the enemy would destroy." The study is based upon field work done in 1954 among more than 6,000 men and women from all walks of life by interviewers from the American Institute of Public Opinion and the National Opinion Research Center. The general conclusion reached is that great social, economic, and technological forces are slowly, even imperceptibly, spreading tolerance and respect "for others whose ideas are different." Professor Stouffer warns of the necessity of vigilance as the price of liberty, however, and of the difficulties faced by its special guardians—the press, radio, television, and national and local political leaders—in distinguishing between the evils of communism and a dangerous disregard for civil liberties. Harold D. Lasswell's National Security and Individual Freedom (New York, McGraw-Hill, 1950. 259 p.) provides a rather elaborate theoretical framework for this dilemma, intended to supply criteria whereby any particular safeguard may be judged for its effects upon liberty, whether in the sphere of government, of social institutions, or of the individual. Civil Lib- erties under Attack (Philadelphia, University of Pennsylvania Press, 1951. 155 p.) consists of six lectures delivered at Swarthmore College. Henry Steele Commager, Robert K. Carr, Zechariah Chafee, Walter Gellhorn, Curtis Bok, and James P. Baxter divide between them the subjects of civil rights, measures aimed at radicalism or subversion, and menaces to science, the arts, and education.

E. Government: General

6131. Anderson, William. The units of government in the United States, an enumeration and analysis. New ed., completely rev. Chicago, Public Administration Service, 1945. 48 p. illus. ([Public Administration Service, Chicago] Publication no. 83) 45-3510 JS345 1945.A57

"First published, 1934 . . . New edition, completely revised, 1942; reprinted, with appendix, 1945."

A statistical study of all the units of government operating in this county as of January 1, 1941. Professor Anderson attempted to learn how many distinct units were functioning, their principal classes and characteristics, and the areas and populations served by them. He discusses trends with respect to increases and decreases in the number of local units, the question whether too few or too many such units exist, and the optimum size for urban and rural units. He is interested chiefly in administrative efficiency and fiscal economy. In urban as in rural areas it is desirable, he believes, to have only a single important administrative unit in each defined area. He finds per capita expenditures in cities of from 30,000 to 300,000 about the same with only a slight upward tendency as sizes increases, although above the latter figure increase appears to be more pronounced. The ordinary county expenditures per capita, including overhead, decrease very noticeably when population reaches 30,000 to 35,000, but thereafter decline less rapidly. The author would reduce the number of local units for the average State from 3,500 to approximately 370.

6132. Binkley, Wilfred E., and Malcolm C. Moos. A grammar of American politics; the national government. 3d ed., rev. New York, Knopf, 1958. 806 p. 58-5009 JK274.B57 1958

6133. Binkley, Wilfred E., and Malcolm C. Moos. A grammar of American politics; the national, state, and local governments. 2d ed., rev. and enl. New York, Knopf, 1952. 1059 p. (Borzoi books in political science) 51-11102 JK274.B57 1952

"Supplementary reading": p. 747-771, 1051-1059.

A large-scale textbook, originally published in 1949, by a veteran professor at Ohio Northern University and Professor Moos of Johns Hopkins, who in 1958 joined the White House staff as a speech-drafting aide to the President. For their treatment of State and local governments one must consult the fuller edition of 1952 (p. [787]-1059), but the larger portion concerned with the national government has received a further revision, the preface of which is dated September 1957. The new book is 20 pages longer than the corresponding portion of the 1952 edition; the introductory chapter is retitled "Social Forces in American Politics," instead of "The Dynamics of American Government," and partially rewritten; and three chapters contributed by economic specialists have been replaced by four written by the authors (although one of these, "Agriculture and Conservation," proves to be in fact Dr. Walter W. Wilcox's original contribution with very minor revisions). The organization remains the same: besides two sections on the executive branch and one each on the legislative and judicial, four others deal with the constitutional foundations, citizenship, "Institutions of Popular Control," and "Major Federal Functions."

6134. Burns, James MacGregor, and Jack Walter Peltason. Government by the people; the dynamics of American national, state, and local government. 3d ed. Englewood Cliffs, N. J., Prentice-Hall, 1957. 990 p. illus. 57-8221 JK274.B855 1957a

Bibliography: p. 919-956.

A large-scale textbook by Professor Burns of Williams College and Professor Peltason of the University of Illinois, first issued in 1952. Like its predecessors, the third edition is available in the full form entered above, or in a shorter one dealing with the national government only, or in a paperbound reprint of seven chapters entitled The Dynamics of American State and Local Government; and there is a teaching manual for the edition prepared by Walter S. Wilmot, Jr. The authors state that they have tried to make their book effective for training in critical thinking, citizenship, and liberal education by organizing it around five basic problems: keeping popular government stable and yet progressive; achieving a balance between liberty and order; achieving the best representation of the people in a democratic manner; securing the optimum degree of popular control of our leaders; and answering the challenge of Communists and other antidemocrats. The book differs from older textbooks on the subject in that it precedes its descriptions of the actual institutions and operations of government with lengthy treatments of the essentials of democratic government; the Constitution, particularly as creating a system of federalism; civil liberties and their safeguards; and especially part 4, "The People in Politics." Here the subdivisions are "The Dynamic Role of Interest Groups," "Public Opinion: the Voices of the People," "Political Behavior," "Party Politics and Party Problems," and "Appeal to the Voters." Another element unlikely to be found in early textbooks is chapter 19, "The Bureaucrats," which takes the line that "government officials are people"; if they do not reach ideal standards of performance, this is in large part because of specific hindrances which the people have it in their power to eliminate.

6135. Chatters, Carl H., and Margorie Leonard Hoover. An inventory of governmental activities in the United States. Chicago, Municipal Finance Officers Association of the United States and Canada, 1947. 15 p. 47–4357 JK421.C3

A pamphlet which lists the major services or activities performed by governments in the United States, and indicates what levels of government—Federal, State, county, or city—administer them. About 400 specific activities of government are tabulated here under 15 major headings such as "Protection to Persons and Property," "Development and Conservation of Natural Resources," "Health," and "Public Assistance and Social Services." The level or levels of each activity are indicated. Federal activities include the traditionally central operations which the Federal government administers directly—national defense, regulation of money, the post office—regulatory functions; and research, promotional, and supervisory activities that make special use of the grant-in-aid device. While any governmental activity not constitutionally granted to the Federal government is reserved to the States, in practice the States have delegated responsibility for the direct administration of most activities, other than regulatory services, to their local units, the county governments. Municipal government functions are as varied as is necessary to meet local needs, and special districts deal with exclusively local problems.

6136. Fabricant, Solomon. The trend of government activity in the United States since 1900. New York, National Bureau of Economic Research, 1952. xix, 267 p. illus. (National Bureau of Economic Research. Publications, no. 56)

52–7402 JK421.F18

The title is not self-explanatory: Dr. Fabricant means government activity directly affecting the economy and capable of statistical measurement. His chief aim is to contrast the economy of 1950 with that of 1900, when "on the whole people still thought in terms of 'the less government, the better,' " and to determine the character and the pace of the increases in government activity which are so apparent. But even in 1900 government was not a negligible factor: it held about 7 percent of the nation's capital assets and employed about 4 percent of the labor force. By 1950 these percentages had become respectively 20 and 12.4, and of the consolidated net sales of business 5 percent was made to government. After presenting detailed tables and graphs for the increasing "absorption" of these resources by government, Dr. Fabricant considers the relative shares of the Federal government and of state and local governments in these developments. While the increase in the Federal share is great, the lesser units still bulk large: if in 1900 they employed 73.2 percent of all government workers, in 1949 they still employed 49.1 percent of the total. There follow chapters on the "Functional Classification of Government Activity" and "Productivity in Government and the Output of Government Services." "Interstate Differences in Government Activity," even on a per capita basis, are surprisingly wide. The appendixes contain detailed tables of government employment, capital goods, and expenditures.

6137. Ogg, Frederic A. Ogg and Ray's Introduction to American government, by William H. Young. 11th ed. New York, Appleton-Century-Crofts, 1956. 953 p. illus. (The Century political science series) 56–5483 JK421.O5 1956

A standard textbook on American government since 1922, now revised and somewhat changed in emphasis by Professor Young of the University of Wisconsin, who has largely rewritten the chapters dealing with the democratic process in part 1, and those concerned with the units and functions of the Federal government in part 2. He has replaced the historical introduction by a chapter on the American people and society. Taking advantage of recent studies of political behavior and group politics, he has put a stress upon the democratic method and upon the American people, for whom and by whom our governmental system is operated, at least equal to, if not greater than, that put upon the Constitution by the original authors in previous editions. He has made far fewer emendations in part 3, which discusses the structure, powers, functions, financing, and problems of the state governments. Part 4, devoted to local government—county, city, town, township, village, and district—has also been left virtually unaltered. In 1932 Messrs. Ogg and Ray launched a briefer text, Essentials of American Government, which reached a 7th edition in 1952 (New York, Appleton-Century-Crofts. 774 p.).

6138. Schmeckebier, Laurence. Government publications and their use. 2d rev. ed. Washington, Brookings Institution, 1939. xv, 479 p. (Brookings Institution, Washington, D. C. Institute for Government Research. Studies in administration, no. 33) 39-22433 Z1223.Z7S3 1939

First published in 1936.

"Catalogs and indexes": p. 5–61; "Bibliographies": p. 62–75.

A descriptive guide to the indexes, bibliographies, catalogs, and other important sources of information concerning government publications, chiefly Federal, but with some attention to those of the States. The purpose is "to indicate the limitations and uses of the indexes, to explain the systems of numbering and methods of titling, to call attention to some outstanding compilations or series of publications in several fields, and to indicate how the publications may be obtained." Although it specifically cites many publications by title, this volume is not a catalog, bibliography, or checklist. Chapters 1–4 and 16 contain general information applicable to nearly all classes of publications. The other 11 describe publications dealing with laws and legislative proceedings, court decisions, administrative regulations, Presidential papers, foreign affairs, reports on operations, organization and personnel, and maps. An introduction to the study of government publications for library school students, Anne Morris Boyd's United States Government Publications, 3d ed. rev. by Rea Elizabeth Rips (New York, Wilson, 1949 [i.e. 1952] xx, 627 p.), provides a checklist arranged principally by the organization of the government—the Federal courts, the Executive Office of the President, the departments, independent establishments, and emergency agencies.

6139. Zink, Harold. Government and politics in the United States. 3d ed. New York, Macmillan, 1951. 1008 p. 51-3675 JK274.Z44 1951

First published in 1942.

"Selected bibliography" at end of each chapter.

The initial chapter of this large college text outlines the different kinds of government, including the democratic forms. A separate section, "Foundations of the Commonwealth," includes such chapters as "Pressure Groups and Pressure Politics," "The Role of Public Opinion," and "The Obligations and Responsibilities of Citizenship." Succeeding chapters examine in detail the operations, agencies, institutions, powers and duties, financing, and policy of the Federal government, as well as its relations with business, agriculture, and labor. The book provides briefer surveys of the functions, administration, and services of State, territorial, and local governments. The author discusses the operational methods of the various branches and divisions of the several governments, as well as projects of reform and reorganization. There are noteworthy chapters on "Public Personnel Administration," "Social Security and Public Housing," and "Public Planning and Conservation." Throughout, he gives careful attention to the American type of democracy, to its special characteristics, to its accomplishments, and to its shortcomings. Professor Zink's large text has had no recent revision, but there is a 1958 edition of his briefer course: American Government and Politics: National, State, and Local, by Harold Zink, Howard R. Penniman, and Guy B. Hathorn (Princeton, N. J., Van Nostrand. 446 p.).

F. The Presidency

6140. Binkley, Wilfred E. President and Congress. New York, Knopf, 1947. 312 p. 47-1135 JK516.B5 1947

First published in 1937 as The Powers of the President, by Doubleday, Doran & Co. "This edition completely rewritten, expanded, and reset."

Bibliography: p. 301–312.

A study of the historical relationship between the American Presidency and Congress and of efforts made to find a workable adjustment within it. In Professor Binkley's opinion, the problem of integrating the executive and legislative branches of the government has not yet been permanently solved. The Presidency, as originally established by the Federalists under the Constitution, was assigned a position of leadership and the executive departments were to constitute a ministry, but the agrarians, headed by Jefferson, launched a drive against the executive, particularly Hamilton in the Treasury Department. The author believes that John Adams contributed to the decline of the executive, and that under Madison government leadership passed definitely to Congress. Nevertheless the election of Andrew Jackson in 1828 marked the emergence of the concept of the President as "the tribune of the people." Ever since, Professor Binkley believes, powerful interests have always been uneasy when a popular, aggressive leader has even threatened to reach the Presidency. The author views the function of the President as the discovery and promotion of the public welfare. Less sanguine about Congress, he sees it as most successful when it brings about an equilibrium among conflicting interests.

6141. Brownlow, Louis. The President and the Presidency. Chicago, Public Administration Service, 1949. 137 p. (Chicago. University. Charles R. Walgreen Foundation [for the Study of American Institutions] Lectures)

49–6223 JK516.B74

An informal analysis of the Presidency based upon six lectures delivered at the University of Chicago in 1947. Regarding the Presidency as a unique and peculiarly American institution created both by law and by custom, Mr. Brownlow examines the attributes of the office and shows how the men who fill it are chosen, how they are equipped for the task, what is expected of them, and what help they need in meeting the expectations. The institutional aspects of the Presidency are considered principally as they have been since 1900 when, in the author's opinion, the Presidency emerged in its modern phase with the succession of Theodore Roosevelt. Because Mr. Brownlow regards the man as inseparable from the institution, he takes the two together, showing how the Presidents have influenced the Presidency, changing it from time to time by weight of their personalities, and how the Presidency has influenced the Presidents, sometimes reshaping them into different individuals. The author has relied upon his own observations and reflections, including a personal knowledge of eight Presidents, rather than upon documentary research.

6142. Chamberlain, Lawrence H. The President, Congress and legislation. New York, Columbia University Press, 1946. 478 p. (Columbia University. Faculty of Political Science. Studies in history, economics and public law, no. 523)

A 46–4849 H31.C7, no. 523
JK585.C5 1946a

Bibliography: p. 465–473.

A survey of the relative contributions of the President and Congress to legislation enacted during the years 1882–1940, which considers in detail the legislative histories of 90 selected statutes in 10 categories: agriculture, banking and currency, business, government credit, immigration, labor, national defense, natural resources, railroads, and tariff. Assigning credit for these on a tabular basis, and noting areas in which the President or the Congress has been especially conspicuous, the book shows the joint character of the American legislative process. It does not reveal any tendency toward increasing Presidential domination of that process. Theodore Roosevelt was the first President of the United States, the author asserts, to pursue a policy of executive dominance in legislation. Woodrow Wilson's particular contribution was a more deliberate and effective party leadership. Franklin D. Roosevelt, with his multidimensional leadership, did much to reduce Congress to a secondary function in legislation. As Dr. Chamberlain points out, all three were forceful men who came to office when the social and economic development of the nation had rendered the need for progressive legislation acute.

6143. Corwin, Edward S. The President, office and powers, 1787–1948; history and analysis of practice and opinion. [3d ed., rev.] New York, New York University Press, 1948. xvii, 552 p. (New York University. Stokes Foundation. James Stokes lectureship on politics)

48–7474 JK516.C63 1948

A partly historical, partly analytical and critical, study in American public law, originally published in 1940. The central inquiry concerns the development and contemporary status of Presidential power and of the Presidential office under the Constitution. Its political aspects are also considered, since in only a few instances have previous practice or agreed doctrine foreclosed all choice between alternative theories of the Constitution. Personal traits of individual Presidents are duly commented upon if they have materially affected the development of the office and its powers. In the author's view, the Constitution was sufficiently vague to initiate a struggle between two concepts of executive power: the theory that it should always be subordinate to the supreme legislative power, and the theory that it should be, within generous limits, autonomous and self-directing. Generally speaking, the history of the Presidency has been one of aggrandizement. Professor Corwin considers that Presidential power today not only is enormously increased by the delegation from Congress of sub-legislation called "administrative regulations," but also is "dangerously personalized." He suggests as a remedy a new type of Cabinet constructed from a joint legislative council to be created by the two houses of Congress and to contain its leading members.

6144. Hobbs, Edward H. Behind the President; a study of Executive Office agencies. Washington, Public Affairs Press, 1954. 248 p.

53–5789 JK518.H6

A history and critical analysis of the expanding group of staff agencies which, beginning with the creation of the Bureau of the Budget in 1921, have provided administrative management for the Presidency. When Congress gave him the authority in a Reorganization Act, President Franklin Roosevelt by executive order combined them into the Executive Office of the President in 1939, at which time they comprised the White House Office, the Bureau of the Budget, the National Resources Planning Board, the Liaison Office for Personnel Management, and the Office of Government Reports. Provision was then made for "such office for emergency management as the President shall determine in the event of a national emergency or the threat of one." A chapter each is devoted to the first three agencies mentioned above, and one each to the Council of Economic Advisers, the National Security Council, the National Security Resources Board, the emergency agencies, and staff machinery under President Eisenhower. The Executive Office was planned to keep the President systematically informed of matters of top-level importance, to assist him in preparing for future programs, to protect him from the nuisance of subordinate affairs that could dissipate his time and energies, to place priority matters before him promptly, and to aid him in securing compliance from subordinates. Mr. Hobbs thinks that these objectives have been achieved "to a modest degree."

6145. Learned, Henry Barrett. The President's Cabinet; studies in the origin, formation and structure of an American institution. New Haven, Yale University Press, 1912. 471 p.
12–1466 JK611.L5
"List of authorities": p. 404–427.

A pioneer historical analysis of the President's Cabinet which explains the formation of the advisory council as well as the establishment of the structural offices which provide its members, but which is limited to the anatomy rather than the functions of the Cabinet. Professor Learned considered the President's council not so much a conscious derivation from any body in existence when it was created as the expression of a need as old as government—the need of a corps of closely associated assistants qualified to aid a vigorous and effective chief magistrate. Shortly after Congress enacted laws in 1789 for the establishment of the three secretaryships of State, War, and Treasury and of the Office of Attorney General, Washington brought these four officers together as an advisory council, which by 1793 was popularly termed the Cabinet. By 1912 five other department heads had been added to the President's council: Secretary of the Navy, 1798; Postmaster General, 1829 (an instance of an office of long standing being raised to Cabinet rank); Secretary of the Interior, 1849; Secretary of Agriculture, 1889; and Secretary of Commerce and Labor, 1903. As the author emphasizes, the law created the principal officers or members of the Cabinet, but the Cabinet itself was the creation of President Washington. His practice became custom, and the Cabinet has remained a customary and not a statutory body.

6146. Milton, George Fort. The use of presidential power, 1789–1943. Boston, Little, Brown, 1944. 349 p. 44–3756 JK516.M5
"Bibliographical note": p. 323–327.

An historical examination of the office and powers of the American President from George Washington to Franklin D. Roosevelt. Mr. Milton sees a continuing, if not orderly, increase in the power of the Presidency that is in line with the general readjustment of executive and legislative importance in the modern world of accelerated change. In his opinion, the Constitution, crisis, and custom have combined to vest great power in the President: as chief of state, he embodies the people's elective will; as chief of foreign relations, he has, from the beginning, functioned as sole organ of this country in its external relations; as Commander-in-Chief of the Army and Navy, he has enormous power in time of war, rebellion, or other high crisis; and, as chief of government, he bears direct responsibility for the huge executive branch of the government. Inseparable from the person of the President, also, are his position as chief of his party, as leader of public opinion, and as spokesman for the nation. The author focuses attention upon those whom he considers the strongest Presidents—Washington, Jefferson, Jackson, Lincoln, Cleveland, Theodore Roosevelt, Wilson, and Franklin D. Roosevelt—in order to discover how they used their power, the emergencies they confronted, their discoveries of authority for action, and the consequences for the Presidential office.

6147. Patterson, Caleb Perry. Presidential government in the United States; the unwritten constitution. Chapel Hill, University of North Carolina Press, 1947. 301 p. 47–30530 JK516.P3
Bibliography: p. [281]–296.

Professor Patterson contends that the United States has substituted a political for a constitutional democracy, that Congress and the Supreme Court are becoming the agents of the President, and that we have gone entirely too far toward an executive type of government, which is subject to almost no legal checks, and is responsible only to the ballot box. The chief check on the national government therefore becomes the two-party system. With this in mind, the author proposes a readjustment in the relation between the President and Congress. The President, he believes, should be made to act through ministers chosen from and responsible to Congress. Forming a Cabinet, these ministers would supervise operations of the Federal agencies and represent them in debate upon the floors of Congress. The prime minister would be selected by a caucus of the majority party in Congress. He, in turn, would select the other ministers with the approval of the caucus. The author suggests 24 ways in which his proposal would aid in adapting our constitutional system to a more practical and responsible scheme of control. The adoption of some modification of the British system of a responsible Cabinet has frequently been urged, but has never received any significant degree of public support.

6148. Smith, A. Merriman. A President is many men. New York, Harper, 1948. 269 p.
48–6989 JK516.S65

An informal and anecdotal report on the intricate operations of the 20th-century Presidency by a White House correspondent. Mr. Smith says that "the Presidency, despite the high honors that go with it, has become a four-year sentence to hard labor." A modern President, the author believes, is as powerful as his ability to influence public opinion; his power has grown in direct ratio to the development of mass media of communication. He needs the qualities of an excellent actor, a capable financier, an able administrator, and a good student of military science, geography, farming, and international affairs. Under constant siege from those who want something, the President is advised by his 10-member Cabinet and his inner circle of intimates; he has on his staff a team of idea-men and speechwriters, a large secretariat, and a group of public relations experts. Mr. Smith describes the organization of this staff as well as that of the White House domestic entourage, and such matters as entertainment, ceremonial visits, Presidential travel, and the persons with whom the President regularly has to deal, among them politicians, reporters and photographers, and the writing and present-making public.

6149. Stanwood, Edward. A history of the Presidency. New ed., rev. by Charles Knowles Bolton. Boston, Houghton Mifflin [193–?] 2 v.
37–31629 JK511.S7 1930

CONTENTS.—[v. 1] From 1788 to 1897.—[v. 2] From 1897 to 1916, with additions and revisions to 1928.

Stanwood (1841–1923) was a staunch Maine Republican who served briefly as secretary to James G. Blaine (no. 3442) and became editor of the Boston Advertiser and of the Youth's Companion. In 1884 he published his History of Presidential Elections, which went through four editions by 1896, and received its present and less appropriate title in 1898. A second volume was added in 1912, and the author's last revision of it was made before the election of 1916. In the final printing C. K. Bolton of the Boston Athenaeum, who was Stanwood's son-in-law, corrected some errors and added appendixes of platforms and tables for the elections from 1916 through 1928, but did not expand the narrative. Stanwood devoted a chapter to each presidential election from 1788 to 1912, treating concisely and concretely the state of the electoral machinery, the political parties in the field, the major issues, the platforms adopted (usually in full), the selection and qualifications of the candidates, and significan incidents of the campaign. Tables are given for votes in the party conventions, when repeated balloting was necessary to reach a result, and for the popular and electoral votes of all significant candidates. A final chapter discussed "The Evolution of the Presidency" from the viewpoint of 1916. Eugene H. Roseboom's A History of Presidential Elections (New York, Macmillan, 1957. 568 p.) is a livelier narrative covering the elections through 1956, and more up-to-date in its historical points of view, but by no means rivals Stanwood as a convenient source of essential information.

G. Congress

6150. Alexander, De Alva Stanwood. History and procedure of the House of Representatives. Boston, Houghton Mifflin, 1916. xv, 435 p.
16–11176 JK1316.A3

A documented history of the organization and procedures of the United States House of Representatives from 1789 to 1911, when Representative Alexander of Buffalo concluded seven successive terms. It shows how such Speakers as Henry Clay, Samuel J. Randall, Thomas B. Reed, and Joseph G. Cannon set precedents and shared in establishing customs. Mr. Alexander considered deciding questions of order the most difficult of the Speaker's functions, and exercising his right of recognition the most embarrassing, although the latter had become materially restricted by the use of privileged motions, measures, and reports, and privileged business on fixed days of the week. In fact, by the close of the 61st Congress in 1911, the Speaker was virtually shorn of power save for the appointment of committees, and the right of recognition for motions to suspend the rules. The author disapproved of the change made at the first session of the 62d Congress, by which all standing committees were elected instead of appointed by the Speaker, because, to him, that officer embodied public and concentrated responsibility, and because no one else held so great an interest in the success of his party and its administrations. Among other subjects treated at less length are: the remaining officers of the House and their duties and privileges; methods of voting; rules; the order of business; and committees. It is regrettable that no subsequent Member of the House has continued Alexander's very useful work.

6151. Bates, Ernest Sutherland. The story of Congress, 1789–1935. New York, Harper, 1936. xvii, 468 p. 36–9206 JK1021.B3

"A modest record of the doings of Congress for the information of the general reader," organized in nine chapters: "The Federalist Foundation," 1789–1801; "Jeffersonian Democracy," 1801–29; "Jacksonian Democracy," 1829–45; "Compromise with Slavocracy," 1845–61; "Overthrow of Slavocracy," 1861–77; "Industrial Capitalism," 1877–1901; "Era of Reforms," 1901–21; "Finance Capitalism," 1921–33; and "The New Deal," 1933–35. These are subdivided by Presidential administrations, and further subdivided by Congresses, 74 in all. Mr. Bates supplies a lively and useful panorama, from which can conveniently be learned the major issues, figures, and incidents of any Congress; but he takes sides rather emphatically and rigidly. In his opinion, the fundamental issue which has confronted American democracy from the beginning is whether the United States "in the last analysis should be ruled by the judiciary or the legislature, by the immediate representatives of the plutocracy or by the distant representatives of the people." However inadequately, he believes, Congress and the President have more nearly represented the masses of the people than has the Supreme Court, which has tended to give priority to the rights of property.

6152. Burns, James MacGregor. Congress on trial; the legislative process and the administrative state. New York, Harper, 1949. xiv, 224 p. 49–4901 JK1061.B8

An inquiry into the low prestige which, the author thinks, Congress enjoys with the general public, the basic reason for which he finds in the national legislature's excessive localism and consequent failure to promote the general welfare. The average Congressman, Professor Burns argues, adequately represents any interests of his district that are united and vocal, but when local opinion on national issues is divided he is likely to straddle. Some Congressmen, he writes, are so completely absorbed by organized local interests that they are themselves pressure politicians, "lobbyists in disguise." Defects in congressional organization, he believes, allow unfair districting, unrepresentative committees, the monopoly of policy-making chairmanships by persons qualified only by length of tenure, and obstruction through filibusters, all of which lessen or destroy the effectiveness of Congress, and weaken it as an instrument of majority rule. The national legislature in his opinion thus tends to dissolve into an aggregate of blocs and of individuals unwilling or unable to withstand their pressures; and, lacking machinery for control or discipline in the legislature, the majority party cannot hold its members to the program which it has pledged to the voters. Professor Burns particularly dreads the paralysis which selfish obstructionism could produce in some future economic crisis. He offers six concrete suggestions intended to bring about "the wholesale reconstruction of our obsolete and ramshackle party system," one corollary of which is that the disloyal, those who use the party to gain election and then ignore its program, must be "purged"—read out of the party.

6153. Chamberlain, Joseph P. Legislative processes, national and state. New York, Appleton-Century, 1936. 369. ([The Century political science series]) 36–10198 JK1061.C45

Bibliography: p. 355–357.

A textbook "organized," in the words of the preface, "for the use of a class in legislation, in which an endeavor was made to give the students a working notion of the way in which laws are placed on the statute books in the United States Congress and the state legislatures, rather than a mere description of the functioning parts of the legislatures. It is based on experience in preparing and handling bills, and even more on the aid of men who have themselves been members of Congress or state legislatures, or who have served those bodies." Legislatures, the author remarks, "are law-declaring rather than lawmaking bodies." Changing social conditions require gradual modification of the rules governing society, and such modification is today being sought through legislation more often than through the slower and sometimes clumsier method of court action. As administration expands, the scope of legislative activity broadens, since only through legislation can new government organizations be established or existing ones be adjusted to greater loads. The need for changes in existing machinery is frequently first noticed by the executive officers in charge of operations. Through them come requests for improvements which only the legislature can make. The author considers in detail the organization which has evolved in Congress and the legislatures for the accurate drafting of bills and the enactment of them into law.

6154. Dimock, Marshall Edward. Congressional investigating committees. Baltimore, Johns Hopkins Press, 1929. 182 p. (Johns Hopkins University. Studies in historical and political science, ser. 47, no. 1) 29-906 JK1123.A2D5 1929 H31.J6, ser 47, no. 1

Bibliography: p. 177-178.

A study of all congressional investigations conducted in this country between 1789 and 1929. Comparing the functions of the investigative committee in the United States to those of like agencies in other modern constitutional governments, the author traces the English origin of the congressional committee of inquiry, and points out that the power of investigation, as a procedure both of Parliament and of Congress, is an implied one, based upon custom rather than constitution or statutes. This prerogative consists of three functions: investigations of the qualifications and conduct of the legislative membership; investigations in pursuance of the lawmaking functions, such as provide for future or emergency legislation or establish administrative commissions; and investigations of the executive departments for determining their needs, for supervision, for discipline, or for control of public funds. Of the total number of investigations, about 190 were authorized by the House, and 125 by the Senate, while 15 were the work of joint committees. By far the largest number of investigations occurred during the Presidencies of Grant and Harding. Dr. Dimock saw the Senate emerging as the prime inquisitor, "the vitriolic critic and persistent regulator of the government." Although he recognized the dangers to personal rights and immunities that could arise from the system, the author considered investigations valuable.

6155. Galloway, George B. The legislative process in Congress. New York, Crowell, 1953. 689 p. 53-11621 JK1061.G32

"In a sense . . . a successor to, rather than a revision of," the author's Congress at the Crossroads (1946).

A documented and well-organized descriptive analysis of the organization and operation of Congress. It points out that, although the power and prestige of the executive branch of the Government increased enormously during the first half of the 20th century, Congress not only changed little, continuing to function with old machinery and methods, old facilities and services, but actually declined as an original source of legislation in comparison with the administration. Moreover, since 1887, Congress has delegated to more and more commissions the power to issue rules and regulations under the general principles of established law. However, with the great growth of administrative activity, supervision and control of administration through appropriation, investigation, amendment of existing laws, the requirement of reports, the approval or removal of personnel, and the review of foreign relations have become some of the most important congressional functions. Dr. Galloway objects to the "centrifugal forces" of the committee system, which have become dominant in congressional policy-making, and suggests a number of reforms needed in congressional machinery, procedures, and political outlook.

6156. Harlow, Ralph Volney. The history of legislative methods in the period before 1825. New Haven, Yale University Press, 1917. 269 p. (Yale historical publications. Miscellany, 5) 17-30135 JK1029.H3

Based upon the author's doctoral dissertation, this is a history of the growth of committee systems in the lawmaking bodies of the colonies and states from 1750 to 1790, and in the House of Representatives from July 24, 1789, when a Committee of Ways and Means was appointed, to 1825, when the caucus, the standing committee system, and the speakership had become firmly established in the House. As early as 1797, Dr. Harlow notes, party affiliation was becoming an important factor in the selection of committees, and by 1813 standing committees were admittedly made up in the interest of the dominant party. The development of the powerful speakership and of the committee system from 1811 to 1825 accompanied the casting off of the executive dominance which had marked Jefferson's administrations, although neither institution made the House independent of an active executive. As the author indicates, President, Cabinet, congressional leaders of the party organization, or the Speaker might and did have the whiphand at various times. The balance of power was generally in the House, but members of the Cabinet were influential in legislative affairs, and the organization of the House did and does permit the application of powerful pressure by the executive. To Dr. Harlow, such application is all to the good: "The wheels of the government have never run more smoothly than when the president has been in a position to drive Congress."

6157. Harris, Joseph P. The advice and consent of the Senate; a study of the confirmation of appointments by the United States Senate. Berkeley, University of California Press, 1953. 457 p. 53-11239 JK1274.H3

A history of the Senate's confirmation or rejection of Presidentially appointed officers of the United States, from 1787 to the present, together with an analysis of the operation and the effects of the practice. Because constitutional issues have been raised in controversies over the respective functions of the President and the Senate in appointments, special attention is given to the debates about the appointing power in the Constitutional Convention of 1787. The problem of which officers should be appointed by the President and confirmed by the Senate, and which should be otherwise appointed, is central to the discussion. In Professor Harris' opinion, the requirement of senatorial confirmation of appointments has worked fairly well for certain classes of officers, and has provided, as the framers of the Constitution intended, a safeguard against unfit appointees; for others it has worked badly, resulting in empty formalities of little significance, or perpetuating partisan and patronage appointments in positions which properly belong in the career civil service. The extension of the requirement of senatorial confirmation from Justices of the Supreme Court and diplomatic representatives to thousands of minor positions is contrary, the author believes, to the spirit if not to the provisions of the Constitution. He would restrict the President's appointments to the top political and policy-making positions.

6158. Haynes, George H. The Senate of the United States, its history and practice. Boston, Houghton Mifflin, 1938. 2 v. (1118 p.) illus. 38–38772 JK1161.H28

"References" at end of most of the chapters.

A large-scale history of the United States Senate and of the development of its practices, legislative, executive, judicial, and investigative, based on original sources throughout. Chapter 1 describes the planning of the Senate in the Federal Convention of 1787 as the upper branch of a bicameral legislature, based upon equal representation of the states. Chapter 2 deals with the important work of the First Congress in setting precedents in such matters as titles for government officials, confirmation of Presidential appointees, ratification of treaties, cooperation between the two branches of Congress, initiation of important measures, and amendment of many bills which it could not, under the Constitution, originate. Subsequent chapters deal with such topics as the election of Senators, Senate officers and organization, rules and procedure, debate, Senate influence in financial legislation, investigations, treaty-making and foreign relations, "advice and consent," and the relationship between the Senate and the President as well as between the Senate and the House. As Professor Haynes observes, almost every phase in the Constitution which pertains to the Senate reflects compromise. "The result was a legislative body unique in its basis of representation, in its relation to the Executive and to the other branch of Congress, in its procedure, and in its weighty non-legislative powers." The Senate was designed to serve as somewhat of an executive council to the President, as a check on the House, as guardian of the small States, as protector of all against encroachment by the new centralized power, and as the people's defender against "the turbulency of democracy." Its original basis has been changed, but it still retains its old prestige, and a special constitutional value which resides in its independence of judgment.

6159. Kammerer, Gladys M. The staffing of the committees of Congress. [Lexington] Bureau of Government Research, University of Kentucky, 1949. 45 p. 49–47303 JK1067.K3

Based on interviews, this is a very brief survey of the qualifications and methods of selection of the staff members, professional and clerical, appointed by the committees of both houses of Congress under the Legislative Reorganization Act of 1946. Examination is made of the staffing of the 15 standing committees permitted the Senate and the 19 permitted the House of Representatives. "Fifteen committees are parallel in each house," observes the author, "and furnish pointed contrasts as well as similarities. Four committees are found only on the House side; those on House Administration, Merchant Marine and Fisheries, Un-American Activities, and Veterans' Affairs." The 15 parallel committees have to do with agriculture, appropriations, the armed services, banking and currency, the District of Columbia, expenditures in executive departments, foreign affairs, interstate and foreign commerce, judiciary, labor, the post office and civil service, public lands, public works, rules, and taxation. The author finds a marked superiority in the quality of the Senate committee staffs. She considers the makeup of a few of the special committees and concludes that there is need for improvement in the recruitment and selection process, and that less emphasis should be placed on the employment of lawyers.

6160. McGeary, Martin Nelson. The developments of congressional investigative power. New York, Columbia University Press, 1940. 172 p. (Columbia University. Faculty of Political Science. Studies in history, economics and public law, no. 465) 40–5782 JK1123.A2M3 1940a H31.C7, no. 465

Bibliography: p. 161–165.

An analysis of the congressional investigation particularly as it operated between 1929 and 1940. The author credits investigations with illuminating many dark problems and even carefully hidden skeletons, but declares that they have also obfuscated issues and nullified worthwhile accomplishments. Furthermore, they have varied widely in purpose and procedure as well as results. The Senate has functioned as the more important investigator, both as to quantity and significance, especially since 1933, when the emphasis shifted from checking the administration to collaborating with it. As Dr. McGeary observes, in both the Senate and the House more investigations are killed than are accepted, but the importance of even the threat of investigation should not be overlooked. He classifies congressional investigations as those which assist Congress in drafting laws, determining the desirability of legislation, or molding public opinion, and those which assist Congress in its supervision of administrative officers. These last comprise about a third of recent inquiries. Investigations of congressional membership form only a fraction of the total.

6161. Pepper, George Wharton. In the Senate. Philadelphia, University of Pennsylvania Press, 1930. 148 p. 30–28947 JK1161.P6

An anecdotal and sprightly, yet in the main detached, account by Mr. Pepper (b. 1867) of his completion of the deceased Boies Penrose's term as United States Senator from Pennsylvania during the years 1922–27. At the time of his appointment Mr. Pepper was without political experience and appeared to the Republican stalwarts, particularly to the Philadelphia machine controlled by William S. Vare, as "an outsider, a novice, an untrained beneficiary" of a reward he had not earned. The machine defeated him in the following election. Offering pungent characterizations of the more notable of his colleagues, he argues that although Senators differ in ability, they possess, on the whole, a high average. In Mr. Pepper's opinion, the most effective Senators are those who at once understand their subjects and refrain from wounding the sensibilities of their colleagues. He describes procedures and rules of the Senate, the committee system, the seniority principle, pressures, conferences, the filibuster, and special services and information required by constituents. He sees the Senate's function as essentially regulatory, a check upon the Executive and upon legislative action initiated by the House.

6162. Riddick, Floyd M. The United States Congress; organization and procedure. Manassas, Va., National Capitol Publishers, 1949. 459 p. 49–1982 JK1096.R54

First published in 1941.

A useful but technical and minutely detailed handbook on House and Senate legislative machinery and political and parliamentary procedures. The author, who is assistant parliamentarian of the Senate and editor of the "Daily Digest" of the Congressional Record, points out the great difference in the methods of the houses for transacting business. Of the two, the Senate, with only 96 members, has a less rigidly fixed set of rules, and much looser, less specifically defined, and less regulatory parliamentary law. The House, on the other hand, with 435 members, proceeds under rigidly limited debate, with individual consideration giving way to the will of the whole membership in any test case, so as to permit of dispatch in its business. The two chambers also call up business in differing ways, the Senate's system being far the simpler. Dr. Riddick underscores the ability of the standing committees and their chairmen to shape legislation in both chambers, as well as their influence in the enactment or the blocking of a given law.

6163. Schmeckebier, Laurence F. Congressional apportionment. Washington, Brookings Institution, 1941. 233 p. ([Brookings Institution, Washington, D. C. Institute for Government Research. Studies in administration, no. 40])

41–3146 JK1331.S35

A detailed description of the "five modern workable methods" of apportionment to each state of Congressmen in the House of Representatives and votes in the electoral college, which, according to the Constitution, should follow each decennial census. These methods, all mathematically consistent, are: the method of major fractions, the method of equal proportions, the method of harmonic mean, the method of smallest divisors, and the method of greatest divisors. The apportionment ratio is obtained by dividing the population of the entire country by the number of representatives, which, since 1910, has been 435. Difficulty arises from the fact that seldom if ever does any apportionment ratio divide exactly into the population of any State. Always there is a remainder which may vary from a small to a large fraction of the ratio. Controversy has arisen at every reapportionment since the adoption of the Constitution over selection of the States to receive additional members for their fractional population above the ratio. A major purpose of apportionment is to equalize the average population of congressional districts. The author demonstrates that the difference between average populations is always least if the method of equal proportions is used. This method provides the most equitable distribution among States regardless of size and is therefore to be preferred.

6164. Taylor, Telford. Grand inquest: the story of congressional investigations. New York, Simon & Schuster, 1955. 358 p.
54–9803. JK1123.A2T3

An expansion of various addresses and lectures concerning the powers of legislative investigative committees delivered during 1953. Mr. Taylor, a distinguished lawyer and former associate counsel to a Senate committee, was deeply concerned at the time of writing over "the internal crisis of confidence" in the United States, which he attributed directly to congressional investigations. He here sets forth and tellingly analyzes 162 years of such investigations, beginning with "The Ordeal of Major General Arthur St. Clair," first Governor of the Northwest Territory in 1792, and touching upon all important probes down to and including the "dull, dramatic, farcical, enlightening, and frightening" McCarthy-Army hearings of 1954. The author finds that there has been a recent distortion of the historic mission of legislative inquiries to expose administrative corruption or inefficiency, and to discover the facts and circumstances with which the law-making process is concerned; he finds, too, the approach of a situation in which political sentiments are scrutinized by roving inquisitions which punish dissent by a kind of outlawry. He sees in this last a "native-American" challenge to "middle-class liberalism." Although he himself attempts to dispel "the illusion of investigative omnipotence" by citing constitutional limitations on the investigations of Congress and the doctrine of judicial review, he observes that it has not been extinguished.

6165. Voorhis, Horace Jeremiah. Confessions of a Congressman. By Jerry Voorhis. Garden City, N. Y., Doubleday, 1947. 365 p.
47–11412 E743.V6

An informal memoir of the author's 10-year service (1937–47) as a Democratic Congressman from California, written shortly after his defeat for reelection. He offers frank and reflective comments upon such matters as his reasons for entering politics, campaigning, the relations between Congressmen and pressure groups, the seniority rule, the operation of the committee system, and the Congressman's job as it is and as it should be. Calling himself a "progressive," Mr. Voorhis also discusses legislation and a number of important issues with which Congress was confronted during his terms of office, among them the Supreme Court packing plan, the Fair Labor Standards Act, the Flannagan school lunch program, the McMahon Atomic Energy Control Act, the Dies committee, and postwar planning. He approves of nearly all New Deal legislation and credits Franklin D. Roosevelt with two great contributions to American political thought: establishment of the principle that mass unemployment is a national problem for which the Federal government is responsible, and the broadening of the concept of America's world position to include world leadership. Enlightened, critical, and self-critical, this is a very unusual sort of book.

6166. Walker, Harvey. The legislative process; lawmaking in the United States. New York, Ronald Press, 1948. 482 p. (Series in political science) 48–10898 Law
Bibliography: p. 459–467.

An introductory text and handbook which "describes the machinery set up in the United States for determining and declaring the will of the people. It attempts to evaluate objectively the defects in this machinery and the impediments which have been allowed to accumulate in the path of its smooth operation. And, finally, it suggests a direction for future progress." The nature of law is first briefly considered, since, in the author's opinion, any systematic study of the legislative process must be concerned with law as an end-product as well as with the devices by which it is brought into being. Next treated are the making and development of constitutions at both the national and State levels. There follow a number of chapters devoted to statute lawmaking. The provinces, at all levels of government, of the "political inventor," the professional politician, the party member, the pressure-group member, and the legislator are thoroughly examined. Also dealt with in detail here are legislative procedure, including the organization of the legislative body; rules and order of business; the introduction, reference, consideration, and enactment of bills; and such special matters as legislative research and drafting. The functions of the Executive and of the courts in relation to the legislative process receive due attention, and the work concludes with chapters on executive, judicial, and popular lawmaking.

6167. Willoughby, William F. Principles of legislative organization and administration. Washington, Brookings Institution, 1934. xiv, 657 p. ([Brookings Institution, Washington, D. C.] Institute for Government Research. Principles of administration [7]) 34–41225 JK1061.W7
"Bibliographic note": p. 627–648.

An analysis of the several factors involved in organizing the legislative branch of government and in providing for its practical operation, together with a statement of the alternative choices in the handling of each of these factors, and an indication of the ways in which they have actually been managed by modern governments, especially by the national and State governments of the United States.

Parts 1 and 2 present a broad picture of the place of the legislative branch in the government of any modern state; its relations to the electorate, the executive, administration, and the judiciary; the nature of its functions; and its general structure. Part 3, constituting just over half of the volume, is devoted to a more intensive study of the technical problems faced by any legislative body in devising a workable system of internal organization and methods of procedure that will enable it most efficiently to perform its duties. Professor Willoughby found legislative organization and procedure of supreme importance in determining the character of government, the question of legislative leadership, and the extent to which party government should be actually as well as nominally a dominant feature of our political system. Progress toward responsible party government must be sought, he believed, in the acceptance and strengthening of the caucus system. The State legislative situation he considered "unsatisfactory in the extreme."

6168. Wilmerding, Lucius. The spending power; a history of the efforts of Congress to control expenditures. New Haven, Yale University Press, 1943. 317 p. A 44–126 HJ2013.U5W5

The main purpose of this book is to demonstrate that although Congress has the exclusive right of granting supplies of money to the Executive and of appropriating them to the several branches of the public service, it has not nor ever has had any practical means of ascertaining after the event whether its financial authority has been either respected or infringed. The first chapter shows by a collection of instances that circumstances repeatedly occur which make it a duty in officers of high public trust to assume authority beyond the appropriation laws, and that when they do, the unwritten laws of necessity and of the public safety have been deemed, by liberals and conservatives alike, to supersede the written laws of appropriation. As the subsequent eight chapters indicate, the doctrine of specific appropriations was early established in theory but not in practice. The efforts of Congress to compel obedience to the appropriation laws by itemizing appropriations and other devices have been largely "self-defeating." The last four chapters analyze efforts of Congress to maintain retrospective control over departmental appropriations through financial reports, congressional investigations, and the General Accounting Office. These attempts, "while not self-defeating, have been ineffective." The author does not attempt to show how Congress can make its right to control the public expenditures real as well as nominal.

6169. Young, Roland. The American Congress. New York, Harper, 1958. 333 p.
58–5081 JK1061.Y59

Mr. Young sees Congress' primary function as "that of establishing a basic legal pattern of order for society. This in turn leads to the additional requirements for creating an autonomous legislative organization to make policy and for establishing continuing relations with the government bureaucracy and with the society which is governed." Although the various functions of Congress may be performed with varying degrees of effectiveness, no one of them may be permitted to lapse completely for any length of time, the author believes, without destroying the legislative system and its complex interrelationships with other government institutions. He analyzes in some detail the electoral system of recruitment and the composition of Congress, as well as the operation of the legislative process, the powers inherent in it, and the influences to which it is subject, and concludes with a few generalizations on the proper sphere and activities of Congress as an instrument of government.

H. Administration: General

6170. Caldwell, Lynton K. The administrative theories of Hamilton & Jefferson; their contribution to thought on public administration. Chicago, University of Chicago Press, 1944. 244 p. ([Studies in public administration])
A 44–4703 JK171.A1C3

A study of the crucial period in American history "when the theory and practice of administration in the new general government were in process of formation." Both the administrative and the political systems of the United States, Mr. Caldwell argues, were founded upon the divergent theories and practices of Hamilton and Jefferson. Each developed a coherent, well-considered plan of administration based upon the type of society toward which he hoped America would grow. Hamilton triumphed for a brief period of splendid construction (1789–95) with the establishment of the Treasury Department, the Mint, and the first Bank of the United States, but Jefferson ruled in spirit over the following century. In the author's opinion, neither ideal has triumphed over the other, and their reconciliation remains an unsolved problem. The fundamental difference in the administrative ideas of Hamilton and Jefferson appears to lie in their attitudes toward the control of political power. Hamilton stood for responsible and Jefferson for limited government; Hamilton admired the British system of centralized ministerial responsibility, while Jefferson preferred the accepted American notions of the separation of powers and local home rule.

6171. Graves, William Brooke. Public administration in a democratic society. Boston, Heath, 1950. xvi, 759 p. illus.
50–5971 JK421.G74

"Selected references" at end of chapters.

A textbook, based upon the author's 25 years of study and experience in the field of state, local, and Federal administration. It proceeds from the basic concept of administration "as concerned with the transaction of all of the public business, whether legislative, executive, or judicial; whether international, national, state, or local." Regarding the individual department or agency as the core of the administrative system, Dr. Graves gives special attention to the problems of coordinating organization, personnel, and fiscal operations in the actual processes of internal management. He has sharply differentiated such internal control—policy formulation, organization for production, production itself, and administration—from external relations, or the execution of policy. The latter concerns the relations of the entire agency with persons and groups outside it, and, generally, with that portion of the public that is benefiting by its services or subject to its regulations. In establishing these regulations, the administrative agencies make extensive use of quasi-legislative and quasi-judicial powers. Dr. Graves discerns two "indisputable" trends in modern government: "a definite shift from legislation to administration as the vital element in the process of governing," and a correspondingly more modest view of its own function taken by the Supreme Court.

6172. Hyneman, Charles S. Bureaucracy in a democracy. New York, Harper, 1950. xiv, 586 p. 50–6789 JK421.H8

"Bibliographic note" at end of chapters.

"The primary concern of this book is to consider what can be done to make our federal bureaucracy function as the faithful servant of the American people." The descriptions of the structural organization of the administrative branch of the national government, its activities, and the way it goes about them are kept to a minimum and are incidental to an analysis of how the bureaucracy is or may be given direction and may be kept answerable to the people. Four basic assumptions underlie the argument: that bureaucracy must be judged by its use of power, not by its size or cost; that all administrators should exercise their power within limits acceptable to the American people as a whole; that the great power of modern bureaucracy can be turned toward ends unacceptable to the people, and may be so turned unless proper direction and control are provided for our administrative establishments; and finally, that elective officials must be the primary reliance for directing and controlling the bureaucracy. There is democratic government, Professor Hyneman believes, only when vigorous competition for popular approval exists among men who desire to hold public office and to exercise the authority of government. These men must make public affairs their business, know their business, inform the public, and put programs into practical operation.

6173. Short, Lloyd Milton. The development of national administrative organization in the United States. Baltimore, Johns Hopkins Press, 1923. xviii, 514 p. ([Brookings Institution, Washington, D. C.] Institute for Government Research. Studies in administration [no. 10])
24–986 JK411.S5

Bibliography: p. 483–490.

This University of Illinois dissertation remains the only comprehensive view of the development of administrative agencies and functions in the Federal government from its beginnings in 1775 through the second decade of the 20th century. After introductory chapters on the function and the constitutional basis of administration, administrative beginnings under the Continental Congress, and the reorganization of government under the Constitution, Dr. Short deals with each department in turn. He records within each the emergence of important officials; the creation of boards, bureaus, offices, corps, or other subordinate organizations or institutions; the addition or loss of functions by statute or administrative order; and all important measures of reorganization. He breaks off in 1860 and supplies an "Outline of Administrative Organization" for that year; it fills just 2 pages, and may be compared with the 8-page outline of the situation at the date of publication. For the earlier period a single chapter is sufficient to deal with "The Post Office, the Attorney General's Office, and the Detached Services." With 1860 Dr. Short starts over and goes through the departments again, bringing them down to 1923. "The Departments of Commerce and Labor" could still share a chapter, but the "Permanent Detached Agencies" and the "Administrative War Agencies" of 1917 required separate ones. The volume is inevitably formal, external, and tolerable only in small dosages; but it remains an enormously useful digest of essential information.

6174. Van Riper, Paul P. History of the United States civil service. Evanston, Ill., Row, Peterson, 1958. 588 p. 58-5927 JK681.V3

Bibliographical notes at end of chapters.

"Presidents and Congresses may decree, but clerks carry out." This detailed history of the civil service of the executive branch of the Federal government reflects the author's sense of "power in a massive and continuous sense" arising out of "the cumulative impact of a vast quantity of earthy, day-by-day decisions and actions." The book was completed on the 75th anniversary of the Pendleton Act of 1883, which established the Civil Service Commission and began the process of introducing the merit system, implemented by competitive examination, relative security of tenure, and political neutrality, into the federal service. The earlier periods, of "gentlemanly" tenure and of a triumphant spoils system, are treated with relative brevity (p. 11–95). Convinced of the increasing importance of public administration in modern society, Dr. Van Riper devotes as much space to the 25 years since 1933 as to the 50 preceding it. He pays particular attention to the effects of the party overturns of 1932 and 1952, the crisis of World War II, and the sudden death of President Roosevelt upon the civil service in general and the merit system in particular. He does not neglect technicalities such as recruitment, position-classification, and pay schedules, but he achieves much of his aim of relating civil service history to its political, economic, and religious background, and makes plausible his conclusion that ours "has been a civil service more completely democratic than any yet devised," "based upon the idea of a classless society." Seventeen years earlier the U. S. Civil Service Commission had issued a History of the Federal Civil Service, 1789 to the Present (Washington, U. S. Govt. Print. Off., 1941. 162 p.) which is considerably briefer and more formal, but also emphasizes the fortunes of the merit system as the essence of the story.

6175. White, Leonard D. The Federalists. New York, Macmillan, 1948. 538 p. 48-7016 JK171.A1W4

6176. White, Leonard D. The Jeffersonians, 1801–1829. New York, Macmillan, 1951. xiv, 572 p. 51-12490 JK180.W5

6177. White, Leonard D. The Jacksonians, 1829–1861. New York, Macmillan, 1954. 593 p. 54-12436 JK201.W45

6178. White, Leonard D. The Republican era, 1869–1901. New York, Macmillan, 1958. 406 p. 58-6209 JK231.W5

The subtitle of each of these volumes, "A Study in Administrative History," is inadequately descriptive of their scope. Not only does this work collectively span more than a century, 1789–1901, in the history of the organization and practical operation of the United States Government, but also, by means of vignettes of the participants, and of apposite quotations from their public reports, office memoranda, and private letters, it re-creates their ideas, ideals, and their philosophy of management, and reflects the flow of contemporary events. In the first period, from 1789 to 1801, when precedents were being made, the Federalists dominated the political scene, and their views about administration generally prevailed, but the Jeffersonian Republicans, or Democrats, forced them to give ground at some important points. The late Professor White, although appreciative of Washington's moral caliber, offers highest praise to Hamilton's "superlative" administrative ability and to his creation, the Treasury Department. The author finds that the Jeffersonian era of administration (1801–29) was in fact a projection of the Federalist tradition of a strong Executive and of the gentleman in political life. During these years the system of administration did not have to accommodate itself to new tasks or unaccustomed duties, since the time was one of consolidation and growth rather than innovation. The four Democratic-Republican Chief Executives—Jefferson, Madison, Monroe, and John Quincy Adams—sought to maintain executive leadership, with widely varying degrees of success, but recognized the responsibility of the executive branch and administrative system to Congress. The Jacksonian era Professor White describes as a period full of constitutional debate, party strife, and sectional conflict, creating tensions which overshadowed normal operation of the government. In his opinion, the most important influences upon the administrative system during the years from Jackson to Lincoln were: the wide enfranchisement of adult male citizens, their organization into a national party system, the consequent surge of democratic sentiment, and increased participation of these ordinary citizens in office. The author not altogether convincingly defends Jackson's introduction of the principle of rotation in office, but admits that "the public service from 1829 to 1861 was engaged in a ceaseless struggle to protect its old standards against heavy odds and a tireless army of miners and sappers." The years 1869 to 1901, from Grant to McKinley, marked the culmination of Jacksonian theory and practice, although Federalist doctrine again made itself felt in a new partnership with democratic ideas. Professor White points to two major administrative problems of the age—the relation of Congress to the President and of both to the administrative system, and the reform of the civil service system. He notes the gradual restoration to the Presidency of the authority which had been virtually destroyed during Johnson's administration, but remarks, also, upon the remaining power of the Senate. Without an administrative staff, the President was barred from an active part in management and was oriented to Congress rather than to the executive departments. Only with enactment of the Pendleton Act in 1883 did there begin a steady improvement in the civil service and the partial formation of a government-wide administrative system. Although the Act, in Professor White's opinion, marked a fundamental turning point in the history of the Federal administration, it was no miracle worker, and brought about no transformation in the relations between Congress and the Executive.

6179. White, Leonard D. Introduction to the study of public administration. 4th ed. New York, Macmillan, 1955. 531 p.
55–1669 JK421.W45 1955

The author's last revision of a well-known and widely used textbook which, on its original publication in 1926, was practically alone in the field. It is a methodical analysis and critique of American public administration which stresses the larger issues of policy rather than details. Public administration is here defined as "all those operations having for their purpose the fulfillment or enforcement of public policy." The management of public business is assumed to be a single process, substantially uniform in its essential characteristics wherever observed, and there is no separate treatment of local, State, and Federal administration, although the relations between them are analyzed, and the majority of illustrations are taken from the Federal sphere. Among the subjects of the 34 chapters are "The Servicewide Management Agencies," "Headquarters-Field Relationships," "The Line Function," "Rise of Public Personnel Management," "Government Career Service," "Position Classification," and "Power and Responsibility." Professor White notes the preoccupation of Federal administration with international affairs, defense, and atomic energy, with the task of keeping the national economy on a fairly even keel, with the progressive development of decent standards of living for the whole people, and with fiscal policy. One foundation for future American democracy, he concludes, is a sound administrative system able to discharge its tasks with competence and integrity. In his opinion, "we have gained, but whether we have gained relatively to the work to be done is an open question."

6180. Willoughby, William F. Principles of public administration, with special reference to the national and state governments of the United States. Baltimore, Johns Hopkins Press, 1927. xxii, 720 p. ([Brookings Institution, Washington, D. C.] Institute for Government Research. Principles of administration [5]) 28–574 JK421.W48
Bibliography: p. 657–716.

This pioneer work is a systematic analysis of the organization and operation of the administrative branch, mainly of the national government and secondarily of the State governments, through which the popular will is put into execution. Directed to students of political science and officials having to do with general legislation, it starts from the premise "that, as regards our national government at least, the great political problem now confronting us is that of securing economy and efficiency in the actual administration of governmental affairs. This problem . . . has to do with the work of Congress as the board of directors of the government corporation as well as with the organization and procedure of the executive departments and other administrative services. It also requires an especially careful consideration of the duties of the President as head of the administration." The author advocated that the office of the Chief Executive be expanded and strengthened into that of a general manager, with the line of administrative authority running from the several operating services, through the departments to which they belong, to the Chief Executive and from the latter to the legislature. Under this principle of administrative organization, the administrative branch, both in organization and in practical operations, would be a single, integrated, and harmonious whole. This consideration of "General Administration and Organization" occupies part 1; the three remaining parts analyze the principles of personnel and financial administration in great detail, and the administration of matériel more briefly.

I. Administration: Special

6181. Cushman, Robert E. The independent regulatory commissions. New York, Oxford University Press, 1941. xiv, 780 p.
41–17004 JK901.C8

"Produced . . . under the auspices of the Institute of Public Administration [New York]."—Preface.

A comprehensive survey of the legislative history of the regulatory commission movement, beginning with the establishment of the Interstate Commerce Commission in 1887, forms the first group of chapters in this massive volume. A second records the more important facts about and analyzes the legal status of those commissions, boards, or authorities which, in 1941, lay entirely outside the 10 regular executive departments of the Federal government, were subject to no direct control by any Cabinet member or the President, and had for their major tasks the exercise of some form of restrictive or disciplinary control over private conduct or private property. A third division of the work deals with British agencies set up to do work analogous to that performed by the American commissions. Here Professor Cushman makes a pioneering effort to focus the methods and results of British experience upon the American regulatory problem. The four final chapters offer a critical examination of certain basic problems connected with the independent regulatory commissions. These questions grow out of the independence and divided responsibility of the commissions, the merger in them of powers—quasi-judicial, quasi-legislative, administrative, executive, and investigative—which many critics and students believe incompatible, their relation to the important task of policy planning in the regulatory field, and their structure and personnel.

6182. Douglas, Paul H. Economy in the national government. Chicago, University of Chicago Press, 1952. 277 p. illus. 52–1737 HJ257.D67

A pithy argument in favor of economies in the Federal expenditures, based on lectures which the Senator from Illinois delivered in 1951 on the Walgreen Foundation at the University of Chicago. Part 1 presents facts concerning the size, growth, and major areas of the Federal budget, points out the crying need for economy, and describes budgetary procedure and the appropriation process. Part 2 discusses waste and nonessential expenditures in both military and civilian programs, and suggests savings in personnel, the elimination of logrolling, the reduction of public works to essential projects, and economies in the financing of the armed services. Part 3, very brief and less adequate, deals with possible increases in revenues by closing tax loopholes, and the practical political problems of achieving a balanced budget. Appendixes consider the economics of compensatory budgets.

6183. Fish, Carl Russell. The civil service and the patronage. New York; Longmans, Green, 1905. 280 p. (Harvard historical studies, v. 11)
5–7370 JK731.F5

"List of authorities": p. 252–266.

The standard history of policy and practice in the United States government from 1789 to 1905 in regard to appointments to public office. The earliest plans before the Federal Convention, the author notes, proposed to transfer the appointing power from Congress to the Executive. Its solution—that the President appoint the highest officers "by and with the advice and consent of the Senate"—has withstood the test of time. From his own sense of the proper and practical, Washington established certain basic principles for the filling of offices, among them fitness for the post as a sine qua non, apportionment among the States, a previously successful career (especially for the judiciary), promotion from state to national office, and political orthodoxy. Minor appointments were left to members of the Cabinet. Fish assigned to Jefferson the introduction of the spoils system into the national service, since his administration was the first to make party service a reason for appointment and opposition a cause for removal. Jackson is credited with completing the spoils system by adding the principle of rotation in office and by disregarding fitness for the duties of it. "Not until 1829 did the genuine spoils system come into existence; and since that date it has flourished without break, though with some recent [1905] diminution."

6184. Gervasi, Frank H. Big government; the meaning and purpose of the Hoover Commission report. New York, Whittlesey House, 1949. 366 p. diagrs. 49–10899 JK643.C47A587

A journalist's review of the work of the Commission on Organization of the Executive Branch of the Government (1947–49), headed by ex-President Herbert Hoover. His purpose is "to scrutinize the report of the Hoover Commission, assess its merits and demerits, and to present in brief and compact form what American taxpayers paid $2,000,000 to find out." The recommendations of the Commission are found to be no mere dusting off of previous proposals, but rather "an exploration of the outermost boundaries of government functions in the light of their cost, their usefulness, their limitations, and their curtailment or elimination." The Presidency itself is discussed, as well as the "transaction of the public business in the departments, bureaus, agencies, boards, commissions, offices, independent establishments, and instrumentalities of the executive branch." Although Mr. Gervasi is not wholly uncritical of the aims and recommendations of the Commission, he approves in general of the reforms suggested because he believes they will "ensure better government at a price the people can afford." He is convinced that modernization of the executive branch of the United States government is imperative, both for the proper performance of its duties to its own people and for the discharge of its international responsibilities.

6185. Graves, William Brooke, comp. Reorganization of the executive branch of the Government of the United States; a compilation of basic information and significant documents, 1912–1948. Washington, 1949. xiv, 425 p. ([U. S.] Library of Congress. Legislative Reference Service. Public affairs bulletin no. 66)
49–45834 JK1108.A35, no. 66

"Originally prepared for the Commission on Organization of the Executive Branch of the Government, the Hon. Herbert Hoover, chairman."

A compilation of materials pertaining to executive reorganization in the Federal government prior to the work of the Hoover Commission. Of its five sections, the first is a chronological listing of all important legislative and executive actions taken; in it are included not only reprints of acts of Congress and executive orders, but also mention of bills introduced, hearings held, resolutions offered, reports issued, and the like. The second section shows that, in the majority of instances, important surveys of administrative organization have been authorized by the Congress rather than the Executive. Section 3, the core of the work, presents a documentary history of the significant efforts at reorganization initiated by authorized survey commissions from 1912 to 1948. Support of one or more plans for the reorganization of the administrative machinery, it appears, was given by Presidents Taft, Harding, Hoover, Franklin D. Roosevelt, and Truman. Section 4 reports proposals for reorganization of the executive departments emanating in whole or in part from private sources, and section 5 contains statements on the subject by Presidents.

6186. Kammerer, Gladys M. Impact of war on Federal personnel administration, 1939–1945. Lexington, University of Kentucky Press, 1951. 372 p. 51–10526 JK691.K3

A study of "the greatest test public administration has faced in this country." Changes of a fundamental character were wrought in personnel administration by the sudden expansion of the Federal service under the impact of total war. The principal changes considered are: the centralization of responsibility for recruitment in the Civil Service Commission; the adoption of an aggressive new approach to recruitment; a deterioration in standards of qualification for employment; fresh emphasis on loyalty in the absence of other standards; the development of training programs; increased mobility within the service; intensified pressures for higher pay; controls over the volume of Federal employment; the evolution of employee-relations programs; and the reorganization of the Civil Service Commission for improved personnel management. In the author's opinion, wartime personnel administration made several permanent contributions to the improvement of the Federal service. These included the preservation of merit system principles, success in recruitment for expanded government service, progress in the building of training programs, a realization of the importance of employee relations in the public service, and a new appreciation of personnel administration itself.

6187. Macmahon, Arthur W., and John D. Millett. Federal administrators; a biographical approach to the problem of departmental management. New York, Columbia University Press, 1939. xiv, 524 p. 39–14371 JK731.M23

This very unusual book on "the apex of the pyramid" of governmental personnel is in three parts. The first and most theoretical considers the requirements of management in the Federal departments, and how these requirements were met at the time of writing. Departmental leadership, it is argued, must be both administrative and political; the administrative requirement calls for "a focal personality who will direct the flow of command and integrate the work of a flexible group of supervisors"; the political requirement calls for advisory aides free from routine responsibility who will assist the Secretary in "the formulation of policy and its popularization." Part 2 is a "biographical" history of the under secretaries and assistant secretaries in the 10 departments since these offices were instituted (the earliest Assistant Secretary, in the Treasury Department, goes back to 1849, but there was an Assistant Postmaster General as early as 1789, and two more by 1836. The first Under Secretary, in the State Department, dates from 1909). The authors find that "haphazard political considerations have been the outstanding factors in the selection of Assistant Secretaries," too many of whom have been "idling cogs in the national machine." Part 3 deals with the chiefs of the relatively autonomous bureaus, but arranges the material according to the mode of tenure and recruitment of these offices. The chapters proceed from classified chiefships filled by promotion to the "Survivals of Political Recruitment," of which six clear cases were found as of 1938. "It is time," the authors conclude, "to bring all bureau chiefs within the merit system."

6188. Mosher, William E., J. Donald Kingsley, and O. Glenn Stahl. Public personnel administration. 3d ed. New York, Harper, 1950. 652 p. 50–12401 JK765.M6 1950

First published in 1936.

Bibliography: p. 611–632.

The emphasis of this book is upon the development of policy and the techniques of administration which contribute to the selection, retention, and productivity of the best available talent for the public service. It takes less account of the need for basic reform or elimination of the spoils system, although it is recognized that much remains to be accomplished in these matters, particularly at the state and local levels. More space is devoted to the problems of selection and the development of personnel within a public jurisdiction, and the human relations connected with modern management, than is given to the details of recruitment and examination, or to the central personnel agency. Good morale, the authors conclude, is the most valuable asset of any large-scale organization: "its consequences are measured in terms of personal satisfactions in the constant development of new ideas leading to improvements in methods, and, finally, in more and better output." To build up morale, leadership is required as well as sound placement procedures, fair wage policies, assurance of income in periods of illness and old age, good working conditions, opportunities for participation and growth, recognition of work well done, justice, and fairness. The authors propose a number of remedies for what they consider the inadequacy of the typical civil service commission.

6189. Reynolds, Mary (Trackett). Interdepartmental committees in the national administration. New York, Columbia University Press, 1939. 177 p. (Columbia University. Faculty of Political Science. Studies in history, economics and public law, no. 450)

39–15177 JK421.R48 1939a

Bibliography: p. 165–169.

A study of administrative relationships exhibited in the interdepartmental committees which functioned actively between 1933 and 1937. A number of them were appointed before Franklin D. Roosevelt took office as President; some of them had been abolished by the time of writing. Mrs. Reynolds holds that interdepartmental relationships are a necessary, proper, and permanent part of administration in the Federal government, that the systematic and intelligent conduct of them is a major problem of administration, and that among the useful techniques for the conduct of interdepartmental affairs is the interdepartmental committee. She distinguishes three types: the exploratory or research committee, the functional coordinating committee, and the institutional coordinating committee. These have been effective, she believes, in five kinds of administrative action: the exploration, drafting, and integration of legislative proposals; research and general investigation; facilitation of administrative programs for which single agencies are responsible but which have certain interdepartmental aspects; the conduct of administrative programs by the committees themselves; and, finally, exchange and clearing of information concerning common problems.

6190. Smith, Darrell Hevenor. The United States Civil Service Commission; its history, activities and organization. Baltimore, Johns Hopkins Press, 1928. 153 p. ([Brookings Institution, Washington, D. C.] Institute for Government Research. Service monographs of the United States government, no. 49) 28–18298 JK681.S6

Bibliography: p. 140–149.

A monograph designed for the use of legislators and public administrators, which details the history and development of the United States Civil Service Commission from the passage of the Pendleton Act—"an act to regulate and improve the civil service of the United States"—which established it in 1883 through the Retirement Act of 1920 and the Classification Act of 1923. The following functions of the Commission are described: recruiting, examination, certification, recording, and "post-appointment activities." Also treated in detail are the organization and staff which, as of 1927, handled these matters. The Commission proper consisted of three Commissioners, appointed by the President and responsible directly and solely to him; not more than two of them might be adherents of the same political party. They were assisted by administrative, technical, and field services which are here particularized down to the last clerk and laborer. Appendixes give the laws and regulations governing operations of the Commission, appropriations, receipts, expenditures, and other data.

6191. Smith, Harold D. The management of your government. New York, Whittlesey House, McGraw-Hill, 1945. 179 p. 45–10439 JK411.S6

A series of 13 papers concerning management of the public business, and especially fiscal planning and policy, prepared for various audiences. The author, Director of the Bureau of the Budget from 1939 to 1946, aimed at a clearer understanding by the public of the process of management. He argued that all management, however complex, begins with planning. Although a distinction exists between the planning of basic goals through the legislative process and the planning by administrators to reach those goals, the two types are neither separate nor segregated. The interchange of information between Congress and the Executive must be continuous so that each may keep in mind its relationship to the other. This relationship between the legislative branch, with its determination of broad policy programs, and the administration, with its duty of executive management, "largely determines the success or failure of democratic government." The hopes, fears, and aspirations of the people find expression in the enactments of the legislature, which are, in turn, modified by the findings, experience, and ideas of the administration. The budget, as the most important instrument of legislative control and of administrative management, is at the core of democratic government.

6192. Spero, Sterling D. Government as employer. New York, Remsen Press, 1948. 497 p. 48–10699 HD8008.S65

A study of employment relations in the public service at the Federal, state and municipal levels. Dr. Spero takes exception to the theory of government as "sovereign employer" against which strikes or other militant actions are attacks tantamount to treason. He maintains that "it is a primary obligation of those in authority in a free society to guard the rights of citizens including the freedom of association of those citizens employed by the government. Limitation of this freedom is justifiable only when it interferes with the right of government to make and administer public policy." He analyzes the antistrike and other legislation which restricts civil servants in their capacity as workers, and the laws and regulations which affect their capacity as citizens. He describes the rise of the trade union movement as it has affected employee organizations, and the labor policies of the Federal, state, and municipal governments. "Despite the valiant work of the civil service reform movement," the author concludes, "the merit concept is not yet accepted either by the politicians or the general public."

6193. Torpey, William G. Public personnel management. New York, Van Nostrand, 1953. 431 p. illus. (Van Nostrand political science series) 53–5462 JK765.T6

An analysis of each aspect of personnel management: organization, functions, objectives, processes, procedures, and the problems of administration. In seeking solutions to such problems, the author attempts to combine the practical approach of the practitioner with the academic approach of the educator. He deals with the executive branches of all levels of American government, Federal, state, and local. Upon the effective administration of personnel, he believes, depends the success or failure of every undertaking of management. "Administrative goals, policies, and plans fail of accomplishment when inadequate consideration is afforded the human aspects of organization." Although public personnel management is but one part of public administration, its importance becomes a matter of growing concern to the responsible chief executive of a jurisdiction and to his department heads as the scope and complexity of government functions increase. Mr. Torpey discusses in great detail the tools of personnel management, among them position-classification plans, pay plans, rules for recruitment and examination, training programs, rules for promotions, transfers and separations, grievance procedures, and retirement programs.

6194. Wooddy, Carroll H. The growth of the Federal government, 1915–1932. New York, McGraw-Hill, 1934. 577 p. (Recent social trends monographs) 34–7178 JK421.W6

A supplement to Recent Social Trends in the United States, a report issued by the President's Research Committee on Social Trends named by President Hoover in 1929. The aim was, in part, to make available the materials upon which that report based its conclusions about trends in the functions and expenditures of the Federal government. Restricted in scope to the civil functions of the government, the present study analyzed in some detail the development of each Federal agency during the years 1915–32, furnishing a brief sketch of the origin and history of the agency; lists of the activities of 1915 and of those subsequently added; tables of expenditures for each year or selected years of the period; an analysis of the causes and extent of growth, supported by such tables as could be supplied; and such evidence as was available in 1934 concerning probable changes which might affect the future development of each agency. Although this volume was concerned primarily with civil activities in the period ending with fiscal 1932, the discussion was expanded to include the sweeping changes made and proposed up to January 1934 because of President Roosevelt's emergency program of 1933.

J. State Government

6195. Allen, Robert S., ed. Our sovereign state. New York, Vanguard Press, 1949. xxxviii, 23–413 p. 49–11566 JK2413.A4

CONTENTS.—Introduction: the shame of the states, by R. S. Allen.—Massachusetts: prisoner of the past, by W. V. Shannon.—New York: backslider, by R. G. Spivack.—Pennsylvania: bossed cornucopia, by H. A. Lowe.—Georgia: paradise of oligarchy, by T. Collier.—Ohio: oxcart government, by R. L. Maher.—Illinois: the "new look," by D. E. Chamberlain.—Wisconsin: a state that glories in its past, by W. T. Evjue.—Louisiana: beak too big for its belly, by R. S. O'Leary.—Nebraska: Norris: in victory and defeat, by J. E. Lawrence.—Texas: owned by oil and interlocking directorates, by H. Stilwell.—Utah: contrary state, by E. Linford.—California: the first hundred years, by R. V. Hyer.

A vigorous indictment, in the muckraking tradition, of American State government, with 12 States singled out for individual treatment by the contributors, most of whom are journalists. In his introduction, Mr. Allen accuses State government of "all the worst evils of misrule in the country. Venality, open domination and manipulation by vested interests, unspeakable callousness in the care of the sick, aged, and unfortunate, criminal negligence in law enforcement, crass deprivation of primary constitutional rights, obfuscation, obsolescence, obstructionism, incompetence, and even outright dictatorship are widespread characteristics." These ills are rooted in the State constitutions, which discriminate against the cities and are full of inequalities profitable for the great business, utility, and press interests. The antilabor, antispending, antiliberal rural-dominated legislatures the editor calls "the most sordid, obstructive, and anti-democratic, law-making agencies in the country." He attributes the situation, which is everywhere much the same, to absurdly low pay and to crippling limitations upon the length of sessions, which render the legislators susceptible to pressure and manipulation. There is no index.

6196. Anderson, William, and Edward W. Weidner. State and local government in the United States. New York, Holt, 1951. xx, 744 p. illus.

"For further reading" at end of chapters.

51–11513 JK2408.A7

A college textbook on State and local government. Where the two are interrelated, as in constitutional status, politics and election activities, personnel and financial problems, and numerous public services, State and local aspects of the subject are discussed together. The State, rural, and urban governmental structures are, however, considered separately so as to enable the student to grasp the organization of each. It is emphasized that the division of public functions under the Constitution of the United States is between the Federal government and the States. Local governments exist within a State in a legal sense because the State created them and empowered them to perform its functions in the several localities. Although the courts concede to cities, villages, and boroughs certain "proprietary," "local," or "municipal" functions, even these exist only because the State has authorized them. All courts authorized by the State are considered State courts, though they may be called "county" or "municipal" courts. Close interdependence, even integration, between State and locality has become discernible in almost all fields, among them education, health and social welfare, highways, agricultural and labor laws, law enforcement, and, particularly, finance.

6197. The Book of the states. v. 12; 1958–1959. Chicago, Council of State Governments, 1958. 538 p. 35–11433 JK2403.B6, v. 12

A biennial publication of the Council of State Governments containing current material in text and tables concerning the organization, finance, and major services of the State governments. Their executive, legislative, and judicial branches are dealt with, as are interstate relations, of which the Council is only one instance. A concluding section, "The State Pages," devotes a page of names, facts, and figures to each State and territory. Emphasis is given to developments of the two years preceding publication of each volume, which is issued at the beginning of even-numbered years. This permits presentation of important data about the legislative sessions of the immediately preceding odd-numbered year, during which most of the legislatures hold their regular sessions. The 1958–59 edition of this authoritative work and its supplements differ somewhat in content and timing from their predecessors. The set has heretofore consisted of two volumes in a biennium—a major reference book and one supplement; it will include three volumes for 1958–59—the present major book and two supplements. The first of these, to be published at the beginning of 1959, will list elective administrative officials and legislators of all the States. Replacing rosters previously included in the major work, a new supplement will appear in mid-1959, providing comprehensive lists of State administrative officials, whether appointed or elected.

6198. Carey, Jane (Clark). The rise of a new federalism; federal-state cooperation in the United States, by Jane Perry Clark. New York, Columbia University Press, 1938. xviii, 347 p.
38–27585 JK325.C34

"Selected bibliography": p. [321]–340.

"This volume is intended to favor neither 'federal centralization' nor 'states' rights'; it aims, rather, to indicate and describe some of the ways in which the federal and state governments have cooperated and how effective their joint activity has been," particularly in dealing with certain economic and social problems through legislation and administration. Cooperation between the judicial branches of the Federal and State governments is not considered. Although such cooperative efforts as grants-in-aid, tax credits, joint control of commerce, and joint activity of Federal and state administrative agencies have survived judicial review, the author considers them unwieldly and relatively ineffectual, an inevitable result of the haphazard and unplanned ways by which they have grown. The fact that the States use Federal machinery to carry out State laws is not without its great importance, she believes, but it is the use by the Federal government of State organizations and personnel to carry out Federal laws—the combination of Federal control and decentralized State administration—that "appears destined to play an increasingly important part in the development of the American federal system."

6199. Council of State Governments. Federal-state relations. Report of the Commission on Organization of the Executive Branch of the Government pursuant to Public law 162, 80th Congress. Washington, U. S. Govt. Print. Off., 1949. 297 p. (81st Cong., 1st sess, 1949. Senate. Document no. 81) 49–46374 JK325.C63

This history and analysis of Federal-State relations distinguishes two basic planes upon which the national government and the State governments have lived together from the beginning to the present—commitment to a common existence in the face of common cares, and the practical division of powers between the units concerned in the Federal system. Four phases of development are distinguished: the period before adoption of the Constitution when most of the major problems were posed but few answers were found; the Federalist period, 1787–1800, when the meaning of the Constitutional provisions was first explored, and a large measure of cooperation between the national government and the States was developed; the third period, 1800–1913, one of crosscurrents dominated at first by the great national-regional conflict which culminated in the Civil War and later by the unification of the country, when conflicting trends pushed at once toward separation of the national government from the States and toward their close collaboration; and, finally, the period 1913–48, when forces long conducive to the solidarity of national and State policy came to the fore. The report calls for cooperation and teamwork between Federal and State governments, with understanding and support from the people. State responsibilities as well as rights must be accepted and exercised; overcentralization of control and power in the national government must be avoided.

6200. Council of State Governments. Committee on State-Local Relations. State-local relations; report. [Chicago] 1946. 228 p.
47–3168 JK2445.C62 1946

A description of State-local relations as they existed in 1946, together with the Committee's conclusions in regard to them. The Committee offers no panacea for this complex problem. "Rather, it has set forth a series of propositions designed to stimulate thinking and study about state-local problems, to encourage the cooperation of state and local officials in the solution of their common difficulties, and to indicate possible solutions to some of the most pressing problems." Two principal objectives are suggested for any program in the field: the strengthening of local units of government so that they may meet their day-to-day administrative tasks promptly and efficiently and attain meaningful local democracy; and the improvement of State supervision of local affairs so that activities of State-wide concern will be carried out at a uniformly high level of performance. These objectives may best be achieved, it is asserted, if States, which bear the primary responsibility for a well-ordered system of State-local relations, will grant larger power to local units, subject those powers to flexible administrative supervision rather than to detailed legislation, aid localities in securing stable and adequate revenues, and promote the enlargement and consolidation of local governments.

6201. Fesler, James W. The independence of state regulatory agencies. Chicago, Public Administration Service, 1942. 72 p. ([Public Administration Service, Chicago] Publication no. 85)
42–51444 JK2445.F4

A study of the independence of State agencies engaged in the regulation of utilities, labor conditions, the sale of alcoholic beverages, banking and insurance, and the practice of the professions. Institutions of 12 States divided among the principal regions were selected for investigation as being representative of all such agencies. These agencies are found to have certain features in common: they all operate in areas of special interests and pressure groups; and the regulatory processes with which they are concerned combine legislative, judicial, and administrative elements. Mr. Fesler attempts to discover how, under the circumstances, the public interest may best be served. He finds objectionable features in complete independence of the agencies, and in integration of them under the governor, or under the legislature. He believes that because of the susceptibility of these agencies to pressure groups, and the varying degrees to which the interests of such groups coincide with the public interest, each type of regulatory agency deserves distinctive treatment in the establishment of its intergovernmental relationships, and its own degree of independence. All such agencies, in his opinion, should answer to both governor and legislature.

6202. Graves, William Brooke. American state government. [4th ed.] Boston, Heath, 1953. 946 p. 53-11136 JK2408.G7 1953

First published in 1936.

"Selected references" at end of chapters.

A textbook which reports and analyzes "significant developments in the forward movement of the states in the period since World War II." Dr. Graves emphasizes the importance of State government in the American tradition. Various factors contribute to the growing importance of the States, he believes, among them such general ones as expanding services, increased costs, and the close relationship between the State and the individual. He finds other factors peculiar to the States—the training they provide for future Federal officials; their function as laboratories for experimentation with political machinery, social policies, and administrative techniques; their position as the key units in the American system of government to which the Federal government on the one hand and local units on the other "owe their origins, powers, and continued existence." Recent and unprecedented demands made upon the States for housing, education, highways, the construction and modernization of mental and other institutions, and unemployment insurance, among other fields, suggest a new era of the service or welfare state. Such a tremendous growth of services imposes heavy administrative problems upon the States. Overlapping and duplication of effort must be eliminated through a rational division of functions.

6203. Lipson, Leslie. The American governor from figurehead to leader. Chicago, University of Chicago Press, 1939. xxi, 282 p. (Studies in public administration, v. 9)

39-27456 JK2447.L5 1939

Bibliography: p. 269-275.

This University of Chicago dissertation analyzes the proper relationship between the legislative and executive branches of State governments, and especially the problem of enhancing executive authority while safeguarding popular participation and control through the legislature. Leadership is regarded as not merely compatible with democracy but essential to its successful functioning, and the leadership of the governor in the executive and legislative branches forms the chief interest of this book. Four States have been selected for special emphasis: New York, because its government is on a larger scale than any other; Massachusetts, because it represents the political habits and traditions of New England and was called upon to rectify defects of organization at an earlier date than most others; Virginia, because it represents the South, where the normal dominance of one party simplifies some of the administratice problems; and Illinois, in the Middle West, because it exemplifies the difficulty of establishing honest administration in a milieu of spoils-system politics. Starting as "a mere creature of the legislature," the author observes, the governor won real power during the first decade of the 20th century, and became a leader by supplanting the party boss. The short ballot, the executive budget, and administrative consolidation were generally achieved in the following decade.

6204. Porter, Kirk H. State administration. New York, Crofts, 1938. 450 p.

38-3289 JK2443.P6

Bibliography: p. 434-440.

An outline of the numerous activities regularly engaged in by each of the 48 States as of 1938, together with proposals for organizing agencies suitable for the proper administration of these activities. Professor Porter furnishes an outline of the administrative agencies—offices, departments, boards, commissions, and bureaus—which he considers appropriate, with some modifications, for any one of the States. He discusses the work to be done, suggests methods of organizing administrative units, and offers various recommendations, but warns that seldom is there one correct solution to any problem of the kind. He presents a synopsis of the typical State administrative structure, with the governor at the top. In descending order will be the principal administrative officers, popularly elected and provided for in the State constitution; heads of departments, popularly elected but provided for by statute; administrative officers appointed by the governor; and finally, plural agencies of every type. Professor

Porter advocates "sound principles of integration," and the concentration of power and responsibility in the chief executive. "One of the principal theses of this book," he writes, "has been that the governor should have full and direct power over a few important staff agencies through which he would be able to exercise all the authority and influence that he ought to have."

6205. Wilcox, Jerome K., ed. Manual on the use of state publications. Sponsored by the Committee on Public Documents of the American Library Association. Chicago, American Library Association, 1940. 342 p.
40–27368 Z1223.5.A1W66

Each chapter of this comprehensive guide to state publications has been contributed by a specialist. The preface outlines the work: "Part I, Importance, Character and Use, presents in five chapters critical analyses of present state reporting and uses made by various groups of state publications. Part II, Bibliographical Aids, brings together in four chapters state government organizations and bibliographies of individual state lists of publications and of all important articles concerning state publications. Part III, Basic State Publications, in nine chapters treats each important group of state documents bibliographically and critically. The final chapter in Part III, compiled by Mrs. [Carolyn L.] Hale, is an attempt to bring together all important recent information on state functions, by functions, each in three categories as far as possible: (1) list of directories; (2) digests of laws and studies of the state functions; and (3) bibliographies of publications. Part IV is a directory of national associations of state officers with indications of their chief publications. Part V is a digest of information on state printing plants and state printing laws and a digest of the laws in each state concerning the exchange and distribution of state publications." There is a subject index.

6206. Zimmermann, Frederick L., and Mitchell Wendell. The interstate compact since 1925. Chicago, Council of State Governments, 1951. 132 p.
51–62583 Law

Designed for the use of officials, lawyers, and students of government, this is a study of the background, scope, nature, and some potential uses of the compact as an instrument of interstate and national state coordination. The compact clause, the authors note, is the only provision of the Constitution that furnishes a means of positive cooperation among the states of the Union. Enforceable by the Supreme Court and by Congress, the compact is a flexible legal instrument which affords a mechanism for administration and for regulation upon a multistate as well as a regional basis. Until the 1920's the need for interstate cooperation was "rudimentary," and the compact was used mainly in settling disputed boundary lines, but in recent times, and especially since World War II, it has been increasingly utilized to deal with such matters as the interstate control of crime, cooperative protection of oil and gas resources, water allocation, pollution control, fisheries, forest protection, education, and metropolitan area development. The authors classify compacts as boundary-jurisdictional, boundary-administrative, regional-administrative, administrative-exploratory-recommendatory, and administrative-regulatory. In the order mentioned, these roughly chart chronological progress in the use of the device. The compact has further potentiality, in the authors' opinion, "as a means of securing both vertical and horizontal coordination in our federal system—of uniting the powers of the national government with those of a group of states through a single legal mechanism."

K. Local Government

6207. Allen, Robert S., ed. Our fair city. New York, Vanguard Press, 1947. 387 p.
47–30142 JS 323.A6

CONTENTS.—Boston: study in inertia, by L. M. Lyons.—New York: "greatest city in the world," by Paul Crowell and A. H. Raskin.—Philadelphia: where patience is a vice, by T. P. O'Neil.—Miami: heaven or honky-tonk? By Henning Heldt.—Birmingham: steel giant with a glass jaw, by Irving Beiman.—Cleveland: study in political paradoxes, by R. L. Maher.—Detroit: city of conflict, by Leo Donovan.—Chicago: unfinished anomaly, by W. H. Pierce.—Milwaukee: Old Lady Thrift, by R. S. Davis.—Memphis: satrapy of a benevolent despot, by G. M. Capers.—St. Louis: boundary-bound, by C. F. Hurd.—Kansas City: gateway to what? By W. G. Clugston—Denver: civic schizophrenic, by Roscoe Fleming.—Butte: city with a "kick" in it, by J. K. Howard.—Seattle: slave and master, by R. L. Neuberger.—San Francisco: the bedlam dozes, by Charles Raudebaugh.—Los Angeles: rainbow's end, by Maury Maverick and R. E. G. Harris.

677676 O–63–64

All but two of these reports on the governments of 17 cities are by veteran newspapermen writing on their home towns. As Mr. Allen observes in his introduction, each American community has a personality, derived from its origin, locale, and history, yet all are plagued by certain universal municipal maladies. These chapters tell "the same old story of boodling bosses and businessmen, of horrendous slums, of dirt and filth, disease and vice, of gross and shameless waste, of mismanagement and misrule, of crass disregard of public health and human dignity." "There is not a city in the country, large or small," the editor asserts, "where business is not the primary stultifying, corrupting, and antidemocratic influence." But, he adds, "there is not a city whose sins of omission and commission are not due directly to the apathy, irresponsibility, and cowardice of its citizens." Among the evils noted by his contributors are parasitic suburbs and satellite communities, the dominance of outside capital, crippling State interference in municipal affairs, conflicting urban authorities, the indifference of the press, and, most important, the lack of a deep-rooted tradition of honest, intelligent, and competent municipal management. These are very much the same evils discovered 40 years earlier by Lincoln Steffens, and set forth in his famous muckraking work, The Shame of the Cities (New York, McClure, Phillips, 1904. 306 p.). His purpose was to "burn through our civic shamelessness and set fire to American pride."

6208. Chicago. Home Rule Commission. Modernizing a city government; report. [Chicago] University of Chicago Press, 1954. xiv, 422 p.
54-13391 JS708.A53

The Commission deals with problems relating to the improvement and modernization of the structure of the city's government and to added home-rule powers. Introductory in character, part 1 describes the organization and procedures of the Commission, presents its view of its assignment and responsibility, indicates the economic factors underlying the vast growth of Chicago, and explains the structure of city government that obtained in 1954. Part 2 is concerned with modernization, particularly of the city council, which the Commission would reduce in size; of the budget, which it would alter to the executive, performance type; and of the mayor's office, to which it would attach an administrative officer and a small professional staff. Part 3 analyzes home rule and offers recommendations to increase it. The Commission examines the adequacy of Chicago's powers of local government in four major areas: the structure and form of government; services; police powers; and revenue powers. Finding Chicago's powers of local government inadequate in the first of these areas, the Commission proposes that the state legislature authorize changes. It concludes that, with legislative grants readily securable in the other areas, Chicago enjoys substantially as much power as do the constitutional home-rule cities.

6209. Gill, Norman N. Municipal research bureaus, a study of the nation's leading citizen-supported agencies. Washington, American Council on Public Affairs, 1944. 178 p.
44-6805 JS302.G5

A history and analysis of the municipal research movement, which deals with 20 citizen-supported research bureaus. The programs of nearly all of these quasi-public but inadequately supported municipal organizations have stressed efficiency first and economy second in local government. Advocating improved methods of levying and collecting taxes, budget and accounting procedure, independent audits and centralized purchasing, and the recruiting and training of municipal personnel, these bureaus have also sought to formulate long-range policy and better service in such matters as public health, police and fire protection, education, traffic control, transportation, street lighting and cleaning, and refuse collection, as well as to promote efficiency and standardization in the construction of streets, sewers, and school and other public buildings. The author notes the social welfare aspects of the bureaus' work for relief, housing, higher standards of living, and constructive planning. He suggests several further areas of study by the bureaus, among them intergovernmental, social, and economic problems. And finally he urges broad representation of the citizenry, especially of young civic leaders, upon bureau boards; progressive policies; more use of modern methods of public relations; and greater professionalization of bureau staffs.

6210. Hodges, Henry G. City management; theory and practice of municipal administration. New York, Crofts, 1939. xx, 759 p. illus.
39-18457 JS331.H6

A textbook on municipal government, amply provided with organization charts, which presents the practice as well as the theory of city management. It pleads for a professional personnel trained in public administration, to whom public service is a career; the effective direction of workers; and skillful financial planning. Centralized control of properly grouped functions is viewed as the directing principle, and integrated responsibility the chief weapon of democratic control in city management. The greatest strides in city management have been made, the author believes, through the gradual acceptance of the city-manager plan of government.

It remains essential that the citizen understand the government of his city, its functions and services, since democracy will be preserved only to the extent that the lag between public opinion and technical administrative advances is shortened. Political education of the masses must bring about the public's willingness to employ scientific administrative techniques and make impossible government by a "contractor-controlled political party." The author outlines six generally accepted standards for the efficient conduct of urban government.

6211. Jones, Victor. Metropolitan government. Chicago, University of Chicago Press, 1942. xxiv, 364 p. (Chicago. University. Studies in social science, no. 39 [i.e. 40])
42–12520 JS331.J6 1942a

"List of bibliographies": p. 343–344.

A general examination of some of the problems of integrating local government in the larger metropolitan areas of the United States. Dr. Jones regards the government of metropolitan areas as part of the larger question of the economic, social, and political organization of the nation, which calls for the periodic realignment of boundaries and the reallocation of functions among all levels of government. He considers the present government of metropolitan communities ineffective in the face of existing and emerging problems of urban life. This ineffectiveness he attributes to the formulation and administration of policies for these areas by "scores or hundreds of contiguous but independent, undernourished, and jealous units of local governments." Popular control and coordination of policy and budgeting are difficult if not impossible, the author argues, when power and responsibility are chopped up and the segments distributed among a large number of boards, commissions, or authorities within the same area. Politics are the primary obstacle in the way of organized efforts to integrate the multitude of units that govern metropolitan areas in the United States. Although statutes or charters can readily be drafted and given effect by technicians, legislative or electoral approval must first be secured. This situation, in Dr. Jones' opinion, calls for an active program of propaganda.

6212. Lancaster, Lane W. Government in rural America. 2d ed. New York, Van Nostrand, 1952. 375 p. illus. (Van Nostrand political science series) 52–9252 JS425.L3 1952

A textbook, originally published in 1937, about the operation of government in the towns, townships, counties, and school districts of American rural areas. It points out that the differences between political organizations in such units and those in populous areas are principally in scale rather than in the types of problems met; in their actions, most of the same processes are involved, although legal and constitutional differences do exist. "Government everywhere involves the translation of public wishes into rules binding upon citizens, the purchase and use of materials, the employment and management of personnel, and the enforcement of rules of action and conduct upon all within the jurisdiction of the authorities." The fundamental problem of local government in the 20th century, as Professor Lancaster views it, is the inadequacy for their work of its traditional units, which were laid out when economic and social conditions were very different. With respect to area, population, taxable resources, and internal organization, they are far removed from the economic realities of today. The author calls for the consolidation of areas, internal reorganization, and a reallocation of functions.

6213. The Municipal year book. [25th year]; 1958. Chicago, International City Managers' Association. 598 p.
34–27121 JS344.C5A24, 25th

The chief purpose of this yearbook, which has appeared since 1934, "is to provide municipal officials with information on the current problems of cities throughout the country, with facts and statistics on individual city activities, and with analyses of trends by population groups." Many of its sections are brought up to date and repeated year after year; these include forms of city government, methods of selecting the mayor and council, utilities owned and operated, salaries of chief municipal officers, personnel organization, city financial data, fire and police departments, municipal parking lots, directories of city managers and other officials, and model municipal ordinances. Some new material is included in each annual, beginning with an introductory article on the "municipal highlights" of the year. Other new sections in the 1958 volume are "City Planning Data" ($6 billion to be spent in the next five years), "Municipal Debt for Cities over 10,000 [bond issues of 1957 by 550 cities]," "Housing Demolition Data," "Municipal Cemeteries," "Municipal Airport Data," and "Regulation of Curb Loading Zones." Sources of information are listed at the end of most sections and, for the obstinately bewildered, there are five pages on "How to Use the Year Book."

6214. Rankin, Rebecca B. Guide to the municipal government of the city of New York. 7th ed. New York, Record Press, 1952. 209 p.
52–1927 JS1228.R3 1952

First published in 1936.

A guide to the more than 100 separate units of administration of the government of New York City as they were operating on January 1, 1952. The purpose of the manual is to describe simply and concisely the governmental organization and administration of the city, the functions of its many boards, departments, bureaus, divisions, commissions, courts, and committees, and their relationships to one another under the revised charter of 1938. Arrangement is in sections classified by the main functions of the departments, so that allied units may be treated together. A short index is designed to bring out other and less known functions of the city agencies. As Miss Rankin observes, New York operates under the "Strong Mayor-Council form" of government, which places most responsibility upon the mayor who appoints his department heads, prepares the budget, and sees that the government is properly administered. The consent of the council, elected by districts, is necessary to validate most actions of the mayor; it also shares in the making of policy. Many administrative departments are empowered by the charter and administrative code to make regulations in order to carry out their departmental functions. Printed once a year, these regulations have the force of law.

6215. Schmeckebier, Laurence F. The District of Columbia, its government and administration. Baltimore, Johns Hopkins Press, 1928. xx, 943 p. maps. ([Brookings Institution, Washington, D. C.] Institute for Government Research. Studies in administration)
28–14676 JK2725 1928.S4

Bibliography: p. 863–923.

A survey of the unique government of the District of Columbia, which suffers complete denial of direct representation, performs the functions of both a State, or territorial, and a municipal organization, and is treated in many respects by Congress as a minor subdivision of the Federal government. Although Mr. Schmeckebier admitted that "the interests of the United States and the residents of the District frequently clash," he refrained from criticism of the defects in organization, operation, and municipal and civil law resulting from the unfortunate conditions under which the District government operated in the 1920's, and of Congress' inability or unwillingness to work out a consistent policy in its treatment of the District. His purpose was rather to describe all of the governmental activities of the District essentially local in character, and to indicate the agencies which were responsible for performance of the work. He set forth in elaborate detail the functions, and, in most instances, the organization, finances, and personnel of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, the several boards, commissions, or units dealing with District affairs only, the Federal agencies which held plenary power in their fields, the Federal agencies which had merely contractual relations with the District government, and the judiciary, as of about June 30, 1926. A more up-to-date but less detailed view is the Government of the District of Columbia; Manual of Organization ([Washington] Management Office, Dept. of General Administration [1954] 1 v. (various pagings)). It contains brief descriptions of the Board of Commissioners, the Office of the Secretary, and the Citizens' Advisory Council, as well as of 22 agencies subject to the full control of the Commissioners, and of 10 special advisory groups.

6216. Stone, Harold A., Don K. Price, and Kathryn H. Stone. City manager government in the United States; a review after twenty-five years. Chicago, Published for the Committee on Public Administration of the Social Science Research Council by Public Administration Service, 1940. xv, 279 p. (Social Science Research Council. Committee on Public Administration. Studies in administration, v. 7) 40–10323 JS344.C5S76

A summary of the principal results of the city-manager plan of government in 48 cities that were operating under it in 1938, and in two cities that had abandoned it. Although these constituted only about one-tenth of all cities having city-manager government, they included nearly half of the manager cities with a population of 50,000 or more and a third of those with more than 25,000 inhabitants. Every section of the United States was represented, as was every State important to the city-manager movement. The selected cities had every kind of municipal history and background. The city-manager plan is here considered to involve two fundamental principles: unification of powers in a city council and concentration of administrative authority in a city manager appointed by and responsible to the council. In order to appraise the results of this new form of government, which was first introduced in 1908, the authors compared politics and administration, and especially administrative methods, as practiced in each of the selected cities before and after adoption of the plan. They report general governmental improvements and abundant evidence that "graft and waste were reduced, that municipal personnel and methods were made more efficient, and that, therefore, unit costs necessarily were reduced."

6217. Wager, Paul W., ed. County government across the Nation. Chapel Hill, University of North Carolina Press, 1950. 817 p. illus.

Bibliography: p. [809]–816. 50–10780 JS411.W3

A volume of case studies of sample counties, one in each of the 48 States. In the selection of counties for analysis, extremes such as metropolitan counties and sparsely settled desert counties have been excluded. The studies, 10 of which were written by the editor and most of the others by his colleagues or former students, are presented in four regional groupings—New England, Eastern and North-Central, Southern, and Western States—each preceded by an introduction. These papers describe the structure of the county government, its functions, and the relationships between local and State officials, and tabulate the county revenues and expenditures. Each New England study consists principally of an analysis of a town in the sample county. A general introduction by the editor sets forth some facts, trends, and analyses concerning the primarily administrative, fiscal, and supervisory powers of the county. Professor Wager finds that the creation of collateral boards for the supervision of roads, welfare, elections, libraries, hospitals, and other matters is sapping the powers of the central governing body of the county. He recommends that the counties receive more legislative power, a substantial grant of police power, the grant of zoning authority, and the provision for each of a county executive or chief administrator.

6218. Zink, Harold. Government of cities in the United States. Rev. ed. New York, Macmillan, 1948. 637 p. 49–7040 JS331.Z5 1948

"Selected bibliography" at end of chapters.

This textbook, originally published in 1939, emphasizes a number of factors in American municipal government which came to the fore during the 1930's, among them the enlarged role of the Federal government in city affairs, the problem of large-scale public relief, a notable expansion of supervised recreation, changed goals in city planning, improvement in public personnel practices, progress in police administration, and increased concern for public housing. On the negative side are stressed the difficulties of obtaining adequate municipal revenues, the influence of pressure groups upon city government, and the very vigorous part played in it by political organizations and machines. Also discussed are the services rendered to their inhabitants by the cities, the elaborate and varied structures devised for the performance of these services, and the legal, administrative, and financial status of the cities in relation to the states and to the nation. In a concluding section Professor Zink considers the problems of improving the city through housing programs, zoning and other land-use controls, studies of trends in population and industry, and plans for thoroughfares, parks, recreation facilities, public buildings, sewage disposal, water supply, and public works programs. He considers, too, the problem of creating popular demand for better city government.

XXX

Law and Justice

A.	History: General	6219–6236
B.	History: The Supreme Court	6237–6260
C.	General Views	6261–6270
D.	Digests of American Law	6271–6279
E.	Courts and Judges	6280–6293
F.	The Judicial Process	6294–6309
G.	Administrative Law	6310–6316
H.	Lawyers and the Legal Profession	6317–6332

THE PREVIOUS CHAPTER contains sections on constitutional law, on the civil liberties and rights which in America largely depend on constitutional guarantees, and on Congress, the national legislature. Various aspects of crime, police administration, and correction are included in the final section of Chapter XV on Society. The other major aspects of law and justice are dealt with here. Section B on the history of the Supreme Court is awkwardly separated from the previous chapter's Section C, on the constitutional law of which the Court is the supreme exponent, but it would be quite as awkwardly separated from Section E here, which is concerned with all the other American courts, of whose system the Supreme Court forms the apex.

Law is a discipline and a profession. The common law and the bar have descended in an unbroken line from medieval England, gradually adapting themselves to the changes of a society that keeps accelerating its rate of change. Lawyers have retained a strong sense of fraternity and a predominately conservative outlook. Legal education has settled into a vocational pattern, with the great object of getting the aspirant over the hurdle of the bar examinations. Legal literature is, for the most part, produced for the practical use of the profession and issued by specialized publishers. The more philosophical thinkers and writers of the legal profession have been conscious of the relative isolation of their sphere from the main stream of American thought, and have made valiant efforts to lessen it. A number of the works listed below deplore the ignorance and the distrust which even well-educated Americans may display concerning the substance and procedures of the law. The movement of legal reform, which has some noteworthy achievements to its credit but remains an unfinished task, has chiefly aimed at simpler, more lucid, and more easily discoverable laws, streamlined and humanized procedures, and greater social responsibility throughout the legal profession. There are few realms in which the interdisciplinary approach characteristic of American Studies has more to offer, to insiders and outsiders alike. The lay American needs to have a better knowledge of the history, the forms, and the processes of the law, and the American lawyer needs to relate his specialty to the adjacent fields of life and learning, to the mutual benefit of both.

American legal history offers peculiar difficulties because of the Federal structure of our government; each of the sovereign states has its own system of courts and body of statute law, with peculiarities developed at various times and for various reasons, and in Louisiana and the Southwest there are elements quite outside the common law tradition. It is the more regrettable that neither schools of law nor graduate schools of history have taken up the writing of American legal history in any systematic or intensive manner. The lack of large-scale and definitive work, as well as of the many local studies upon which it must be based, is often deplored, but some smaller studies of real value have been done; a substantial sample occupies Section A. The history of the Supreme Court has been best advanced on the biographical side; the larger narratives of Warren and Haines (nos. 6260, 6240) will eventually be overshadowed by the multivolumed work now in preparation through the Oliver Wendell Holmes Devise. The remaining six sections are largely attempts to select from the literature written by and for the profession those volumes which will be most intelligible and most rewarding to the general reader. A few, to be sure, have been written by lawyers for the general public; and another few are by laymen of various descriptions, audaciously invading the legal preserve with results peculiarly favorable to the lay reader—such is Covering the Courts (no. 6288), by a professor of journalism. The digests in Section D represent an older form of legal textbook, which in most classes has been replaced by the ubiquitous casebook, of value only to the trainee. These expositions aim at a logical arrangement of concepts and principles, and while they are abstract and difficult enough, a selection has been included in order to direct lay inquirers to statements of American substantive law in several important fields. This, in general, is the law, with variations from State to State. It goes without saying that they will not enable anyone to set up as his own attorney. Sections E and F are not mutually exclusive, and both include critical, diagnostic, and reformative titles as well as descriptive ones. The judges' own stories in E (nos. 6284, 6291), like the lawyers' in Section H (nos. 6322, 6324), are a rare but rewarding form of literature. G on administrative law deals with one of the newest fields, brought into being by the development of the regulatory commissions since 1887; their relationship to the courts of law remains its crucial question, about which there continues a wide range of opinion. The training, organization, practice, and obligations of lawyers, often discussed in a critical spirit, are the subjects of the final section.

A. History: General

6219. Aumann, Francis R. The changing American system: some selected phases. Columbus [Ohio State University Press] 1940. 281 p. ([Ohio. State University. Contributions in history and political science, no. 16]) 40–34949 Law
Bibliography: p. [237]–269.

Professor Aumann's survey of "the main-travelled roads" is not intended for specialists in American legal history, but for "members of the bar, students of political science, and members of the general public who are interested in the American legal system in a more general way." The preface thus summarizes its contents: "The plan of procedure followed involves a brief consideration of some of the problems of colonial justice, including the several views as to the nature and extent of common law reception in the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries; the effect of the War of Revolution and reconstruction upon the legal system; the interest in the civil law and its influence in the post-war period; the upthrust of the common law system in the formative period of American life and its expansion into the newly formed commonwealths of the nation, including a supplementary survey of early court organizations and procedures; the role of legal education, etc. Also involved is a brief analysis of the course of American legal development in the period of industrial growth which intervened between the Civil War and the turn of the century, including a consideration of some of the changing concepts and contents of American law brought about by the conversion of a simple, agricultural society into a complicated industrial order. Following this excursion into the period of legal maturity, attention is turned to the changing patterns that appear in the legal order during the first third of the twentieth century."

6220. Gard, Wayne. Frontier justice. Norman, University of Oklahoma Press, 1949. 324 p. illus. 49–10511 F591.G215
Bibliography: p. 291–308.

"This book is an informal study of the rise of order and law west of the Mississippi, where order often came before law. With abundant use of illustrative incidents and a minimum of abstract discussion, it traces the progress made from the chaotic, almost anarchic relations between many pioneers and the Indians to a state of peaceful settlement." Most of the episodes covered fall within the three decades following the Civil War, but some incidents go back to the 1830's, and the sheep raids of Colorado went on as late as 1921. The presentation is neither chronological nor geographical, but loosely topical, with sections entitled "Vengeance" (feuding in Texas, Arizona, and elsewhere) "War on the Ranges," "Vigilantes" (in Montana and several prairie communities as well as in California), and "Arms of the Law" (frontier marshals, sheriffs, and judges—notably Judge Isaac C. Parker of Indian Territory, who sentenced 172 malefactors to be hanged, as 88 of them actually were).

6221. Goebel, Julius, Jr., and Thomas Raymond Naughton. Law enforcement in Colonial New York; a study in criminal procedure (1664–1776). New York, Commonwealth Fund, 1944. xxxix, 867 p. (Publications of the Foundation for Research in Legal History, Columbia University School of Law) 44–5295 Law

"Sources": p. [765]–770.

Colonial legal history on a new and grand scale, based on the dispersed and incomplete records of the provincial courts general and local, as well as upon personal papers and all relevant printed sources. The authors are concerned to emphasize the early reception of English law in the conquered Dutch province, and divide it into two stages: the first, 1664–83, when "the Duke of York's lieutenants with great skill promoted as the provincial law the little they knew of English local administration"; and the second, 1684–1776, at the outset of which "the practices and forms of the English central courts came into use." Thereafter the process became one of "selective reproduction of English legal institutions at large." Following the introduction the massive text is in two parts, the first (to p. 324) concerned with "Jurisdiction," the second with "Practice." The chapters of the latter are on "Prosecution," "Process," "Recognizances," "Trial" (two), and "Final Proceedings" such as punishments, fees, and pardon. Appendixes print typical commissions, bills of costs, and briefs. In concluding the authors reaffirm their rejection of the notion that "our American law begins in 1783."

6222. Holmes, Oliver Wendell. The common law. 32d printing. Boston, Little, Brown, 1938. xvi, 422 p. 39–19139 Law

6223. The National law library. v. 1. The history and system of the common law, by Roscoe Pound. New York, P. F. Collier, 1939. 347 p. 39–8999 Law

Bibliography: p. 309–316.

Nearly 60 years separate these two expositions of the Anglo-American common law by two of the most eminent jurists that America has produced. Justice Holmes' classic originated in a series of lectures which he was invited to deliver at the Lowell Institute in Boston, and first appeared in 1881. His point of departure was the dual nature of the law at any given time; some of it, especially its form and machinery, is an inheritance from the past, while the rest, especially the substance, depends upon current theories of legislation and corresponds with what is understood to be convenient. On this basis the author considered early forms of liability, the criminal law, torts, the bailee, possession and ownership, contract, and successions. Here we may regret that the author omitted from the book his 12th lecture, which summarized the foregoing 11. Dean Pound's volume is wider in scope and more severely logical in outline. He points out how unfortunate it has been, in America where law and polity are inextricably joined, that Blackstone and Kent have had no successors in expounding the law for the citizen. His governing concept is that "law is experience developed by reason and reason tested by experience." He begins by discussing fundamental legal conceptions, and by sketching the history of the common law and of the institutions by which it lived. The source and forms of law are described, as are the reception and forms of the common law in America. A chapter on the organization and jurisdiction of courts is followed by descriptions of the common-law actions, and of procedure at law and in equity. Substantive law is digested under the headings of right, persons, acts, obligations, and property. "What is characteristic of the common-law system and gives it continuity in time and unity in space, is a taught tradition of ideas and doctrines and technique . . . Above all, it is a tradition shaped in its beginnings as a quest for reconciling authority with reason, imposed rule with customs of human conduct, and so the abstract universal with the concrete particular."

6224. Horton, John Theodore. James Kent, a study in conservatism, 1763–1847. New York, Appleton-Century, 1939. 354 p. 39–13988 Law

At head of title: The American Historical Association.

Bibliography: p. 327–341.

There were able lawyers in America before Kent, but he was the first whose distinction and career derived from the superiority of his learning in the law. On graduating from Yale, he read law in the office of Egbert Benson, attorney general of New York, and practiced at Poughkeepsie and later in New York City, at first with indifferent success. But in 1793 he became the first professor of law at Columbia College, and the quality of his lectures led to his appointment to the Supreme Court of New York in 1798. He dominated the court even before his promotion to Chief Justice in 1804 and converted it to the practice of written opinions enabling proper reporting. In 1814 he became the highest judicial officer of the State, the chancellor, and at once "the fabric of American equity began to rise" on the basis of a greater respect for precedents and written decisions properly reported. A State law required the retirement of judges (without pension) at the age of 60; and the Democratic Party in the State was glad to see its most eminent jurist step down in the fullness of his powers. The indignity turned into a public and private benefit: Kent became a lawyer's lawyer and resumed his lectures at Columbia, published as the famous Commentaries on American Law (no. 6277), from which he derived $5,000 every year until his death. Kent, "laying aside the robe of a local judge, became doctor of laws to the whole republic."

6225. Hurst, Willard. The growth of American law: the law makers. Boston, Little, Brown, 1950. 502 p. 50–6788 Law

"Bibliographical notes": p. [451]–472.

An introduction to the legal history of the United States whose form arises from the author's conviction that our legal institutions have been relatively tough and stable, while substantive law has been rather the creature of events, changing with rapid social and economic change. Mr. Hurst therefore discusses, with emphasis on their functions, five agencies of lawmaking in the order in which they emerged into leadership in successive periods of our history: the legislature, the courts, the constitution makers (in which the author includes legislative proposals and the initiative as well as constitutional conventions), the bar, and the executive. The burden of Mr. Hurst's clearly written essays is that our legal agencies have lost prestige to the degree that they have failed to keep the public interest in the forefront of their objectives. Urban courts have made dilatory and insufficient provision for the small claimant and the poor debtor, and for "the kind of mass social regulation that the traffic law exemplified." The bar, which gets the bulk of its business from the wealthiest 13 percent of the population, has since 1870 largely abdicated its independence and its leadership. In an economy wherein special interests behave like billiard balls on a table, only the chief executive, in state and nation, is looked to for his independence and representation of the general interest.

6226. Langeluttig, Albert G. The Department of Justice of the United States. Baltimore, Johns Hopkins Press, 1927. xvi, 318 p. ([Brookings Institution] Institute for Government Research. Studies in administration. [no. 15])

27–11623 JK873.L3 1927; Law

Bibliography: p. 262–276.

6227. Cummings, Homer S., and Carl McFarland. Federal justice; chapters in the history of justice and the Federal executive. New York, Macmillan, 1937. 576 p. illus. 37–364 JK873.C8

"Bibliographical note": p. 551–558.

Dr. Langeluttig's dissertation traces the rise and development of the Department of Justice, the central agency belatedly created by the national government for the enforcement of the law for which it is responsible. One section of his study discusses the problems of the administration of the Federal law, and special attention is given to the very important matter of the Department's relations to the other law enforcement agencies of the Federal Government. Of broader scope is Cummings' (Attorney General, 1933–39) and McFarland's review of the administration of justice by the Federal Government. The development of the office of Attorney General as a policymaking, advisory, and supervisory governmental post is traced from its inception in 1789. In 1870, when the Department of Justice was finally established, these functions were greatly expanded, and this expansion to meet existing problems engendered new ones. Separate chapters of this work are devoted to the Department's role in various fields of activity, such as labor relations and the conduct of business, in which the Federal Government has exerted its regulatory capacity.

6228. Levy, Leonard W. The law of the Commonwealth and Chief Justice Shaw. Cambridge, Harvard University Press, 1957. 383 p.

57–6350 Law

Bibliography: p. [343]–357.

A critical study of the work of Lemuel Shaw (1781–1861), chief justice of the Supreme Judicial Court of Massachusetts from 1830 to 1860. The author estimates that no other State judge through his opinions alone had so great an influence on the course of American law, and he believes that Shaw's chief contribution was his domestication of the English common law. Shaw preserved its continuity with what was worthwhile in the past, and at the same time accommodated it to the ideals and necessities of 19th-century American life. Using some of Shaw's opinions, which numbered approximately 2,200, as points of departure and focus, the author has produced a series of chapters on American legal history. Some of these are concerned with the response of the law to great social issues, others with the accommodations in the law necessitated by changes in American industrial life, and still others with the growth of important doctrines of American law.

6229. Morris, Richard B. Fair trial; fourteen who stood accused, from Anne Hutchinson to Alger Hiss. New York, Knopf, 1952. xv, 494 p. 52-6423 Law

"Bibliographical notes": p. 479-494.

A review of 14 notable American criminal trials which assesses their fairness. By later Anglo-American standards of fair trial, the author thinks, the accused in the Colonial cases, Anne Hutchinson, Peter Zenger, and Captain William Kidd, were not afforded fair trials; but trials conducted since 1789 have, in form if not in substance, conformed more closely to present notions of fair trial procedure. The three 20th-century cases included (the Triangle Fire Case, the Hall-Mills Case, and the Hiss Case) expose, Professor Morris believes, glaring deficiencies in the conduct and procedure of American criminal trials, which persist despite the safeguards written into the Federal and State constitutions and the codes of criminal procedure. Among the deficiencies listed are: the character of sporting events or circus performances that trials too often assume; the failure of juries to be free from prejudice and possessed of the emotional and intellectual discipline essential for a critical examination of evidence; the perpetuation of archaic rules of evidence; the character of the bench itself; and the deterioration of the criminal bar.

6230. Morris, Richard B. Studies in the history of American law, with special reference to the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries. New York, Columbia University Press, 1930. 285 p. (Columbia University. Faculty of Political Science. Studies in history, economics and public law, no. 316) 30-14173 H31.C7, no. 316; Law

"Bibliographical essay": p. 259-273.

In his first chapter Professor Morris undertakes "to synthesize and interpret the main characteristics of the development of American law in the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries." He notes the several influences which led during the 17th century to widespread innovations, in particular procedural reforms making legal redress easier, faster, and less expensive; and the conservative reaction of the 18th which brought in many common-law practices and made for the increasing importance of the professional lawyer. The three remaining chapters discuss "representative legal questions which are directly associated with early American social, economic, and intellectual conditions." "Colonial Laws Governing the Distribution and Alienation of Land" discusses, in part, the aristocratic practices of primogeniture and entailed estates as transplanted to America. "Women's Rights in Early American Law" shows that many of the common-law disabilities of married women were sloughed off in the Colonies. "Responsibility for Tortious Acts" shows many small divergences from common-law doctrines emerging in American agrarian society, leading Dr. Morris to speak of "the refreshing originality which characterized our legal engineering," and to affirm that a later day's "ignorance of the trail which had been blazed by the seventeenth-century pioneers hampered the progress of American law."

6231. Pound, Roscoe. The formative era of American law. New York, P. Smith, 1950, c 1938. 188 p. 50-50803 Law

"Four lectures . . . delivered at the Law School of Tulane University on the occasion of the centennial of the death of Edward Livingston, October 27-30, 1936."

Dean Pound's formative era extended from independence to the Civil War, and since most of the spade work in local legal history remained to be done (as indeed it still does) he aimed only "to trace the working of the juristic theory which was chiefly operative, and to outline the development and achievements of the chief agencies of legal developments in that era." The task of this era, in the face of difficulties caused by the hostility to English law, a tendency to deprofessionalize the lawyer, and "a veritable cult of local law," he thus defined: "to work out from our inherited legal materials a general body of law for what was to be a politically and economically unified land." Within the era, he says, fell the work of six of the ten foremost judges in American judicial history: Marshall, Kent, Story, J. B. Gibson of Pennsylvania, Shaw, and Thomas Ruffin of North Carolina. Traditionalists or innovators, the lawyers, judges, and teachers of this era "found their creating and organizing idea in the theory of natural law." The succeeding three lectures trace the operation of this idea in legislation, in judicial decision, and in doctrinal writing. A taught tradition became established, and "the common-law technique of finding the grounds of decision in reported judicial experience became the decisive agency of law making." In the latter part of each lecture Dean Pound applied the ideas he had just discussed to the legal problems of his own day.

6232. Russell, Elmer Beecher. The review of American Colonial legislation by the King in Council. New York, Columbia University, 1915. 227 p. (Columbia University. Faculty of Political Science. Studies in history, economics and public law, v. 64, no. 2; whole no. 155) 15-15118 JK57.P7R8 H31.C7, v. 64, no. 2

"The power exercised by the English Privy Council, of annulling the enactments of the royal colonies, afforded the home government an important instrument of administrative control. It constituted a necessary check upon the only branch of the colonial governments which was responsive to popular sentiment, and gave the English executive a final word in regard to the minutest details of local administration in the dominions." The present dissertation, written under the guidance of Herbert L. Osgood (nos. 3220 and 3221), is confined to the 13 mainland Colonies, and largely to the period from 1696 to the Revolution, when the Board of Trade was charged with the examination of Colonial acts and made recommendations to the Privy Council. The author devotes one chapter to the period from 1660 to 1696, when the Council's power of review was rather sporadically exercised; two to the details of the procedure employed after 1696; and four to the policies pursued in review, such as insistence upon conformity to English law and the repulse of encroachments upon the prerogative. From 1691 the royal and proprietary Colonies submitted some 8,563 acts, of which 469, or 5.5 percent, were disallowed by the Privy Council. The process was unpopular with the colonists, but Dr. Russell observes that it "constituted at once a precedent and a preparation for the power of judicial annulment upon constitutional grounds now exercised by the state and federal courts in the United States."

6233. Sayre, Paul L. The life of Roscoe Pound. Iowa City, College of Law Committee, State University of Iowa, 1948. 412 p. illus. 48–1287 Law

Botanist, practicing lawyer, judge, teacher, legal historian, and legal philosopher: Roscoe Pound is or has been all of these. The author, who was one of Dean Pound's graduate students, presents an admiring account of his life and work from his birth at Lincoln, Nebraska, in 1870 until his departure for Nanking, China, in 1947 to serve as adviser to the Ministry of Justice there. Particular attention is given to Dr. Pound's service to his native State, his life in Chicago, his service as dean of the Harvard Law School for 20 years, his work for the legal profession through the American Bar Association, his furtherance of particular projects of law reform, and his philosophy of the law.

6234. Smith, Joseph H. Appeals to the Privy Council from the American plantations. With an introductory essay by Julius Goebel, Jr. New York, Columbia University Press, 1950. lxi, 770 p. (A publication of the Foundation for Research in Legal History, Columbia University Law School) 50–7240 Law

"Sources": p. [687]–696.

"Table of cases": p. [699]–709.

A massive study which aims "to integrate the various records in the archives on this side of the Atlantic with the Privy Council records in London" in order "to describe and evaluate at length the Privy Council of England as a judicial body exercising appellate jurisdiction over the courts of the various American plantations" from 1679, when the Lords Committee of Trade and Plantations undertook "a somewhat uneven regulation of the appellate process," to the Peace of Paris in 1783. From 1696, when the appeals were entered in the Council Register, 795 appeals from the American plantations were heard; of these 157 were affirmed, 336 reversed or substantially altered, and 68 dismissed for nonprosecution. The cases of the West India Colonies are considered equally with those of the mainland Colonies, as their contemporary importance warrants. The origin of the Council's appellate jurisdiction is traced back to the Channel Islands of Guernsey and Jersey, and the precedents which they provide are treated at some length. The author finds it necessary to "employ technical language, much of it concerned with problems of procedural, rather than substantive, law." There are chapters on "The Settling of Jurisdiction," "The Regulation of Appeals," "Procedure at the Council Board," and "The Scope of Appellate Review." Dr. Smith goes into the elements of judicial and legislative review involved, but finds that the whole matter remained clouded and vague, since no clear doctrine was ever asserted or evolved concerning "the basic factors—the crown's powers of control over colonial legislation, and the status of this legislation in relation to the English law."

6235. Warren, Charles. Bankruptcy in United States history. Cambridge, Harvard University Press, 1935. 195 p. 36–424 HG3766.W35

This book, which originated in lectures delivered on the Julius Rosenthal Foundation at the Law School of Northwestern University, discusses the legislative attempts to adjust the relation between debtor and creditor, which have been increasingly characteristic of the great economic depressions undergone by the United States. Congressional debates on bankruptcy are used by the author as the basis of his study of the expanding interpretation of the bankruptcy clause of the Constitution. Three chronological periods are distinguished: a period of the creditor, 1789–1827, during which time relief was demanded only in the interest of the creditors; a period of the debter, 1827–61, in which relief was demanded only in the interest of the debtors; and a period of national interest, 1861–1935, when bankruptcy laws came to be regarded as matters to be determined by the public interest and the restoration of national economic health.

6236. Warren, Charles. A history of the American bar. Boston, Little, Brown, 1911. 586 p. 11–29086 Law Contains bibliographies.

A general survey of law and lawyers down to 1860, part one of which is concerned with legal conditions in each of the American Colonies during the 17th and 18th centuries. Among the aspects covered are the status of the common law as applied by the courts, methods of appointment and the composition of the courts, the leading lawyers, legislation regarding the legal profession, problems of legal education, and contemporaneous legal conditions in the mother country. The second part describes the growth of the American bar from the establishment of the U.S. Supreme Court to the opening of the Civil War. Following on discussions of the Court itself and of the legal profession, three chapters are concerned with what the author terms "the four great factors in the development of the Bar": the rise of corporation and of railroad law between 1830 and 1860; the expansion of the common law to meet changing economic and social conditions between 1815 and 1860; and the powerful movement for codification between 1820 and 1860.

B. History: The Supreme Court

6237. Beveridge, Albert J. The life of John Marshall. Boston, Houghton Mifflin, 1919. 4 v. illus. 33–29106 E302.6.M4B582; Law

"Works" cited at end of each volume.

CONTENTS.—1. Frontiersman, soldier, lawmaker, 1755–1788.—2. Politician, diplomatist, statesman, 1789–1801.—3. Conflict and construction, 1800–1815.—4. The building of the nation, 1815–1835.

6238. Jones, William Melville, ed. Chief Justice John Marshall; a reappraisal. Ithaca, N.Y., Published for College of William and Mary [by] Cornell University Press, 1956. xviii, 195 p. 56–3619 Law

Beveridge's Marshall is a detailed study of the world and life of the most noted of the early Chief Justices of the Supreme Court, who assumed that post in 1801 and held it until his death 34 years later. Perhaps the greatest contribution made by Marshall (1755–1835) to the constitutional development of the United States was the consolidation of an independent judiciary through an active use of the principle of judicial review, but this was only one of the many contributions which are here analyzed in great detail. It is with Marshall's work as Chief Justice that the author is chiefly concerned, but to contribute to the understanding of Marshall's greatest opinions much space has been allocated to discussions of the subject's experience as an inhabitant of frontier Virginia, soldier, legislator, lawyer, politician, diplomat, and statesman, and to the history of his period, the actions and opinions of those about him, the state of the nation, the condition of the people, and the tendency of the popular thought of the era. The partisanship of Senator Beveridge is self-evident: Marshall is glorified while others, such as Thomas Jefferson, are relegated to the ranks of the sinners. Chief Justice John Marshall; a Reappraisal is largely composed of papers presented by various scholars at a conference held at the College of William and Mary (Williamsburg, Va.) in 1955 as one of the events of the Marshall Bicentennial Program. A foreword by Chief Justice Earl Warren and an introduction by Professor Carl B. Swisher are followed by discussions of Marshall in relation to the political and professional life of his times, the significance of his thought as measured by present-day standards, and his contributions to judicial review and to American law in general.

6239. Ewing, Cortez A. M. The Judges of the Supreme Court, 1789–1937; a study of their qualifications. Minneapolis, University of Minnesota Press, 1938. 124 p. 38–28601 Law

A statistical treatment of information concerning the 75 men who sat on the Supreme Court during the period covered. Graphs and statistical tables are used to aid in this analysis of the appointments, the geographical ties, the age at appointment, and the qualifications of education and prior public service of the Justices. Along with many interesting single facts, a few tendencies emerge. The average age of the Justices at appointment rose by a full 10 years over the whole period. Once many Justices served without benefit of college degrees; all recent appointees have them. The percentage of Justices from the South has steadily decreased since 1789.

6240. Haines, Charles G. The role of the Supreme Court in American government and politics. Berkeley, University of California Press, 1944–57. 2 v. 57–10498 Law

Volume 2 by Charles Grove Haines and Foster H. Sherwood.

CONTENTS.—[1] 1789–1835.—[2] 1835–1864.

Professor Haines of the University of California at Los Angeles died in 1948, leaving only three chapters of his second volume in completed form. It was finished by one who had been his student, research assistant, and colleague, but it only reaches 1864 instead of 1885, as Haines had intended. Haines embarked on a new history of the Court because he thought that the extent to which it and its Judges "have participated in and have influenced the political and partisan activities of the time" was insufficiently explored; and because the conservative and nationalist viewpoints had been too frequently adopted, to be neglect of "the liberal and democratic approach," and the views of critics of the Court. The Court had been the object of persistent attacks for more than a decade when Jackson's election seemed to herald a new day. "But it was not until the end of his second administration that Jackson was able to appoint justices who could change the current of federal judicial decisions. And the change then inaugurated was far from as significant and far-reaching as Democratic leaders anticipated." Volume 2, in fact, is largely a demonstration of continuity between the Marshall Court and the Taney Court. On the whole, "the federal judicial power was more firmly established and far broader in extent at the end of the Taney period than at the beginning."

6241. Howe, Mark De Wolfe. Justice Oliver Wendell Holmes. v. 1. The shaping years, 1841–1870. Cambridge, Belknap Press of Harvard University Press, 1957. 330 p. illus.
57–6348 Law

6242. Holmes, Oliver Wendell. The mind and faith of Justice Holmes; his speeches, essays, letters and judicial opinions, selected and edited with introduction and commentary by Max Lerner. Boston, Little, Brown, 1943. L, 474 p.
43–6772 Law

"Note on the Holmes literature": [452]–460.

Following a decade and a half of writing, practicing, and teaching, Oliver Wendell Holmes (1841–1935), son of a Bostonian poet, essayist, and physician of the same name, was appointed a justice of the Supreme Court of Massachusetts in 1882; 20 years later he went to the Supreme Court of the United States, from which he did not retire until 1932. During his 50 years on the State and Federal benches, Holmes was noted for writing opinions in a forceful and epigrammatic style. He was called a legal technician, a humanistic thinker, and a great human figure. All of these he was. Professor Howe's volume is the first of several in a projected biography. The years 1841–70 were, in the author's opinion, the prologue to Holmes' life of achievement; in them he underwent the influences which molded his character and outlook whether found in the circle of his family and friends, on the battlefield of Antietam, or at mid-century Harvard. With Holmes opening his own law office, assuming the coeditorship of the American Law Review, becoming university lecturer on constitutional law in Harvard College, and beginning work on his edition of Kent's Commentaries (no. 6277), this volume ends. The Mind and Faith of Justice Holmes is an attempt, in the editor's words, "to give a rounded portrait of the mind and faith of one who was perhaps the most complete personality in the history of American thought." Each group of selections is prefaced by a note presenting background information.

6243. Hughes, Charles Evans. The Supreme Court of the United States, its foundation, methods and achievements; an interpretation. Garden City, N.Y., Garden City Pub. Co., 1936. 269 p. (Columbia University lectures. George Blumenthal Foundation) 37–1208 JK1561.H8 1936

Hughes' six lectures were delivered in 1927, 11 years after his resignation as Associate Justice and 3 years before his return to the Court as Chief Justice. They have, ever since their original publication by the Columbia University Press in 1928, been regarded as an admirable concise treatment of their subject. The eminent jurist disclaimed any intention of competing with Warren's history of the Court or with treatises on constitutional law; he aimed only "to assist those, who are not aiming to become legal scholars, to understand something of its origin, of the principles that govern it, of its methods and of the important results of its works." In an outstanding chapter on "The Court at Work," he says that the Judges bear "the heaviest burden of severe and continuous intellectual work that our country knows." "Liberty, Property and Social Justice" is the title borne by the two concluding lectures; at the end he finds the Court to be the indispensable guardian of all three. "The ends of social justice are achieved through a process by which every step is examined in the light of the principles which are our inheritance as a free people."

6244. King, Willard L. Melville Weston Fuller, Chief Justice of the United States, 1888–1910. New York, Macmillan, 1950. 394 p. illus.
50–8032 Law

Bibliography: p. 343–347.

Born in Augusta, Maine, Fuller (1833–1910) removed to Chicago in 1856, a year after being admitted to the Maine bar. The years preceding his appointment to the Chief Justiceship of the United States were occupied by his very active and general law practice, and by his conspicuous role in the affairs of the Democratic Party. Possessed of quiet humor, courage, a sense of nonpartisanship, and a wide range of scholarship, together with kindliness, human sympathy, and modesty, Fuller's most remarkable abilities lay in managing the business of the Supreme Court. The author of this finely drawn portrait concludes that it was Fuller's character rather than his intellect which captured for him the respect and confidence of the legal profession and of the public. He was an embodiment of the dignity of the Supreme Court.

6245. Klinkhamer, Marie Carolyn, Sister. Edward Douglas White, Chief Justice of the United States. Washington, Catholic University of America Press, 1943. 308 p. A 44–427 Law
Bibliography: p. 296–306.

The second Southern Roman Catholic appointed to preside over the Supreme Court, and the first Associate Justice to be elevated to the Chief Justiceship, White (1845–1921) was early active on the bench and in the politics of his native Louisiana. (His middle name is usually spelled Douglass.) In 1891 he took his seat in the United States Senate, and three years later was appointed to the Supreme Court by President Cleveland. He remained upon that bench for 27 years, after 16 of which he was raised to the Chief Justiceship by President Taft, in 1910. The author declares that White's greatest contributions while on the High Court were made in the field of administrative law, but his opinions in the fields of procedure, contracts, interstate commerce, taxation, and due process are also subjected to analysis. The study of his decisions is preceded by a biographical essay. The appendixes contain tables of cases in the Louisiana and United States reports in which White's opinions are recorded; also given are the names of the Justices who concurred with him or dissented.

6246. Mason, Alpheus Thomas. Brandeis, a free man's life. New York, Viking Press, 1946. 713 p. illus. 46–25268 JK1519.B7M3 Law

6247. Brandeis, Louis Dembitz. The social and economic views of Mr. Justice Brandeis, collected with introductory notes by Alfred Lief. With a foreword by Charles A. Beard. New York, Vanguard Press, 1930. xxi, 419 p. 30–30043 Law

6248. Brandeis, Louis Dembitz. The unpublished opinions of Mr. Justice Brandeis; the Supreme Court at work, by Alexander M. Bickel. With an introd. by Paul A. Freund. Cambridge, Belknap Press of Harvard University Press, 1957. xxi, 278 p. illus. 57–9069 Law

Brandeis (1856–1941), the son of Bohemian Jewish parents who came to the United States in the ranks of the "Forty-eighters," studied with distinction at Harvard Law School, and was soon engaged in a varied and lucrative law practice in Boston. His legal interests were as wide in scope as his extra-legal ones. Labor, trusts, railroads, insurance, finance, and even conservation all occupied him in his role as counsel and investigator. He achieved fame as a reformer bent on ameliorating the evils and injustices which had developed with industrial capitalism. President Wilson's nomination of Brandeis for the Supreme Court in 1916 precipitated a long and bitter wrangle, but eventually, with no little aid from Wilson himself, the Senate's confirmation was forthcoming. From then until his retirement in 1939 Brandeis' opinions regularly expressed his belief in the value of free institutions and democratic processes, which provided the best means of enhancing the dignity and potentialities of the individual. The greater portion of Mr. Mason's biography is concerned with Brandeis' pre-Court career and portrays a great advocate engaged in argument on behalf of what he conceived to be the basic principles of human freedom. The Social and Economic Views of Mr. Justice Brandeis is a collection of his opinions, together with a few of his briefs, speeches, and articles, arranged under the categories of labor problems, regulation of business, public utility economics, guarantees of freedom, prohibition and taxation, and State and nation. Derived from Brandeis' private papers relating to his service on the Supreme Court, The Unpublished Opinions of Mr. Justice Brandeis, 11 in all, comprise, with Mr. Bickel's essays constructed from information found in the papers, an exposition of the working of Brandeis' mind, and of the processes by which judicial judgments are arrived at.

6249. Mason, Alpheus Thomas. Harlan Fiske Stone: pillar of the law. New York, Viking Press, 1956. 914 p. illus. 56–10404 Law
"Note on Stone's legal writings": p. 888–891.

6250. Konefsky, Samuel Joseph. Chief Justice Stone and the Supreme Court. With a prefatory note by Charles A. Beard. New York, Macmillan, 1945. xxvi, 290 p.
A 46–501 JK1519.S8K6 1945; Law

Professor Mason's book is a detailed and scholarly account of the life and character of the only man who occupied consecutively every seat on the bench of the U. S. Supreme Court. Appointed to the Court in 1925, Stone (1872–1946) was promoted to Chief Justice in 1941. Emphasis is placed upon Stone's career on the Court, and upon the inner workings of that tribunal. Born in the New Hampshire hills, the late Chief Justice throughout his life took each task as it came to him, whether as teacher, attorney, government official, or judge, and performed it thoroughly and capably. This quality, together with his balance and dignity, brought him advancement despite his lack of a spectacular personality. "Respect for facts, unremitting intellectual effort in the face of social perplexities, gave him an understanding that on occasion led to what observers identified as the liberal position. The accolade was unwanted and not wholly deserved . . . By tempering predilection with restraint and craftsmanship, he made the personal preference for social policy but one factor in his quest for judgment . . . He became the statesman without ceasing to be the lawyer." Dr. Konefsky's Columbia University dissertation concentrates upon Stone's contributions to constitutional doctrine and his conception of the judicial function, against a background of the larger trends of constitutional development and the conditions which gave rise to the controversies brought before the Supreme Court from 1925 to 1943. Not having, as did Mason, Stone's papers as a source, the author relied principally upon judicial opinions as a basis for his discussion. Characterized as "a leader of that liberal jurisprudence of which Holmes and Brandeis were the trail-blazers," Stone is judged in the concluding chapter to have been a great advocate of "an enlightened view of the judicial function."

6251. Pollard, Joseph P. Mr. Justice Cardozo; a liberal mind in action. With a foreword by Roscoe Pound. New York, Yorktown Press, 1935. 327 p. 35–6010 Law

An admiring discussion on a lay level of the opinions of Benjamin Nathan Cardozo (1870–1938), who for 18 years served on the New York Court of Appeals (1914–1932) and for 6 on the U. S. Supreme Court (1932–1938). In no sense a biography, it studies a mind as revealed in judicial action in fields of litigation such as personal injury, crime, social welfare, labor, libel, and censorship, to name a few. It dwells for the most part on Cardozo's longer service on the State court, and concludes with a brief account of his first two years on the High Court during the launching of the New Deal.

6252. Pritchett, Charles H. Civil liberties and the Vinson Court. [Chicago] University of Chicago Press, 1954. 296 p. 54–8459 Law

A sequel to the author's The Roosevelt Court below, which concentrates on the problem of civil liberties as encountered by the Supreme Court under the leadership of Chief Justice Fred M. Vinson (1890–1953; appointed in 1946) in such fields as free speech, denizenship, racial segregation, and criminal prosecution. It explores the motivations of the individual Justices in their opinions upon cases within these fields. The author concludes with a searching analysis of what the Court ought to do to improve its relationship to the free society of which it is the constitutional guardian.

6253. Pritchett, Charles H. The Roosevelt Court; a study in judicial politics and values, 1937–1947. New York, Macmillan, 1948. xvi, 314 p. 48–4203 JK1561.P7

The primary purpose of this work is to relate significant constitutional developments of the period to the ideological preference of the members of the Court. It is essentially a study of the politics and values of the Justices named to the Supreme Court by President Roosevelt. The author, a professor of political science at the University of Chicago, compiles 25 statistical tables in order to bolster his contention that in differences of opinion on questions of policy, given the same or similar conditions, there is a constant in the alignment of the members of the Court, derivable from their characters and backgrounds.

6254. Pusey, Merlo J. Charles Evans Hughes. New York, Macmillan, 1951. 2 v. (xvi, 829 p.) illus. 51–7851 Law

This authorized biography by a staff writer of the Washington Post is a narration and an interpretation of a career of service to State, nation, and mankind. Lawyer, investigator, teacher, governor, Presidential candidate, Secretary of State, Associated Justice and Chief Justice of the United States: Hughes (1862–1948) was all of these as well as a devoted husband, father, and grandfather. He was the only man to resign from the Court (in 1916, after six years' service as Associate Justice) in order to campaign for the Presidency, and then to be reappointed, as Chief Justice, 14 years later. Following his retirement from the bench in 1941 until his death seven years later, his counsel was sought by those who remained in office, but Hughes by no means sought the role of a professional elder statesman. In his evaluation of Hughes' 11-year performance as Chief Justice, the author notes at least four aspects of his work as outstanding: his enhancement of efficiency within the whole Federal court system; his mastery in presiding over the Court and the conferences of its Justices; his positive contributions to the law, notably the firm establishment of the four freedoms of the First Amendment as guarantees to the citizen against State actions; and last, but not least in importance, his stalwart and unemotional defense of the Court against efforts at executive domination. A much briefer, but exceedingly lucid and judicious appreciation of his great services in several realms, and especially on the Court, is Dexter Perkins' volume in The Library of American biography: Charles Evans Hughes and American Democratic Statesmanship (Boston, Little, Brown, 1956. xxiv, 200 p.).

6255. Ragan, Allen E. Chief Justice Taft. Columbus, Ohio, Ohio State Archaeological and Historical Society, 1938. 139 p. ([Ohio State Archaeological and Historical Society] Ohio historical collections, v. 8) 38-28150 E762.R25 F486.O526, v. 8; Law

"Index of cases": p. 129–130.

Bibliography: p. 123–128.

This monograph, which originated as a dissertation at Ohio State University, attempts "to determine what contribution Chief Justice William Howard Taft made to the constitutional history of the country" from 1921 to 1930. Some background for his Supreme Court decisions has been provided from his earlier judicial and administrative career. Separate chapters are concerned with Taft's judgments in cases involving labor, the Federal power over commerce, the limits of State power, restraint of trade, and the 18th Amendment. The author concludes that despite Taft's industry, legal learning, and impartiality, his decisions lacked color, and "he failed to establish any new lines of constitutional interpretation" which could make his term outstanding. Apart from maintaining the inviolability of property rights against labor, his decisions were sufficiently nationalistic and liberal. Even though his success, under the circumstances, could only be partial, "his prolonged interest in and his tireless labors for judicial reform were his crowning achievements."

6256. Rodell, Fred. Nine men; a political history of the Supreme Court from 1790 to 1955. New York, Random House, 1955. 338 p. 55-8154 Law

The author is a professor of law at Yale University who practices journalism on the side, and his book, which, he says, is not written down to lawyers, is robustly journalistic in manner. Professor Rodell says that he is a liberal and admires liberals, but that his "almost fanatical devotion to that kind of personal integrity that combines intellectual honesty with courage" is more important. The title is meant to imply that the Supreme Court is indistinguishable from the nine men who at any one time are its Justices, that they bring their characters and careers onto the bench with them, and that the Court is therefore "powerful, irresponsible, and human." The book is a vigorous summary of the Court's history from an advanced liberal point of view, in personal terms, and with most space given to the recent past. The Vinson Court is castigated as inimical to human dignity and democratic decency. Well-informed, never dull, obscure, or difficult, and transparent in its partisanship, Nine Men is well suited to those who dread the technicalities of the subject.

6257. Schwartz, Bernard. The Supreme Court, constitutional revolution in retrospect. New York, Ronald Press Co., 1957. 429 p. 57-9302 Law

In 1937 the President proposed to vitiate the independence of the judiciary by his Court-packing plan, Justices Roberts and Hughes ceased their objections to Federal intervention aimed at resuscitating a prostrated economy, and the Supreme Court handed down a whole group of decisions constituting a decisive break with its previous jurisprudence grounded on laissez-faire. This was the constitutional revolution; Professor Schwartz of the New York University School of Law attempts to trace its consequences through the ensuing 20 years, during which, he thinks, "despite aberrations, notably by certain Justices, the Court's decisions have followed logical patterns, consistent with the bases" of 1937. As the Federal Government entered a whole new sphere of positive economic activity, the Supreme Court adopted an entirely new attitude toward statutes, refusing to void them so long as rational legislators could have regarded them as reasonable methods of promoting the public welfare. Therefore in 20 years "the Court's authority vis-à-vis the Congress has all but atrophied," and a drastic shift in the balance of governmental powers has taken place. Professor Schwartz reviews in turn the consequences in the Court's relation to Congress, the President, the administrative agencies, the inferior courts, the States, and the individual. He also discusses the manner in which the Court's work has been affected by war and cold war. A concluding chapter, "Anatomy and Pathology of the Court," says that while during the first 10 years the Court overruled too many precedents, it has since let stare decisis provide an essential element of continuity in the law; that the prestige of Justice Holmes has led too many of his successors to deliver dissenting opinions; and that judicial review is basically an undemocratic institution, which in a democratic system should be exercised with rigorous self-restraint.

6258. Swisher, Carl Brent. Roger B. Taney. New York, Macmillan, 1935. 608 p. illus. 35-19101 E340.T2S9; Law

Bibliography: p. 591-598.

Taney (1777-1864) is best remembered for his role in Andrew Jackson's struggle against the Bank of the United States and for his decision, as Chief Justice of the United States, in the Dred Scott Case. Born into the Roman Catholic gentry of Calvert County, Maryland, Taney had a long and distinguished career which included service as a Maryland legislator and attorney general, Attorney General and Secretary of the Treasury in President Jackson's Cabinet, and Chief Justice of the United States for almost three decades (1836-64). Taney led the judicial forces seeking a modification of the assumption underlying so many decisions of the Marshall Court: that unchecked and centralized Federal power together with judicial benevolence toward private economic interests would invariably work for the good of the country. Although he received an exceptional amount of denigration or abuse from his contemporaries and from writers of the next two generations, the author feels that Taney well earned the accolade of Charles Evans Hughes: "he was a great Chief Justice."

6259. Trimble, Bruce R. Chief Justice Waite, defender of the public interest. Princeton, Princeton University Press, 1938. 320 p. illus. 38-3414 Law

"Table of cases": p. [307]-310.

Bibliography: p. [301]-306.

Waite (1816-88) was an Ohio lawyer of specialized practice and excellent political connections, but had no judicial experience when President Grant put him at the head of the Supreme Court. He was Chief Justice of the United States for 14 years (1874-88) and through careful planning and painstaking toil became, this biographer believes, a great administrator and a judge of recognized ability. Drawn largely from information found in Waite's letters, public papers, and judicial utterances, this study aims at showing something of Waite's influence in the solution of the constitutional problems which came to the fore during the Reconstruction period. The opinions which he rendered covered a multitude of those problems: radical Reconstruction legislation, the war amendments, western development, transcontinental railroads, agrarian movements, the control of public utilities and rates, and the relation of the States to the liquor traffic. In all these matters Waite made substantial contributions, the greatest of which, in Mr. Trimble's estimation, was probably his interpretation of the contract clause of the Constitution, in which he enunciated his doctrine of the "public interest."

6260. Warren, Charles. The Supreme Court in United States history. Rev. ed. Boston, Little, Brown, 1937. 2 v. (814, 812 p.) 38-33016 JK1561.W3 1937

First published in 1922.

CONTENTS.—v. 1. 1789-1835.—v. 2. 1836-1918.

A leisurely history of the first century of the Supreme Court, to the death of Chief Justice Waite in 1888; the succeeding 30 years, to the end of World War I, are more briefly summarized in two final chapters (v. 2, p. 690-756). The large-scale portion aims to narrate "a section of our National history connected with the Supreme Court" for laymen and lawyers alike, and "to revivify the important cases decided by the Court and to picture the Court from year to year in its contemporary setting." The background of social, political, and economic controversy out of which the Court's most famous cases arose is carefully described. Each appointment of a Chief or Associate Justice, including those which were declined, withdrawn, or disapproved by the Senate, is investigated and contemporary reactions sampled at some length. A chronological list of all such appointments appears at the close of volume 2 (p. 757-763). Warren also drew upon the papers of important contemporaries, legal and lay, and the newspaper and magazine press for the reception of important decisions; this is one of the most valuable features of his book. The service of the three first Chief Justices (John Rutledge took his seat and presided over one whole term of the Court before the Senate rejected him) is covered in the first 168 pages, and the remainder of volume 1 is concerned with John Marshall's 35 epoch-making years. Useful material not easily found elsewhere is contained in Chapter 10, "The Judges and the Court-Rooms." The illustrations include photographs of the Court's first two (quite small) rooms in the Capitol, and group photographs of the Justices taken in 1865, 1882, and 1899.

C. General Views

6261. Cahn, Edmond N. The moral decision; right and wrong in the light of American law. Bloomington, Indiana University Press, 1955. 342 p. 55-8739 Law

677676 O-63-65

Acting on the suggestion of a distinguished United States circuit judge and acknowledging the inspiration of Jerome Frank, Professor Cahn has written this book "to draw upon the supply of moral insight and experience that American courts have gradually developed and accumulated," and so answer the question, "What moral guides can be found in American law?" After a theoretical section which considers the extent to which morals is a legal order and law is a moral order, the author considers a series of "prismatic" cases which bring moral issues into sharp focus and encourage the reader to judge for himself. These are arranged in six chapters intended to sample human concerns in a natural progression from birth to death, of which only three ("Sexual Relationships," "The Conduct of Business," and "Business with Government") are homogeneous and self-explanatory. Further "prismatic" cases are used in the concluding chapters, which consider various moral aspects of trial, compromise, and judicial decision. This deeply felt and thought and warmly written work places American law in a more attractive light than it frequently enjoys.

6262. Cardozo, Benjamin Nathan. Selected writings. Edited by Margaret E. Hall. New York, Fallon Publications, 1947. xxiv, 456 p. 47–11282 Law

A collection of Cardozo's extrajudicial utterances: addresses, lectures, essays, and the texts of his brilliant works on jurisprudence: Nature of the Judicial Process (1921), Growth of the Law (1924), Paradoxes of Legal Science (1928), and Law and Literature (1931). Most of these reflect his contributions to the literature and philosophy of American law: his insight and eloquence in defining and stating the moral values of the law; his craftmanship in bending, or not bending, a rule to meet the demands of ethical principle, or to uphold a legal or political value; and his aesthetic convictions expressed in his fondness for beauty of literary style and his belief in the close relationship of beauty and morals. Except for some works of his student days at Columbia which are included, these writings are by-products and reflections of Cardozo's work as a judge of the Supreme Court of New York (1914–32), before his appointment to the United States Supreme Court.

6263. Frank, Jerome. Law and the modern mind. New York, Coward-McCann, 1949. xxxi, 368 p. 49–2082 Law

An influential study in the theory of law by a well-known American jurist, which went through six printings between 1930 and 1949; to the last the author adds a lengthy preface (p. vi–xxviii) outlining the interim progress of his opinions. Recent logic, philosophy of science, and especially psychology are drawn upon to scotch "the basic legal myth," "the notion that law either is or can be made approximately and certain." The acceptance of this myth by lawyers, who should know better, as well as by the public is blamed by Frank for the widespread cynical disdain of lawyers as tricksters and quibblers. The trouble is that "the desire persists in grown men to recapture, through a rediscovery of a father, a childish, completely controllable universe, and that desire seeks satisfaction in a partial, unconscious, anthropomorphizing of Law, in ascribing to the Law some of the characteristics of the child's Father-Judge." Until we have followed the way pointed out by Justice O. W. Holmes, "the completely adult jurist," and put away this childish image and the childish emotions attached to it, "we shall not reach that first step in the civilized administration of justice, the recognition that man is not made for the law, but that law is made by and for men."

6264. Hand, Learned. The spirit of liberty; papers and addresses, collected, and with an introd. and notes, by Irving Dilliard. New York, Knopf, 1952. xxx, 262 p. 51–13215 Law

In 1951 Learned Hand (b. 1872) retired from active service as Chief Justice of the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit, thus completing a judicial career of more than four decades. Long before his retirement Hand had become a legend, first to the members of his profession and later to the general public. The vagaries of the American political system deprived him of a place on the U.S. Supreme Court, but he has been called its "tenth justice," and with some reason, for the High Court has been influenced by Hand's lower court decisions, and has on occasion given Hand's very words a place in its own. In 1939, when Harvard bestowed the degree of Doctor of Laws upon this distinguished son, the citation called him: "A judge worthy of his name, judicial in his temper, profound in his knowledge, a philosopher whose decisions affect a nation." Irving Dilliard's appreciative essay prefaces this collection of Hand's nonjudicial pieces, which commences with his Harvard Class Day oration (1893) and concludes with an address he delivered at a celebration of his 80th birthday. Many of the judge's words in praise of others are included: of Holmes, Brandeis, and Cardozo, to name but three. He is one of the same breed, and must be praised in ideas and language of the same stamp.

6265. Jackson, Percival E. Look at the law; the law is what the layman makes it. Foreword by Arthur Garfield Hays. New York, Dutton, 1940. 377 p. 40–27271 Law

A rapid review of the chronic lay complaints that there is too much law; that the law is uncertain, rigid, technical, hypocritical, slow, and expensive; and that lawyers are dishonest, judges corrupt, and witnesses liars. The author, formerly counsel of the United States Senate Committee for the Investigation of the Administration of Justice in the United States Courts (1936) provides an abundance of illustration in his efforts to arouse public opinion to the point of doing something about a legal system as fallible as the society which it is meant to serve. Once the complaint is made, the bar should, the author asserts, suggest remedies from which laymen may choose the one they desire and insist on its application. The author's recommendations, aside from the need for stimulating the public to action and obtaining leadership, call for reduction of bulk and technicalities in the law, for a continuous digest of judge-made law by a public agency, for a court administration more conducive to the ends of justice; and for a general raising of standards for all actively concerned in the practice and administration of the law. There is no index.

6266. Konefsky, Samuel J. The legacy of Holmes and Brandeis; a study in the influence of ideas. New York, Macmillan, 1956. 316 p. 56–11835 Law Drawing upon the writings of Justices Holmes and Brandeis (nos. 6241–6242, 6246–6248) and upon the recollections of the law clerks who served them, the author presents a comparative study of the constitutional and legal philosophy of these two men, who so often found themselves companions in dissent. Each of them, in his own way, "has come to symbolize the never-ending struggle to infuse law and balance into the processes by which the people of the United States are governed. They differed greatly in intellectual taste, social perception, political ideals, and juristic method. Yet they were able to achieve almost complete accord in their exposition of the Constitution. The harmony between Justices Holmes and Brandeis is as illuminating a commentary upon the essentially flexible nature of America's fundamental charter as one can expect to find in the whole field of judicial biography."

6267. Mortenson, Ernest. You be the judge. Illustrations by Alain. New York, Longmans, Green, 1940. 451 p. 40–6720 Law

"Collaborator, Miss Sarah Paulding Ray."—p. x.

"Suggestions for further reading": p. 441–445.

A New York lawyer seeks to make the law and its processes intelligible and reasonable to those without legal training, to which end he purposely omits qualifying phrases and legal terminology. Throughout he employs actual cases, simplifying them considerably by the omission of technicalities but supplying the fundamental legal principles which are usually presupposed in the judges' opinions. After two introductory chapters on the nature of legal actions and judicial processes, the author devotes successive chapters to the most common fields of substantive law: torts, property, crime, international law, domestic relations, equity, contracts (including bills and notes and insurance), wills, and Federal cases. Chapter 12, "Problems of Proof," discusses cross-examination as well as the varieties and values of evidence. The concluding chapter presents issues in the philosophy of the law and in its reform. Mr. Mortenson's cases are usually quite interesting in themselves, and his expositions uncommonly clear and crisp; the whole may be termed an attractive layman's casebook. He warns, of course, that it does not qualify the reader to conduct his own litigation.

6268. My philosophy of law; credos of sixteen American scholars, published under the direction of the Julius Rosenthal Foundation, Northwestern University. Boston, Boston Law Book Co., 1941. 321 p. illus. 41–19742 Law

A symposium of American legal philosophy contributed by such legal scholars as John Dickinson, Roscoe Pound, Max Radin, and John H. Wigmore, and by two scholars not primarily of the law: John Dewey and Morris R. Cohen. The remaining 10 were all professors in the law schools of major universities; 3 of them, naturally enough, were of the faculty of Northwestern University, A photograph of each precedes his essay. The essays are untitled, since the subject of each is understood to be "My Credo about the Law": "the editorial committee feared that if the author were left free to select his own subject, the symposium would turn out to be a mere collection of papers lacking in definite unity." Since the print is large and the margins generous, these 15- to 20-page statements are even briefer than might be supposed. The views expressed by the contributors as to the ultimate ideas of the origin, nature, and ends of the law are varied in approach and conclusion, although nearly every one of the essays stresses the inadequacy of viewing the law as merely a body of precedents and rules.

6269. Shartel, Burke. Our legal system and how it operates; five lectures, delivered at the University of Michigan, February 23, 24, 25, 26, and 27, 1948, on the Thomas M. Cooley lectureship, enlarged and revised. Ann Arbor, University of Michigan Law School, 1951. 629 p. (Michigan legal studies) 51–61902 Law

Professor Shartel of the University of Michigan Law School has written for beginning law students, upper-level undergraduates, and general readers curious about the legal system an introductory book intended to supply the place once held by Sir William Blackstone's Commentaries on the Laws of England, now completely obsolete for general teaching purposes. He begins on a semantic note, with a discussion of the use of language in relation to law, and goes on to analyze the legal system in terms of two basic ideas: acts of individuals and officials, and standards intended to control these acts. Having spelled out his distinctions in these spheres, the author can proceed to chapters on "Legislation," the "Interpretation of Legislation," "The Common Law," and "Legal Policies and Policy Making," policies being defined as the ends for which standards are framed by lawmakers. However useful as a preliminary to more specialized law courses, it is unlikely to enjoy the long repute of Blackstone, for if most of it is plain enough, some of it is obvious, and all is quite prosaic.

6270. Vanderbilt, Arthur T. Men and measures in the law; five lectures delivered . . . at the University of Michigan, Apr. 1948. New York, Knopf, 1949. xxi, 156, x p. (William W. Cook Foundation lectures, v. 4) 49–8738 Law

The late and greatly regretted A. T. Vanderbilt, who taught at the New York University Law School for over 30 years until his appointment as chief justice of the Supreme Court of New Jersey in 1947, was an indefatigable leader in the cause of legal reform. In these lectures he took a critical look at the entire field of American law in the light of a time of world crisis. "Law in the Books," he found, was crushing in its volume and too little accessible; the great need was "for critical research apparatus to make it more available to us." The legal profession suffered from the lack of a sense of individual responsibility; its members turned away from politics and public office. The law schools spent far too much of their time on commercial law and the law of property; they were nevertheless the best hope of the future. In every jurisdiction substantive law cried out for continuous revision and continuous codification, as well as for public agencies charged with searching it for provisions deserving repeal. However, "the stumbling-block," in which improvements "come with far greater difficulty than progress in the substantive law," was procedure, for here both bench and bar had a vested interest in technicalities where they are at home and everyone else quite at sea. Vanderbilt concisely outlined the movements for procedural reform, the concrete gains that had been achieved, and the wide field for improvement that remained—including arrogance and bad temper on the bench. Here again the best hope was the law schools, as the best means "to mobilize, co-ordinate and direct the activities of the many bar associations, the judicial councils, and other organizations devoted to the improvement of the administration of justice."

D. Digests of American Law

6271. Brown, Ray A. The law of personal property. 2d ed. Chicago, Callaghan, 1955. 853 p. (National textbook series) 55–14547 Law

First published in 1936 under title: A Treatise on the Law of Personal Property.

Table of cases: p. xv–xcvii.

Professor Brown of the University of Wisconsin Law School has drawn upon his own experience as teacher and practitioner, and has cited over 5500 cases in this comprehensive treatise on the American law of chattel property. An introductory chapter informs us that ownership is "not a single indivisible concept but a collection or bundle of rights, of legally protected interests," and that certain limited rights in land are regarded as chattels. Chapters 2–9 consider various ways of acquiring and transferring rights in personal property: original acquisition; finding lost articles; adverse possession; judgment and satisfaction of judgment; accession and confusion ("such an intermixture of goods owned by different persons, that the property of each can no longer be distinguished"); gifts of chattels and of "choses in action" (claims by one person against another for the performance of valuable acts, such as bonds or shares of stock); and sales. Six longer chapters deal with bailments ("the rightful possession of goods by one who is not the owner"), liens, and pledges, all situations wherein one person has a limited interest in the personal property of another. The two concluding chapters deal with fixtures and crops, both in the borderland between personal and real property.

6272. Clark, George Luther. Summary of American law. With introd. by Roscoe Pound. Rochester, N.Y., Lawyers Co-operative Pub. Co., 1947. xxxv, 691 p. 47–8287 Law

6273. Griffith, Virgil A. Outlines of the law, a comprehensive summary of the major subjects of American law. Indianapolis, Bobbs-Merrill, 1950. 752 p. 50–3721 Law

6274. Gavit, Bernard C. Introduction to the study of law. Brooklyn, Foundation Press, 1951. xvi, 388 p. (University textbook series) 51–4853 Law

Mr. Clark's Summary of American Law, covering practically the entire legal field, is designed, through its summations of 30 legal subjects, to aid the law student, armed with the appropriate case books, to obtain an effective general view of the law. Of its four sections, the first is concerned with the rudimentary aspects of the law, such as forms of action, torts, contracts, agency, and property; the second with equity and the law of commerce; and the third with public law, encompassing public utilities, municipal corporations, taxation, and constitutional, administrative and labor law. The concluding section is devoted to the principles of procedure in common law and code pleading, and in the presentation of evidence. Another survey of the law is Mr. Griffith's; of a more general nature with a minimum of case citations, and without the discussion of procedure included in Clark's Summary, this outline of major legal subjects is directed not only to those of, or about to be of, the legal profession, but also to others seeking a comprehensive statement of the principles of American law. Mr. Gavit's contribution to this group of summary and introductory manuals "is not a law book; it is a book about the law." The most elementary of the three, it is intended for pre-law and law students as well as for the layman who desires to become acquainted with such fundamentals of the American legal system as legal education, the sources and forms of the law, the judicial process, legal ethics, procedure, the common law forms, and equity. The definition and explanation of basic concepts has resulted in an exposition extremely general in nature, but this should increase the work's usefulness to those for whom it is designed.

6275. Clark, William L. Handbook of the law of contracts. 4th ed., by Archibald H. Throckmorton and Alvin C. Brightman. St. Louis, West Pub. Co., 1931. xv, 858 p. (Hornbook series) 31–15710 Law

Clark (1863–1918) won "the distinction of being one of the most prolific of American law writers, and it is probably true that during the past generation law students have used his books more extensively than those of any other author," say the editors of this volume. Clark's original edition appeared in 1894, and it and its successors had the widest circulation of all his works. The original analysis followed that of standard English works on contracts by Sir William Anson and S. M. Leake. In chapter 1 a contract is defined as "an agreement enforceable at law, made between two or more persons, by which rights are acquired by one or more to acts or forbearances on the part of the other or others." Successive chapters deal with "Offer and Acceptance," "Classification of Contracts [contracts of record, contracts under seal, and simple or parol contracts]," "Contracts Required to be in Writing," "Consideration ['A valuable consideration is essential to the validity of every simple contract']," "Capacity of Parties," "Reality of Consent," "Legality of Object [an agreement with an illegal object is no contract]," "Operation," "Interpretation," and "Discharge of Contract," and "Quasi Contract [obligations clothed by the law with the semblance of contract for the purpose of remedy]."

6276. Clark, William L., and William L. Marshall. A treatise on the law of crimes. 6th ed., rev. by Melvin F. Wingersky. Chicago, Callaghan, 1958. xix, 959 p. (National textbook series) 58–3192 Law

A standard digest of American criminal law since 1895, into the latest edition of which a quantity of sociological matter has been written. Part 1 on "Legal Concepts of Crime" has chapters on the sources and characteristics of criminal law and on "Jurisdiction and Locality." Part 2 is labelled "Criteria of Accountability, Responsibility, Exemption, and Vindication"; it includes a chapter of 104 pages on "The Mental Element." Part 3 classifies punishable behavior in six chapters: "Proscribed Coalitions," "Offenses against the Persons of Individuals," "Offenses Involving Sexual Behavior, Morality, and Family Relations," "Offenses against Property," "Burglary and Arson," and "Offenses against Government." Many persons will prefer the considerably simpler and more straightforward 5th edition, prepared by James J. Kearney in 1952 (794 p.).

6277. Kent, James. Commentaries on American law. 12th ed., edited by O. W. Holmes, Jr. Boston, Little, Brown, 1873,[c] 1901. 4 v. 1–27711 Law

A landmark in American legal literature, Chancellor Kent's Commentaries, the great American institutional legal treatise intended to instruct students of American jurisprudence in the fundamentals of that system, and based on Kent's lectures given at Columbia College in 1823 and 1824, was first published between 1826 and 1830. As early as 1832 a second edition was printed to meet the enthusiastic response to the work. Its six sections are devoted respectively to the law of nations, to the government and constitutional jurisprudence of the United States, to the sources of the municipal law of the several States, to the rights of persons, to personal property, and to real property. No separate treatment is given to the law of crimes or to equity. Justice Holmes' edition of the Commentaries, published a quarter of a century after Kent's death, not only brought the work up to date by means of Holmes' supplementary essays, but also sought to restore something of Kent himself by eliminating almost entirely the notes by other hands that had been added to previous editions later than the sixth (1848), which contained Kent's last corrections.

6278. Tiffany, Herbert Thorndike. A treatise on the modern law of real property and other interests in land. New abridged ed., by Carl Zollmann. Chicago, Callaghan, 1940. xxxvi, 1219 p. 40–14787 Law References: p. v–vi.

Tiffany's original edition was published in 1903; after its plates were worn out, two successive photostatic reproductions were used as teaching manuals in many law schools. It aimed "to present, in moderate compass, the principles which govern the various branches of the law of the land, adopting for the purpose a method of analysis and order calculated to make plain the relations of these various branches to one another and to the whole." Mr. Zollmann retained the original framework, but checked 14 casebooks to add new cases, expanded some of the sections, and added some new ones. Part 1 contains "Preliminary Considerations" on the nature of real property, tenure and seisin, and the theory of estates. Laymen will be surprised to learn that the all-important legal distinction between real and personal property is no older than the middle of the 17th century, when it arose out of the differing forms of action used to recover rights in land as against rights in chattels. Part 2 on "The Ownership of Land" is much the longest; it has chapters on "The Quantum of Estates," "Equitable Ownership," "Future Estates and Interests," "Concurrent Ownership," "Estates and Interests Arising from Marriage," and "Rights of Enjoyment Incident to Ownership." The four remaining parts are "Rights to Dispose of Land Not Based on Ownership," "Rights as to the Use and Profits of Another's Land," "The Transfer of Rights in Land," and "Liens."

6279. Walsh, William F. A treatise on equity. Chicago, Callaghan, 1930. xli, 603 p. (National textbook series) 30–25486 Law

"We think of equity as that system of remedial law administered by Chancery in England and by courts in the United States which exercised like powers and administered a like system of law"; its content and nature can be further understood only by studying its principles and practices. The basic sense, of course, is that the judicial power may do justice in cases where the letter of the law would work a clear injustice or hardship upon one of the parties. Modern codes and statutes have effected a merger of law and equity, and "modern equity has emerged as a coordinated part of the single system of law under which we live." A major purpose of Professor Walsh's book is to restate the rules and principles of equity from the point of view of this merger. The four parts deal with the "History, Nature, and Characteristics of Equity," "Equitable Relief in Tort Cases," "Equitable Relief in Contract Cases," and "Equitable Relief against Fraud and Mistake and in Miscellaneous Cases."

E. Courts and Judges

6280. American Law Institute. A study of the business of the Federal courts. Philadelphia, Executive Office, American Law Institute, 1934. 2 v. tables, diagrs. 35–8524 Law

CONTENTS.—1. Criminal cases.—2. Civil cases.

Inaugurated by President Hoover's National Commission on Law Observance and Enforcement, and carried out by a committee aided by several law schools and the Rockefeller Foundation, this study of cases, criminal and civil, made in 13 judicial districts has resulted in a detailed statistical account of the operation of the Federal courts—an operation found by this study to be in the main quite efficient. On the criminal side, this analysis pointed to the need for emphasis upon questions of substantive policy in Federal law administration as distinguished from attempts to refurbish procedure; a case in point cited was the need for the regulation, not the abolition, of the technique of pleading guilty. The interpreters of the statistics gathered from the study of the civil cases felt it desirable that devices be created for rapidly and efficiently sorting the cases and allotting each to the procedure best adapted to it. As a pilot project in the employment of statistical methods in studying courts of law, these reports, aside from the purely mechanical experience gained, are of value in that, admittedly, they point to the necessity of trained observation to supplement statistical tables.

6281. Bunn, Charles Wilson. A brief survey of the jurisdiction and practice of the courts of the United States. 5th ed., by Charles Bunn. St. Paul, West Pub. Co., 1949. 408 p. 49–3344 Law

A short study dealing primarily with the jurisdiction of the Federal courts and only incidentally with practice before them. Three groups of cases confront a lawyer considering the problem of jurisdiction: cases in which only the State courts possess competence, those in which Federal jurisdiction is exclusive, and a third group in which Federal and State jurisdictions are concurrent, and where he and his opponent have a choice of forum depending upon such factors as the condition of trial calendars, the competence of judges, or the attitudes of juries. While these latter considerations are of importance, it is not the purpose of the author to treat them; what he does do is to set forth the areas of compelled selection and of choice in their main aspects and indicate the place to go for further information. Of value to law students, this work is complemented by an appendix containing the principal provisions of the Constitution, statutes, and rules bearing on the jurisdiction of the Federal courts.

6282. Callender, Clarence N. American courts; their organization and procedure. New York, McGraw-Hill, 1927. 284 p. 27–3682. Law

"References" at end of most of the chapters.

A description of the State and Federal courts together with an explanation of the procedures employed in handling various types of litigation. Intended for the general student, this work is concerned not with minutiae, but with the broader aspects of the administration of justice in the courts. In discussing the relationship between attorney and client, the State and Federal court systems, justices of the peace, pleadings and forms of action, the phases of trial procedure, courts of equity, probate and criminal courts, commercial arbitration, and the problem of improving legal procedure, the author has employed language comprehensible to the layman. A useful list of the jurisdictions of the several courts in each State concludes the book. While much of the book's information is now out of date, no survey of the same scope and on the same level has appeared to replace it.

6283. Carpenter, William S. Judicial tenure in the United States, with especial reference to the tenure of Federal judges. New Haven, Yale University Press, 1918. 234 p.

18–12485 JK1533.C3; Law

In the United States judges, Federal and State alike, have a double function: they not only administer justice but act as the guardians of the Constitution, and can declare and enforce the nullity of any legislation conflicting with its provisions (state judges, of course, guard the constitution of each State). The independence of the judiciary is essential to both functions, but it is only the second, the function of judicial review, that has brought such independence under political attack, invariably directed at the security of tenure of the judicial office. This concise volume reviews the history of such assaults since 1789, and finds that the courts have usually been able to withstand them, "and in the end popular sentiment has usually supported the courts." The courts must be free, it argues, not only from executive and legislative control, but "from the political vagaries of the people themselves." It does not find that appointment necessarily produces a better bench than election; the local state of public opinion is a more important determinant. It stands out for impeachment as the only sound mode of removing incompetent or corrupt judges, conceding only that its procedural simplification is desirable. Four decades of additional experience have, for the most part, confirmed the solidity and soundness of Professor Carpenter's exposition.

6284. Chesnut, William C. A Federal judge sums up. [Baltimore] 1947. 274 p. illus. 47–5573 Law

An account of the conditions under which lawyers practiced in Baltimore at the close of the last and the beginning of the present century is presented in the first half-dozen chapters of this volume. Discussions and reminiscences of legal education, Baltimore judges and lawyers in the 1890's, the Maryland Court of Appeals and the Baltimore State's Attorney's Office at the turn of the century, and general law practice from 1889 to 1931 fill these pages. In 1931 the author (b. 1873) was appointed United States District Judge for Maryland, and the latter half of his book is devoted almost wholly to a treatment of the day-to-day work of a Federal trial court. Directed to both laymen and those attorneys who do not practice in the Federal courts, these untechnical, easily digested chapters also include comments on the jury system and on improvements in judicial functions, while the final portion of the book sets forth a program of collateral reading for younger members of the legal profession seeking a larger perspective of the law and its practice. Very few American judges have thus summarized their personal experience for the benefit of a larger public.

6285. Frank, Jerome. Courts on trial; myth and reality in American justice. Princeton, Princeton University Press, 1949. 441 p. 49–11391 Law

A provocative book by a member of the Federal bench and self-confessed reformer which seeks to explode before the lay public the myth of judicial infallibility. Trials, trial courts, and judicial fact-finding are the concern of the author, whose theme is that the process of factfinding by the trial courts is inadequately accomplished, and, as a consequence, the outcome of litigation is uncertain and injustice is too easily done. It is in the factfinding function that reform is held to be most needed. The reforms suggested to alleviate the situation are drastic, extending from a complete revamping of the system of legal education to the discarding of the judicial robe. Judges, juries (when employed at all), witnesses, and trial procedure itself would cease to contribute to the uncertainty with beclouds the judicial scene. The courts of law would become stages upon which would be enacted the drama of the ascertainment of truth; no longer would they be the arenas in which adversaries lock themselves in judicial combat. The arguments of the late Judge Frank (1889–1957) won much praise from laymen, but have hitherto had small effect upon the judicial process.

6286. Frankfurter, Felix, and James M. Landis. The business of the Supreme Court; a study in the Federal judicial system. New York, Macmillan, 1927. 349 p. 27–24024 Law

The title of this book, which first appeared serially in the Harvard Law Review, is far from self-explanatory. Its authors, whose distinguished careers were only begun when it was published, meant that the Supreme Court was the apex of the Federal court system, and that the work which devolved upon it was "largely predetermined by the jurisdictional ambit of the lower courts," which has been determined, in its turn, by successive acts of Congress. "It will be our purpose, therefore, to sketch rapidly the system of 'inferior courts' which Congress from time to time established, the authority which was vested in them, and the scope of review over them and the State courts by which Congress conferred 'appellate jurisdiction' upon the Supreme Court." It is largely a story of the increasing pressure of business arising from the growth of the country in size, population, and economic complexity, of the measures sought to relieve the higher courts from congestion, and the "lively issues of politics and policy" which entered into the ensuing legislation. The volume retains its value as an outline history of the structure of the Federal judicial system during its first 135 years; as a practical commentary on the Judiciary Act of 1925 it is of course quite obsolete. The authors divide their narrative into three broad periods, the dividing points of which are the Civil War and the establishment of intermediate courts of appeals in 1891.

6287. Lummus, Henry T. The trial judge; being a series of three lectures provided by the Julius Rosenthal Foundation for General Law, and delivered at the Law School of Northwestern University at Chicago in March 1937. Chicago, Foundation Press, 1937. 148 p. 37–9340 Law

A veteran of three decades on the Massachusetts bench when he delivered these lectures, Judge Lummus set forth in them canons of judicial conduct which should keep the bench beyond reproach. He points out that the lower courts are the keystone of the judicial system, for they are the most familiar to the multitude, and by them the whole system is judged. There are discussions of substance upon the qualities and duties of trial judges, judicial administration, and the trial judge in criminal cases. The weight of the lectures is to be found, however, in the concluding sections dealing with the appointment and tenure of judges in relation to the independence of the judiciary. Of the elective and appointive methods of selecting judges, the author prefers the latter and views the former as the natural enemy of judicial independence. In fact, he would prefer the appointive power within each State to be vested in some sort of a minister of justice, who would be elected and advised by a council. This would compensate for what is termed the "outstanding blunder" and the "most tragic failure" of American democracy: the usual method of selecting judges and of regulating their tenure.

6288. MacDougall, Curtis D. Covering the courts. New York, Prentice-Hall, 1946. xvi, 713 p. (Prentice-Hall journalism series) 47–1042 Law

Written by a professor of journalism at Northwestern University, this handbook represents an attempt to aid newsmen in the writing of intelligent interpretive news accounts involving the administration of justice. Employing examples of legal forms and excerpts from pertinent news stories, the author presents summaries and explanations of legal history, theory, and procedure, civil and criminal, as well as expositions of the mechanics of appellate law, including a brief resumé of the history and functioning of the United States Supreme Court. With a warning that legal terminology may vary from jurisdiction to jurisdiction, Professor MacDougall points out certain differences between Federal and State laws, and between the practices of the States. An attempt to mediate between the disciplines of journalism and the law, the book is exceptionally well adapted to inform the general reader.

6289. Mayers, Lewis. The American legal system, the administration of justice in the United States by judicial, administrative, military, and arbitral tribunals. New York, Harper, 1955. 589 p. 54-8972 Law

Bibliography: p. 559-566.

A textbook developed in Professor Mayers' classes at the City College of New York to supply the lack of a single systematic account of American legal institutions—as distinguished from American law—in all their varied aspects. The chief institutions are traced to their historical roots, and current proposals for reform, including some made by the author, are indicated. Over two-thirds of the text is concerned with the courts; discussions of the Federal judicial power and that of the States precede a description of the court structure, State and Federal. Criminal proceedings are divided into investigation and prosecution, with a briefer discussion of "Summary Proceedings of a Criminal Nature," such as those against youthful offenders. Civil proceedings are discussed under objectives and procedure. The courts are considered as a check on the executive and on legislation, and as molders of the law. Their personnel is reviewed; after discussing judges and lawyers, Mr. Mayers notes the increasing difficulty of obtaining jurors of intelligence and probity and, in the criminal realm, the immense powers for good or evil wielded by prosecutors. Part 2 on "Administrative Tribunals and Their Supervision by the Courts" is primarily concerned with enforcement proceedings. Part 3, "Military Tribunals and Their Control by the Courts," includes those which we have maintained in occupied territory. Part 4 on "Voluntary Arbitration Tribunals" is much the briefest (p. 543-557). Any layman in search of understanding can profit from this survey, well organized, lucid, and never more technical than the subject matter demands.

6290. Pound, Roscoe. Organization of courts. Boston, Little, Brown, 1940. 322 p. (The Judicial administration series, published under the auspices of the National Conference of Judicial Councils) 40-10936 Law

Bibliography: p. [295]-304.

A comprehensive treatment of the growth of the courts in various American jurisdictions from the 17th century to the present era. Dean Pound emphasizes the common elements present in this growth, which have led to an American type of judicial organization despite diversities among the various components of the American judicial machinery. The book was written not as a part of a general history of American law, but in preparation for a reorganization of the American courts, which the author felt to be inevitable. The study points up the need for a thorough reorganization of the courts based upon the principles of unification, conservation of judicial energy, and responsibility. Stressed is the necessity of abolishing legislative regulation of the administrative details of the courts, and of establishing within the various jurisdictions an administrative hierarchy with a responsible head and responsible subordinates. "Only by some such centralized system," Dean Pound declares, "can the courts handle with a maximum of efficiency and expedition, and minimum of expense to litigants and public, the volume of litigation that comes to them under the social and economic order of today."

6291. Ulman, Joseph N. A judge takes the stand. New York, Knopf, 1936. 289 p. 39-33779 Law

"Suggestions for further reading": p. 287-289.

"For the last eight years I have been one of the eleven judges comprising the court of first resort for all but minor cases in a city of eight hundred thousand people," says Judge Ulman of the supreme bench of Baltimore city. In this time he accumulated 22 notebooks, each of 500 closely written pages, covering the cases heard before him. He draws upon them for a series of topical chapters, in which comments and reflections arise out of selected facts, intended to let the average citizen know "what actually happens when cases are tried in court." He notes that juries, merely by the amount of damages they assess, have remade the law of contributory negligence as laid down by a judge in 1809, and he reflects at length on the relationship of judge and jury, concluding that the judge is in danger of using his powers of interference more than the situation warrants. In a chapter entitled "I Object," he discusses the courtroom relationship of judge and lawyers, with respect to the rules of evidence and the treatment of witnesses. "It Is Unconstitutional" contains some unusual and most interesting comments on a decision of his which was reversed by the Maryland Court of Appeals but reaffirmed by the United State Supreme Court. "Murder" goes into the case of Herman Duker; Judge Ulman sentenced him to hang, but Governor Ritchie commuted the sentence to life imprisonment. The book is instructive enough, but one wishes that its wise and humane author had the literary skill which could have made it quite outstanding.

6292. Warner, Sam Bass, and Henry B. Cabot. Judges and law reform. Cambridge, Harvard University Press, 1936. 246 p. diagr. (Survey of crime and criminal justice in Boston, conducted by the Harvard Law School, v. 4)

36–15542 HV6795.B7S8, v. 4; Law

Of particular interest to students of the criminal law, this study, centered on the Boston and Massachusetts courts, is concerned with the administration of criminal justice in the courts, and with its improvement. The authors point out that it is to the judges that we should look for leadership in such reform, for if judges would assume such responsibility, reforms in legal procedure, they hope, would be brought about much more skillfully and expeditiously than if entrusted to a legislature; judges would take greater pains to see that justice is administered; and judgeships would be made more attractive to the highest caliber of lawyer. Not only are the organization of the courts and the mechanics of dispensing justice scrutinized but such tribulations of the public as discourteous attorneys, lack of proper courtroom facilities for visitors, and cumbrous procedure, and delays in the conduct of trials are also given deserved space here. It is not only on the bench and at the bar, but also in the attitude of the public toward the judicial function that a change must be wrought, if continuous reform of legal procedure is to become a reality.

6293. Wendell, Mitchell. Relations between the Federal and State courts. New York, Columbia University Press, 1949. 298 p. (Columbia University. Faculty of Political Science. Studies in history, economics and public law, no. 555)

49–11705 H31.C7, no. 555

"Selected bibliography": p. 291–292.

If the primary contribution of the judiciary to the Federal structure of the United States has been made by the Supreme Court through its interpretation of the Constitution, the lower Federal courts and the State courts have nevertheless made significant contributions to the operation of the Federal system. These courts are responsible for the daily adjustment of the judicial relationship between the Federal and State governments. With this in mind, the author launches his discussion of the division of jurisdiction between the Federal and State courts. The first section of the book traces the development of the power of the Federal judiciary and is followed by an examination of the circumstances under which a litigant may be heard in a Federal court; this involves the knotty problem of diversity of citizenship. Thereafter much of this study is concerned with the background and aftermath of the cases Swift v. Tyson (1842) and Eire Railroad Co. v. Tompkins (1938). In the latter, the Supreme Court after 96 years reversed its doctrine in the former, that the Federal courts were free to disregard State precedents and apply their own interpretation of State law. The work closes with a brief survey of the problems of concurrent jurisdiction and with the author's conclusions in favor of continuing the dual judiciary, because of the need for efficient judicial administration and for State courts which have authority to make final determinations in matters of local law. The operations of the Federal judiciary, he thinks, should be restricted to areas of general national concern.

F. The Judicial Process

6294. Borchard, Edwin M. Convicting the innocent; errors of criminal justice. With the collaboration of E. Russell Lutz. New Haven, Yale University Press, 1932. xxix, 421 p. (A publication of the Institute of Human Relations)

32–13534 Law

Bibliography at end of each case.

A Massachusetts district attorney having declared that "innocent men are never convicted," Professor Borchard of Yale University made this now famous collection of 65 cases, 50 of which are narrated at some length. They are drawn from 26 States of the Union, the District of Columbia, and England; 29 of them had to do with murder, 23 with robbery or swindling, 5 with forgery, and 4 with criminal assault. In each the innocence of the convicted person was subsequently established beyond reasonable doubt: in six cases the person supposed to have been murdered turned up alive, while in others the real culprit was caught and convicted, or new and exculpating evidence was discovered. In several instances the convicted person escaped execution by a hair's breadth, and in many the exculpating evidence came to light by sheer luck. The main causes of the erroneous convictions are found to be mistaken identification, erroneous inferences from circumstantial evidence, perjury, or several of these in combination; and Professor Borchard notes faults on the part of the police, the prosecution, and the state of community opinion. He offers, in an introductory chapter, some needed reforms in criminal procedure, and in a final one, a draft statute for indemnifying wrongfully convicted and arrested persons, based on a survey of European legislation for the purpose. He observes that, while there are nine cases of unjust acquittal for one of unjust conviction, this does not lessen the obligation to remedy the latter. And he makes the further observation: "In the majority of these cases the accused were poor persons, and in many of the cases their defense was for that reason inadequate."

6295. Brewster, Stanley F. Twelve men in a box. Chicago, Callaghan, 1934. 175 p.
35–222 Law

Written primarily for the citizen who may someday be called for jury duty, this manual intends to familiarize him with the duties and functioning of both the grand and petit juries. The machinery of the jury system itself, as well as something of the background of trial by jury as an institution, and the organization of the courts are touched upon. However, the greatest emphasis is given to procedure in trials civil and criminal, and the role of the juror from the time of his selection to the rendering of the verdict. The author tells what every juror ought to know about the opening addresses; witnesses, including experts, and their examination and cross-examination; the weighing of evidence and the detection of perjury; the seven most important rules of evidence; summations, their purpose and importance; the judge's charge to the jury; and what goes on in the jury room while a verdict is being agreed on or disagreed about. This instructive little volume concludes by describing the different considerations that apply to juries in criminal cases, the principal one of course being that while civil juries may be satisfied with the preponderance of evidence, criminal juries must agree that the evidence establishes the guilt of the accused beyond any reasonable doubt.

6296. Busch, Francis X. Law and tactics in jury trials; the art of jury persuasion, tested court procedures. Indianapolis, Bobbs-Merrill, 1949. xxvii, 1147 p. 49–4312 Law

This well-documented treatise, employing throughout specimens of trial proceedings, sets forth for attorneys and law students the general requirements of trial procedure, and is, in fact, a handbook on the art of advocacy. Its aim is "to present all of the contacts which the trial lawyer has with the jury in the course of a contested trial, and to indicate how every such contact may be utilized to induce the desired persuasion." Opening with brief statements concerning the origin and development of the jury and the constitutional bases of the right to trial by jury in the Federal and State courts, the author proceeds step by step, with occasional digressions on the respective functions of the court and the jury and on the methods of case preparation, through all of the considerations a trial lawyer must take into account during the course of a litigation. Volume 1 of a new "encyclopedic edition" to be complete in 4 volumes, and containing additional chapters as well as elaborate references to cases, appeared at the beginning of 1959.

6297. Cockrell, Ewing. Successful justice. Charlottesville, Va., Michie Co., 1939. xxxix, 1305 p. 39–14441 Law

"For twelve years I was an ignorant judge," says the author in opening his big book, explaining that the best legal education is usually a defective guide to practice and that most other judges were and are as ignorant as himself. Nearly all the troubles of the law come from its administration, but there are great successes in every part of the law, behind which lie definite practices grounded on facts and principles. "The science of successful justice is easily learned." Mr. Cockrell then proceeds through the whole panorama of the law in action offering concrete instances of contrasted "ignorance" and "success." Ignorant policemen are set against successful policemen, and so for prosecutors, criminal trial judges, children's judges, probation officers, jailers, parole officers, civil trial judges, juries, legislators, court experts, newspapers, etc., etc. When the author comes to declare "the principles and practices of successful justice," he offers only four: "General law of keeping agreements," "General law of punishment for law violations," "Practice of providing a reserve of punishment," and "Practice of adequate investigation." He has in the meanwhile produced an immense scrapbook on better and worse methods of the administration of justice in the United States.

6298. Frank, Jerome, and Barbara Frank. Not guilty, by Jerome Frank and Barbara Frank in association with Harold M. Hoffman. Garden City, N.Y., Doubleday, 1957. 261 p.
57–8299 Law

Sources: p. [253]–261.

Judge Frank died of a heart attack less than two days after completing the manuscript of this book, written in collaboration with his daughter. It is made up of résumés of 35 criminal cases which resulted in wrongful convictions, 17 of them narrated at some length and 18 concisely. The cases are all later in date than Professor Borchard's volume (no. 6294) and show that the hazard has continued for a quarter of a century since he demonstrated its existence. The cases are followed by a concluding chapter of commentary (p. 199–249) in which the authors illustrate the fallibility of witnesses, and criticize the concept of a trial as a duel between lawyers who use their knowledge of technicalities and their psychological insight as weapons; the victimizing of witnesses, too often treated as public enemies in the courtroom; and the concentration of prosecutors upon winning their cases rather than doing justice to the accused. By and large our system achieves fair results, but, the authors conclude, it will require major reforms in the administration of justice to make innocent men safe from imprisonment or execution. One which they urge is the extension to criminal cases of "discovery" procedure, by which either side before the trial is enabled to scrutinize the evidence in possession of the other, and so to avoid tactical surprises in the conduct of the trial.

6299. Kellor, Frances A. Arbitration in action; a code for civil, commercial and industrial arbitrations. New York, Harper, 1941. 412 p. 41–23598 Law

The purpose of voluntary arbitration is "to determine a difference or dispute amicably, privately and finally and, in so doing, to exclude a court of law from such determination." The then executive vice president of the American Arbitration Association wrote this book on the basis of its records of 25,000 satisfactorily determined arbitrations, and in response to a mass of inquiries "by men, organizations, companies and unions who want to know how, when and where to arbitrate disputes." Essentially a practical guide to the technique, facilities, and equipment essential to end disputes, it takes account of legal principles and literature only so far as germane to this purpose, and refers the reader to Wesley A. Sturges' A Treatise on Commercial Arbitrations and Awards (Kansas City, Mo., Vernon Law Book Co., 1930. 1082 p.) for a more strictly legal treatment. The largest section describes "General Procedure" and includes chapters on the arbitrator, arbitration agreements, the submission, the proceeding, evidence, the award, costs, and contesting an award. Part 2 describes three particular systems of arbitration: that set up under the authority of the Seventh International Conference of American States (Montevideo, 1933) to handle inter-American commercial disputes; the Accident Claims Tribunal established in New York City by the American Arbitration Association in 1933; and the motion picture arbitration system set up by the industry, under pressure from the U. S. Department of Justice, in 1940. The lengthly annexes (p. 217–396) summarize existing statutes and print the rules of procedure administered by the American Arbitration Association and by the three systems just mentioned.

6300. Millar, Robert W. Civil procedure of the trial court in historical perspective. [New York] Published by the Law Center of New York University for the National Conference of Judicial Councils, 1952. 534 p. (The Judicial administration series) 52–11758 Law

A compact but detailed survey of "the major procedural rules employed in the courts of the first instance in the United States and England, viewed especially from the standpoint of their historical progression." Implicit in this, of course, is its following of the course of contemporary procedural reform. The introductory section of this study is devoted to a general account of the problems of procedural evolution and reform within the Anglo-American system. The second section, comprising the main body of the work, opens by considering the conjunctive administration of law and equity, and goes on to discuss specific phases of civil procedure arranged in practical order, from the commencement of a suit to the execution of a judgment. Because of its content and the language employed, Professor Millar's book will appeal most readily to those of the legal and political science professions.

6301. Orfield, Lester Bernhardt. Criminal procedure from arrest to appeal. New York, New York University Press, 1947. xxxi, 614 p. (Judicial administration series, 6) 47–30727 Law

6302. Orfield, Lester Bernhardt. Criminal appeals in America. With an introd. by Roscoe Pound. Boston, Little, Brown, 1939. 321 p. (The Judicial administration series, published under the National Conference of Judicial Councils) 39–31420 Law

"Bibliography on appeal statistics": p. [212]–214.

6303. Puttkammer, Ernest W. Administration of criminal law. [Chicago] University of Chicago Press, 1953. 249 p. 53–8736 Law

In Criminal Procedure from Arrest to Appeal each stage of a criminal proceeding is analyzed from the standpoints of its historical development, its current use, and the need, if any, for its reform. Admittedly, some topics such as evidence, jurisdiction, habeas corpus, and coroner's inquests are not considered because of limitations of time and space; their peculiarity to other branches of the law, their obsolescence, or the fact that they are well expounded elsewhere justifies this. Throughout, American procedure is compared with that of English courts, and occasionally with criminal procedure employed on the Continent. In his critiques of suggested reforms, the author endeavors to present fairly the ideas of both major groups who advocate the overhauling of criminal procedure: those, thinking of the professional criminal, who speak in terms of expediting a more rigorous prosecution, and those, concerned with innocent parties and the casual criminal, who talk of the preservation and strengthening of civil liberties. Criminal Appeals in America commences with a short history of criminal appeals in England, and then Professor Orfield, surveying the literature of his subject, synthesizes what has been written, thought, and enacted in America; reports on the functioning of criminal appellate procedure and on proposals for its reformation; and makes some suggestions of his own. These two works together comprise a guide to the task of improving the administration of criminal justice. A brief nontechnical description of the operation of the legal machinery in the realm of the criminal law is found in Professor Puttkammer's book. Written primarily for the law student and the layman seeking general information on the subject, it deals only with the conventional areas of criminal prosecution and avoids detailed discussions of controversial points. While the lack of ponderous footnotes should be welcome to the reader, the lack of a more extensive bibliography than the references included in the notes may not be so.

6304. Pound, Roscoe. Appellate procedure in civil cases. Boston, Little, Brown, 1941. 431 p. (The Judicial administration series, published under the auspices of the National Conference of Judicial Councils) 42–1081 Law

Bibliography: p. [395]–411.

An historically grounded exposition of the development of civil appellate procedure. After a short statement of the scope and purpose of review in civil cases, there follows a historical survey of such review, which is traced here from the Roman law to the 17th century, and of civil appellate procedures in 18th-century England, in the American Colonies, and in the United States to the end of the 19th century. Finally the condition of such proceedings in the present century, with special note of improvements made, is considered. The final chapter, "Toward an Effective System of Review," for which all before seems prologue, is an essay in which the way is pointed, and a program for the revision of the review of civil cases in the United States is marked out.

6305. Pound, Roscoe. Criminal justice in America. New York, Holt, 1930. xiv, 226 p. ([Brown University. The Colver lectures, 1924]) 30–22093 Law

In this series of five lectures Dean Pound analyzes the problems and difficulties of criminal justice and explores the English and American backgrounds of its 20th-century administration. He discusses at some length the machinery of criminal justice, the obstacles to and agencies of its improvement, and asserts that the ultimate aim of any program for its reform must be a body of laws adequate to secure social interests, and capable of a high average of observance and enforcement. "The juristic thinking of today," he writes, "must transcend both nineteenth-century individualism and nineteenth-century socialism . . . Instead of valuing all things in terms of politically organized society, we are valuing them in terms of civilization, of raising human powers to their highest possible unfolding—toward which spontaneous free individual action and collective organized effort both contribute. As this mode of thinking becomes general, the paths of criminal justice will be made straight." In 1945 Criminal Justice in America was republished, with the same pagination, by the Harvard University Press.

6306. Train, Arthur C. From the district attorney's office; a popular account of criminal justice. New York, Scribner, 1939. xiv, 431 p. illus. 39–27830 HV9468.T7; Law Arthur Train (1875-1945), best known as a writer of popular fiction and creator of Ephraim Tutt, "the best known of American lawyers," served two terms as assistant district attorney of New York County. This is a revision of his The Prisoner at the Bar, first published in 1906, containing new material and including much of the relevant contents of three of his other books: On the Trail of the Bad Men (1925), Courts, Criminals and the Camorra (1912), and True Stories of Crime (1908). It is a description of the operation of metropolitan criminal justice done in an entertaining manner and laced with illustrations and anecdotes. Observations concerning the nature of crime, the rights of citizens charged with law violations, and the character of the police, prosecutors, and judges, together with numerous suggestions for the betterment of the administration of criminal justice, are to be found here. All would seem to point to the idea expressed in the final sentence: "We do not need new laws so much as better citizens." Any improvement in the laws themselves and in procedures will only come about, Train thought, when more persons have acquired a firsthand knowledge of the operational conditions of those agencies charged with the responsibility of seeing justice done.

6307. Vanderbilt, Arthur T., ed. Minimum standards of judicial administration; a survey of the extent to which the standards of the American Bar Association for improving the administration of justice have been accepted throughout the country. [New York] Published by the Law Center of New York Unversity for the National Conference of Judicial Councils, 1949. xxxii, 752 p. (The Judicial administration series) 50–1655 Law

A study, the text of which is supplemented by 62 maps, making clear to lawyers and laymen the extent to which each state was measuring up to the minimum practical standards of judicial administration formulated during the years 1938–40 by the American Bar Association. The reasoning behind those recommendations is to be found in the various reports comprising the appendixes to this volume, while the main portion of it confines itself to the presentation of facts and leads to a detailed knowledge of what should be done in each state to give it a reasonably effective system of legal procedure. Not purporting to be all-inclusive, the recommendations of the Bar Association were meant to correct the fundamental problems, such as those arising in the selection of judges and juries, in rulemaking, in pretrial and trial practices, and in the state administrative agencies and tribunals, in the belief that once these were overcome other desirable advances would follow.

6308. Waite, John Barker. Criminal law in action. New York, Holston House, Sears Pub. Co., 1934. 321 p. 34–15268 Law

An inquiry into the functioning of criminal justice in the United States. The law is viewed as a thing inert and its effectiveness as depending upon the activity of its agents. These agents—policemen, lawyers, commissioners, clerks, jurors, and judges as well as the public, newspapers, and the Federal government in its role as an enforcer of the law—are the subject of this book. Some of the spectacular failures and the less glaring inefficiencies of the criminal law in action are recounted to bolster the author's contentions. In summing up he asserts that the public must shed the illusion that tinkering with the criminal law will improve its administration, and must turn its energies to improving the attitude of the law's administrators. But this, the author says, will only be brought about when the general attitude toward criminals is transformed into one which does not consider them as subjects for punishment or retribution, but as menaces to society who must be dealt with by isolation, segregation, rehabilitation, or even death.

6309. Willoughby, William F. Principles of judicial administration. Washington, Brookings Institution, 1929. xxii, 662 p. ([Brookings Institution] Institute for Government Research. Principles of administration [6])
29–13834 JK1521.W5; Law

Bibliography: p. 607–652.

Intended for students of political science as well as for members of the legal profession, this inclusive survey seeks to determine the organizational and procedural principles to be followed if efficiency in the administration of justice is to be attained. Considered in a systematic manner is the entire subject of the organization and conduct of the judicial branch of government: the prevention of crime; the enforcement of the law; judicial organization, personnel, and procedure; and legal aid. Applying to the judicial branch of government the same criteria by which the efficiency of other governmental departments is evaluated, the author's method of attack is to resolve the great problem of judicial administration into its constituent elements; to determine the fundamental principles that should govern in handling the conditions to be met; to describe the action which has been taken; to point out wherein this action has failed to conform to the principles that should be observed and therefore has given unsatisfactory results; and, finally, to indicate the steps that should be taken to correct these mistakes, and the extent to which they have been taken in various jurisdictions.

G. Administrative Law

6310. Cooper, Frank E. Administrative agencies and the courts. Ann Arbor, University of Michigan Law School, 1951. xxv, 470 p. (Michigan legal studies) 51–62547 Law

Bibliography: p. 409–416.

A systematic description of the standards which the courts impose upon administrative agencies, controlling and limiting their actions. Leading cases illustrating principles governing frequently-litigated questions in contests between agencies and those with whom they deal are brought together, and the techniques of administrative adjudication are discussed. In examining the relationship between administrative agencies and the courts, particular attention is given to judicial doctrines concerning constitutional limitations on the delegation of powers to administrative agencies, procedural requirements in cases where agencies exercise judicial powers, procedural and substantive requirements imposed in connection with the rule-making activities of agencies, and methods and scope of judicial review.

6311. Heady, Ferrel. Administrative procedure legislation in the States. Ann Arbor, University of Michigan Press, 1952. 137 p. (Michigan. University. Michigan governmental studies, no. 24) 52–62288 Law

An evaluation of the actual working of general administrative procedural laws in representative States: North Dakota, Wisconsin, California, and Missouri, all of which had had such statutes for at least five years, long enough to provide an accumulation of experience. Attention also is given to Michigan, which possesses such a law, but of limited scope, and to Oklahoma, which at the time of writing had not enacted any general procedural legislation. The object of this report is to determine whether such laws have improved the procedural practices of State regulatory agencies. Dr. Heady concludes that the general statutes reviewed "have had in the balance a beneficial effect in each state," and have not sabotaged the administrative process. But he issues a warning that there is pressure for more drastic regulation, which "threatens unless resisted to over judicialize the procedures of State regulative agencies."

6312. Landis, James M. The administrative process. New Haven, Yale University Press, 1938. 160 p. (Storrs lectures on jurisprudence, Yale School of Law, 1938)
38–29177 JK421.L33; Law

At the time Dean Landis delivered these lectures the administrative agencies had been the target of alarmist critics, who painted them as an incipient tyranny on the way to depriving the citizen of his inherited liberties and privileges under the rule of law. Such views are effectively contested here, by one who believed that the administrative process had come to stay, and was in fact "our generation's answer to the inadequacy of the judicial and the legislative processes." Agencies have been entrusted with rulemaking, enforcement, and the disposition of competing claims because the triadic compartmentalization of government breaks down in dealing with modern problems. They have come into being whenever government assumes "responsibility not merely to maintain ethical levels in the economic relations of the members of society, but to provide for the efficient functioning of the economic processes of the state." They represent an advance in the application of expertness to government, and the more agencies the greater efficiency of regulation—provided that the relationships of the agencies to each other and to the other branches of government are properly solved. The greater part of the lectures is devoted to these right relationships. Judicial review of the agencies' results remains desirable, but only if the judges will respect their expertness, and decline to review findings of fact made by "men bred to the facts."

6313. Parker, Reginald. Administrative law, a text. Indianapolis, Bobbs-Merrill, 1952. 344 p. 52–951 Law

"List of books and articles used": p. 313–322.

Professor Parker of the University of Arkansas presents administrative law as a part of modern public law, which protects the government as well as its citizens, and ensures that the executive branch will function, in an adequate fashion, on behalf of the people and through law. He does not attempt to enter into the law pertaining to particular agencies, since each important subdivision would require a separate volume, but confines his treatise to general administrative law. Part 1 discusses the foundations of administrative law in the historic separation of powers and in the constitutional guarantee of due process, and analyzes the Administrative Procedure Act of 1946, the text of which is given as Appendix 1. Part 2 is concerned with the establishment of agencies, the hierarchy within the executive branch, the internal organization of agencies, and the nature of administrative jurisdiction, which is not, as a rule, geographically limited. Part 3 describes "Administrative Functions and Processes," with emphasis on regulations, interpretations, and administrative decisions. Part 4 deals with "Judicial Remedies," the sphere of which has been contracting in recent years, and for which there is no uniform procedure. The concluding parts discuss "Execution of Administrative Decisions" and "Damage Claims for Wrongful Administrative Acts," and the second appendix reprints most of the Federal Tort Claims Act of 1948.

6314. Pennock, James Roland. Administration and the rule of law. New York, Farrar & Rinehart, 1941. 259 p. (American government in action)

"Selected bibliography"; p. 250–254.
41–11629 JK421.P35; Law

This volume describes for the general reader "the fundamental safeguards which have developed around administrative action to insure the preservation of private rights and interests." They fall into two great classes. The author declares that many of the most effective checks against abuses of administrative rulemaking are themselves administrative, internal checks as against the external check of judicial review. The formulation and publication of its policies by each administrative tribunal, adequate notice, full hearing, reasoned and written decisions, and provision for administrative review are all essential safeguards of the internal kind. Beyond them, and ultimately indispensable if the rule of law is to be maintained, lies the power of the courts to review administrative acts and decisions. The four chapters on the courts discuss their attempts to set limits to the legislature's delegation of lawmaking powers—an important but at best a crude safeguard; the methods by which judicial control is effected notwithstanding the state's general immunity from suit; the courts' own views of the basis and extent of their powers of reviewing administrative decisions; review of actions under the general police power, which is more extensive; and review of agencies' decisions, which is less so. As of 1941, the author thought that the continuous struggle to keep administrative power in the service of the general interest had been reasonably successful, but warned that overrapid growth or the triumph of special pressures might make necessary "at least temporary retrenchment, until the forces of constitutionalism can catch up with the growth of power which has outdistanced them."

6315. Swenson, Rinehart J. Federal administrative law; a study of the growth, nature, and control of administrative action. New York, Ronald Press, 1952. 376 p. 52–9466 Law

This study is intended not only for administrators, judges, and lawyers, but also for those concerned with the present-day functions of the Federal government. It rests on the thesis that administrative action must continue to be developed into a coherent body of law, supervised by special courts of limited jurisdiction presided over by judges of such training and knowledge that they can cope with the highly technical points which are often involved in grievances resulting from such action. Dr. Swenson "traces the evolution of American thinking and practice in a changing economy and society from a philosophy of 'rugged individualism' to that of the modern 'service state' with its 'big government' and bureaucracy. The forms of administrative action and the means of their enforcement are examined. The relations of the constitutional separation of powers and of the Anglo-American rule of law to the development of administrative law in the United States are explored at some length, and a detailed and extensive consideration is given to the review of administrative action by the regular courts. Finally, attention is called to the role of the Congress in supervising administration." Dr. Swenson thinks that we have not set up a satisfactory system for the control of administration, for control by the judicial courts is "a not-too-happy solution."

6316. U. S. Attorney General's Committee on Administrative Procedure. Administrative procedure in government agencies. Report of the Committee on Administrative Procedure, appointed by the Attorney General, at the request of the President, to investigate the need for procedural reform in various administrative tribunals and to suggest improvements therein. Washington, U.S. Govt. Print. Off., 1941. 474 p. (77th Cong., 1st sess. Senate. Document 8)

41–50129 JK416.A5 1941; Law

Homer S. Cummings suggested it, Frank Murphy in 1939 appointed the Attorney General's Committee on Administrative Procedure, and Robert H. Jackson transmitted its final report. Dean Acheson was its chairman, Walter Gellhorn its director, and Francis Biddle, Lloyd K. Garrison, D. Lawrence Groner, Henry M. Hart, Jr., Carl McFarland, and Arthur T. Vanderbilt among the distinguished jurists who served upon it. The Committee assigned a staff of lawyer-investigators to study rulemaking and adjudicating procedures in 9 departments and 19 independent commissions or boards. The final report opens with a general view of the administrative process, and then surveys administrative information, informal and formal methods of adjudication, judicial review of such adjudication, and procedure in rulemaking. Four members of the Committee presented additional views and recommendations, and there are over 200 pages of appendixes. The Committee recommended the establishment of an office of Federal administrative procedure, and detailed changes in many of the agencies and departmental offices. It drafted a bill for the general control of Federal administrative procedure which, delayed by the war, revised after congressional hearings, and amended in the process of enactment, finally became the Administrative Procedure Act of 1946.

H. Lawyers and the Legal Profession

6317. Brown, Esther Lucile. Lawyers and the promotion of justice. New York, Russell Sage Foundation, 1938. 302 p. 38–39583 Law

The fifth in a series of monographs sponsored by the Russell Sage Foundation and concerned with various established or emerging professions in the United States, this study considers the legal profession primarily from the standpoint of its effectiveness in meeting public needs. The author finds that the bench and bar have fallen short of accepting certain social responsibilities, but notes trends that indicate a growing desire within the profession to promote justice more effectively. Among these particular attention is directed to improvements in the laws themselves, developments in the courts and in new tribunals, legal service both to the poor and to those of moderate means, and the movement to institute an integrated bar. Preceding this discussion are chapters dealing with the evolution of the legal profession in the United States, legal education, rules and procedures governing admission to the bar, the more important national professional associations, and the number of, demand for, and income of lawyers. The following weaknesses in the administration of justice are diagnosed; delay and uncertainty in the courts, excessive expense of litigation, unprofessional conduct of attorneys sometimes resulting in their disbarment, lack of interest in the promotion of justice, and the failure of the profession to accept social responsibilities.

6318. Brown, Esther Lucile. Lawyers, law schools and the public service. New York, Russell Sage Foundation, 1948. 258 p. 48–1216 Law

Since 1933 the United States has been transformed into "a highly centralized, bureaucratic state of behemoth proportions," in which the men who make and carry out decisions are and will continue to be lawyers. Therefore, says Professor George E. Osborne, "it seems obvious that one basic function of any law school in the future must be the conscious and systematic training of leaders in policy-making and policy-administration for the achievement of those values" sought in a free society. During 1939–41 the author visited 23 law schools in all parts of the country in order to find out "to what degree and with what efficiency legal education was preparing men and women to serve the interests of government." The first two parts of her report are comparatively brief. Part 1 estimates the number of Federal attorneys and describes their recruitment. Part 2 describes the nature of their work, and especially their participation in policymaking through drafting, interpretation, review, litigation, and counseling—in consequence of which they readily move on into administration. Part 3, from page 93, is on the "Implications for Legal Education"; it discusses the use of social science materials, the introduction of new courses and teaching materials, and the reorientation of selected portions of the curriculum. The author feared that her report would seem a very pessimistic one; in spite of introductory efforts, "the wrench from traditionalism" was a slow and hazardous undertaking, and more money, larger staffs, and careful plans were needed for further progress.

6319. Drinker, Henry S. Legal ethics. New York, Columbia University Press, 1953. xxii, 448 p. (Legal studies of the William Nelson Cromwell Foundation) 53–11928 Law

Index of works cited: p. [367]–436.

6320. Phillips, Orie L., and Philbrick McCoy. Conduct of judges and lawyers; a study of professional ethics, discipline, and disbarment. Los Angeles, Published for the Survey of the Legal Profession by Parker, 1952, i.e. 1953. xiii, 247, xiv p. 53–834 Law Bibliography: p. v–xiv at end.

Brief accounts of the origins and history of the bars of England and the United States, of the bar associations, and the development of standards of professional conduct and the disciplinary proceedings used to enforce them constitute part one of Legal Ethics, by the long-term chairman of the American Bar Association's Standing Committee on Professional Ethics and Grievances. The aim of his study is to make available a summary of the decisions interpreting the canons of ethics made in the past three decades by the ethics committees of the various bar associations, as well as a few of the pertinent statutory provisions and court decisions. In essence, this is a handbook for the use of those seeking to ascertain the duties and obligations of lawyers. These duties and obligations of lawyers to the public, the courts, clients and professional colleagues, and the question of advertising and solicitation of professional employment are discussed at length in the second portion of this study. The final chapter is a summation of the canons of judicial ethics, supplemented by appendixes including decisions by the American Bar Association's Ethics Committee, a digest of representative court decisions specifying grounds for disbarment, suspension, or censure, the canons of professional and judicial ethics, and other useful materials. The report by Messrs. Phillips and McCoy resulted from the Survey of the Legal Profession under the auspices of the American Bar Association. Following a short treatment of the history of the codes of professional and judicial ethics, such matters are examined as the inculcation of professional standards and their observance, the determination of character requirements for admission to the bar, disciplinary procedures, the selection and conduct of judges, the views held by laymen, and the perennial problem of "trial by newspaper." While fundamental concepts of honesty and integrity must be adhered to by lawyers, the authors conclude, standards of conduct must be reviewed constantly with regard to the impact of the activities of the legal profession upon the welfare of society as a whole. These fundamental concepts and standards must be inculcated in students at the outset of their law school careers, they must be made familiar to the public, and adherence to them must be demanded of those to whom the community has given the privilege of practicing law.

677676 O–63–66

6321. Harno, Albert J. Legal education in the United States; a report prepared for the survey of the Legal Profession. San Francisco, Bancroft-Whitney, 1953. 211 p. 53–9063 Law

As an introduction to a critical appraisal of his subject, Dean Harno traces the evolution of American legal education from its English heritage in the institution of the Inns of Court and the person of William Blackstone, through its formative and laissez faire periods, and into the present era opened by Christopher Langdell's introduction of the case method of instruction in the latter half of the 19th century. A discussion of the impact of professional groups, principally the American Bar Association and the Association of American Law Schools, upon legal education finds that they have been and are powerful forces for the advancement of legal instruction. Criticisms of modern legal education are surveyed and evaluated, and in his concluding chapter the author declares that its worst features have resulted from too little thinking about the objectives of legal education on the part of law school faculties. While the virtues implicit in the good lawyer are qualitative, admission standards for the law schools and the bar are quantitative. The lack of a quality criterion, inadequate financing of the schools, large classes, the lack of concern for prelegal education, overcrowded curricula, the excessive reliance upon the case method, and the serious cultural lag indicated by the great overemphasis on private law in the curriculum at the expense of public law are among the important topics surveyed. However, it is pointed out that there is now a ferment in the law schools which should produce changes for the better.

6322. Hays, Arthur Garfield. City lawyer; the autobiography of a law practice. New York, Simon & Schuster, 1942. xvi, 482 p. illus. 42–17237 Law

Hays (1881–1954) was a graduate of Columbia University Law School who began practice in New York City, with such successful and lucrative results that he was able to devote much of his time to the causes near his heart: the defense of civil liberties and the support of progressive politics. In his chapter on "Getting Started" he modestly declares that "sheer, downright luck" is essential for success at the bar: "Assuming that you know your business and are reasonably diligent, the gods of luck will make or break you." He became a favorite attorney with people in show business, and narrates his services to Billy Rose, Sigmund Romberg, and other members of the Song Writers Protective Association. His first law partnership had offices on Wall Street, and one chapter describes his business on behalf of brokerage firms; he thinks that their honestly was unjustly impugned, and that the Securities and Exchange Commission instituted a reign of terror on Wall Street. Another chapter generalizes from his practice in marriage and divorce cases; in them, he says, it is almost always impossible to fix the blame on either party. One chapter is devoted to his work for the American Civil Liberties Union, which he narrated at greater length elsewhere (no. 6127). In part 4 he describes at length several well-publicized trials in which he participated, including those of the Wendell will and heirs (1931) and the Reichstag Fire (in which he served on an international commission of inquiry which had no legal authority).

6323. Miller, Claude R. Practice of Law. Chicago, Callaghan, 1946. xvi, 300 p. 46–6524 Law

The legal profession, says Attorney Miller of Chicago, is usually about 90 percent practice to 10 percent law—in spite of which "most legal libraries have thousands of books on law for every one on practice." He therefore aims to set out, with much condensation and generalization, "a comprehensive picture of the kind of professional life that lawyers lead," with some suggestions, warnings, and advice. There are chapters on "The Study of Law," "Choosing a Place to Practice," "Starting Out in the Practice," "Securing Business," "Trying Cases" (including a section on "The Art of Losing" without incurring insomnia, indigestion, or alcoholism)," "Appellate Procedure," "General Office Practice," "Administrative Practice," "Corporation Practice," "Office Management," etc. In conclusion Mr. Miller sets before every new lawyer the desirability of doing his part to improve the profession, and suggests that politeness in the courtroom, even toward witnesses and spectators, would do much to advance the law's repute.

6324. Partridge, Bellamy. Country lawyer. Illustrated by Stephen J. Voorhies. New York, Whittlesey House, McGraw-Hill, 1939. 317 p. 40–1181 Law

An engaging portrait of lawyer Samuel Selden Partridge, his practice, and his family, written by his son. The locale is an upstate New York village (Phelps, in Ontario County) and the period is that extending from Appomattox to Sarajevo, the golden age of the country town and the country lawyer, in which a more isolated and slow-paced and less regimented life than that of today existed. Then the local lawyer was often father confessor to the community in which he lived. Not intended to be merely regional, this account is held by the author to be typical of the legal practices carried on in small towns across the country during that era.

6325. Pound, Roscoe. The lawyer from antiquity to modern times, with particular reference to the development of bar associations in the United States. A study prepared for and published by the Survey of the Legal Profession under the auspices of American Bar Association. St. Paul, West Pub. Co., 1953. xxxii, 404 p. 53–1859 Law

Bibliography: p. 363–379.

Basically a history of bar organization in the United States with an emphasis upon state and local groups, this is also a biography of a profession. Dean Pound, following an introductory discussion of the characteristics of a profession and a bar association, begins his narrative with an account of the earliest lawyers in ancient Greece, and brings it down through the medieval period, in which he finds the English origins of the legal profession of the English-speaking world. It was from the mother country that the Colonial lawyers brought to America that fraternalism characteristic of the English bar and which has remained a trademark of American lawyers. Most of this work is devoted to developments in the United States. It traces the histories of bar organization and the legal profession during the Colonial period, and during the middle years of the 19th century when the law, under the stress of a movement for deprofessionalization, suffered from a breakdown of organization and education. Both were revived with the commencement of the era of modern bar associations in 1870. From there the development of various state and local legal groups is traced, and in an epilogue the author enters a plea for an integrated bar as a means of preserving the profession from disintegrating tendencies.

6326. Reed, Alfred Zantzinger. Training for the public profession of the law; historical development and principal contemporary problems of legal education in the United States, with some account of conditions in England and Canada. New York, 1921. xviii, 498 p. (The Carnegie Foundation for the Advancement of Teaching. Bulletin no. 15) 21–16382 LC1141.R4 LB2334.C4, no. 15; Law

Bibliography: p. 460–469.

6327. Reed, Alfred Zantzinger. Present-day law schools in the United States and Canada. New York, 1928. xv, 598 p. (The Carnegie Foundation for the Advancement of Teaching. Bulletin no. 21) 28–22195 LC1141.R3 LB2334.C4, no. 21; Law

"Bibliography and acknowledgments of assistance rendered": p. 561–573.

These two titles comprise a scholarly study of the development of American legal education and of the relationship between the law schools and the practice of the law. Education for the bar in the United States, the author points out, has been complicated by the intimate connection between politics and the legal profession; it is this connection upon which the American system of legal education rests. The major portion of Training for the Public Profession of the Law is concerned with the history of American legal education before 1890, with a brief resumé of it from that year to the outbreak of World War I; with the relationship of the bar and bar examinations to legal education; and with the historical ties between a trained and educated bar and the administration of justice. The concluding section discusses briefly and affirmatively the premise that lawyers and law schools cannot be made to conform to a single standardized type; this involves a consideration of the various types of law schools and a plea for the strengthening of the legitimate schools if legal education and its products are to render adequate public service. Mr. Reed's second work deals with the function and work of the law schools in the United States and Canada at the time of writing, in the light of their curricula, conditions of administration, and methods of teaching, and of the relationship between the schools and the professional practitioners. The movement toward standardization of legal education is discussed at length, and the author calls for the maintenance of diversity among law schools and a graded bar, in order that the schools may not produce legal jacks of all trades.

6328. Roalfe, William R. The libraries of the legal profession; a study prepared for the Survey of the Legal Profession under the auspices of American Bar Association. St. Paul, West Pub. Co., 1953. xviii, 471 p. 53–12556 Law "Survey of the Legal Profession; bibliography of 150 reports, by Reginald Heber Smith": p. 429–443.

The collections, personnel, and physical plants of law libraries of nearly all types—office, association, court, state and Federal—are treated in this comprehensive survey. Cooperation among libraries and library groups and through professional associations is also discussed. Law school libraries are not extensively examined, as they have been previously considered in a survey of legal education. The task of advancing law librarianship, it is felt, rests not solely upon the shoulders of the librarians, but also upon those of the practitioners, who may reasonably be expected to have a general understanding and appreciation of the place of the law library in the profession's functioning, to make library staff appointments with care, and to assume a greater responsibility for the financial support of service rendered to them by the law libraries. It is maintained that this support, together with intelligent leadership among the librarians, can do much to raise the effectiveness of law library service.

6329. Smith, Reginald Heber. Justice and the poor, a study of the present denial of justice to the poor and of the agencies making more equal their position before the law, with particular reference to legal aid work in the United States. New York, Published for the Carnegie Foundation for the Advancement of Teaching by Scribner, 1919. xiv, 271 p. 45–32508 HV682.A5S56 1919; Law

6330. Brownell, Emery A. Legal aid in the United States; a study of the availability of lawyers' services for persons unable to pay fees. Rochester, N. Y., Lawyers Co-operative Pub. Co., 1951. xxiv, 333 p. diagr. 51–8125 Law

Justice and the Poor is a study of the unavailability of justice to those unable to pay for legal counsel, and of the agencies endeavoring to give them assistance in the handling of their cases. Such remedial agencies as courts of small claims, conciliation, and domestic relations and administrative tribunals and their officials, as well as the work of assigned counsels and public defenders are considered. Lastly and most exhaustively, the development and operation of the legal aid societies since their origin in 1876 is discussed. Legal Aid in the United States is an authoritative compilation of facts concerning the subject, surveying its past and present and hopefully prognosticating its future. Between 1876 and 1948 the number of cases in which legal aid was given, as reported by the organizations concerned, steadily rose from 212 to 344,616 with a total of 8,043,990 cases for the 73-year period. These operations rose in cost from $1,060 to $1,519,076, with a total of $19,855,024 for the period. Sixty percent of the financial burden of legal aid was being borne by the community chests, and the next largest share came from private philanthropy. As a cause, it has gained little popularity with the man in the street but civic leaders have readily perceived that it is essential to democratic equality before the law. The volume was produced for the Survey of the Legal Profession conducted under the auspices of the American Bar Association. Both of these studies contain appendixes of illustrative statistics, and Mr. Brownell adds 10 pages of legal aid offices operating in 1950.

6331. Sunderland, Edson R. History of the American Bar Association and its work. With a concluding chapter on the Committee on Scope and Correlation of Work and its program by William J. Jameson. [Ann Arbor?] 1953. 251 p. 53–4035 Law

6332. Rutherford, Mary Louise (Schuman). The influence of the American Bar Association on public opinion and legislation. Philadelphia, 1937. 393 p. 37–22332 Law

Thesis (Ph. D.)—University of Pennsylvania, 1936.

Bibliography: p. 381–383.

With the objects of providing opportunities for social intercourse among lawyers, improving American jurisprudence, raising professional standards, and improving the administration of justice, the American Bar Association was formed in 1878. Three eras in the history and development of the Association are defined by the author: the Saratoga era (1878–1902) during which, in a conservative and leisurely manner, the Association was establishing itself as a national organization, accumulating distinguished and influential members, and formulating policies looking toward the assumption of leadership in the American legal profession; the era of national expansion (1902–1936) in which the membership and variety of activities of the Association grew tremendously; and the era of federation, which began in 1936 when the Association ceased to be an organization of individuals and assumed, in the name of authority, efficiency, and professional solidarity and responsibility, the character of a federation of the organized units of the American bar. Mrs. Rutherford's is a specialized and penetrating study of the significance, possibilities, and effectiveness of the policies of the American Bar Association; she calls it suggestive rather than exhaustive. It classifies and organizes evidence of the organized bar's influence as reflected in the activities of certain sections and committees of the Association. Within the scope of this survey are analyses of the Association's structure, its influence on its own members, its public relations policies, and its influence on public opinion in regard to the Constitution, improving judicial procedure, controlling administrative agencies, and standardizing legislation. She concludes that the Association has done its best work in the field of judicial procedure, where it has put through some noteworthy reforms, and has rendered a distinct service in the drafting of legislation. It has done far too little in determining the curriculum of schools of law and in promoting legal aid, but on the whole it has pointed the way for voluntary organizations of experts to come to the aid of "a democracy enfeebled because of the paucity of trained leaders and workers in its service."

XXXI

Politics, Parties, Elections

A.	Politics: General	6333–6340
B.	Politics: Special	6341–6346
C.	Political Parties	6347–6373
D.	Local studies	6374–6383
E.	Machines and Bosses	6384–6391
F.	Pressures	6392–6399
G.	Elections: Machinery	6400–6411
H.	Elections: Results	6412–6423
I.	Reform	6424–6434

CHAPTER XXIX deals with American government in theory, in constitutional framework, and in concrete operation. The present chapter deals with the political processes which determine who shall be the governors and by what policies they shall be guided. Elections by the enfranchised portion of the people have been a feature of American life since 1619, when the "first-born child of the Mother of Parliaments," as F. W. Maitland happily termed it, met at Jamestown; but neither then nor in 1776 or 1787 were the proportion of the electors to the whole population, or the offices thought proper to be filled by their ballots, the same as today. The tendency throughout has been toward an expansion of the franchise, with only one serious setback when the Southern Negro was disfranchised after 1877. There has also been an increase in the number of offices filled by election, but here there has been in the recent past a considerable reaction, evident in such cases as judges and city managers. However, in America the persons who fill appointive offices are chosen by persons who have themselves been elected to office.

The national elections held every other year, and the State and local ones held at varying times, have never been left to the determination of an unguided, uninfluenced electorate. Party divisions began to emerge within a few years of the establishment of government under the Constitution in 1789, and clearly determined the outcome of the third Presidential election, in 1796. Although parties were organized in response to the national situation, they lost no time in taking State and local offices into their scope, with the result that each major party normally offers a candidate for every office that is to be filled. Parties have regularly come into being in order to give effect to a particular policy or to ward off a particular menace, but those that survive have changed policies often and taken ambiguous lines even more often. Parties developed their characteristic organ, the national nominating convention, as early as the 1830's, and the national committee, which maintains the organization between elections, not much later.

Along with the urban metropolis, there appeared about 1860 the new phenomenon of the party machine, usually dominated by an individual of exceptional qualities, the boss. These machines drew their power from the masses of the laboringmen and the foreign-born, to whom their precinct agents served as a kind of special providence in time of need or disaster. They drew their money by delivering the vote in favor of candidates who could and would act or enact to favor the men of enterprise who were supplying the city with gas mains, trolley lines, or whatever. The only persons un-benefited were the middling sort, who found themselves overtaxed and overcharged for inferior services, and turned mugwumps or progressives or reformers of various kinds. It is only in our own day that various factors, such as the increasing importance of mass communications, have caused a perceptible waning of the machine's importance. Long before this development, businessmen as well as other groups desiring political services had found another method of seeking them, by laying siege to legislators. The greatest pressure exerted by pressure groups is simply their refusal to take no for an answer: they have a single objective and their agents' unlimited time to give to it, while the legislator has dozens of subjects and persons claiming his attention. Pressures, unlike machines, have been growing, and their regulation is still new and tentative. Political scientists made some admirable studies in both realms in the 1930's, most of which appear in Sections E and F. The progressive movement early in the present century believed that political abuses could be eliminated by ingenious improvements in the machinery of elections. These have practically all been adopted or at least tried for a time, but seldom if ever produced the anticipated reformation. This need not imply that the changes were not desirable in themselves. These and related matters are treated in Section G. Recent students of elections have sought to predict future results from existing vote statistics or samples of opinion gathered by interviewers. The electorate continues to surprise them from time to time. Perhaps the most interesting titles in Section H are those which seek to trace, by repeated interviews in the course of a campaign, the formation and change of voting intention; this comes very near to the heart of democracy itself. A variety of things are grouped together in Section I, their common denominator being the aim of raising the political process onto a higher plane. Much of what seems failure might look very different if we could know what things would be like if the effort had never been made. Few but politicians express or have expressed any glowing satisfaction with American politics, but no one can deny that it keeps the future open, or that the voters can have what they want if they will keep their minds on it.

A. Politics: General

6333. Kent, Frank R. The great game of politics; an effort to present the elementary human facts about politics, politicians and political machines, candidates and their ways, for the benefit of the average citizen. Garden City, N.Y., Doubleday, Doran, 1935. xiv, 354 p.
35–8662 JK2276.K4 1935

First published in 1923.

"A plain reporter's story of the political game," by an editor and political commentator of the Baltimore Sunpapers. The author has endeavored to show both the practical and the human side of the political machine, "the good as well as the bad in it, to tell who the men are, how they work, what they get out of it, whence it comes and how much," how political power is acquired, and how and why it is held. Mr. Kent emphasizes the "overwhelming proportion of insincerity, buncombe, and fakery that characterizes almost every campaign and nearly all candidates" and, in the latter chapters, sets forth his views of political issues, finances, and the formulation of newspaper political policies. In the author's opinion, the country was [as of 1935] really run by the political machines, and the bosses had become the most influential members of their communities because of the voters' inertia and ignorance. Voters would not participate in the primaries, yet "99 per cent of all candidates for all offices are nominated as a result of primaries," and control of them means control of the political situation in a given community. Mr. Kent offers neither panacea nor preachment, but pleads for "regular, intelligent, and informed voting by all those qualified to vote."

6334. Kent, Frank R. Political behavior; the heretofore unwritten laws, customs and principles of politics as practiced in the United States. New York, Morrow, 1928. 342 p.
28–20042 JK1726.K4

A disillusioned analysis of political processes and the behavior of politicians and voters in the United States by the redoubtable liberal Democrat. Mr. Kent sought to formulate the ground rules for political success and to clarify the facts of political life. He found "a legion of seasoned, tested axioms and a few broad general laws, a real study and understanding of which are just as necessary to the successful practicing politican as a thorough knowledge of legal procedure to a successful lawyer or biology to a doctor." The candidate who, consciously or unconsciously, applies the proved political rules and obeys the laws of politics has a tremendous advantage over the candidate who fails to do so, regardless of character and intelligence. Mr. Kent terms party regularity and organization support the two great essentials, and explains how to achieve the latter. He then takes up the more complex and flexible rules whereby candidates for elective office make successful appeals to the voters. Among the things to avoid are unnecessary antagonisms, controversial issues, overestimation of voter intelligence, showing up the opponent, high-hatting the voters, appearing ridiculous, and fixed principles. The candidate must be sure to put on a good show, and to have adequate finances and ample publicity.

6335. Key, Valdimer O. Politics, parties, and pressure groups. 3d ed. New York, Crowell, 1952. xvi, 799 p.
52–7851 JF2051.K4 1952

First published in 1942.

A college textbook on politics which makes the central question "the relation of those with power to those who respond to, resist, or acquiesce in its exercise." Power is considered here as an indispensable means to the other ends which find expression in public policy, especially in legislation. In a democracy the mass of citizens choose from among competing inner circles of leaders, but initiative and leadership rest with the chosen leaders rather than with the mass. A leader in American politics, however, must make his decisions not only on the merits of the case but on their probable effects upon his supporters, and he may attempt to control by persuasion rather than by imposing his will. The problem of the politician or statesman in a democracy, Professor Key believes, is to maintain a balance among the demands of competing interests or values; it is not necessarily to express the "popular will," although every regime seeks to attract popular support. On these principles he analyzes the composition, objectives, and techniques of the competing interests, and the changes, maladjustments, and readjustments that have occurred in the American political equilibrium.

6336. Logan, Edward B., ed. The American political scene. Rev. ed. New York, Harper, 1938. 311 p. 38–31039 JK1726.L6 1938

First published in 1936.

CONTENTS.—Present-day characteristics of American political parties, by A. N. Holcombe.—Party organization in the United States, by E. B. Logan.—The politician and the voter, by J. T. Salter.—Presidential campaigns, by H. R. Bruce.—The use of money in elections, by J. K. Pollock.—Pressure groups and propaganda, by H. L. Childs.—Nominations, by Louise Overacker.—Appendix 1. The changing outlook for a realignment of parties, by A. N. Holcombe.—Appendix 2. The platforms of the two major parties.

Analyses by seven political scientists of the most important determinants in American politics. The authors attempt to explain some of the influences and controls which operate in the selection of our public officials and govern their activities after they have been selected. These writers find among the forces to be reckoned with: the relatively even division of the bulk of the voters between the Democratic and Republican Parties; a growing volatility of the electorate; the power of the political party over public policy and officials; the politician's practice of the art of politics; the management and techniques of caucuses, conventions, nominations, and campaigns; the necessity of party and candidate financial expenditure; and the influence of pressure groups, especially from business, labor, and agriculture.

6337. McKean, Dayton D. Party and pressure politics. Boston, Houghton Mifflin, 1949. 712 p. 49–10110 JK2265.M27

A college textbook on practical politics and the relationship of propaganda to party and pressure politics. Professor McKean believes in the workability of the two-party system and in its value to popular democratic government. Representative government on a large scale, he thinks, can function only through parties. However, many of its difficulties arise from the inadequacies of parties, their inability to muster effective majorities, their lack of general and authoritative party voices and councils, and their indifference at the local and State level to national issues and public policy. Beset by these difficulties, by sectional differences, and by diverse interests, the major parties find the formulation and execution of broad policies difficult or impossible; but the organized minorities, not responsible to the electorate, know what they want and concentrate upon policy. The pressure groups can and do discipline legislatures and executives, engage in propaganda for or against them, get out the vote, and, in some instances, nominate officials. The problem, in Professor McKean's opinion, is to strengthen the national or Presidential party as against the pressure groups and local bosses. He considers several means of improving the national leadership and party responsibility. He shows less concern for the bosses since he considers them nowhere indispensable.

6338. Odegard, Peter H., and Elva Allen Helms. American politics; a study in political dynamics. 2d ed. New York, Harper, 1947. 896 p. illus. 47–31189 E183.O32 1947

First published in 1938.

A college textbook "combining structural description with functional analysis" of the American political system. Politics is defined as "the quest for power," involving "a struggle for the right to manage public affairs in a manner favorable to those who succeed in the quest and those whom they represent." This quest is pursued within the frame of the Constitution by persons organized in political parties or pressure groups or in both. The authors endeavor to show the operations of parties, pressure groups, bosses, and machines, as well as the effect of civil rights, election laws, and corrupt practices acts. American political history is discussed in terms not only of party leaders and organizations but also of fundamental economic and social cleavages. Since both major parties represent a cross section of the total political, economic, and social interests, "differences within the parties are greater than differences between them, and in the determination of policy pressure politics are usually more important than party politics." They cautiously suggest "some form of proportional or functional representation," supplementary to the existing system, in order to remedy the helplessness of legislatures before the organized pressure groups and their lobbyists.

6339. Stimpson, George W. A book about American politics. New York, Harper, 1952. 554 p. 52–5472 E178.25.S86

A collection of "the odd, the unusual and the interesting" facts about American political life arranged in question and answer form. The author's purpose has been to put together "the greatest number of answers to questions that are most often asked in this field." The answers consist of compact short articles "based on careful and prolonged research." Mr. Stimpson, an experienced Washington newspaper correspondent, deals with such matters as campaigns, committees, conventions, legislation, parties, platforms, politicians, and slogans. He traces the origin of many political terms, catchwords, phrases, and nicknames; notices splinter parties; and throws light on obscure or curious events, movements, and individuals. Unfortunately he does not refer to the sources of his information. A fairly full index compensates somewhat for the lack of any discernible organization in the book.

6340. Tourtellot, Arthur B. An anatomy of American politics; innovation versus conservatism. Indianapolis, Bobbs-Merrill, 1950. 349 p. 50–6590 JK34.T6

A general interpretation of American politics by a journalist who has endeavored to rethink the whole subject for himself, with results well suited to attract and inform the general reader. The first part, on political institutions, considers the evolution and relative positions of the Presidency, Congress, and the Supreme Court. There is no object more important to the voter than to secure a strong President capable of using for the public good the enormous power now attached to the office. Part 2 defines "The Basic Conflict" in American political experience as "conservatism versus progressivism, caution versus experimentalism." It has been expressed though the political parties, which have kept the continuity of their labels despite "a total absence of any continuity in party principles"—at times which party has been on the progressive side and which on the conservative has been completely confusing. Since the major parties are inclusive and tolerant and not exclusive or given to purges, third-party movements have lost impetus and nothing constructive is to be expected from them. Part 3, on political methods, discusses conventions, campaigns, and elections. The author dwells on the necessity, if the present system is to continue, for the party out of power to deal in live issues rather than ancient fears and compulsions, so as to present an effective challenge and alternative to the incumbents. The bibliographical essay (p. 319–336) is designed "for those who want to go deeper."

B. Politics: Special

6341. Carlson, Oliver, and Aldrich Blake. How to get into politics; the art of winning elections. New York, Duell, Sloan & Pearce, 1946. 210 p. 46–8047 JF2051.C3

Mr. Carlson describes himself as a "public and industrial relations counsellor," and Mr. Blake himself as a "political research and organization advisor"; they have joined forces in order to inform the ordinary American citizen who may find himself catapulted into the political arena what it will involve and what he must and must not do. The task of winning and holding an electorate is one of the most complex, difficult, and problematic in human affairs. The ambitious politician, they note, must join a party, faithfully preach its gospel, and attend its precinct caucus. At this point, however, he must come to terms with "powerful and grasping factions." "With few exceptions, he simply gives way to that combination of special group interests which he believes has the money and the power to re-elect him, seeking some compromise where possible but submitting to the terms of unconditional surrender when necessary to his own self preservation." The authors offer much concrete and practical advice to the budding politician concerning the public relations of politics, notably, the campaign budget, the party workshop which lies behind campaign headquarters, precinct work, publicity and propaganda, and platforms and speechmaking.

6342. Douglas, Paul H. Ethics in government. Cambridge, Harvard University Press, 1952. 114 p. (The Godkin lectures at Harvard University, 1951) 52–9386 JK468.E7D68

In these four lectures Senator Douglas argues that although government ethics in the United States have generally improved during the last century, they are by no means good enough and require further melioration. He locates the areas wherein ethical difficulties and failures are most likely to occur, pointing out that in most instances the pressure comes from private sources which are seeking to obtain favors from government. Senator Douglas suggests rules and criteria for the regulation of economic controls, loans, and subsidies, warns against indirect influences, such as the acceptance of favors or gifts and the sale of government prestige or experience, and offers a code of ethical behavior for public officials. In a discussion of the ethical problems of legislators, he considers how far legislators and administrators may properly influence each other, and urges improvement in the procedures and attitudes of investigating committees. Some of the moral indignation aroused over the delinquencies of government officials should, in his opinion, properly be applied to the interests that entice and corrupt them.

6343. Garrigues, Charles Harris. You're paying for it! A guide to graft. New York, Funk & Wagnalls, 1936. 254 p. 36–27398 JK1994.G3

A cynical report on American politics by a disillusioned California crusader. The author holds that "graft is not a parasite sapping the tree of democracy, but the very fruit of the tree itself." Competition among special interests compels each to seek "special privileges" and to pay the representatives of government for such privileges; the system "compels every man to be as corrupt as his most corrupt competitor." The government official who refused a bribe would have neither campaign funds nor votes and would be replaced by one more compliant. The law is ineffectual, and the occasional grafter who goes to jail is either very stupid, very greedy, or the victim of a feud between politicians. The bosses the author regards as merely the "managers of the marketplace to which officials and special interests can come to buy or sell their commodities—special privilege." In mock earnest, he spells out the various means whereby the young politician may enjoy the fruits of graft, and very convincingly describes typical circumstances of the bribe, the fix, and the graft investigation.

6344. Graham, George A. Morality in American politics. New York, Random House, 1952. 337 p. 52–7142 JK468.E7G7

A study of the problem of morality in American politics which maintains that the profession of politics, although differing importantly from the other professions, must be subject to at least equivalent standards of integrity and competence. Moral problems, moral standards, moral failures, and moral achievements are involved in the structure of political institutions: the legislature, the executive, the courts, public administration, parties, pressure groups, and even the public. Professor Graham explores certain public characteristics and attitudes: "complaisance over early and substantial American success in securing human rights and promoting individual welfare; subconscious confidence in the automatic qualities of the economic and political order; legalism"; philosophical naïveté; and a pattern of life dominated by specialization, organization, loyalties, and pressures. In his opinion, if this typical pluralistic organization of American life is to be preserved, it behooves each organization to avoid jurisdictional expansion and to strive constantly for moderation in its demands upon its members and society. A legalistic balance of rights and duties is not enough, however, nor is the mere avoidance of corruption. Leaders must keep their loyalties in balance, their special zeals in check, and they must recognize a public responsibility. The author appeals for renewed idealism in all Americans.

6345. Kelley, Stanley, Jr. Professional public relations and political power. Baltimore, Johns Hopkins Press, 1956. 247 p. 56–8492 JF2112.P8K4

The first serious study of a new technique of politics which has already come near to revolutionizing the whole field, and is far from having disclosed all its possibilities. The author, who originated the study at Johns Hopkins and completed it at the Brookings Institution, has used "highly fugitive" materials—letters, interviews, and documents from private files—to supplement periodical articles and a few books of relevance. "The public relations man, more assiduously than others, has studied the problems of using the resources that a complex modern communication system offers for organizing and directing public opinion." First employed by business organizations, he has now become a permanent staff employee of State and national party organizations. Dr. Kelley seeks to determine his importance for democratic processes by means of "the description and analysis of the actions of particular public relations men at work in particular campaigns." He successively deals with "Campaigns, Inc." the California public relations firm otherwise known as Whitaker and Baxter, which has been operating since 1933; the American Medical Association's campaign of 1948–52 against President Truman's proposal of national health insurance, which included interventions in local elections intended to defeat legislators in favor of the plan; the part played by Jon M. Jonkel of Chicago in the Maryland campaign of 1950, whereby J. M. Butler displaced Millard Tydings as U. S. Senator; and the public relations activities, on a new and enlarged scale, in the 1952 campaign for the Presidency, when Robert Humphreys, heading the public relations division of the Republican National Committee, employed the Kudner and the Batten, Barton, Durstine and Osborn agencies. The chapter of conclusions notes that the decline of the boss is one reason for the rise of the public relations man, and that the latter is now called upon to take part in the planning sessions where the selection of issues takes place.

6346. Lubell, Samuel. The future of American politics. New York, Harper, 1952. 285 p. 52–5462 E743.L85

A comprehensive analysis of American political trends as observed by an eminent journalist in 1951. Mr. Lubell finds that eight primary forces are remaking the politics of our time: the simultaneous coming of age of our various urban minorities, which has transformed machine politics and thrown political bosses on the defensive; the rise of a new middle class, conservative yet with political attitudes "rooted in memories of discrimination, poverty and the Great Depression"; the Negro, restless because of migration and discrimination; the economic revolution in the South which threatens to destroy Southern sectionalism; the upheaval in the international power situation; the fundamental change in the farmer's relation to the city; the advance of organized labor to unprecedented financial and membership strength and the recession of its political vitality; and, finally, the impact of the cold war upon the so-called welfare state. In the author's opinion, these revolutionary forces have produced a larger political revolution—the transformation of the United States from a nation with a traditional Republican majority to one with a normal Democratic majority, although, in 1951, he found a governmental deadlock rather than an effective majority.

C. Political Parties

6347. Binkley, Wilfred E. American political parties, their natural history. 3d ed., rev. and enl. New York, Knopf, 1958. 470 p. 58–2201 JK2261.B5 1958

Professor Binkley's book is a very readable history of parties and elections from the adoption of the Constitution to the reelection of Eisenhower; the "natural history" of the title is somewhat puzzling, but is evidently related to his conviction that all American parties have been made up of groups of varying economic interest or ideological persuasion, which are combined by national political leaders adept at group diplomacy and able to discover the formulas and focal points upon which all may agree. The pattern of party leadership was set by Thomas Jefferson, who was able to unite all the elements disadvantaged by the Hamiltonian policies. The Federalists did not want to be a party, but had to become one in sheer self-defense. American party leaders, however, can lead the people only where they are willing to follow, and must be astute opportunists governed by expediency and free from petrified ideas. Dr. Binkley concentrates upon the major parties and gives small attention to the minor ones. His chapters, which are not rigidly chronological, include treatments of "One-Party Government," 1816–28, and of "The Breakup of the Major Parties" during the 1850's. The Democratic Party in 1860 entered upon a period of confusion which culminated in 1872; its revival began in 1876. The Republican Party, born in 1856, was reborn in 1868 when the forces of economic exploitation lined up behind Ulysses S. Grant. The book was originally published in 1943; the new edition adds an account of the 1948 election and a chapter on "The Recovery of the Republican Party." There is a supplementary index, but the bibliography contains no titles later than 1941.

6348. Black, Theodore Milton. Democratic Party publicity in the 1940 campaign. New York, Plymouth Pub. Co., 1941. 169 p.
42–8075 JK2317.1940.B5

An analysis of Democratic political propaganda during the bitterly contested Presidential campaign of 1940. Here is the "story of men in an organization; it describes their efforts to convince the American people that Franklin D. Roosevelt should be elected for a third term." The author writes from firsthand information, having been employed by the publicity division of the Democratic National Committee during part of the campaign. He illustrates the "techniques of political propaganda, in their modern setting, and the structure of a present-day political publicity bureau in its most active form." In his opinion, Charles Michelson and the publicity division's corps of veteran journalists, all skilled in the art of political warfare, were significant factors in the third-term success. Their chief tactics, as here reported, were to attack Willkie and the Republicans, to pin the tags of Big Business, Appeasement, and Inexperience upon them, and to caricature the Republican candidate. Blaming the frenzy and "personalization" of the campaign upon a lack of really controversial issues, the author acquits both sides of using "smear" strategy.

6349. Bone, Hugh A. "Smear" politics; an analysis of 1940 campaign literature. Washington, American Council on Public Affairs, 1941. 49 p. ([Studies in political science])
42–4561 JK2281.B65

A study based largely upon unpublished data assembled by the Special Senate Committee to Investigate Campaign Expenditures in 1940. It aims to make available exhibits of the literature used in the 1940 campaign; to indicate the major psychological appeals employed; to call attention to some of the problems of determining responsibility for the issuance of campaign propaganda, and to those raised by anonymous political journalism; and "to offer suggestions for reducing the scope and volume of that campaign literature which does violence to the spirit and process of democracy." The examples of campaign literature included here were selected to display a fair cross section as to form, substance, and distribution; comment has been kept to a minimum. In the 1940 campaign "literature ostensibly printed and authorized by non-party groups greatly exceeded that of political parties," and pro-Willkie materials greatly exceeded those supporting Roosevelt. The majority of "smear" leaflets came from other than party sources. Not only did scurrilous personal attacks upon nominees and their families appear in these, but objectionable appeals were made to religion, race, and nationality. The author thought that legislation should require the name and address of the sponsor to appear on all campaign literature, and that the parties should maintain a much tighter control over their local agents in matters of publicity.

6350. Bryan, William Jennings. A tale of two conventions. New York, Funk & Wagnalls, 1912. xviii, 307 p. 12–22646 JK2263 1912.B7

This rare example of political journalism by a leading politician is a collection of daily reports made by Bryan, acting as a special newspaper correspondent, at the Republican and Democratic National Conventions of 1912 in Chicago and Baltimore, respectively, together with a summary of the events and other matter bearing on the Progressive Party Convention in Chicago. It reprints the three platforms, selected contemporary cartoons, and the speeches of such notables as Theodore Roosevelt, Byran himself, Elihu Root, and Alton B. Parker. Bryan found that two evils stood out prominently at the Republican Convention: "the organization of a new convention by an old, outgrown committee"; and "the employment, for the purpose of overriding a majority of committeemen, of delegations representing mythical constituencies in the South." Of the 75 contested seats there, all were given to the Taft rather than the Roosevelt delegates, he notes, and with them went control of the convention. Bryan praised the constructive Democratic platform, and claimed that the responsiveness of the convention to the more than one hundred thousand telegrams sent to them by "the Democrats at home" showed the power of public opinion and the soundness of the party. Bryan's reports have immediacy and pace; his style is marked by rhetorical flourishes and pious apothegms; and he understood well what was going on.

6351. Carroll, Eber Malcolm. Origins of the Whig Party. Durham, N. C., Duke University Press, 1925. 260 p. 25–23123 JK2331.C3 1922
Thesis (Ph. D.)—University of Michigan, 1922.
Bibliography: p. [228]–238.

A review of the complex origins and the history to 1840 of the Whig Party, which was united only in a general conservatism and in opposition to Jacksonian Democracy. Its difficulties, the author believes, inhered in its necessities as an opposition, requiring the aid of all dissidents, and in the failure of the National Republican Party to which it was heir. Its weaknesses Dr. Carroll attributes partly to John Quincy Adams' lack of skill as a politician and partly to the rising tide of frontier democracy in favor of Jackson. Adams' crushing defeat for reelection to the Presidency in 1828 eliminated him as leader of the National Republican Party, and Clay's thorough defeat in 1832 discredited the party itself. The Whig Party was organized in 1834, but, the author notes, recognized leaders who could sap Democratic strength only after it had lost the election of 1836. By nominating William Henry Harrison in 1840, the Whigs demonstrated their conviction "that the Democrats should be fought with their own weapons." "The reward was a brief tenure of power in 1841; the penalty was the disruption of the party when, under Tyler, dissension became active again."

6352. Croly, Herbert D. Marcus Alonzo Hanna; his life and work. New York, Macmillan, 1912. 495 p. illus. 12-9163 E664.H24C9

A sympathetic biography of the great Republican organizer based not only upon Hanna's very scanty papers but also upon statements solicited from his business and political associates. Although he does not underemphasize the difficulties of giving a fair account of Hanna's career or of passing objective judgments upon a man who was involved in bitter contention, Croly begs the "unprejudiced attention" of his readers. Mark Hanna (1837-1904), he maintains, was formed under the same influences as hundreds of other Middle Westerners who combined a business with a political career, but he lived "more energetically, more sincerely, and more successfully" than the others. His pioneering and prosperous coal and iron business and other enterprises at Cleveland were begun after the Civil War, when economic opportunities were abundant, and continued until 1894. As early as 1888, Croly asserts, this industrial pioneer "had made up his mind to nominate, if possible, a political leader from Ohio as the Republican candidate for the presidency." William McKinley became both the intimate friend with a bright political future and the available candidate. The author concludes that the interdependence of business and politics, in the era of McKinley and protectionism, gave to a man like Hanna, who embodied the alliance, an opportunity for effective influence.

6353. Davenport, Walter. Power and glory, the life of Boies Penrose. New York, Putnam, 1931. 240 p. illus. 31-31210 E664.P41D3

A lively and anecdotal biography of Boies Penrose (1860-1921), one of the last and greatest of the political bosses, based mainly upon a series of articles published under the same title in Collier's Weekly. Of no political party in his youth, Penrose "was to become a Republican of Republicans." He came of Republican stock and tradition, and was "baptised in its most conservative pool—Philadelphia—and dedicated to its tightest fundamentals." Penrose is characterized here as an intellectual by inheritance and equipment, with no tolerance for the less gifted. He was drafted and elected in 1884 by the powerful Philadelphia Republican machine to the Pennsylvania legislature, where he represented a constituency composed of his city's highest and lowest social strata. After one term in the lower house, he was advanced to the State senate, serving there continuously from 1887 to 1897. In 1897, with the support of Matthew S. Quay, Republican State boss, he was elected to the United States Senate and served until his death. Once there, Penrose fought to stay; "his commitments, his pride, his love of power held him to that." He succeeded to control of the State party machinery upon Quay's death in 1904. In Mr. Davenport's opinion, it is highly probable that some of the Penrose victories were purchased, and certain that he jumped to do the bidding of the Pittsburgh steel magnate, Henry C. Frick.

6354. Farley, James A. Behind the ballots; the personal history of a politician. New York, Harcourt, Brace, 1938. 392 p. 38-28947 E748.F24F3

A candid political memoir by James A. Farley (b. 1888), a Democrat who began his political career at the age of 22 by winning the town clerkship of Stony Point, N. Y., a normally Republican community. After touching lightly upon his own earlier years, the author presents a behind-the-scenes account of the aggressive campaign for Franklin D. Roosevelt which he and Louis McHenry Howe conducted during the year and a half preceding the 1932 national convention. Mr. Farley, a strong believer in organization politics and in the mastery of detail, reports with particularity the grass-roots organizing, trial balloons, political drumming, and delegate-pledging which helped him "sell a presidential candidate to the nation." His description of the bargaining done at the 1932 Democratic National Convention is both amiable and forthright. In Mr. Farley's opinion, the successful cultivation of the women's vote was a large factor in the Presidential election. The 1936 landslide had deep significance, he believes, because it occurred in the face of strenuous opposition from the big business interests. The author tends to discuss the New Deal and his own part in it in terms of men rather than issues, inasmuch as his forte was political management and backstage strategy rather than administration or legislation.

6355. Farley, James A. Jim Farley's story; the Roosevelt years. New York, Whittlesey House, 1948. 388 p. illus. 48-946 E806.F255

The continuation of Mr. Farley's political memoir is devoted mainly to a detailed history of the "slow, almost imperceptible drifting apart on political principles" of himself and President Roosevelt. Mr. Farley, placing the start of the estrangement at the 1936 campaign, believes that the President was jealous of possible successors, and never forgave him "for putting party welfare above the personal allegiance he considered his due." Mr. Farley may have regarded Roosevelt's suggestion that he run in New York either for Governor or for Senator as an attempt to sidetrack him from the election of 1940. The attempted purge of 1938, which violated the author's creed of party regularity, caused him to lose faith in the President. "The attempt to establish a personal party," Mr. Farley observes sorrowfully, "the neglect of party leaders, the assumption of control over the judiciary and Congress, and the gratification of personal ambition in the third and fourth terms—all were the evil fruit of his breaking the rules of the game." He does not consider that absorption in a course of policy may render personal ambition and playing a game equally irrelevant. Mr. Farley quotes many revealing conversations and anecdotes.

6356. Fine, Nathan. Labor and farmer parties in the United States, 1828–1928. New York City, Rand School of Social Science, 1928. 445 p. 28–24182 HD8076.F5

The author, who was an associate of the Rand School of Social Science, was concerned to trace the attempts of "the American workers," on the land or in industry, to advance their interests through political organization. The earliest labor party was launched by the Mechanics' Union of Trade Associations of Philadelphia in 1828, and was promptly imitated in New York; neither group survived the presidential election of 1832. After noting other early and sporadic movements, the author devotes a chapter to the united front of 1886, when Henry George ran for mayor of New York, and one to the Grangers, Greenbackers, and Populists. He then enters upon the history of the Socialist Labor Party, and pursues the fortunes of the socialist movement through the next eight chapters, the bulk of the book (p. 88–362). Concluding this with the Communist-Socialist split, he takes the measure of the former: "No matter how decent, progressive or militant a trade union leader or rank and filer is, the communist will try to destroy him if he does not take orders—whatever they are at the moment—from the Workers' Party leadership in America and Moscow." The concluding chapters deal with the Nonpartisan League, the Farmer-Labor Party, and the Conference for Progressive Political Action. While his story could be regarded, he said, as one failure after another, "the most striking fact about the labor and farmer parties in America over the past century was that they never stopped springing up."

6357. Herring, Edward Pendleton. The politics of democracy; American parties in action [by] Pendleton Herring. New York, Norton, 1940. xx, 468 p. illus. 40–27328 JK2265.H47

An attempt to show the nature of the American party system and its relations to other social processes through an analysis of the politics of democracy. The author examines such factors as machine control, pressure politics, propaganda, monied interests, patronage, and bureaucracy. These Dr. Herring considers merely the reverse sides of elements integral to the democratic process. This American political process, he believes, through its toleration of various attitudes and programs, provides the milieu within which a science of society may be developed and intelligence may be applied to our common problems. He maintains that we cannot greatly change the nature of American politics so long as the democratic order prevails, but that with patience and skill we should be able to achieve the desirable life. In his view, adjustment is the essence of the politics of democracy, in that political parties hold power only through popular support and in that the political machinery is able to keep power responsive to change and experimentation. The function of the American party system should be to keep the majority and minority viewpoints from diverging to the point where they can no longer be reconciled under constitutional procedure. Compromise and tolerance must be maintained.

6358. Hicks, John D. The Populist revolt; a history of the Farmers' Alliance and the People's Party. Minneapolis, University of Minnesota Press, 1931. 473 p. illus. 31–30954 JK2372.H5

Bibliography: p. [445]–464.

A scholarly history of the Populist movement, the conditions that produced it, the supporters of the cause, and its contributions to political and economic reform. Professor Hicks thinks that, beginning in the late 1870's, the American West was peopled too rapidly, and that the successive agrarian movements, particularly the Farmers' Alliance and the Populist Party, were merely the "inevitable attempts of a bewildered people to find relief from a state of economic distress made certain by the unprecedented size and suddenness of their assault upon the West and by the finality with which they had conquered it." Among the farmers' grievances were drought conditions in the decade 1887–97, high shipping costs, the political influence of the railroads, the disappearance of free land, price-fixing by the trusts, the protective tariff, and especially a growing burden of debt. Among their demands were cheap money, free land, honest transportation, and the abolition of foreclosure. By 1890 it had become clear, the author notes, that neither the Northwestern formula of establishing state political parties nor the Southern formula of working through the Democratic Party was adequate for reform. Demand shifted "from free land to legislation, from the ideal of individualism to the ideal of social control through regulation by law." Most of the demands first formulated by the Populists were given effect by other parties in later decades.

6359. Kent, Frank R. The Democratic Party, a history. New York, Century, 1928. 568 p. illus. 28-8482 JK2316.K4

A chronicle of the Democratic Party from its birth in 1792 to early 1928. The author's purpose was to tell the truth about his party rather than to glorify it. Mr. Kent admired the "genuine and indisputable greatness of the basic Democratic principles," but deplored the "almost incredible record of stupidity and failure, the frequency and violence with which its performances have clashed with its professions; the wreck it has time and again made of its own prospects." The story of the Democratic Party is, in the author's opinion, the story of five men outstanding in its history who gave the party its principles, shaped its policies and destiny, led it in the critical conflicts, were responsible alike for its greatest achievements and its monumental failures, and lent it color, character, and vitality. The first was Thomas Jefferson, enunciator of the basic democratic doctrine of government for and by the people. He was followed by Andrew Jackson, who originated the spoils system and modern party methods, Grover Cleveland, who acted upon the precept that "public office is a public trust," William Jennings Bryan, the financial heretic who changed the party principles, and Woodrow Wilson, whose record of domestic reforms was in 1928 unparalleled.

6360. Kipnis, Ira. The American socialist movement, 1897-1912. New York, Columbia University Press, 1952. 496 p. 52-13945 JK2391.S6K5

A history of the American socialist movement which centers in its years of peak activity, 1897-1912. The first six chapters deal with the background of the movement from the introduction of Marxian socialism into the United States by German immigrants of the 1850's down to the formation of the Socialist Party in 1901 by American Marxists convinced that capitalism was destroying the nation's economic equality and corrupting its democratic heritage. The remainder of the book studies the Socialist Party both as a political organization and a social movement. Dr. Kipnis points out the impressive if ephemeral achievements of the party to 1912: its growth from less than 10,000 to 150,000 members, the increase of its voting strength from 95,000 to 900,000, the election of more than 1,000 members to public office, the passage of hundreds of reform bills, the winning of position and influence in the American Federation of Labor, and its instrumentality in organizing the Industrial Workers of the World. The shortcomings of the revolutionary left-wing Socialists were serious enough, the author believes, but major responsibility for the decline of the movement rests upon members of the right wing who controlled the party and determined its policy and activities. Elated by electoral success, they turned the party into "an opportunist political organization devoted to winning public office for its leaders."

6361. Kleeberg, Gordon S. P. The formation of the Republican Party as a national political organization. New York, Moods Pub. Co., 1911. 244 p. 11-29805 JK2356.K6

Bibliography: p. 235-244.

This Columbia University dissertation traces the formation and the development to 1911 of the na- Party. The Kansas-Nebraska Act of 1854 demonstrated that the West could be preserved as free territory only by a powerful political party committed to keeping slavery out, and those opposed to the extension of slave territory began to draw together in local political organizations. In parts of the West, New England, and the Middle States, Republican groups had reached a high degree of local organization by the Presidential year 1856, and were ready to be built into a national machine. The national organization was substantially complete by adjournment of the second Republican National Convention in 1860, and the precedents it established were still operating more than half a century later—the national committee's call for the national convention, the convention itself, its temporary and permanent officers, its rules of procedure, the four great committees, the platform and nominations, the principle of majority nomination, the fixed number of delegates, and the national committee with its officers and powers. Dr. Kleeberg traces in detail the minor changes in the composition and procedure of the national conventions, and in the development of the Republican National Committee, during these 50 years.

6362. MacKay, Kenneth Campbell. The Progressive movement of 1924. New York, Columbia University Press, 1947. 298 p. illus. (Columbia University. Faculty of Political Science.

Studies in history, economics and public law, no. 527) 47-3855 E795.M3 1947 H31.C7, no. 527

Bibliography: p. 279–291.

An evaluation of the Progressive Party of 1924 in relation to the whole American progressive movement of the 20th century, together with a detailed analysis of the campaign problems of the Progressives of 1924. Dr. MacKay sees in the 1924 movement a bond of common purpose with other progressive movements, reaching back to the policies of such early insurgents as the Greenbackers of 1876, and extending forward to many of the reforms and experiments of the New Deal. In his opinion, three tendencies are common to American progressive movements: insistence upon the removal of exploitation and corruption, desire to change the structure of the government and to place control of it in the hands of the many, and belief in the necessity of extending government functions to relieve economic distress. The 1924 movement had its own distinctive features, however: it polled more votes than had any other minor party, it represented the first formal alliance of American organized labor with Socialists, farmers, and intellectuals, and it aimed to unite its diverse elements into a permanent party dedicated to political reform and economic democracy. The movement was doomed, the author believes, because it was hampered by state election laws, had too little campaign money, and lacked cohesiveness and organization.

6363. Merriam, Charles Edward, and Harold Foote Gosnell. The American party system; an introduction to the study of political parties in the United States. 4th ed. New York, Macmillan, 1949. 530 p. 49-3967 JK2265.M4 1949

First published in 1922.

An analysis of the American two-party political system. Professors Merriam and Gosnell discuss such general considerations as the relation of democracy to the party system, theories of suffrage, the functioning of parties in the formulation of social, economic, and political policy, and the motives—economic, sectional, racial, or religious—which govern political action. Among the other factors in American political life considered here are party leaders, bosses, and reformers; party organization; spoils politics; nominations and election machinery; modern techniques of winning elections; statistical sampling devices and their uses; election laws; and proposed methods of putting the party system upon a higher intellectual and administrative level. The party process is slowly being changed, the authors conclude, and party activities are being fundamentally modified. The decline of patronage as a principal element in the party, through the gradual substitution of the merit system for the spoils system in public administration, has weakened the machine and led to a professionally and technically based public service. Responsible government in turn tends to give broader scope to the party leader and less to the party boss. Professors Merriam and Gosnell detect a developing sense of civic responsibility in the United States, but regard many of the problems of democratic society as remaining to be solved.

6364. Michelson, Charles. The ghost talks. New York, Putnam, 1944. xvi, 245 p. illus. 44-3334 E806.M54

Chatty reminiscences and knowing political commentary by a former Washington newspaper correspondent who served as publicity director of the Democratic National Committee from 1929 to 1940. Mr. Michelson offers no startling new revelations but does clarify the record at certain points. Although Franklin D. Roosevelt listened to his advisers, the author believes, he pursued his own plans. The President dictated his own final versions of his speeches, generally culling the best ideas submitted in drafts. He was, in Mr. Michelson's opinion, "a better phrase maker than anybody he ever had around him." Denying the existence of a "smear Hoover" conspiracy in the 1930 or 1932 campaign, the author asserts bluntly: "There was no occasion for billingsgate, no necessity for misrepresentation, no excuse for slander. A man sat in the President's chair who did not fit." He discusses the members of President Roosevelt's entourage, their contributions to his success, their relative independence, their influence, and their rivalries. He describes the methods, issues, and financing of three Presidential campaigns. Prior to the European crisis, the author states positively, nothing was further from Roosevelt's mind than a third-term candidacy.

6365. Myers, William Starr. The Republican Party, a history. Rev. ed. New York, Century, 1931. 517 p. illus. 32-1529 JK2356.M85 1931

First published in 1928.

6366. Moos, Malcolm C. The Republicans; a history of their party. New York, Random House, 1956. 564 p. 56-5195 JK2356.M6

Professor Myers' long-standard history of the Republican Party from its inception in the "Anti-Nebraska Conventions" of 1854 through the elections of 1930, was written in "the conviction that parties are the natural and necessary organs of government and administration." In his opinion, the Republican platform of 1860 forecast much of the Republican policy of succeeding years, even to 1930, furnishing unity of purpose during the whole period of the party's domination of the Federal government. The first principle dealt with the tariff, and began the process of uniting in Republican ranks "the business and industrial interests without which, as not only American history but that of other self-governing countries shows, it is impossible to continue political domination." Built not merely for the year's campaign but looking toward a well-established and permanent national political party, the platform as a whole prepared an economic basis for the cooperation of the agrarian, commercial, and industrial interests of the country. The author credits the Lincoln administration with laying firmly the foundations upon which the later successes of the Republican Party were erected, Hayes with rehabilitating the party after the Grant administrations, McKinley and Theodore Roosevelt with reorganizing and activating it into an aggressive party, and Coolidge for saving it after Harding's errors. Dr. Moos' The Republicans has the obvious advantages of carrying the story through six further elections, of using some results of recent historical scholarship, and of employing up-to-date techniques of analyzing election returns. He provides a crowded narrative, filled with colorful and lively incidents, and accompanied by pungent comments, his own as well as those made by contemporaries. He is able to draw upon his own thorough knowledge of recent politics to illuminate situations in the remoter past. He narrates the party's origins and developments through the disputed election of 1876 in considerable detail, then rather skimps the four succeeding "fifty-fifty" elections, but amplifies his narrative from 1896 on until he requires two whole chapters to chronicle the great Republican comeback of 1952. His attitude is that of a moderate critic, to whom the "liberal capitalism" advocated by the party founders and by its "amateur" wing in our day is a valid doctrine. He does not like the "monopoly capitalism" which in 1868 captured and exploited for its own purposes a party that had become "hallowed in consequence of its fight to free the slaves and save the Union." The party so oriented would have succumbed to the revolts of the 1890's save for the timely emergence of the organizing genius of Mark Hanna, one of the few businessmen who have had a profound instinct for politics.

6367. Porter, Kirk H., and Donald Bruce Johnson, comps. National party platforms, 1840–1956. Urbana, University of Illinois Press, 1956. 573 p. 56–10916 JK2255.P6 1956

First published in 1924.

Unabridged texts of the national platforms of all the major and of the principal minor parties drawn from official proceedings of the conventions or from campaign literature, beginning with the campaign of 1840 and the Democratic platform of that year, and extending through the campaign of 1956, with the platforms of the Democratic, Prohibition, Republican, Socialist, Socialist Labor, and Socialist Workers Parties. The compilers have taken some account of the size of the group which professed to be a national party, the relative permanence of the organization, and its historical importance. Platforms of defecting segments of major parties have been included if of significance. An explanatory paragraph or two prefaces the chapter devoted to each campaign. The compilers consider platforms to be the primary statements of party principles and policies, and, as evidence of what party leaders believe to be the important current issues, reflections of major political trends. As such, they often foreshadow new economic, social, and political developments.

6368. Quint, Howard H. The forging of American socialism; origins of the modern movement. Columbia, University of South Carolina Press, 1953. 409 p. 53–9397 HX83.Q5

"Bibliographical essay": p. 389–394.

A study of the formative and hopeful phase of American socialism. An introductory chapter, "Marxism Comes to America," sets forth concisely the events of the earlier years, 1870–86. The remainder of the book deals with the evolution of formal socialism and the development of socialist parties in the United States between 1886 and 1901. Indicating both the European influences and the distinctively American elements, Professor Quint shows that the upsurge of American socialism was only partly inspired by classical Marxist doctrine, and came primarily as a protest against the social inequities resulting from rapid industrialization and economic concentration. He explores the many and various ideas and movements which were with difficulty united in 1901 to form the Socialist Party of America, among them Bellamy-inspired Nationalism, Christian Socialism, DeLeonism, Non-Partisan Socialism, and Fabianism. It was Edward Bellamy's Looking Backward, published in 1887, that first won a hearing for socialist ideas outside the laboring class and made socialism respectable. The emergence of the Populist wave in the early 1890's posed a problem to all socialist groups, and evoked every response from hostility to cooperation. After its collapse, Eugene V. Debs' adherence to the Social Democracy gave utopian socialism a brief revival, but the schism of 1898 left the way clear for a party on lines already worked out in Germany and Britain.

677676 O–63–67

6369. Ross, Earle Dudley. The Liberal Republican movement. New York, Holt, 1919. 267 p. 19-12223 JK2356.R5 E671.R82

Bibliography: p. 240–254.

This Cornell University dissertation is a history of the group which split from the main Republican body as a new national party in 1872. The author calls Senator Carl Schurz of Missouri its spearhead, and gives as its motives dissatisfaction with the corruption, blunders, and partisanship of Grant's administration, and belief in the necessity for reform measures. Dr. Ross is concerned particularly with the influence of the movement upon the reorganization of national parties. He notes the discredited condition of the Democrats, their inability to profit from the mistakes and dissensions of the Republicans, and their failure to show any real change of heart in 1868. He indicates, also, their attempts in 1871 to rid themselves of the odium of disloyalty, and their willingness to enter into coalitions with the Liberal Republicans. He shows that many liberal Democrats were willing to merge with the new reform organization in order to defeat Grant. Greeley's nomination at the 1872 convention he terms a triumph of experienced political intriguers over inexperienced and over-confident reformers. The impossibility of reconciling large numbers of Democratic voters to Greeley as a candidate was, he believes, the principal reason for the overwhelming defeat of the coalition by Grant and the Republicans.

6370. Schattschneider, Elmer E. Party government. New York, Farrar & Rinehart, 1942. xv, 219 p. (American government in action series) 42-2229 JK2265.S35

"Selected bibliography": p. 211–214.

An analysis of the American political party system which posits that the political parties created democracy, that modern democracy is unthinkable save in terms of them, and that they are not mere appendages of modern government but are in the center of it and play a determinative and original part in it. The Democratic and Republican Parties are here commended not only for their long duration and the stability of their "partnership" but for their accomplishments. Among these are the transformation of the American Constitution, the virtual abolition of the electoral college, the creation of a "plebiscitary presidency" and powerful contributions to the extraconstitutional growth of that office, and, most important, the remaking of the government of the United States from a small experiment in republicanism into the world's most powerful regime, vastly more liberal and democratic than it was in 1789. Professor Schattschneider sees the Presidency as the focus and rallying point of the great public interests of the nation and, as such, an office of expanding influence. He views Congress as the no man's land of American politics where the national parties, local party bosses, and pressure groups are engaged in a war for supremacy, and where, he hopes, for the public interest the national parties will emerge triumphant.

6371. Shannon, David A. The Socialist Party of America; a history. New York, Macmillan, 1955. 320 p. 55-13545 JK2391.S6S5 1955

"Bibliographical essay": p. 269–273.

A history of the Socialist Party of America from its formation in 1901 to its disintegration in the late 1930's. Professor Shannon traces the party origins to revolt in the 1890's against the social and economic conditions created by the mushrooming industrialism of America, and its components to the membership of such protest movements as the Bellamy Nationalist clubs, the Populist Party, Eugene V. Debs' Social Democratic Party, and dissidents from the Socialist Labor Party. During nearly two decades of growth and promise, the author points out, the Socialist Party was a broad political organization representing all shades of leftist conviction and all regions except the eastern and central South. The party's decline is the story of its transformation from a widely based political party into a monolithic sect of a few thousand members. The author discusses the regional organizations of the party and their variety of social philosophies, as well as the membership in it of recent immigrants and Mayflower descendants, tenement dwellers and prairie farmers, intellectuals and sharecroppers, ministers and agnostics, syndicalists and trade unionists, and revolutionaries and gradualists. He attributes the decline of "the big tent of American radicalism" in the 1920's, and its insignificance thereafter, to a variety of causes. Some of these, such as its failure to develop strong local organizations, were internal; the more important ones, such as the high degree of class mobility in America, were external.

6372. Stedman, Murray S., Jr., and Susan W. Stedman. Discontent at the polls; a study of farmer and labor parties, 1827–1948. New York, Columbia University Press, 1950. 190 p. 49-50349 JK2261.S84

An analysis of the functions performed by the American farmer and labor parties which have competed seriously for control of state and nation. The authors examine the extent of such parties' success at the polls, the degree to which measures formulated by protest parties have become law, the factors making for farmer-labor success and failure, the relation of the protest vote to general economic conditions, the regional characteristics of this vote, the political strategy and tactics employed by the parties, and the legal and psychological barriers encountered by them. Farmer-labor parties act as vehicles for discontent, but have been most successful, the authors believe, as popularizers of ideas and issues neglected by the major parties. They have excited local and national interest in important problems and reform measures, but tend to die as soon as their principal issues are adopted by a major party. Their recurrent challenge to the major parties, however, strengthens the democratic process.

6373. Thomas, Harrison Cook. The return of the Democratic Party to power in 1884. New York, Columbia University, 1919. 261 p. (Columbia University. Faculty of Political Science. Studies in history, economics and public law, v. 89, no. 2; whole no. 203) 19–26013 E695.T452 H31.C7, v. 89, no. 2

A study of the election of 1884, in which the chief issues were civil service and tariff reform. After four preliminary chapters, the book takes up its proper subjects: the Republican nomination of James G. Blaine (1830–1893), the Democratic nomination of Grover Cleveland, the campaign, the election, and the achievements of the Democratic administration. The Democrats were returned to power, the author believes, because of the lack of major issues between them and the Republicans, and because the characters of the candidates thereby became of determining importance. Blaine was an unsatisfactory candidate to the Independent Republicans; their defection and the defeat of the party ensued. He had always been a spoilsman and no civil service reformer; he had associated himself with many politicians of the lowest type; his popularity was based upon appeals to the emotions and not upon his identification with policies; and, perhaps most important, he had never convinced a large enough number of voters of his complete honesty. Although Dr. Thomas credits Cleveland with progress in reform and with forward-looking legislation, he thinks that the reestablishment of the Democratic Party in real rivalry of the Republicans was the main result of their victory.

D. Local Studies

6374. Fox, Dixon Ryan. The decline of aristocracy in the politics of New York. New York, Columbia University, 1919. 460 p. (Columbia University. Faculty of Political Science. Studies in history, economics and public law, v. 86; whole no. 198) 19–18663 F123.F792 H31.C7, v. 86

This is a history of the decline of the Federalists in the State of New York, from the defeat in 1800 of the Federalist gubernatorial candidate, Stephen Van Rensselaer, to the 1840's. Starting with a tradition of government by an aristocracy of birth and station, the Federalists were ultimately transformed into Whigs, with a doctrine of government by capital and business enterprise. The story is told largely in terms of the programs and ideas of the opposing parties, Federalist and Democratic, and the careers and influences of such party leaders as DeWitt Clinton and Martin Van Buren. Dr. Fox contrasts the Federalists, led mainly by distinguished lawyers and supported chiefly by the landed gentry, wealthy merchants, bankers, and the Episcopal Church, with the Democrats, made up for the most part of farmers, workers, and immigrants. As the author observes, the bitter strife between the organizations had certain elements of a class war—but one in which the outcome was foredoomed. He narrates at some length the debates and proceedings in the decisive state constitutional convention of 1821, which adopted manhood suffrage and largely abolished property qualifications for office. But no sooner had political equality triumphed than manufacturing acquired a new importance and prestige, and its interests were sedulously cultivated by the organizing genius of the new Whig Party, Thurlow Weed.

6375. Gosnell, Harold F. Negro politicians; the rise of Negro politics in Chicago. Chicago, University of Chicago Press, 1935. xxxi, 404 p. (Social science studies, directed by the Social Science Research Committee of the University of Chicago, no. 32) 35–15258 F548.9.N3G67

"Select bibliography": p. 380–387.

A description of the struggle of a minority group to advance its status by political methods, interpreted to include voting, campaigning, bargaining for jobs and special favors, and office-holding. Much of the information presented has been collected by direct observation, interviews, and casual conversations. Republican, Democratic, and Communist meetings in Chicago's Black Belt have been observed, as have the work of party headquarters and the conduct of elections, legislative bodies, courts, and churches. In searching for economic opportunity, in trying to learn business practices, in seeking to run for city-wide elective offices, and in attempting to secure key positions in the party organizations, Negroes have met the obstacle of prejudice. In retaliation they have developed the doctrine and practice of race solidarity. The author mentions County Commissioner Edward Wright, a lawyer, and Congressman Oscar DePriest, a successful contractor and real estate dealer, among the new, aggressive leaders. Ministers as well as leaders of the colored underworld are powerful influences, and patronage is an important cementing agent. However inadequate the benefits secured by Chicago Negroes from their government as of 1935, the author believed their gains to be greater than those of unorganized minorities.

6376. Heard, Alexander. A two-party South? Chapel Hill, University of North Carolina Press, 1952. xviii, 334 p. illus.
52–8501 F215.H43

An analysis of Southern politics based upon a research project carried out with the aid of the Rockefeller Foundation, the Bureau of Public Administration of the University of Alabama, and the Institute for Research in Social Science of the University of North Carolina, in which the author was the principal associate of Professor V. O. Key, Jr. The project resulted in the preparation of Dr. Key's book, Southern Politics in State and Nation (no. 6378), of which this volume is, in a sense, an extension. Much of the information derives from 538 interviews conducted between November 1946 and February 1948 with politicians, public officials, and observers of politics in 11 Southern States. Professor Heard regards the Negro as the key factor in Southern politics and finds that two sets of influences are affecting Southerners—the forces of change that encourage the growth of a second party, and the forces of stability that retard it. In his opinion, however, much of the South, a changing section in a changing nation, is moving closer to competitive politics.

6377. Kane, Harnett T. Louisiana hayride; the American rehearsal for dictatorship, 1928–1940. New York, Morrow, 1941. 471 p. illus.
41–7143 F375.K16

A New Orleans newspaperman's vividly written report of the Huey Long regime in Louisiana, "the most complete despotism in the nation's history." Mr. Kane places the beginning in a poor-white upsurge, carefully nurtured by Long with his pleas for free books, good roads, free bridges, and lower utility rates, and his damaging charges against the administration, which put him in the governor's chair in 1928. Although Long (1893–1935), in the author's opinion, did not plan the full extent of his autocracy in advance, he dearly loved power. He differed from other Southern demagogues and spokesmen for the have-nots in his daring, his skills in manipulation, and his ability to snatch what he wanted regardless of the cost. After his impeachment and acquittal, Long began grooming himself for a national audience as a kind of Southern Will Rogers, the author observes, and in 1931, after being elected United States Senator, he ventured upon his first national program, the "drop a crop" plan, which was less extravagant than his later "share the wealth" program, guaranteed to make every man a king. Over half the book is devoted to the regime of the Kingfish's political heirs, who were able to hold onto his powers and his opportunities for plunder for four and a half years after his assassination, and were dislodged only after an investigation by the U.S. Department of Justice had disclosed where the tax money was going.

6378. Key, Valdimer O. Southern politics in state and nation [by] V. O. Key, Jr., with the assistance of Alexander Heard. New York, Knopf, 1949. xxvi, 675, xiv p. illus.
49–10825 F215.K45 1949

An elaborate study of the electoral process in the South, based not only upon election statistics, statutes and constitutions, party rules, court decisions, newspapers, and other standard sources, but also upon interviews with 538 Southerners active in public life, including Congressmen, governors and other state officials, state legislators, Democratic and Republican Party officials, campaign managers, precinct leaders, and persons charged with administration of the poll tax, registration, and elections. Many other participants in or observers of the political scene were consulted, among them publishers, editors, and reporters; labor, industrial, and farm organization leaders; plantation owners; small farmers; prominent Negroes; reform leaders; and students of government and politics. The first 12 chapters describe the factional competitions within the Democratic Party in each State. The remainder of the book consists of topical analyses of the one-party system in operation, the size and composition of the electorate, and the restrictions on voting. Professor Key attributes Southern political regionalism and the special character of Southern political institutions to the Negro, and more particularly to the high-density black belts. The predominant consideration in Southern politics has been to assure a local subordination of the Negro population, and to block threatened interferences with the local arrangements from the outside.

6379. Lewinson, Paul. Race, class, & party; a history of Negro suffrage and white politics in the South. London, New York, Oxford University Press, 1932. 302 p.
32–10400 JK1929.A2L4
Bibliography: p. 283–292.

An explanation of the interaction between the racial question on the one hand, and the white class and party struggle on the other, in the South. The author notes the impossibility of telling the story of Negro suffrage in the South without taking account of the political division among the whites into the Bourbons—once planters, later industrialists, financiers, and landlords—and into a class of small farmers and city workingmen; he notes the equal impossibility of understanding white cleavages and issues without reference to the Negro as the common enemy, causing the formation of a solid white front. Part 1 shows the South as late as 1849 bipartisan in local politics, which were normal in outline but embittered by the social and economic divisions arising from slavery; in 1860, effectively united to uphold the status quo; from 1867 to 1876, again bipartisan; from 1876 to the 1890's, discordant because of the agrarian revolt, with the Negro holding a balance of power between factions; and by 1900, reunited once more in a white man's party, with the Negro thrust outside the pale of political activity. Part 2 describes the working of Negro disfranchisement from 1900 to 1930, either by provisions of the state constitution, by the "white primary" rules of the local Democratic parties, or by complicated technical requirements for registration, enforced only against Negroes.

6380. Merriam, Charles Edward. Chicago; a more intimate view of urban politics. New York, Macmillan, 1929. 305 p.
29–12608 F548.5.M56

An optimistic description, in part reminiscence, of some of the more important aspects of the political life of a great metropolitan community, by a University of Chicago professor who served as alderman for six years, and made a good race for mayor in 1911. The author noted the presence of many interests in the political behavior of the city: those of the great agricultural clearing house, the rail and waterways, manufacturers, bankers, and the Chicago Federation of Labor. Also important to an understanding of Chicago's political attitudes and dispositions, he believed, were its three structural phases: the destruction by fire in 1871 and the "magic rebuilding"; the expansion of the city and creation of the World's Fair in 1893; and the era ushered in by the City Plan of 1907. He pointed out certain forces, notably the reluctance of Illinois to grant Chicago sufficient power to deal with its kaleidoscopic local situation, which made difficult the problem of government organization and standards, and he stressed the importance of the three successive waves of immigration which gave Chicago its ethnological composition. The battle for home rule and the struggle for honesty and competence as against graft and spoils characterized the political history of Chicago to 1929. The author analyzed "The Big Fix"—the inner organization designed to control the political situation and to be able to give immunity from the law—and illustrated the operation of actual government by the City Council.

6381. Peel, Roy V. The political clubs of New York City. New York, Putnam, 1935. 360 p. illus. 35–24274 JK2295.N74P4
Bibliography: p. 336–347.

An analysis, which leans heavily on the vocabulary and methods of sociology, of the organization and activities of the political clubs of New York. Its thesis is that the club is the fundamental unit of political organization, provided for neither by state law nor by party rule, nevertheless universally acknowledged as the unit-cell of the major political parties. Clubs are formed, the author maintains, for the purpose of recruiting a stable personnel in the interests of the party organization, but the determination and satisfaction of those interests are left to the party leaders. The clubs and bosses of the metropolitan area have attempted without success to dictate to the state legislature, but in 1935 they did dominate city administration and the local bench. The clubs serve as political forums, stages for political talents, and headquarters for campaigns; they are the "spokes for the wheels of patronage, perquisites and graft"; and, as Professor Peel shows, they have civic, social, charitable, educational, and individual objectives as well, which, so far as the ordinary member is concerned, frequently outweigh the political ones. The author thinks that such clubs, in their present state, are of limited and sometimes dubious value; but that they reflect a true need of men in society and could become the basis of a new territorial reorganization of government.

6382. Riordon, William L. Plunkitt of Tammany Hall; a series of very plain talks on very practical politics, delivered by ex-Senator George Washington Plunkitt, the Tammany philosopher, from his rostrum, the New York County Court-House bootblack stand, and recorded by William L. Riordon. Introd. by Roy V. Peel. New York, Knopf, 1948. lvi, 131 p.

48–8750 JK2319.N57R5 1948

The political ideals, attitudes, and mores of George Washington Plunkitt (1842–1924), a Tammany ward boss, as recorded by William L. Riordon and originally published in 1905. Plunkitt's techniques are here regarded as eminently practical and his political philosophy is considered typical of the thinking of the machine boss. He secured a few followers who would vote as directed, exchanged their votes with the regular leader in return for influence, specifically jobs and favors, saw that his successes were advertised and drew additional loyal adherents, repeating the process until he was the strongest man in the district. Careful to follow the organizational line, he managed to move quietly to the side of each successive Tammany boss: Tweed, Kelly, Croker, and Murphy. Soon after he entered politics, Plunkitt became well-to-do by using his official position and political contacts to buy land which he could sell at a large profit, to buy surplus public property for a song, and to accept gifts and other tokens of gratitude. A distruster of thinkers, orators, and the merit system in the civil service, he believed firmly in personal loyalty, patronage, human corruptibility, and the philosophy of "every man looking out for himself."

6383. Wooddy, Carroll Hill. The case of Frank L. Smith; a study in representative government. Chicago, University of Chicago Press, 1931. 393 p. illus. 31–9949 F546.W91

A case history of an Illinois election leading to a major scandal, based upon interviews and correspondence with persons affected, as well as published sources and newspaper reports. The author finds "something impressive in the triumph and tragedy" of the career of Frank L. Smith (1867–1950), who in 1926 was chairman of the Republican State Committee of Illinois and chairman of the Illinois Commerce Commission. Had circumstances decreed that Smith contest for his real ambition, the governorship, rather than for Federal office, or had his senatorial ambitions fallen into a year other than 1926, Dr. Wooddy believes, his case might never have come to light. Because of the scandalous Vare-Pepper-Pinchot primary in Pennsylvania, however, the attention of a Senate investigating committee had been drawn to primary election expenses. Smith's fund was discovered to be not merely excessive (he spent $253,500), but to have been contributed mainly by the very utility interests over which he held official jurisdiction, and especially by the electric power tycoon, Samuel Insull, who put $125,000 in Smith's fund. The Smith case the author views as "merely a reflection of a maladjustment which has resulted from the perpetuation of the mechanisms of frontier democracy in a highly complicated industrialized and urbanized civilization," but he notes that the electorate reacted energetically as soon as information was put before it.

E. Machines and Bosses

6384. Flynn, Edward J. You're the boss. [Autobiography] New York, Viking Press, 1947. 244 p. 47–30772 F128.5.F6

An analysis and defense of machine politics, as well as a report of his own career, by "a reluctant politician" who argues that the "good" machine is both modern and indispensable to American political life. Boss Flynn of the Bronx (1891–1953) described in illuminating detail the organization and operation of the political machine, as well as his rise in public office as a machine stalwart, and in the Democratic Party itself. He served as an assemblyman from Bronx County, N.Y., 1918–21; as sheriff of Bronx County, 1922–25; chamberlain of New York City, 1926–28; and as secretary of state of New York, 1929–39. These public offices were clearly minor phases of his career. Mr. Flynn took far greater pleasure and wielded far more power in his positions as leader of the Bronx County Democratic Committee, 1922–53; national committeeman from the state of New York, 1930–53; and as chairman, Democratic National Committee, 1940–42. The book is a sincere justification of organization politics, marked by a calm acceptance of the use of patronage to obtain and maintain party fealty, of the absolute power of the county boss, the spoils system, rigidity of organization, and severely disciplined party regularity. To the author, the primary purpose of the party is to win elections; he therefore tends to equate party success with good government. It is hardly necessary to say that Flynn was an unusual sort of boss.

6385. Gosnell, Harold F. Boss Platt and his New York machine; a study of the political leadership of Thomas C. Platt, Theodore Roosevelt, and others. Chicago, University of Chicago Press, 1924. xxiv, 370 p. illus. 24-2633 F124.G68

A description of the social, economic, and political background, the personal qualities, training, achievements, and techniques of Thomas Collier Platt (1833–1910), a typical State political boss who reached a position of leadership in the New York Republican Party in 1889, and gained control of it in the middle 1890's when Theodore Roosevelt was coming into national attention. Professor Gosnell shows how Platt lost control of important elements of the organization step by step from 1901 to 1904, and retired, a broken old man, from the United States Senate in 1909, the year Roosevelt also ended his official career. In the author's opinion, Platt was primarily the keeper and guardian of a set of political traditions and devices to which he had fallen heir and which he had seen tested and exploited, whereas Roosevelt, with whom he maintained political relations for more than 20 years, was the popularizer of a new order. By 1900, Platt, who "had had his difficulties with Governor Roosevelt," imagined him safely shelved in the Vice Presidency, but the latter, as Professor Gosnell shows, set out to capture the organization and succeeded when he became President. Until he did so, however, "the Easy Boss was able to cling to his place as an agent of the propertied classes, a retailer of franchises, government contracts, and special legislation."

6386. Gosnell, Harold F. Machine politics: Chicago model. Chicago, University of Chicago Press, 1937. xx, 229 p. illus. (Social science studies, directed by the Social Science Research Committee of the University of Chicago, no. 33 [i.e. 34]) 37-20974 JS708.G6

Bibliography: p. 214–219.

A study of political behavior patterns in Chicago, particularly as exemplified in the workings of the party machines, the characteristics of party workers, voting behavior, and the political effectiveness of newspapers. It is based upon personal interviews, files of Chicago newspapers, observation of political meetings and election-day activities, participation in court trials, and upon the author's experience as an active party worker. The book aims to find the reasons why Chicago politics underwent so few fundamental changes during the profound economic crisis and changes of the years 1928–36. As Dr. Gosnell points out, at the beginning of 1928 the two major parties were fairly evenly, if delicately, balanced, with the Republicans in possession of the city hall, yet by 1936 the Democrats were in complete control of all government agencies elected or represented in the Chicago area. The national policies of the Democratic Party made its local leaders supreme in Chicago, but did not effect any great change of individuals, or disturb their concentration upon jobs and spoils to the exclusion of genuine municipal issues. The author attributes the persistence of boss rule to a variety of factors including an unfavorable press situation, a dearth of civic leadership, and the impartial beneficences of Samuel Insull to both parties.

6387. Lynch, Denis Tilden. "Boss" Tweed; the story of a grim generation. New York, Boni & Liveright, 1927. 433 p. illus. 27-20559 F128.47.T96

Bibliography: p. 419–423.

A breezy history of the political life and times of William Marcy Tweed (1823–1878), the "monumental" rogue who became boss of Tammany Hall, and master of the entire machinery of the New York state government—executive, legislative, and judicial—and who, in the author's opinion, "wanted to control the Nation as he did the State." Knowing the corruption of contemporary politics and determined to succeed, he entered it in 1852 as a Tammany alderman on the Common Council of New York City which was later known as "The Forty Thieves." Mr. Lynch describes Tweed's success, in this and other offices, at manipulating city purchases and sales, offering and accepting bribes, and making himself powerful by placing his friends in key positions. He shows Tweed's methods of operation, from the use of strong-arm thugs, repeaters, and newly naturalized immigrants at the polls to the employment of Republican leaders upon his own or the city's payrolls. The Tweed Ring proper did not begin its operations until Jan. 1, 1869, and lasted less than three years, but during this time it helped itself to some $45 million, and cost the city of New York as much as $200 million. Mr. Lynch credits the unbought part of the metropolitan press, and especially the New York Times under the editorship of George Jones, with arousing the public against the Ring, and so destroying it in 1871.

6388. McKean, Dayton David. The Boss; the Hague machine in action. Boston, Houghton Mifflin, 1940. xvii, 284 p. 40-32284 F144.J5H3

An effort to explain how "a ruthless, two-fisted, unscrupulous, unlettered Irishman," Frank Hague (1876–1956), mayor of Jersey City, N.J., 1917–47, and his associates came to power in their municipality and Hudson County, and how their machine operated. Elected constable in 1897, and commissioner and director of public safety in 1913, Hague "made his way upward through the armed forces of his community," especially through manipulating the Police Department. In Professor McKean's opinion, no other American political machine has approached the Hague organization in the completeness of its control over its territory. This Democratic organization controlled newspapers, taming an opposition journal by advertising boycotts and increased property assessments, and bought off or intimidated opposition leaders. Alone among American city machines, it "systematically and successfully utilized the methods of terrorism, the infiltration of groups and associations, the suppression of criticism, and the hierarchical principle of leadership that have characterized the fascist régimes in Europe." The author charges the machine with wiretapping, tampering with the mails, spying, false arrests, and beatings. The Hague regime survived the publication of Professor McKean's book, by seven years in the city, and by nine in the state.

6389. Salter, John T. Boss rule; portraits in city politics. New York, Whittlesey House, McGraw-Hill, 1935. 270 p. 35–8152 JS1268.S3

A survey of the workings of the Republican organization of Philadelphia drawn from the oral narratives of the ward leaders themselves. The author has attempted a scientific study of the politician, first in general terms, then through a group of nine individual sketches from life, selected as being typical of widely differing kinds of division or precinct leaders. The defeat of the party in the election of November 7, 1933, is described, and the book concludes with predictions about the probable future of the Republican organization in Philadelphia as of 1935, together with suggestions of devices for better government. Professor Salter says that, however diverse in training, character, and ability urban politicians may be, they have in common the one function of service to their neighbors. To this personal service powerful metropolitan party organizations owe much of their strength. This strength is greatest where needs are most compelling, where there is most poverty, most unemployment, most conflict with the law, in districts more often than not inhabited by a majority of the foreign-born or of Negroes. The work of the party organization centers in the simplest creature wants—jobs, food, justice (or mercy or favoritism), and taxes—and in it, as in elections, the most vital factor is the division leader, who acts as "the personal sales agent of the party." Another study of the same machine, David Harold Kurtzman's Methods of Controlling Votes in Philadelphia (Philadelphia, 1935. 173 p.), originated as a University of Pennsylvania dissertation. It surveys the methods whereby the Philadelphia Republican organization has controlled votes, among them use of the public payrolls, magistrates' courts, and police; the personal contacts of the division leader; favors extended through real estate assessment, mercantile appraisal, and inspection of weights and measures; and control of the election mechanism.

6390. Van Devander, Charles W. The big bosses. [New York] Howell, Soskin, 1944. 318 p. 44–3308 JK2249.V3

A journalist's candid report on the operations of the major American political machines and their leaders, down to 1944. In some detail, Mr. Van Devander discusses the workings of: New York's Democratic Tammany Hall, the Republican state machine, and the O'Connell ring which preserved Albany and Albany County for the Democrats; the Democratic Hague machine of Jersey City, which, in 25 years "had become a way of life"; the highly organized Massachusetts Republican machine; the Republican Grundy machine of Pennsylvania; the Democratic Kelly-Nash machine of Chicago; and the Democratic organizations of the South—the absolute and arbitrary Crump machine of Tennessee, the Long dictatorship of Louisiana, the Lister Hill organization of Alabama, the Pendergast machine of Missouri. The record is full of patronage, favors, graft, deals, exposure and counterexposure, padded registrations and stuffed ballot boxes, manipulations of tax assessments, frameups, and salary assessments. Connections are found to such profitable sidelines as numbers lotteries, gambling rackets, and racing syndicates. The author notes the absence of machine politics in California, and comments upon the relation between the organizations and the realistic Franklin D. Roosevelt, who exchanged mutual aid with the machines that supported him and fought those that opposed.

6391. Zink, Harold. City bosses in the United States; a study of twenty municipal bosses. Durham, N.C., Duke University Press, 1930. 371 p. illus. 30–31996 JS309.Z5

An analysis of the characteristics and careers of twenty municipal bosses of the 19th and 20th centuries, selected on a basis of geographical distribution and party affiliation. Included are Democratic and Republican bosses, the boss who veers from party to party, the boss who begins as a reformer or who becomes one, the "political hermaphrodite," the lone boss, and the boss who heads a long-established, efficient machine, together with a few who, though influential, have never entirely controlled a city. Although Professor Zink has made some use of books and documents, he has drawn most of his information from newspapers and from interviews with "relatives, associates, and enemies."

An introductory section considers the personal characteristics of city bosses, their domestic, social, business, and political relations, as well as their several methods of reaching the top. The remainder of the book is devoted to vignettes of the selected bosses, among them "Czar" Martin Lomasney of Boston, "Big Tim" Sullivan of the Bowery, Martin Behrman of New Orleans, "The Genial Doctor" Albert A. Ames of Minneapolis, and Abraham Ruef of San Francisco. Professor Zink finds no typical boss but does observe a frequent occurrence of certain circumstances and traits, such as early residence in the city dominated, American birth of foreign-born parents, a poverty-stricken urban background, generosity to the poor, loyalty to faithful henchmen, persistence, and courage.

F. Pressures

6392. Chase, Stuart. Democracy under pressure; special interests vs the public welfare; guide lines to America's future as reported to the Twentieth Century Fund. New York, Twentieth Century Fund, 1945. 142 p. (His When the war ends [4]) 45-922 JK1118.C4

A brief and lucid popular analysis of the pressures exerted upon Congress in 1944 by the lobbyists of big business, big agriculture, and big labor. Mr. Chase locates the heart of these big business pressures in the National Association of Manufacturers, the heart of small business pressures in the U.S. Chamber of Commerce, and of particular industries in their own organizations such as the American Iron and Steel Institute. He finds these business pressure groups oblivious to the interest of the public, their own consumers, and their own workers. Corporate financial interest has been their major concern, leading them to seek monopolistic advantages, subsidies, or both. Mr. Chase does not find much greater concern for the public interest among the best organized labor unions or "the farm bloc folks." He fears for free enterprise and free markets, but believes that the fundamental trouble with monopoly is neither greed nor arbitrary power but restriction of output. In his opinion, if output needs to be restricted, the state is the legitimate agent rather than big business, big union, or the Farm Bureau Federation. Considering the great changes of the postwar period, it is remarkable how much of Mr. Chase's analysis is still pertinent.

6393. Crawford, Kenneth G. The pressure boys; the inside story of lobbying in America. New York, Messner, 1939. 308 p. 39-27853 JK1118.C7

A Washington newspaperman's prewar view of lobbyists, "who may be peddlers of personal influence, paid propagandists or amateurs promoting causes in which they sincerely believe," and who, collectively, "constitute a sort of phantom fourth branch of the government." Employed by private property interests, the majority devote "enormous energies and considerable talents" primarily to the protection of property, "sometimes by fair means and sometimes not." Private property is overprotected by the lobbies, the author contends; it has not hesitated to corrupt government in order to preserve or extend its advantages; and it exercises more influence upon Congress than its voting strength justifies in a representative democracy. Although Mr. Crawford does not attribute all of the ills of democracy to the property lobby, particularly business interests, he accuses it of swinging congressional votes in return for campaign contributions, promises, or threats; of possessing an influential system of propaganda, organized deceit, and skillful perversion of democratic processes; and of ruthlessly exercising economic power to achieve political ends. The property lobby's singleness of purpose—the protection or advancement of profits—and its uncomplicated selfishness give it enormous drive. The author provides illustrative case histories, but, unfortunately, no index.

6394. Gaer, Joseph. The first round; the story of the CIO Political Action Committee. New York, Duell, Sloan & Pearce, 1944. xv, 478 p. illus. 44-51287 E812.G3

Intended to preserve the credos and early propaganda tools of the CIO Political Action Committee, this is a reprinting of most of the pamphlets and manuals issued by the committee during its first year. Joseph Gaer, who has been a staff member, sets forth the events leading to the formation of the PAC at the beginning of 1944, the motivations of its activities, and the sources of its strength. Sidney Hillman is credited here with being the moving force, and Philip Murray with being the founder and establisher of basic policy. The organization was created "to protect the political rights of the working man, as well as the rights of the returning soldier, the farmer, the small business man, and the so-called 'common man'." Planning for full postwar employment at fair wages became the committee's primary policy. Full participation in the 1944 elections was regarded as the first step toward this objective, and the PAC set as its primary task getting out the vote for its approved candidates throughout the nation. The pamphlets consist of campaign literature, illustrated largely with pictographs. The guides for its own workers include such titles as: "The Radio Handbook," "The Speakers Manual," and "A Woman's Guide to Political Action." A record registration was in fact achieved.

6395. McKean, Dayton David. Pressures on the Legislature of New Jersey. New York, Columbia University Press, 1938. 251 p. (Columbia University. Faculty of Political Science. Studies in history, economics and public law, no. 440) 38–23938 JK2498.N5M2 1938a H31.C7, no. 440

A realistic study of New Jersey politics and the force that makes the State government function—the lobby. The author, a former New Jersey assemblyman, views a State legislature as a kind of battleground for the various interests of the State. The first three chapters show what these interests are: business—especially the Public Service Corporation of New Jersey and its gadfly, the Utility Users' Protective League of New Jersey—labor, agriculture, professional groups, religious groups, public employees, veterans, women's organizations, motorists, public education groups, and reform groups. Next analyzed in some detail are the internal affairs, membership, structure, financing, and goals of seven important and representative organizations, such as the New Jersey State Federation of Labor. The author then examines pressures from other branches of the State government, and group and party politics as they were fought out on the sales tax of 1935. Later chapters explore the methods and effectiveness of pressure groups which seek the nomination of friendly candidates and endeavor to have them bound by platform planks, personal pledges, and campaign contributions. The groups attempt to draw out the vote for men of approved pledges or records, and to influence legislation by providing information, drafting and guiding bills, and communicating arguments, promises, and threats to the legislators. Dr. McKean thinks that 90 percent of the legislature's acts are accounted for by pressures, but finds no way of measuring their effectiveness.

6396. Schattschneider, Elmer E. Politics, pressures, and the tariff; a study of free private enterprise in pressure politics, as shown in the 1929–1930 revision of the tariff. New York, Prentice-Hall, 1935. 301 p. (Prentice-Hall political science series) 35–29634 HF1756.S38 1935

Thesis (Ph. D.)—Columbia University, 1935.

A study of the political behavior of economic groups in making the Smoot-Hawley protective tariff of 1929–30, based upon the nearly 20,000 pages of testimony taken by the Senate Committee on Finance and the House Committee on Ways and Means. So as to observe the relation between economic interest and political activity on a broad scale, Dr. Schattschneider has analyzed the elementary and immediate interests affected by a large number of individual duties established in the law. He attempts to characterize the activity of pressure groups in the case of one major public policy, and to measure its strength, its direction, and variability, as well as to note the manner in which it is deflected and controlled. He finds that immediate active interests bring an intense pressure to obtain a protective duty; the indirect adverse interests remain inert and sluggish, and make no effective opposition. A few can exert great influence on the process of government because they are organized, are alert, have access to information, and know what they want; the mass remains apathetic. The protective tariff was made high by combining a multitude of interests in an omnibus piece of legislation.

6397. Schriftgiesser, Karl. The lobbyists; the art and business of influencing lawmakers. Boston, Little, Brown, 1951. xiv, 297 p. 51–12266 JK1118.S4

Bibliography: p. [273]–281.

A history of lobbying as it has developed from the days of the Boston Tea Party and even simpler forms of persuasion down to 1951. Mr. Schriftgiesser, who considers that lobbying may be either good or evil, attempts to show how it has become an integral part of the democratic legislative process. Much of his story is concerned with the Regulation of Lobbying Act, passed by Congress as part of the Legislative Reorganization Act in 1946. He goes into the passage of this act, the subsequent adherence to or evasion of its principles, and what can be learned from the information filed with Congress by those who come under its provisions. His object is to show the extent of lobbying both in Washington and elsewhere in the country, and to bring together the detailed information gathered by the House Select Committee on Lobbying Activities in 1950. His summary of the latter is probably his chief contribution. The danger remains that a quite small interest group may, by sheer vociferousness and persistence, have an effect on legislation far in excess of its own importance. Mr. Schriftgiesser believes in the unhindered right of petition, but believes also that anyone who petitions the government for redress of grievance "should stand up and say who he is, and what he wants, why he wants it, and who paid his way."

6398. Turner, Julius. Party and constituency: pressures on Congress. Baltimore, Johns Hopkins Press, 1951 [i. e. 1952] 190 p. (The Johns Hopkins University studies in historical and political science, ser. 69, no. 1)

52–839 JK2265.T87 H31.J6, ser. 69, no. 1

An attempt to measure, by quantitative methods, the effectiveness of pressures upon Congressmen from their political parties and constituencies. Dr. Turner has chosen four sessions for roll call analysis: 1921, when the Republicans held a strong majority in the House and had captured the Presidency after eight years of Democratic rule; 1930–31, when the Republicans held a slight majority and were "faltering under President Hoover"; 1937, when the Democrats held three-quarters of the House after the Roosevelt landslide but were beginning to divide on the New Deal; and 1944, when the Democrats organized Congress but were so closely followed by the Republicans that the number of absentees determined the majority at any given time. In his opinion, the roll call record is "an accurate summation of the effectiveness of the pressure of various groups on each congressman, on those issues which are important enough or controversial enough so that a part of the membership wants a record kept of the vote for an ensuing election campaign." The great majority of Representatives, he concludes, yield to the pressures from their constituencies and especially to party pressures in casting their votes. Those who do not, especially if they are Republicans, are unlikely to achieve longevity in office. "The American Congress is . . . a mirror of political pressure."

6399. Zeller, Belle. Pressure politics in New York; a study of group representation before the legislature. New York, Prentice-Hall, 1937. 310 p. (Prentice-Hall political science series)

37–11266 JK2498.N7Z4 1937

Thesis (Ph. D.)—Columbia University, 1937.

An analysis of the activities of the more important statewide pressure groups in New York and of their influence upon legislative policy, together with suggestions for solutions to some of the more pressing problems thereby created. Group pressures stem from three major sources, Miss Zeller found—labor, business, and agriculture—as well as from a host of minor sources. The most vigorous pressure exerted at Albany was on behalf of labor legislation, particularly by the New York State Federation of Labor, the Women's Trade Union League of New York, and the Consumers' League of New York. Also engaged in a continuing battle for legislative influence were a score or more lobby groups representing money interests, industry, and agriculture, notably the Real Estate Association of the State of New York, the New York State Bankers Association, the Association of Life Insurance Presidents, Associated Industries, Inc., the Empire State Gas and Electric Association, and the New York State Conference Board of Farm Organizations. Labor groups have always secured greater assistance from Democratic administrations, industrial groups from Republican. To Miss Zeller, the outstanding feature of pressure-group technique is the use of mass propaganda channels for building support both within and outside the interest group itself long before the direct attack on the legislature begins.

G. Elections: Machinery

6400. Albright, Spencer D. The American ballot. Washington, American Council on Public Affairs, 1942. 153 p. 42–25091 JK2215.A6

Bibliography: p. 146–148.

A minute analysis and comparison of ballot forms which were in use in the United States, particularly during the 1930's, both in general and in primary elections. As Dr. Albright points out, by the middle of the 19th century ballot papers had become subject to legislation as to color, number, size, uniformity, and methods of marking and depositing. The majority of American states had, by the turn of the century, adopted the Australian ballot system in a modified form. Under the new system, here regarded as a fundamental advance, voting was elaborately regulated by the State. The ballots were printed and distributed by designated authorities, marked and deposited on election day within a polling place under the supervision of the proper officials, and canvassed according to law. In the 20th century, almost continuous amendment of the ballot laws has been the rule, in many instances for the better. The author thinks that a general improvement has resulted from the voting-machine laws of the decade 1930–40; the machines are reliable and meet the needs of all elections including primaries. The voting public, he believed in 1942, was becoming aware of the advantages of the machine: the ease and speed with which the vote is recorded, as well as the economies made possible by the reduction in printing costs, personnel, supplies, and rental of polling places (through consolidation of precincts), and the elimination of recounts.

6401. Bishop, Cortlandt F. History of elections in the American Colonies. New York, Columbia College, 1893. 297 p. (Columbia University. Faculty of Political Science. Studies in history, economics and public law, v. 3, no. 1)
4-1841 JK97.A3B61
H31.C7, v. 3

"Authorities quoted": p. [289]-295.

This pioneer study, based upon a thorough examination of the statutes of the Thirteen Colonies, was so solidly done that it has been relied upon ever since. Dr. Bishop dealt first with general elections, and noted that they were in use in every colony, at least for constituting a legislative assembly, beginning with Virginia's choice of a House of Burgesses in 1619. New York had to wait the longest, for neither the Dutch West India Company nor the Duke of York (the future King James II) cared for popular elections, and notwithstanding several anticipations there was no regular assembly until 1691. Dr. Bishop next analyzed the qualifications for the suffrage in use throughout the period, noting the moral and religious ones which did not survive the Revolution. The chapter on "The Management of Elections" is full of concrete detail on such matters as the publication of the election writ, the hours of election, the method of taking the vote, and provisions against fraud; there is no such convenient accumulation of precise information for post-colonial elections. A briefer section deals with town, parish, and municipal elections, and the suffrage and management regulations which governed them. Appendixes print specimen writs, returns, and oaths, and some unpublished election statutes turned up in the author's researches.

6402. De Grazia, Alfred. Public and republic; political representation in America. New York, Knopf, 1951. xiii, 262, ix p.
51-9540 JK1846.D4 1951

Bibliography: p. 259-262.

A description and a closely reasoned analysis of the major currents of political belief and practice during the last three centuries, each with its own interpretation of man and society and each with its own scheme of political representation. Dr. De Grazia cites the majority principle, universal suffrage, a real-property qualification for holding office, instruction of representatives by constituents, and proportional representation as among proposed means of obtaining a government to fulfill men's desires and to realize their values. He attempts to show how and why rich and poor, religious and political sects, and urban and rural populations have held differing views of representation. He isolates clusters of ideas about representation, traces their ancestry and history, and points out where some weakened and others grew strong, where some elements were incorporated into other groups, and where some died out. Beginning with English ideas of representation in the two centuries after Elizabeth I, the author traces the development of the American representative principle through three main forms: the ideas of direct representation, enlightened individualism, and pluralism, with power-clusters in a corporation-dominated society.

6403. Harris, Joseph P. Registration of voters in the United States. Washington, Brookings Institution, 1929. xviii, 390 p. ([Brookings Institution, Washington, D. C.] Institute for Government Research. Studies in administration [no. 23])
29-17775 JK2164.A2H3

"Select bibliography": p. 383-385.

6404. Harris, Joseph P. Election administration in the United States. Washington, Brookings Institution, 1934. 453 p. ([Brookings Institution, Washington, D. C.] Institute for Government Research. Studies in administration, no. 27)
34-5509 JK1976.H3

Registration of Voters in the United States is an analytical survey of American registration systems, based upon a 15-month field study of the legal provisions governing the several registration systems of the States and the practical workings of those systems, which included interviews with persons both in and outside registration offices who were acquainted with local political situations, organizations, and methods. Effort was made to secure information not only upon all phases of administration but also upon the general problems of registration. The author found no system absolutely satisfactory, nor did he expect to, since he considered no single system ideal for every State. He commended California for the most satisfactory system of records, Milwaukee and Minneapolis for the best transfer system, Omaha for the best canvass system, Boston for the best census of adults, and Detroit and St. Louis for the best method of selecting precinct officers. Dr. Harris regarded voter registration as essential to prevent frauds and therefore "the very foundation upon which an honest election system must rest." If properly administered, it may be an economical operation of no inconvenience to the mass of voters. He recommended permanent registration, whereby the voter remains registered so long as he remains at the same address, with the provision of certain safeguards. Based on a field study undertaken during 1929 and 1930, Election Administration in the United States continues Professor Harris' survey of the electoral process and describes the system then in operation in America for the casting and counting of ballots, and the canvassing and declaration of the result. Emphasis is placed upon the practical operation of election laws rather than upon the provisions of the statutes, although the latter were studied. Interviews were held with chief election officers and with politically informed persons outside the election office. The author undertook the study because in his opinion no other phase of public administration in the United States had been so badly managed as the conduct of elections, in which have regularly occurred "glaring irregularities, errors, misconduct on the part of precinct officers, disregard of election laws and instructions, slipshod practices, and downright frauds." Yet democratic government is completely dependent upon honestly and efficiently conducted elections. Dr. Harris called for a general revision of State election laws, a reorganization of election machinery, and improvements in election management—especially in the practice of the party machines in staffing election boards with their hacks. He offered "a model election administration code" (p. 77–94). Voting machines are expensive but desirable "if properly used, and the limitations of the machines recognized."

6405. McGovney, Dudley O. The American suffrage medley; the need for a national uniform suffrage. Chicago, University of Chicago Press, 1949. 201 p. 49–9160 JK1853.M25

McGovney, a California professor of law, died in 1947 leaving the manuscript of this plea for the establishment of a uniform national suffrage. The control of suffrage requirements by the states, he believed, was a survival from the Colonial period, when the British settlers were "accustomed to the idea of restricting the suffrage to the upper economic levels" and to a medley of voting qualifications in electing members of the House of Commons. Since the framers of the Constitution made no alteration here, the adoption of universal suffrage has been piecemeal and incomplete. At the time of writing 5 States had rudiments of the old property qualifications; 7 had a poll-tax requirement; 18 had educational requirements of a great variety, adopted for a variety of reasons; and 36 imposed a permanent disfranchisement upon persons sentenced to prison. Politicians, McGovney thought, have been able to use these survivals so as to interfere seriously with the democratic process. He proposed a constitutional amendment limiting suffrage requirements, for primaries as well as final elections, to adulthood, citizenship, and residence in a State for six months and in the precinct for three; and disfranchising only for insanity and for the duration of imprisonment.

6406. Merriam, Charles Edward, and Louise Overacker. Primary elections. Chicago, University of Chicago Press, 1928. 448 p. 28–14911 JK2074.M5 1928

First published in 1908.

"Bibliography and Sources of statistical material for primary and general election returns": p. 405–427.

The development of legal regulation of the nominating process in the United States forms the subject of this history and analysis. The authors trace the expansion of regulation from the establishment of the representative party system, the general adoption of the delegate convention system, and the victory of universal male suffrage in the 1830's to the introduction of the mandatory, legally protected, direct primary during the first two decades of the 20th century, with a noticeable reaction against it in the 1920's. Inquiring into the attitude of the judiciary toward primary legislation, the authors find a recognition of the right of the legislature to regulate in some detail the method of voting, and an unwillingness to sustain the claims of the party, as a voluntary political organization, to regulate its own internal affairs. They consider the direct primary a weapon for the voter, a means to challenge or overthrow a corrupt or unrepresentative organization, and of especial significance to the one-party States where nominations are tantamount to elections. Among the improvements in nominating methods suggested by the authors are a reduction in the number of elective officers (why elect a coroner or a surveyor?), and limiting the popular choice to major executive officers concerned with the formulation of public policies. A long appendix (p. 359–404) summarizes the primary laws of each State (as of 1928).

6407. Overacker, Louise. Money in elections. Largely from material collected by Victor J. West. New York, Macmillan, 1932. 476 p. ([Parties and practical politics series])

32–29858 JK1991.O7

"Selected bibliography": p. 419–459.

"The present study is primarily concerned with the use of money in elections in the United States, the attempts to regulate such use, the operation of these regulations, and the possibility of more effective control." Professor Overacker, who took over the research materials left by Professor V. J. West of Stanford University at his death in 1927, defines elections to include primaries as well as general elections, and defines money to include the things money will buy and actual bribes. She is concerned with the raising, spending, and regulating of the money which influences voters in casting their ballots for or against certain candidates. Among expenditures, she lists general overhead of the headquarters offices, salaries and transportation for field activities, funds for publicity, and grants to subsidiary organizations by the national committees. Election-day expenditures, she observes, can smack unpleasantly of bribery. These she would eliminate by legal prohibitions or have them shouldered by the State or by nonparty groups. Since she finds a correlation between votes received and even "legitimate" funds spent, she would limit the size as well as the purpose of the latter, and throw pre-election publicity upon the amount and character of expenditures by all candidates, parties, and organizations involved. As of 1932, attempts to limit contributions and expenditures had been "nothing short of farcical."

6408. Overacker, Louise. The Presidential primary. New York, Macmillan, 1926. 308 p. ([Parties and practical politics series])

26–6444 JK522.O8

Bibliography: p. 277–294.

An analysis, a comparison, and an evaluation of the 26 [as of 1926] State laws enacted to provide direct popular control of Presidential nominations through the election of delegates to national conventions, or a preference vote for President, or both. The functionings of the various types of Presidential primary were compared, and the author attempted to determine whether the combined effect of these laws upon the Presidential nominating process weakened or strengthened it. Although emphasis was placed upon the operation of existing State laws, consideration was given to various proposals for a national primary law, and suggestions were made for drafting an effective one. The author regarded the Presidential primary as part of the general movement for more democratic control of the American government and, in its concrete aspect, as an attempt to give the people some say in the election of their President, and to secure party responsibility. She found the effectiveness of the Presidential primary laws limited by faulty construction, lack of uniformity, and especially by the fact that they existed in so few States. She suggested extension of the system to all or most States, either through State or national action. Since 1926 the system has declined, however, until at present only 14 States have mandatory Presidential primaries, and in only a minority of these are the delegates pledged by the result.

6409. Porter, Kirk H. A history of suffrage in the United States. Chicago, University of Chicago Press, 1918. 260 p.

18–22279 JK1846.P8

Issued also as thesis (Ph. D.) University of Chicago.

A history of the right to vote since 1776, emphasizing the expansion of the suffrage by the gradual inclusion of groups to whom it was originally denied, presenting the general picture and the motivating ideals rather than the technicalities and local variations, and based primarily upon the debates in state constitutional conventions. For all its proclamation of natural rights, the American Revolution did not greatly alter the franchise restrictions prevailing in the later Colonial period, and when the Constitution was adopted voting was still confined to a small group of property owners and taxpayers. Dr. Porter traces the weakening and practically complete elimination of property tests; North Carolina did not abandon hers until 1856, while two states, at the time of writing, had never given up a small taxpaying requirement. After the enfranchisement of the unpropertied, controversy in the realm became concerned with votes for free Negroes and eventually for all Negroes, for aliens, and for women. While the general movement has been, however jerkily, in the direction of universal suffrage, the years from 1877 to 1904 saw a complete disfranchisement of Negroes in all the Southern states. Dr. Porter wrote shortly before the adoption of the 19th Amendment, when only 12 states had enacted full woman suffrage, and he anticipated a much longer and harder struggle for its passage than was about to take place.

6410. Sikes, Earl R. State and Federal corrupt-practices legislation. Durham, N.C., Duke University Press, 1928. 321 p.

28–16725 JK1994.S6

Bibliography: p. 292–314.

This Cornell University dissertation is a survey of the corrupt-practices legislation enacted in the United States to 1928 by both State and Federal governments, and an examination of the construction placed upon the statutes by judicial interpretation. Chapters 1–3 consider statutory prohibitions against corrupt inducements to voters, against their intimidation, and against fraudulent practices by voters on the one hand and by election officials on the other. Chapter 4 deals with State regulation of various forms of campaign literature. Chapter 5 reports on State legislation requiring publicity for campaign contributions and expenditures, prohibiting or restricting certain types of contributions, and regulating expenditures in campaigns. Chapters 6 and 7 are concerned with the regulation of elections by the Federal Government; 6 defines the division of power between the Federal and State governments over the control of elections, and 7 surveys Federal corrupt-practices legislation. Despite the stringent legislation enacted against abuses of the elective franchise from the 1890's, the worst evils did not appear, in 1928, to have been corrected. In the author's opinion, the increasing complexity of the electoral machinery, the rapid industrial and commercial development of the country, and the indifference of the public all contributed to domination by great political machines.

6411. Wilmerding, Lucius. The electoral college. New Brunswick, N. J., Rutgers University Press, 1958. 224 p. 58–6290 JK529.W64

An explanation of proposals for reform as well as an historical outline and a critique of the system provided by the Constitution for electing the President through the agency of intermediate electors, or, in certain contingencies, through the votes of the House of Representatives. Dr. Wilmerding regards the former process as an "artificial and delusive system," because each candidate is given the unanimous and undivided electoral vote of every State where he has a plurality of the popular votes, receiving nothing from the remaining States. In each State, therefore, "a large minority of the people is made precisely equal to no minority at all and a bare plurality is made equal to the whole." An election by the House of Representatives he considers still further removed from an election by the people at large, since the representation of each State, regardless of its size, is given one vote which it casts according to the sense of its own majority. Yet the purpose of the Constitution, he believes, is "to elevate to the executive chair the man who is the choice of the majority of the people in the nation as a whole"; that intention having been defeated, the Presidency has been put on a federative rather than a national basis. The author, in arguing for electoral reform, expresses his preference for a system which would put the Presidential election upon a sound popular basis and a practical footing.

H. Elections: Results

6412. Bean, Louis H. Ballot behavior; a study of presidential elections. Washington, American Council on Public Affairs, 1940. 102 p. illus. 40–34491 JK1967.B4

6413. Bean, Louis H. How to predict elections. New York, Knopf, 1948. 196 p. illus. 48–3171 JK2007.B4

Ballot Behavior is a survey of 40 years (1896–1936) of Presidential election history for each of the 48 States, based upon political statistics from States, counties, and cities. Among the author's results are: the discovery of a number of States which go as the nation goes; a method of measuring political trends; the effect of business conditions on these trends; and a schedule of relationship between the national popular vote and the state electoral votes, by which national polls may be translated into a probable electoral lineup of the 48 States. Mr. Bean presents not a method of forecasting elections but basic facts so organized as to serve as a foundation for judgment. He offers analyses and data, leaving the reader to judge for himself. He does discern a fairly systematic pattern of behavior in the United States. A given national political shift has its reflection, he believes, to varying degrees, in each of the States and in a great many counties. Upon this theory, the behavior of one State may be translated into the corresponding behavior of the nation as a whole and then into the corresponding behavior of the other 47 States. Mr. Bean offers many tables and diagrams to indicate political patterns and tides. A companion volume, How to Predict Elections, reports the results of further research into voting statistics. Although less attention is given to theory and procedure, the method of analysis remains the same, and the findings and forecasts are again offered with reserve. The author continues to believe that "voting behavior, portrayed statistically, offers valuable keys to an explanation of the marked swings in American politics and helps to form a basis for judging political trends in the immediate future." Political tides over a period of years are represented here by the changing percentage of the Presidential vote cast in successive elections by the Democratic Party, or the proportion of the House or Senate seats won by either party. Most of the factors which have dominated elections from 1928 to 1946, years of "the New Deal tide," are treated separately, first historically, and later in relation to the 1946 and future elections.

6414. Berelson, Bernard R., Paul F. Lazarsfeld, and William N. McPhee. Voting; a study of opinion formation in a Presidential campaign. [Chicago] University of Chicago Press, 1954. xix, 395 p. illus. 54–11205 JK526 1948.B4

An intensive study of the voting behavior of an American town, Elmira, N.Y., in the Presidential contest of 1948 between President Truman and Governor Dewey. The authors employed the so-called panel method of interviewing a representative sample of respondents before the political campaign began, during it, and after it. The main purpose was to analyze a developing process through repeated interviews with the respondents—in this case, approximately 1,000. Both the social and the political aspects of the process are emphasized, the formation of preferences on the one hand, and, on the other, the relation between democratic theory and democratic practice. By statistical analysis, the authors have attempted to discover how, why, and by how much opinions and attitudes changed during the period under examination. Vote intentions supported by one's social environment, they find, are more predictably adhered to than are "deviant" intentions. Under the stress of a campaign, people develop an increased tendency toward conformity. Voters do have some of the classically required virtues of the citizen but not in the elaborate or comprehensive form demanded by political philosophers. In the authors' opinion, the political theory of democracy, formulated in the 18th century, stands in need of revision, but not replacement, through empirical sociology.

6415. Ewing, Cortz A. M. Congressional elections, 1896–1944; the sectional basis of political democracy in the House of Representatives. Norman, University of Oklahoma Press, 1947. 110 p. illus. 47–31040 JK1316.E9

6416. Ewing, Cortez A. M. Presidential elections from Abraham Lincoln to Franklin D. Roosevelt. Norman, University of Oklahoma Press, 1940. 226 p. illus. 40–33395 JK524.E94

The first of these works is a statistical analysis of elections to the House of Representatives, limited, because of the lack of detailed official figures for earlier ones, to those of 1896–1944. Professor Ewing's evaluation of the last 50 years convinced him that success in the Presidential election will go to the party already in control of the House. He points out that the Republicans must win a majority of seats in the East, Middle West, and West to secure a majority in the House. If the border section goes Republican, that majority becomes overwhelming. The Democrats, sure of the South and at an advantage in the border, need add only 88 seats outside these sections to have a majority in the House. Professor Ewing expressed some doubt as to whether the sectional pattern normal in 1944 would continue, calling particular attention to the division in the Democratic Party between Southern conservatives and liberals in the other sections. In Presidential Elections the author applied the same kind of analysis to the presidential elections of the years 1864–1936. He divided them into four major voting periods: 1864–1876, when the Republicans won four straight triumphs; 1880–1892, when the Democrats fought back to split the four elections equally; 1896–1916, when landslides began to occur and the Republicans won all but the 1912 and 1916 elections, and lost those because of their own disunity; and 1920–36, when the Republicans won the first three, and the Democrats the last two elections. He thought that before World War I there was crystallization of party allegiance, and after it a decline of party regularity, a failure of tradition as a determinant of political behavior, and the emergence of economic security as a dominant motivation. He discussed, among other matters, sectional interests, minority parties, the electoral college, and the respective influences of these on the outcome of national elections.

6417. Gallup, George H. A guide to public opinion polls. [2d ed.] Princeton, Princeton University Press, 1948. xxiv, 117 p. 48–3517 HM261.G27 1948

First published in 1944.

An elucidation of the "science of opinion measurement" set forth in question and answer form. The author attempted to furnish readers with a better conception of the methods employed in public opinion research and a fuller understanding of its value. Public opinion polls had been thoroughly tested since 1935, he contended, and the reliability of the methods practiced had been "demonstrated time and again." Although Dr. Gallup did not claim perfection for his system, he noted its "many contributions to our democratic process," especially through its accurate and prompt reports of public opinion and its focus of attention upon major national issues. Answers are provided here to all the questions most frequently put to polling organizations. Among the subjects covered are the functions of the poll, the size of sample necessary to reliability, the types of sampling, the selection of the interviewers, election predictions, and the interpretation and reporting of results. "Just as it can be said with certainty that polls will be highly accurate in the vast majority of elections, so with the same certainty it can be said that on occasion they will go wrong." Notwithstanding which disclaimer, Dr. Gallup's poll lost heavily in prestige by picking Dewey rather than Truman in 1948.

6418. Gosnell, Harold F. Grass roots politics; national voting behavior of typical States. Washington, American Council on Public Affairs, 1942. 195 p. illus. 42-25395 JK1967.G6

A quantitative analysis of political behavior chiefly of the 1920's and 1930's in six States—Pennsylvania, Wisconsin, Iowa, California, Illinois, and Louisiana—which aims to trace from this sample the main outlines of the pattern of national politics. Developments in Pennsylvania, the author believes, clearly demonstrate the extent of the national political upheaval of the 1930's, when the Democratic Party attracted to its ranks not only dissatisfied Republicans but a host of new voters. The depression worked toward a political realignment of socioeconomic groups both in California and in Wisconsin, where the New Deal gained strength among poor, foreign-born, and progressive farmers as well as among skilled and unskilled laborers of the cities. Dr. Gosnell finds that Herbert Hoover was made a scapegoat for the personal insecurity of many Iowa farmers. He considers that the even spread of the revolt against the Republican Party was a remarkable aspect of Illinois politics of the 1930's, and that the emergence of Louisiana's Huey Long indicates the precarious foundation of American democracy and the two-party system.

6419. Lazarsfeld, Paul F., Bernard Berelson, and Hazel Gaudet. The people's choice; how the voter makes up his mind in a presidential campaign. [2d ed.] New York, Columbia University Press, 1948. xxxiii, 178 p. illus. 48-8605 JK524.L38 1948

First published in 1944.

An analysis of the voting behavior of Erie County, Ohio, in the Presidential election of 1940 (President F. D. Roosevelt versus Wendell Willkie), based on interviews obtained from a panel of 600 respondents who were questioned once a month from May to November 1940. Interest centered in persons whose political opinions were changed in the interval, whether by a shift in party allegiance, by indecision until the end of the campaign, or by abstention after declaration of a definite vote intention, because in them the processes of attitude formation and change could be observed. They were compared with those who did not change political opinions; their personal characteristics, their contacts with other people, and their exposure to mass communications were examined. The opinions successively held by the shifters were also compared, and a 13 percent turnover, stimulated chiefly by face-to-face contacts, was found to have occurred within the few weeks before the election. The authors state that they have found only preliminary answers to the questions of who changes opinion, in what direction, and in response to what influences.

6420. Litchfield, Edward H. Voting behavior in a metropolitan area. Ann Arbor, University of Michigan Press, 1941. 93 p. illus. (Michigan. University. Michigan governmental studies, no. 7) 41-52812 JS847.A3L55

Covering five elections held during the years 1930–38, this dissertation studies the voting behavior of the principal social groups in Detroit, based upon assessment and census data in various city offices. There were three behavior indexes—electoral participation, third-party voting, and major party affiliation—for which material could be gathered. The participation data revealed a direct relationship between income and amount of participation: the higher the income, the greater degree of participation. The Polish middle class was the most Democratic in a predominantly Democratic city; the wealthy native white group was the most Republican. These two groups, Dr. Litchfield reports, were also the two most active participants. In general, "Democratic party affiliation in the period after 1930 has varied inversely with economic status." His analysis of third-party voting habits shows that middle-class Russians were most attracted to third parties and the wealthy native whites were the least so. Important group concerns do exist, the author concludes, but group opinion remains flexible and classes are not highly self-conscious. Detroit as of 1938 was still concerned with the general interest.

6421. Mencken, Henry L. A carnival of buncombe. Edited by Malcolm Moos. Baltimore, Johns Hopkins Press, 1956. xviii, 370 p. 56-11658 E742.M4

A selection of 69 articles written during the 1920's and 1930's for Mencken's weekly political column in The Evening Sun, Baltimore. The book's five sections—"Normalcy"; "Calvinism"; "Onward, Christian Soldiers: Hoover & Al"; "Roosevelt Minor"; and "The Burden of Omnipotence—Roosevelt & Alf"—are each introduced by appropriate commentary from the editor, who notices that Mencken's predictions were sometimes dead wrong. Couched in Mencken's characteristic irreverent and jocund style, these pieces offer acerb portrayals and interpretations of the behavior and motivations of politicians and public-office holders. The author, who starts from the premises that American government "must be a great deal more competent than it looks" and that honor has no place in politics, writes of such matters as prohibition, the solid South, political fraud and corruption, convention and campaign tactics, and the depression. Particularly noteworthy was his article of July 14, 1924, on the disastrous Democratic National Convention of that year. In Mencken's very candidly expressed opinions, Harding was, intellectually, "a benign blank," Coolidge an "obscure and unimportant man," Alfred E. Smith "as provincial as a Kansas farmer" although honest and worthy, Hoover "careful and cautious," an adept politician if an incompetent President, and Franklin D. Roosevelt a dealer in "quackery."

6422. Moos, Malcolm C. Politics, presidents, and coattails. Baltimore, Johns Hopkins Press, 1952. xxi, 237 p. illus.
52-13613 JK1976.M6

An analysis of the relationships between voting behavior in congressional and presidential elections. The primary concern of the inquiry is with congressional elections, but, in the author's opinion, "the selection of a congressman is often not unaffected by the choice of a President." After sketching briefly the so-called coattail theory—the belief that in years of presidential elections Congressmen are often elected or defeated according to the political appeal of their party's Presidential candidate (and so are said to ride upon his coattails)—Professor Moos compares Presidential and congressional voting records for the period 1896–1950 as to their relative influence upon electoral victory, and then attempts to evaluate the discovered relationships. He concludes that, although the coattail influence is of minor significance, successful Presidential candidates normally run ahead of their congressional tickets. The steady rise of the Presidency in public policy and party leadership is one of the manifest political truths of the 20th century, has occurred as an adaptation in response to a national need, and is a by-product of our haphazard and clumsy party system.

6423. Rogers, Lindsay. The pollsters; public opinion, politics, and democratic leadership. New York, Knopf, 1949. 239 p.
49-7842 HM263.R57

An admittedly indignant denunciation of the commercial polling agencies, particularly the Roper, Gallup, and Time polls, and their claims of scientific accuracy in the measurement of public opinion. Professor Rogers demonstrates that a mere counting of yeas and noes, without considering the knowledge on which the opinion is based, the intensity with which it is held, and the willingness to act upon it, is of small consequence. He scouts the pollsters' assumption "that what they claim they have discovered public opinion to be should rule," and finds them guilty of two great sins of omission: they have never attempted to define what they are measuring, nor have they outlined the nature of the political society in which public opinion should be the ruler. The United States is not, and ought not to be, a town meeting. The author believes, moreover, that public opinion is not a measurable concept, and that polling is not a scientific method. Documented by examples from polls of wrong premises about our political society, imperfect samplings, ambiguous framing of questions, interviewer bias, and exaggerated claims based upon the results, his examination of sources of error in polling points to serious limitations in the method.

I. Reform

6424. Aaron, Daniel. Men of good hope; a story of American progressives. New York, Oxford University Press, 1951. xiv, 329 p.
51-1402 E176.A2

Contents.—Emerson and the progressive tradition.—Theodore Parker: 'the battle of the nineteenth century.'—Henry George: the great paradox.—Edward Bellamy: village utopian.—Henry Demarest Lloyd: the middle-class conscience.—William Dean Howells: the gentleman from Altruria.—Thorstein Veblen: moralist and rhetorician.—Theodore Roosevelt and Brooks Adams: pseudo-progressives.—In retrospect: 1912–1950.—Notes on sources (p. 309–321).

A study of the American progressive tradition, beginning with the social philosophy of Ralph Waldo Emerson (1803–1882), its prophet, whose simultaneous acceptance and rejection of American civilization was shared by the progressives who followed him. In the author's opinion, progressivism was conceived when a moral-minded minority began to observe the social effects of the industrial age, and to protest against what they considered the betrayal of the republican ideal. Although they ranged from moderate to radical in attitudes and policies, the progressives agreed that whatever be the form of society, the proper concern of government is "the care and culture of men." The 19th-century reformers here discussed appealed effectively to those of their contemporaries who sensed the inadequacies of American life and desired a serene and humane society based upon virtue and justice. Professor Aaron regards their 20th-century successors as more efficient, more impersonal, and less eloquent. He believes that the old progressive vision provides a humanist philosophy, indisputably idealistic and ethical, which is essential to any truly liberal movement.

6425. Childs, Richard S. Civic victories; the story of an unfinished revolution. New York, Harper, 1952. xvii, 350 p. illus.
52-12041 JK2408.C55

A study of and a program for State and local government election procedures by the originator of the short-form ballot and the council-manager plan of municipal administration. Mr. Childs is concerned with organizing elections to public office on lines that will best assure a practical working of the democratic process. Particularly is he anxious to eliminate the possibility of oligarchy and permit the people to put into public office the men they really want there. To prevent oligarchy, he contends, the ballot must be short enough and the number of offices to be filled small enough to permit individual candidates to receive the fullest and most public scrutiny. He would separate from the elective list all offices not high enough, or which determine no policies large enough, to stir the people to take sides, and so remove a cause of "blind voting." He would hold the constituency to a size feasible for canvass by the ordinary independent candidate, and he would integrate the powers of government so as to make popular control effective. In addition to the argument for his program, Mr. Childs provides a history of the crusade he undertook for it in 1909, together with a report of progress made.

6426. Greer, Thomas H. American social reform movements; their pattern since 1865. New York, Prentice-Hall, 1949. 313 p. (Prentice-Hall sociology series) 49-1202 HN57.G7

Bibliography: p. 293-299.

The purpose of this book is to determine, through analysis of the basic elements—demand, organization, objectives, techniques, and accomplishments—the pattern of the major American reform movements initiated by labor, farmers, progressives, and radicals in the years 1865-1949. Economic distress, the author concludes, has given rise to most of the reform movements, which have gradually shifted from humanitarian purposes and utopian thinking to the more restricted, practical, and selfish aims of a group or class. Professor Greer finds this change reflected in the leadership of the movements. Idealists have given way to realistic advocates of self-interest in the fields of labor and agriculture, and radical extremists have been succeeded by more practical and respectable men. Although earlier reform movements sought to embrace many diverse forces, later groups have followed a trend toward limited and integrated membership, an exception being such a radical group as the Marxists whose numerical weakness forces them to accept a diverse membership in order to have any following. In the author's opinion, reform movements tend to be short-lived because the public loses its zeal, because the goals set are out of reach, or because one of the major parties has borrowed the reform programs; he credits them, however, with substantial achievements.

6427. Haynes, Frederick E. Third party movements since the Civil War, with special reference to Iowa; a study in social politics. Iowa City, State Historical Society of Iowa, 1916. 564 p.
16-6948 JK2261.H35

A study of the Liberal Republican, Farmers', Greenback, Populist, and Progressive movements, which regards all of them as growing out of the economic and social conditions arising from the settlement of the West. In Dr. Haynes' opinion, these successive third-party movements have, from the 1870's to the second decade of the 20th century, impelled the major political parties to take action against economic and social ills. These third parties he sees as means of agitation and education, and as expressions of objection to contemporary economic conditions. The Farmers', Greenback, and Populist movements, for example, represented repeated efforts of the democratic and enterprising citizens of the West to assert themselves against the oppressive predominance of industrial wealth which prevailed from the 1870's to the 1890's. The 1912 platform of the Progressive Party the author considers to have been the culmination of the service performed by these parties in the conversion of American politics from almost exclusive concern with constitutional and governmental matters to recognition of the vital needs of the people.

6428. Howe, Frederic C. The confessions of a reformer. New York, Scribner, 1925. 352 p.
25-23619 H59.H6A3

At the outset of his autobiography, Frederic Clemson Howe (1867-1940) remarks that his life really began not in the 1860's but in the early 1890's at Johns Hopkins University where he came under the influence of Richard T. Ely, Woodrow Wilson, Albert Shaw, and James Bryce, and acquired a pressing sense of responsibility to the world as well as the ideal of the scholar in politics. He writes candidly of these and many other personages, among them Tom L. Johnson—with whom he was associated in a ten-year (1901–10) struggle to make Cleveland a free, orderly, and beautiful city—Mark Hanna, Lincoln Steffens, Brand Whitlock, Max Eastman, and Inez Milholland. He tells of his disillusioning experiences on the Cleveland city council, 1901–03, and in the Ohio State Senate, 1906–09, and of his humanitarian efforts as director of the People's Institute, New York, 1911–14, and as United States Commissioner of Immigration at the port of New York, 1914–19. Freely he offers opinions, and indicates the processes whereby he reached them, upon such matters as political sovereignty, the single tax, the tariff, land speculation, special privileges, women's suffrage, World War I, and the League of Nations. Perhaps the most rewarding chapters are the several devoted to Tom Johnson and Woodrow Wilson.

6429. Johnson, Tom L. My story. Edited by Elizabeth J. Hauser. New York, B. W. Huebsch, 1911. xli, 326 p. illus.

11–35975 F496.J69

The posthumously published memoir of Tom Loftin Johnson (1854–1911), who was an office boy in 1869, a successful industrialist by 1879, and a convert to the teachings of Henry George by 1883. Although Mr. Johnson writes very candidly and fully of his original determination to make money, he devotes most of his book to a history of his political career which began in 1888 with his unsuccessful Democratic candidacy for Congress, continued with his election as Representative from Ohio in 1890 and 1892, and reached its climax with his election as mayor of Cleveland in 1901 and his re-election for three successive terms. His chronicle of his years as a fighting reform mayor forms the heart of this volume. The reader is told of Johnson's famous tent-meeting campaigns, of his battle for home rule, for a three-cent street railway fare, and for just taxation, and of his continuous education of the electorate concerning local political questions and the rights of the people as opposed to the special privileges of corporations. Johnson expresses his conviction that involuntary poverty is the result of law-made privilege whereby some men get more than they earn while most earn more than they get. Finally, he shows how he fought to end such privilege; in doing so he not only transformed the city but also, although he does not say so, became the outstanding municipal administrator of his time.

6430. Regier, Cornelius C. The era of the muckrakers. Chapel Hill, University of North Carolina Press, 1932. 254 p. illus.

32–30647 E741.R34

Thesis (Ph. D.)—University of Iowa, 1922.

Bibliography: p. [217]–241.

An analysis of the crusade against corruption in American politics that was initiated by the popular magazines during the first decade of the 20th century, and that got its name from Theodore Roosevelt talking like a party stalwart. The author places the beginning of the muckraking era at the publication of the October 1902 issue of McClure's Magazine, which printed an article by Claude H. Wetmore and Lincoln Steffens, "Tweed Days in St. Louis," and announced the serial publication of Ida M. Tarbell's "History of the Standard Oil Company." S. S. McClure stumbled upon his highly successful policy of muckraking without premeditation, Dr. Regier believes, but the public response to the articles demonstrated that the American people were less indifferent to the illegalities and abuses attendant upon the industrialization of the country and upon government favors to business than had been supposed. After 1902, he notes, McClure's Magazine took first rank among the journals of exposure and reform. In 1903 muckraking became aggressive; by 1904 it had become sensational, and continued profitable and popular for nearly a decade. Among the matters investigated by the muckraking journalists were municipal, State, and national corruptions and the great corporations behind them, conservation, and labor problems. The author attaches a good deal of credit to the efforts of the muckrakers for the reform legislation of the years 1904–15.

6431. Schlesinger, Arthur M. The American as reformer. Cambridge, Harvard University Press, 1950. 127 p. ([John Randolph Haynes and Dora Haynes Foundation, Los Angeles. Contemporary American problems, 1950])

50–14677 HN57.S35

Three lectures delivered at Pomona College, in which Professor Schlesinger seeks to interpret one aspect of the American spirit. The United States has stood in the forefront of such social innovations as manhood suffrage, freedom of the press, the separation of church and state, public education, and prison reform, he believes, because of two conditions: the lack of tradition to be torn down, and the nature of the original settlers and their successors, rebels against privilege and oppression in their homelands, who carried their rebellion to the point of departure for a strange and distant land. Such folk quickened the tempo of change and reform in America, the author contends, but because they wished to protect their new liberties, including those of speech and print, they quickly developed "a middle-class attitude toward reform," and threw their weight on the side of the pragmatic approach and piecemeal progress. This attitude has continued to dominate the American mind. In his opinion, the reform impulse itself has been sustained and refreshed by two basic sets of ideals, the one stemming from the Christian religion, the other from the Declaration of Independence.

6432. Steffens, Joseph Lincoln. The autobiography of Lincoln Steffens. New York, Harcourt, Brace, 1931. 884 p. illus.
31-28251 PN4874.S68A3 1931d

The vivid and candid life story of Lincoln Steffens (1866–1936), eminent journalist, first and foremost of the muckrakers, student of ethics and politics. The author tells most engagingly of his boyhood when he enjoyed open country in California, his horses, dogs, and the sort of people who could share a child's dream world; this part of the book has been separately published. Steffens describes in generous detail his reportorial methods and his unorthodox principles of journalism. He provides vignettes of such notable or notorious figures as Richard Croker, the Tammany boss; Ray Stannard Baker and S. S. McClure, journalists; Joseph W. Folk, Seth Low, Robert M. La Follette, and other reformers; Theodore Roosevelt; and Woodrow Wilson. The core of the book, however, is its account of Steffens' discovery of the systematic corruption of city and state governments, through bribery of officials by certain businessmen, and of his conviction that bribery is not a mere felony but a treasonable and revolutionary process which transforms the ostensibly democratic representative government of State and city into a plutocratic system that serves only the seekers of privilege. "You cannot build or operate a railroad," says Mr. Steffens, "or a street railway, gas, water, or power company, develop and operate a mine, or get forests and cut timber on a large scale, or run any privileged business, without corrupting or joining in the corruption of the government." This theme was more fully developed in his once famous book, The Shame of the Cities (New York, P. Smith, 1948 [c1904] 306 p.), first published as a series of articles in McClure's Magazine. A number of the author's conclusions, particularly those upon international affairs and world problems, have little cogency for today.

6433. Thomas, Norman M. A socialist's faith. New York, Norton, 1951. 326 p.
51-9725 HX86.T377

A re-examination of the nature and status of socialism, as well as an analysis of recent world affairs, by the longtime leader of the American Socialist Party, who still found in 1951 "abundant reason for faith in democratic socialism as the best basis for ordering the good society." "Fortunately for me," writes Mr. Thomas, "socialism and Marxism are not identical." In a very fair survey and analysis he discusses, among other matters, the course pursued and the program evolved by socialism since 1900, the function of religion in the social order, the development of the state and statism, the rise of equalitarianism, the problems of democracy, the chances for peace, and his own attitude toward the wars of his active lifetime. He seeks, "on the basis of simple affirmations of fraternity," to unite the social behavior of men of varying beliefs through the common denominator of a conviction that by cooperation they can win plenty, peace, and freedom. Democratic socialism, the author has come to believe, cannot today present itself as a complete, universal philosophy; rather it must be experimental; it must find a way to transform conflict and mass destruction into fellowship and the destruction of poverty.

6434. Whitlock, Brand. Forty years of it. New York, Appleton, 1914. 373 p.
14-4523 HN57.W5

The warmly written and anecdotal autobiography of Brand Whitlock (1869–1934), who was elected reform mayor of Toledo in 1905, 1907, 1909, and 1911, is also a history of democracy's progress in the Middle West during the period 1879–1914. Mr. Whitlock's thesis was that the city has, in all ages, been the outpost of civilization, and that if the problem of democracy is to be solved at all, it must first be solved there. Finding in the city only one issue, the conflict between the democratic and the plutocratic spirit, he thought that the people had lost their voice in their own affairs. Representative government had disappeared, he believed, and had been replaced by machine rule operating for the benefit of public utility corporations through laws enacted precisely in their interests by state legislatures. He advocated such remedial measures as nonpartisan city elections, municipal ownership, home rule for cities, and the initiative, referendum, and recall. He recommended the selection of public officers for their honesty and efficiency rather than for their party affiliation; he urged the people to be more active in selecting their officials and in preventing mere office-seekers from bringing about their own nominations. Finally, he stressed the need for regulation and control of public service corporations. When this book was published, Whitlock had already begun his distinguished service as our envoy to Belgium (1913–22).

XXXII

Books and Libraries

A. Printing and Publishing: General 6435–6448
B. Individual Publishers 6449–6453
C. Book Production: Technology and Art 6454–6459
D. Book Selling and Collecting 6460–6465
E. Libraries 6466–6475
F. Librarianship and Library Use 6476–6487

THIS CHAPTER represents, first of all, a selection of books depicting the introduction, production, and diffusion of books in America. Because in these matters individual publishing firms have played a large part, some studies of prominent firms have been included. Since technical matters have been important in bringing about the large volume of books produced, several works on the technical aspects of production have been selected; some reflect increasing concern to produce books of distinctive format as well as content.

Another phase of American culture centering about the book is provided by libraries of all types: public, private, school, college, university, regional, private research, town, city, State, and Federal. The existence of such a variety of institutions devoted to the accumulation, preservation, organization, and mobilization of books for use in the United States has led to the creation of a large descriptive and expository literature. From this wealth of material, the present chapter brings together only a few representative books that identify some of the many book collectors who have served to enrich the intellectual life of the Nation, that illustrate the social role of libraries, and that set forth the philosophy and practice of librarianship in this country. In this field, as perhaps in most fields today, a large part not only of recent fact and theory, but also of history, is to be found in periodicals. Among those published for librarians are Library Trends, College and Research Libraries, Library Journal, Special Libraries, and The Library Quarterly. While these are professional and technical journals not addressed to the layman, they nevertheless provide the serious student with information not otherwise obtainable. For the humanistic and literary interests in which many great libraries abound, the reader is referred to proceedings of societies, such as The Papers of the Bibliographical Society of America, and the publications of libraries rich in rare books, of which the Henry E. Huntington Library, and the libraries of Harvard, Princeton, and Yale Universities are examples. A dominant note of all the stories of books and book-collecting is the Horatio Alger-like rise from poverty to riches, as America moved from its colonial situation, when books were a highly prized rarity, to its present-day position. Books now abound, the country boasts a number of the most distinguished libraries in the world, and the rise of the paperback book has meant not only wide distribution of many titles to a mass audience but also that books are no longer luxury items but are well within the purchasing power of the great majority of citizens.

Other chapters of this bibliography are, of course, closely related to subjects of the present one. The influence of the ideas presented by the books, and often giving the books their excuse for being, may be traced through Chapter XI, Intellectual History. The closely allied fields of newspapers and magazines are discussed in Chapter V, Periodicals and Journalism. Other pertinent works, including histories and discussions of various categories of books, may be found in Chapter III, Literary History and Criticism.

A. Printing and Publishing: General

6435. Bowker lectures on book publishing. [Collected ed.] New York, Bowker, 1957. 389 p. 57–13988 Z278.B78 1957

The Bowker lectures commemorate Richard Rogers Bowker (1848–1933). This brings together the first 17, delivered between 1935 and 1956. The sponsors of the lectures wished them to be "an aid and stimulus to the study of book publishing in the United States and the mutual problems of authors, publishers, librarians, readers, all makers and users of books." The lectures cover such topics as textbooks, subscription books, the economics of authorship, mapmaking, children's books, book clubs, copyright, and paperbound books. Upon their delivery the lectures were published by the New York Public Library in its Bulletin and as separates; some have also appeared in whole or part in other periodicals; and the first 12 have been reprinted by the Typophiles in their Chapbooks series. Brought together here, the lectures are made available to the general public, and constitute a valuable survey of many of the problems and methods affecting the writing, producing, and distributing of books in America today.

6436. Boynton, Henry Walcott. Annals of American bookselling, 1638–1850. New York, Wiley, 1932. 209 p. illus. 32–34820 Z473.B79

"Source books": p. 196–198.

This book opens with a brief sketch of the English background of book writing, publishing, and distribution. It goes on to show parallels in the American scene, and to trace the developing bookselling system of America, first in Boston, and later in Philadelphia, New York, and other centers. Since bookselling was seldom an independent vocation before 1850, the author of necessity devotes much space to the printing and publishing of the period. The book is written for the general reader, and therefore has limited scholarly apparatus or detail, and does not present the results of original research. However, in brief compass it does present a fairly clear picture of the bookselling business as it developed in the thirteen colonies and the new republic. Bookselling developed first and most extensively in the Boston area, where it long remained largely on a printer-publisher-bookseller basis. This development is studied at length in George E. Littlefield's Early Boston Booksellers, 1642–1711 (Boston, Club of Odd Volumes, 1900. 256 p.), which gives a separate chapter to each individual included.

6437. Grannis, Chandler B., ed. What happens in book publishing. New York, Columbia University Press, 1957. 414 p. 56–12739 Z471.G7

6438. Schick, Frank L., ed. Trends in American book publishing. [Urbana, University of Illinois Library School] 1958. 233 p. (Library trends, v. 7, July 1958) 54–62638 Z671.L6173, v. 7

Mr. Grannis' preface states that this book "is intended to give . . . a broad picture of what happens in publishing a book, particularly a book for trade (general retail) sale . . . . It is an outline of the procedures, a broad sketch to provide a context for the details; it is not a 'how-to' book." Part 1 describes the structure of the publishing industry. Part 2, "Steps in Trade Book Publishing," contains nine chapters which progress from securing and editing a manuscript, through manufacture, to advertising and selling the book. Part 3, "Some Underlying Problems," has four chapters on such topics as subsidiary rights, the business and legal aspects of publishing, and the foreign distribution of American books. Part 4 is made up of seven chapters on "Other Areas of Publishing"; they cover such aspects of nongeneral trade publishing as juveniles, textbooks, religious books, university press books, paperbacks, and book clubs. The volume concludes with an appendix, "Some Statistics Frequently Quoted," and an index. Each chapter of the book is by some individual with considerable experience in the field he discusses. There are brief lists for additional reading at the end of each chapter. Mr. Schick's symposium, which fills an issue of Library Trends, consists of 20 papers in addition to his introduction. Only two of them are concerned with generalities—the economic development of publishing and the physical development of bookmaking in the last decade—and trade-book publishing is disposed of in a 9-page statement by Mr. Grannis. Mr. Schick's main object is to "probe into the complexities of the heterogeneous topic of American book publishing," and the issue is particularly valuable for its papers on a variety of specialties concerning which information is not easily found elsewhere. Besides treatments of most of the specialties dealt with in Mr. Grannis' volume, there are papers on private presses and collectors' editions; vanity press (its houses now refer to themselves as "subsidy" or "cooperative" publishers), foundation, and association publishing; and the publishing of hardcover reprints, reference and subscription books, art and architecture books, music books, law books, and medical books.

6439. Kerr, Chester. A report on American university presses. [Washington] Association of American University Presses, 1949. 302 p.
49–4375 Z231.5.U6K4

"Based on a survey sponsored by the American Council of Learned Societies with a grant from the Rockefeller Foundation."

Bibliography: p. 297–302.

American university presses, generally speaking, had a slow start in the 19th century. In recent years they have developed rapidly, and they now hold an important position in American publishing. While some of this progress has occurred since Mr. Kerr's report was prepared, his study does show the emergence of the presses into public prominence. It is limited to the one Canadian and 34 American presses which at that time were members of the Association of American University Presses. The survey presents in some detail the organization, operational procedures, general policies, staffing, distribution, financing, selection policies, edition sizes, and other aspects of this branch of American publishing.

6440. Lehmann-Haupt, Hellmut. The book in America; a history of the making and selling of books in the United States, by Hellmut Lehmann-Haupt in collaboration with Lawrence C. Wroth and Rollo G. Silver. 2d [rev. and enl. American] ed. New York, Bowker, 1951. xiv, 493 p.
51–11308 Z473.L522 1951

CONTENTS.—Book production and distribution from the beginning to the American Revolution, by L. C. Wroth.—Book production and distribution from the American Revolution to the War between the States, by L. C. Wroth and R. G. Silver.—Book production and distribution from 1860 to the present day, by H. Lehmann-Haupt.—Bibliography (p. 422–466).

This historical study of book production and commercial distribution in America first appeared as Das Amerikanische Buchwesen, Buchdruck und Buchhandel, Bibliophile und Bibliothekswesen in den Vereinigten Staaten von den Anfängen bis zur Gegenwart (Leipzig, Hiersemann, 1937. 385 p.). The subsequent revised and enlarged edition appeared in English as The Book in America; a History of the Making, the Selling, and the Collecting of Books in the United States (New York, Bowker, 1939. 453 p.). Both of these editions contained a section by Ruth Granniss on book collecting and the development of public libraries in the United States; unfortunately, the increased size of the 1951 edition required the omission of this material. The work as it presently stands is a comprehensive, concise survey of the field of book production and distribution. The authors trace the spread of printing, technological innovations, style changes, and other technical matters, and discuss the nature and range of the books published. Subsidiary problems such as book clubs, copyright, and private press work are also gone into. The extensive, though now slightly dated, bibliography is divided into subject categories.

6441. Miller, William. The book industry, a report of the Public Library Inquiry. New York, Columbia University Press, 1949. xvi, 156 p.
49–10422 Z471.M65 1949

"A note on method and sources": p. [133]–140.

Mr. Miller's work concentrates on "trade" books, new books published for general sale through retail bookstores. It does not extensively investigate reprints, book club editions, textbooks, university press books, government publications, or other nontrade publications. However, these aspects are touched upon at various points in the book, usually in their effect upon trade books. After a general survey of trade publishing, Mr. Miller devotes a chapter to the effect of various factors (popular taste, movies, book clubs, etc.) on the editorial decisions of publishers. Chapter 3 is on the nontechnical aspects of book manufacture and the costs incurred by the publication of a work. Chapter 4 surveys "The Book Markets"; in its course attention is directed to the effects of book clubs and advertising on the general markets book sales. The concluding chapter discusses the relationship between "Trade Publishing and the Public Libraries," concluding that libraries have but small effect on the publishers, though the latter are of major influence on the libraries. An appendix presents in tabular form "Some Book Industry Statistics." An earlier and more extensive study in the same field is Orion H. Cheney's Economic Survey of the Book Industry, 1930–1931, as Prepared for the National Association of Book Publishers, with 1947–1948 Statistical Report [of the American Book Publishers Council] (New York, Bowker, 1949. [c] 1931. 368 p.). The 1947–48 report is little more than a brief statistical survey, and the volume is now of largely historical interest. Neither Cheney nor Miller covers the publishing "revolution" effected by paperbacks during the past decade.

6442. Oswald, John Clyde. Printing in the Americas. New York, Gregg Pub. Co., 1937. xii, 565, xvii-xli p. illus. 37-15130 Z205.O86

This history of printing in the Americas supplements but does not quite supplant Thomas' History of Printing in America (no. 6447). It opens with descriptions of the kinds of literature most commonly or strikingly produced by the printers of the Thirteen Colonies: newspapers (the product of nearly every pioneer printshop), Bibles (Eliot's Indian Bible of 1663 and Sower's German Bible of 1743 preceded Aitken's English Bible of 1782), almanacs, pamphlet sermons, broadside ballads, etc. After describing the equipment of colonial printshops the author embarks upon a chronologico-geographical survey in the manner of Thomas. Each colony or State is introduced according to the priority of its printing, and for some of the older States there are chapters on individual printers, such as Matthew Day, the teen-ager who inaugurated American printing at Cambridge, Mass., in 1638, or on printing families, such as the Greens, the Franklins, and the Sowers. After concluding with Wyoming (1867), Alaska, and Hawaii, the author devotes four topical chapters to "Fine Bookmaking," "Typography," "Machines and Methods," and "Printing Organizations." He then gives brief surveys of printing origins and history for the provinces of British North America, for Greenland, for the West Indies, and for the nations of Latin America. The book lacks a bibliography, but it has a 25-page index and numerous facsimiles (some in black and red) of early imprints.

6443. Rosenberg, Bernard, and David Manning White, eds. Mass culture; the popular arts in America. Glencoe, Ill., Free Press, 1957. 561 p. 57-6749 E169.1.R7755

As its title indicates, this "reader" is by no means concerned exclusively with books; however, it does devote considerable space to popular books (paperbacks, bestsellers, commercial fiction, etc.) and allied fields such as magazines and comic books, as well as the more distantly allied "literature" of radio, television, motion pictures, popular songs, and advertising. The 49 essays presented attempt to probe the relationships between cultural works produced for mass consumption, and the society that consumes them. An attempt also has been made to achieve a balance in the distribution of the contributors between those who look with favor upon the phenomenon covered, and those who view it with alarm. A few of the essays are here published for the first time; others are extracted from books; but the greater number are reprinted from learned journals or reviews. "Further Reading" is suggested at the end of each of the book's sections. Popular books are also covered at some length in other titles elsewhere in this bibliography, most notably under Literary History and Criticism; other aspects of mass culture are treated in other sections: Periodicals and Journalism, Music, Sports and Recreation, Entertainment, etc.

6444. Schick, Frank L. The paperbound book in America; the history of paperbacks and their European background. New York, Bowker, 1958. xviii, 262 p. illus. 58-10097 Z1033.P3S35

While this book devotes several chapters to the development of paperbound book publishing, it is mainly concerned with the mass market aspects that emerged with the appearance of Pocket Books in 1939 and have now revolutionized American publishing. The author traces the development of this mass market, the formats used, prices, distribution systems, and quantities. Little or no attention is given to literary evaluation. Individual sections sketch the history and present status of many of the leading present-day paperback publishers. The selective bibliography (p. 245-250) directs the reader to many other studies and articles on the subject.

6445. Sheehan, Donald H. This was publishing; a chronicle of the book trade in the Gilded Age. Bloomington, Indiana University Press, 1952. 288 p. 52-14582 Z473.S47

In this study of the book industry from the end of the Civil War to the outbreak of World War I the author draws much of his information from the private records of Henry Holt and Co., Harper and Brothers, Dodd, Mead and Co., and Charles Scribners' Sons, as well as from the chronicling of the trade in Publishers' Weekly. Although the emphasis on four firms, because their records were the ones available, does place some limits on the study, the fact that these four were leaders in the field makes them reasonably representative of the whole. In this period the book industry grew, through many uncertainties and constantly recurring crises, into the giant of the present, evolving special methods which have continued in use. These the author traces in their manifold aspects of publishing policies, author-publisher relationships, contractual relationships, wholesaling, copyright problems, trade regulation, advertising, etc. The book is written in a lively manner for the layman, yet it includes a fairly extensive index and a bibliography (p. 273-278).

6446. Stern, Madeleine B. Imprints on history, book publishers and American frontiers. Bloomington, Indiana University Press, 1956. 492 p. 56–11995 Z473.S857

This book presents for the general reader a large part of the story of printing and publishing in 19th-century America regarded as an expansion into frontiers of space and frontiers of the mind. The approach is biographical, with each chapter presenting the story of an individual who pioneered in some aspect of this field. Typical figures studied include James Bemis, who brought printing to the frontier communities of upstate New York; William Hilliard, printer and bookseller, who supplied many of the needs of Harvard University, assembled the core collection of the newly established University of Virginia, and otherwise "helped to expand the awakening intellectual forces of the East"; Robert Fergus, pioneer printer of mushrooming Chicago; Jacob W. Cruger of Houston, Texas; Ernst Steiger, German-American publisher of New York City who played a significant role in the Americanization of the German immigrants; and John W. Lovell, who published outspoken works on social problems and did much to advance labor and woman's rights. The book concludes with a long supplement (p. 329–338), arranged alphabetically, of short notes on the 191 publishing firms which were founded before 1900 and are still operating; it concludes with a chronological list, 1769–1899. The biographical sketches obviously do not cover more than a fraction of the field; nevertheless they give representative specimens of the kinds of innovation and change in printing and publishing that were going on throughout the century. Though not scholarly in tone, the book is thoroughly researched, with extensive notes (p. 389–464) indicating the sources, and an index.

6447. Thomas, Isaiah. The history of printing in America, with a biography of printers, and an account of newspapers. 2d ed. Published under the supervision of a special committee of the American Antiquarian Society. Albany, N.Y., Munsell, 1874. 2 v. (Archaeologia americana. Transactions and collections of the American Antiquarian Society, v. 5–6) 2–6034 Z208.E451

Committee of publication: Samuel F. Haven, Nathaniel Paine, and Joel Munsell.

CONTENTS.—1. Preface. Memoir of Isaiah Thomas by his grandson Benjamin Franklin Thomas. History of printing in America. Appendix A: History of printing in [Spanish] America. Communicated by John R. Bartlett [with lists of books printed in Mexico and Peru before 1600].—2. History of printing (cont.): History of newspapers. Booksellers in the Colonies, from the first settlement of the country to the commencement of the Revolutionary War, in 1775. Catalogue of publications in what is now the United States, prior to the Revolution of 1775–6 [compiled by Samuel F. Haven, Jr.]. Index.

Isaiah Thomas (1749–1831) first published this work himself in two volumes in 1810. He made numerous manuscript notes for corrections and additions; these were incorporated in the second edition, but his lengthy survey of the origin of printing in Europe was omitted. Despite its age, this history remains a standard survey of colonial American printing. Some additional notes to the text were supplied by the editors, and bear their initials. In the later years covered by the book, Isaiah Thomas himself was a leading figure. He was probably the foremost American printer and publisher of his day, and he issued more titles than any of his contemporaries or predecessors. His interesting career is studied in Annie Russell Marble's From 'Prentice to Patron (New York, Appleton-Century, 1935. 326 p.). A shorter study, Clifford Kenyon Shipton's Isaiah Thomas, Printer, Patriot, and Philanthropist, 1749–1831 (Rochester, N.Y., Leo Hart, 1948. 94 p.), is aimed at a more specialized audience of bibliophiles and typophiles, and includes more information on Thomas' activities in founding and promoting the American Antiquarian Society (1812). In our own day Clarence S. Brigham (b. 1877) has remade the Society's library at Worcester, Mass., into the greatest collection in the world of early American imprints of every description. His modest account of this achievement, including concise characterizations of the collections and their importance, is Fifty Years of Collecting Americana for the Library of the American Antiquarian Society, 1908–1958 (Worcester, Mass., 1958. 185 p.).

6448. Wroth, Lawrence C. The colonial printer. [2d ed., rev. & enl.] Portland, Me., Southworth-Anthoensen Press, 1938. xxiv, 368 p. illus. 38–14676 Z208.W95 1938

"Works referred to in notes": p. [331]–347.

This book is a study not primarily of the books and other printed materials produced in America during the colonial period, but rather of the practical problems involved in their production. Attention is therefore focused on such matters as the nature of colonial presses, the typefaces used, the nature and production methods of ink and paper, working conditions, and bookbinding. A somewhat more bibliophilic study of the field for one colony was produced by Dr. Wroth in his A History of Printing in Colonial Maryland, 1686–1776 (Baltimore, Typothetae of Baltimore, 1922. 275 p.); this work was continued by Joseph Towne Wheeler in The Maryland Press, 1777–1790 (Baltimore, Maryland Historical Society, 1938. 226 p.). A broader study is Douglas C. McMurtrie's A History of Printing in the United States; the Story of the Introduction of the Press and of Its History and Influence During the Pioneer Period in Each State of the Union, of which only the second volume, Middle & South Atlantic States (New York, Bowker, 1936. 462 p.), was completed at the time of the author's death; however, publication of additional material from his papers has been promised. A study of an area more influential in printing matters in its period is George E. Littlefield's The Early Massachusetts Press, 1638–1711 (Boston, Club of Odd Volumes, 1907. 2 v.). A largely bibliophilic study of the first printing press in English America is Robert F. Roden's The Cambridge Press, 1638–1692 (New York, Dodd, Mead, 1905. 193 p.), considerable of which is made up of "A Bibliographical List of the Issues of the Press"; the text traces the press' history as much in terms of publications as in terms of changing ownership, methods, and working conditions. George Parker Winship's The Cambridge Press, 1638–1692 (Philadelphia, University of Pennsylvania Press, 1945. 385 p.) does not attempt to redo the systematic part of Roden's book, but brings a quantity of fresh 17th-century evidence to bear upon the circumstances in which the Bay Psalm Book, the Eliot Indian Bible, and many other issues of this press were produced.

B. Individual Publishers

6449. Burlingame, Roger. Of making many books; a hundred years of reading, writing and publishing. New York, Scribner, 1946. 347 p.
46–8389 Z473.B9

This volume was prepared to mark the centenary of Charles Scribner's Sons, which was founded in 1846 and grew to be one of America's largest general publishers. The book is not a formal history of the firm, but each chapter pursues, in generally chronological form, some aspect of the firm's history. These are developed mainly through extensive quotations from the communications of the publishers and their authors. This lends the book much variety, but its anecdotal manner does not permit the presentation of many statistics, facts of chronology, or other details of the organization's structural history. The book does convey an impression of author-publisher relations over a century, and of some publishing problems. The topics treated include bestsellers, plagiarism, acceptances, rejections, war, poetry, editing, and printing. Considerable space is also devoted to the magazines which the firm has issued. In preparing the book Mr. Burlingame had access to Scribner's complete files. "Since this was to be a picture of the past, it was agreed that the use of letters should be limited to those of authors who were no longer living." A few exceptions to this were made in order to complete certain stories, and no such restrictions were imposed upon the writings of the publishers and editors. Mr. Burlingame is also the author of a newly published history of the McGraw-Hill Book Company entitled Endless Frontiers (New York, McGraw-Hill, 1959. 506 p.).

6450. Harper, Joseph Henry. The house of Harper; a century of publishing in Franklin Square, by J. Henry Harper. New York, Harper, 1912. 689 p. illus. 12–3620 Z473.H29H 1912

The house of Harper and Brothers was founded in 1817 as a printing establishment, which over the years was built up by the original four brothers and their descendants into one of the major American publishing firms of the 19th and 20th centuries. In this study one of the descendants presents an anecdotal history of the varied activities of the firm, including an extensive recounting of their ventures in the field of periodical publishing. This long book owes much of its length to its extensive quotations from the company's correspondence files. It affords considerable insight into the work and principles of 19th-century publishing, especially in the second half of the century. This is partly because of the author's tendency to use personal reminiscence as framework and subject. A later volume of reminiscences by the author, with less emphasis on the activities of the firm, is his I Remember (New York, Harper, 1934. 281 p.). It is written in a more discursive manner, and is largely made up of incidents concerning persons he had known in his long career as a publisher. It does, however, throw some further light upon the firm's activities, and it does something to bring the 1912 volume up to date.

6451. Kaser, David. Messrs. Carey & Lea of Philadelphia; a study in the history of the booktrade. Philadelphia, University of Pennsylvania Press, 1957. 182 p.
57–11771 Z473.L45K3 1957

Carey & Lea was for some years probably the largest and best-known publishing firm in America. This history, which originated in a University of Michigan dissertation, traces the house from its inception in 1822 until the retirement of Henry Carey in 1838, after which it rapidly declined. Since the firm was in its period a trade leader, the book offers much insight into the conditions prevalent throughout the trade during much of the 19th century. The first part of the book is a general history of Carey & Lea, while the second part, larger than the first, consists of chapters analyzing the several types of its publications (literary, scientific, reprints, American originals, etc.), with a concluding chapter on the firm's relationship with the rest of the trade. The present-day publishing house descended from Carey & Lea is Lea & Febiger, dealing predominantly in scientific and medical works; a brief history of it and its antecedents is presented in its booklet, One Hundred and Fifty Years of Publishing, 1785–1935 (Philadelphia, Lea & Febiger, 1935. 42 p.).

6452. Merritt, LeRoy Charles. The United States Government as publisher. Chicago, University of Chicago Press, 1943. 179 p. incl. tables, diagrs. (The University of Chicago studies in library science) A 43-1562 Z1223.Z7M35

Bibliography: p. 175–176.

The United States Government has often been called the nation's leading publisher. Its annual production includes many thousands of titles totaling many million of copies. The numerous books, pamphlets, serials, and other materials reflect the extensive and highly complex activities of the Government itself. They include reports on the activities of the many branches of the Government, publications intended to facilitate administration, informational works for the benefit of specialists or the general public, etc. Mr. Merritt's study analyzes these publications with respect to issuing office, function, and subject, and discusses their distribution and general development in the 20th century. He noted, as of 1939, that the sale of Federal publications was increasing, and their free distribution diminishing. Some of the background of Government publishing may be obtained from Laurence F. Schmeckebier's The Government Printing Office; Its History, Activities and Organization (Baltimore, Johns Hopkins Press, 1925. 143 p. Institute for Government Research of the Brookings Institution. Service monographs of the United States Government, no. 36), a study of the agency which designs, prints, and distributes most of the publications of the Government. While the Federal Government may be the most prolific American publisher, much publishing is also done by State and local governments and by the United Nations Organization, whose headquarters is in New York City; the scope, quantity, and general problems of these are outlined in James L. McCamy's Government Publications for the Citizen; a Report of the Public Library Inquiry (New York, Columbia University Press, 1949. 139 p.), written with the assistance of Julia B. McCamy. It is chiefly concerned with library problems in the acquisition, cataloging, and use of such materials. The guides to Federal publications by Schmeckebier and Boyd are entered in Chapter XXIX (no. 6138). William Philip Leidy's A Popular Guide to Government Publications (New York, Columbia University Press, 1953. xxii, 296 p.) lists, with brief annotations in most cases, some 2,500 items selected for their potential interest to the average citizen, and classified under nearly a hundred headings from "Agriculture" to "World War II."

6453. Wiley (John) and Sons, inc. The first one hundred and fifty years; a history of John Wiley and Sons, incorporated, 1807–1957. New York, 1957. 242 p. illus. 57-7626 Z473.W63

This publishing house goes back to 1807, when Charles Wiley opened in New York a printing shop and bookstore, two things which usually went together at that time. The firm published many distinguished literary works in its early decades. By the latter part of the 19th century it had given up general publishing for specialization in scientific and technical books. This later period receives the greatest attention here, partly because of its importance, but also because few of the old records have been preserved. The result is that after three opening chapters on the early period and the firm's literary books, there follow 25 chapters on its scientific and technical publications. Each of these chapters is devoted to books in a particular category, such as agriculture, metallurgy, geography, statistics, civil engineering, industrial engineering, architecture, chemical engineering, and psychology. In each some of the more important works are mentioned and related to both the development of the firm and of knowledge in the field. The treatment also gives some idea of the general development of scientific and technical publishing in America. A book of related interest is Edward M. Crane's A Century of Book Publishing, 1848–1948 (New York, Van Nostrand, 1948. 73 p.). It traces the history of the D. Van Nostrand Company, another leading publisher of scientific works, which in its early days also cultivated naval and military history. Mr. Crane's arrangement is mainly chronological, emphasizing the development of the company rather than the subject matter of books published.

C. Book Production: Technology and Art

6454. Asheim, Lester, ed. The future of the book; implications of the newer developments in communication. Chicago, University of Chicago, Graduate Library School, 1955. 105 p. (Papers presented before the Twentieth Annual Conference of the Graduate Library School of the University of Chicago, June 20–24, 1955)
56–582 Z674.C4 20th

"Published originally in the Library quarterly, October 1955."

Society has traditionally relied primarily upon books for the transmission of knowledge and culture. This has been challenged in modern times by the advent of mass communications (radio, television, etc.), nonprinted records (microfilms, motion pictures, phonorecords, etc.), and other technological innovations. At the same time the flood of materials has been such as to lead to the devising of mechanical controls through codification (via "mechanical brains," etc.), and large-scale problems in the storage as well as use of such materials. Further, some have feared that the demise of the book is imminent as a result both of the ascendancy of audiovisual mass media and of increasing costs of book production, rendering difficult the distribution in printed form of all but such works as have a presumable mass market. These problems are discussed in this symposium, which probably reveals less about the future of the book than about present-day trends and the problems and potentialities before us in the field of books and other records of man's experience.

6455. Baker, Elizabeth (Faulkner). Printers and technology; a history of the International Printing Pressmen and Assistants' Union. New York, Columbia University Press, 1957. 545 p.
57–11448 Z120.B16

Bibliography: p. [523]–528.

A history of the union from its founding in 1889 through the activities of 1956; it is international in name, but most of its locals are in the United States. Such problems as technological changes over the years are treated from the point of view not of their effect on the design and distribution of printed matter, but of their effect on employment, pay, job skills, and like matters. In her introduction Mrs. Baker writes: "This book is more than a case study of the International Printing Pressmen and Assistants' Union, however, although it presents many expressed feelings of members and their leaders in an attempt to reveal the motives which led to their official action. In the process of tracing the course of policies and acts, we follow two closely allied issues: effect of technology upon printing and printing trades unionism, and the changing role of foremen and of union-management relations." A sociological study of the structure and leadership of another union in the printers' trade is Union Democracy; the Internal Politics of the International Typographical Union (Glencoe, Ill., Free Press, 1956. xxviii, 455 p.), by Seymour Martin Lipset, Martin A. Trow, and James S. Coleman.

6456. Gress, Edmund G. Fashions in American typography, 1780 to 1930, with brief illustrated stories of the life and environment of the American people in seven periods, and demonstrations of E. G. G.'s fresh note American period typography. New York, Harper, 1931. xxviii, 201 p. 31–34531 Z250.G83

Much of this book is devoted to the author's own ideas of how the types of seven periods of American history could be modernized (or "fresh noted") so as to be useful in modern press work designed to reflect a given period. The book mainly discusses the leading American type designs of the past. Most of its space is occupied by illustrations and facsimile reproductions, making clear the changes in typographical styles since the Republic was founded. As part of his attempt to convey the atmosphere of successive periods, the author has included a number of pictures illustrating the life of each period, and has briefly mentioned them in the text. An important book for modern type design is A Half-Century of Type Design and Typography, 1895–1945 (New York, The Typophiles, 1946. 2 v.), a major work by one of this country's leading type designers, Frederic William Goudy (1865–1947).

6457. Hunter, Dard. Papermaking in pioneer America. Philadelphia, University of Pennsylvania Press, 1952. xiv, 178 p. illus.
52–12473 TS1095.U6H8 1952

6458. Weeks, Lyman Horace. A history of paper-manufacturing in the United States, 1690–1916. New York, Lockwood Trade Journal Co., 1916. xv, 352 p. illus. 17–12277 TS1095.U6W4

Mr. Dard Hunter (b. 1883) of Chillicothe, Ohio, has had his own private press since 1915 and has made his own paper by hand since 1929; as early as 1915 and 1917 he produced what are thought to be the first books in the history of printing in which every element was the handiwork of a single man! Incidentally to the practice of his crafts he has become a world authority on the history and techniques of papermaking, and has established the Dard Hunter Paper Museum at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology. Papermaking in Pioneer America, printed on paper made by hand especially for the purpose at his small Connecticut mill, is based on lectures he delivered in 1948 when appointed to the University of Pennsylvania Rosenbach Fellowship in Bibliography. The art of papermaking, invented in China in 105 A. D., reached America in 1575, at Culhuacán, Mexico, and the Thirteen Colonies about 1690, when William Rittenhouse (born Rittinghuysen) and his son Nicholas set up a small water-powered papermill at Roxborough, near Germantown, Pennsylvania. Mr. Hunter describes "The Equipment and the Operation of the Early Mills," and then traces the pioneer mill of each colony and State from New Jersey (1726) to Tennessee (1811). A final chapter describes the career of Nathan Sellers (1751–1830), whose skill at wirework enabled him to become the first American maker of paper moulds on a commercial scale, supplying hundreds of American papermakers. There is also much of American interest in Mr. Hunter's magisterial Papermaking; the History and Technique of an Ancient Craft, 2d ed. rev. and enl. (New York, Knopf, 1947. xxiv, 611, xxxvii p.), which, with its 317 illustrations, describes materials, processes, and machines in every land from the most primitive to the most technologically advanced, and pays special attention to watermarks. Weeks' History contains much information for the earlier period that is not in Mr. Hunter's specialized lectures, and then describes a further hundred years of a constantly expanding industry, transformed in 1817 by Thomas Gilpin, who introduced in his mill near Wilmington, Del., a power-driven "revolving cylinder making paper continuous and endless in length instead of in single sheets." Chapter 11 describes the search for new and cheaper raw materials, a great economic success gained at the expense of the quality and the permanence of the product. Present-day methods of mass production are succinctly described for the layman in Edwin Sutermeister's The Story of Papermaking (Boston, S. D. Warren Co., 1954. 209 p.).

6459. Winship, George Parker. Daniel Berkeley Updike and the Merrymount Press of Boston, Massachusetts, 1860, 1894, 1941. Rochester, N.Y., Leo Hart, 1947. 141 p. facsims. (The Printers' Valhalla) 48–1487 Z232.M57W5

Updike (1860–1941) has been regarded by many as the greatest craftsman of fine printing that America has produced. In 1893 he set up his own business, the Merrymount Press, at Boston. His early work was florid in the manner of William Morris, the English prime mover of the "printing renaissance." Updike, however, soon moved to a greater simplicity and originality of book design. Throughout his career he endeavored to match the world's best printing designs with the particular work to be printed, so as to produce a work of clarity and beauty. He designed some books for other large presses, but most of his work was in the field of limited editions of works of limited interest. His work had a wide influence on the work of others, and was in itself a major factor in the modern interest in the typographical design of trade books. Winship's book traces Updike's career but gives most of its space to discussing and illustrating the work of the Merrymount Press. Updike himself wrote about his press and its aims in his Notes on the Merrymount Press & Its Work (Cambridge, Harvard University Press, 1934. 279 p.), most of which (p. 59–268) consists of a bibliography of the productions of the press. Updike: American Printer and His Merrymount Press (New York, American Institute of Graphic Arts, 1947. 156, [44] p.) is a group of nine essays issued in memory of Updike, whose own "Notes on the Press and Its Work," is reprinted at the beginning of the volume. Updike published three papers on fine typography as In the Day's Work (Cambridge, Harvard University Press, 1924. 69 p.). His major work was Printing Types; Their History, Forms, and Use; a Study in Survivals, 2d ed. (Cambridge, Harvard University Press, 1937. 2 v.), which discussed and illustrated at length the major typographical advances of the Western world; while its main use is as a history of typography in the West, it also reveals Updike's own views on type design and printing.

D. Book Selling and Collecting

6460. Adams, Randolph G. Three Americanists: Henry Harrisse, bibliographer; George Brinley, book collector; Thomas Jefferson, librarian. Philadelphia, University of Pennsylvania Press, 1939. 101 p. 39–6767 Z1206.A2A2

Three essays which originated as lectures at the University of Pennsylvania in 1938. Here they appear with footnotes and an index. The first is on Henry Harrisse (1829–1910), a Franco-American bibliographer who specialized in the earliest Americana. Probably his best-known work is the Bibliotheca Americana Vetustissima (New York, G. P. Philes, 1866. 519 p.) and its supplementary volume subtitled Additions (Paris, Tross, 1872. 199 p.), the two combined being "A Description of Works Relating to America, Published between the Years 1492 and 1551," as the first volume was subtitled. Harrisse wrote other works on the period, and was also a book collector of considerable note. The second essay is on George Brinley (1817–1875), in the opinion of some the foremost collector of Americana as well as the first Americanist bibliophile of importance. The third essay describes Thomas Jefferson's book collecting activities. Jefferson appears at numerous other points in this Guide; here he is discussed in his relatively little known role as book collector, as "father" of the Library of Congress, whose collections were rebuilt about the nucleus of Jefferson's library, and as a figure of the first importance in the library classification of books. Since Jefferson probably had the foremost private library in America in 1815, it would deserve considerable attention even without its subsequent history. Much about the collection itself, about Jefferson's other books, and about book collecting in America in his day will be found in the Catalogue of the Library of Thomas Jefferson (Washington, Library of Congress, 1952–59. 5 v.), compiled with annotations by E. Millicent Sowerby. In the foreword to volume 1 the compiler says that she undertook a study "which would reveal not only what volumes Mr. Jefferson had acquired but, when possible, where and why he had acquired them and, most important, how he had made use of them."

6461. Cannon, Carl L. American book collectors and collecting from Colonial times to the present. New York, Wilson, 1941. 391 p.
41–51592 Z987.C3

This study traces the main outlines of private book collecting in America from colonial times to about 1930. About half the book consists of chapters on individual collectors, and the rest of the chapters on the subjects and fields of collection. However, the subject chapters are usually subdivided into sections on individual collectors. The author attempts to show the motivations behind the collecting of rare and valuable books. He also indicates what later happened to each collection, and thereby reveals the great extent to which these collections became parts of larger libraries, or were themselves established as libraries available to scholars and the public. These collectors, the author points out, have added much to America's cultural resources.

6462. Goodspeed, Charles E. Yankee bookseller; being the reminiscences of Charles E. Goodspeed. Boston, Houghton Mifflin, 1937. 325 p. illus.
37–28796 Z473.G57

Private book collecting on any considerable scale necessitates access to rare and other noncurrent books and related materials. For this purpose the mainstay of the private collector is the rare- and used-book dealer. One of the outstanding 20th-century businessmen in this field was Charles Eliot Goodspeed (1867–1950), who established his Boston store in 1898. His reminiscences, which are largely anecdotal in nature, do not present a concisely detailed or chronological account of his business, but they are almost exclusively concerned with it in one way or another. They illustrate many features of rare-book and used-book selling, as well as of private book collecting, in this country during the first three decades of this century. Goodspeed also narrates incidents concerning the closely allied fields of print and autograph selling, as well as forgeries of both printed and manuscript items.

6463. Lee, Charles. The hidden public; the story of the Book-of-the-Month Club. Garden City, N.Y., Doubleday, 1958. 236 p.
58–13908 Z549.B69L4

Book clubs sprang up in Germany immediately after World War I; the first American one, the Book-of-the-Month Club, was inaugurated by Harry Scherman in April 1926, and its immense success has led to numerous imitations. Mr. Scherman (b. 1887), founder, president, and chairman of the board, is still the guiding spirit of the enterprise. The essential idea is the guaranteed market provided by the members, who have contracted to take what will be chosen for them by a panel of superior literary intelligences, and can therefore buy for significantly less than the established retail prices (their benefits accrue only partially in reduced prices, for they receive "dividend" or "bonus" books as well). National advertising and the parcel post take the place of the local bookstore, which has in recent years been a declining institution. An original BOMC membership of 4,750 grew to 889,305 in 1946, and during 1947–50 the Club paid an annual dividend of over a million dollars to its shareholders. Since 1948 the membership has remained at approximately half a million. The Club's literary record may be studied in Mr. Lee's "List of Selections, Dividends, and Alternates, 1926–57" (p. 161–194). Mr. Lee has collected judgments from a number of critics, which vary over a wide range of approval or disapproval. Max Lerner makes the shrewd comment that "the effect of the book club on American reading taste has been to make the almost-good much more popular than it would have been, and every now and then to get an audience for the really-good."

6464. Lewis, Wilmarth S. Collector's progress. New York, Knopf, 1951. 253 p. illus. 51–11290 Z989.L5

Mr. Lewis urbanely discusses the history of his famous Horace Walpole collection. He opens with a brief account of his early collecting efforts, rapidly passes over his period as an amateur book collector, and then concentrates for the bulk of the volume on his activities as one of America's foremost private collectors, specializing in an individual whose life and letters mirror so much of 18th-century culture. Indirectly the book reveals much about book collecting in 20th-century America, and the rare-book dealers involved in projects such as that of Mr. Lewis. He is also the principal editor of the multivolume edition of Walpole's correspondence being published by the Yale University Press. A book which discusses the goals, means, and problems of book collectors is A Primer of Book-Collecting, rev. and enl. ed. (New York, Greenberg, 1946. 226 p.), by John T. Winterich in collaboration with David A. Randall, who was mainly responsible for the revision. Mr. Winterich is also the author of a very pleasant survey of Early American Books & Printing (Boston, Houghton Mifflin, 1935. 256 p.), written primarily from the collector's point of view and offering information likely to be serviceable to him.

6465. Stevens, Henry. Recollections of James Lenox and the formation of his library; revised and elucidated by Victor Hugo Paltsits. New York, New York Public Library, 1951. xxxvi, 187 p. illus. 51–12041 Z989.L45S8 1951

One of the prime sources of rare and expensive books, as well as of important general and specialized collections, that public and college libraries rely on because of their frequent financial constriction, is the donation of the accumulations of private collectors. The collectors thereby insure that what they have put together with enthusiasm, skill, and loving care will not be broken up by indifferent heirs. One of the notable examples of a private library that became a public collection, and one of the earliest, is the Lenox Library. James Lenox (1800–1880) was a New York bibliophile with inherited financial resources to back his expensive tastes. His large library, which had overflowed his house, was incorporated in 1870, and in 1895 it was merged into the New York Public Library. The study of Lenox by Henry Stevens (1819–1886) reveals much of Lenox's bibliophilic activities, but it also reveals at least as much about Stevens, an American antiquarian and rare-book dealer established in London, whose major customer was Lenox. The work was first edited into book form by the author's son, Henry N. Stevens, and published under the same title (London, Stevens, 1886. 211 p.). The present edition is especially notable for the late Dr. Paltsits' many "Elucidations" appended to each chapter.

E. Libraries

6466. Clemons, Harry. The University of Virginia Library, 1825–1950; story of a Jeffersonian foundation. Foreword by Dumas Malone. Charlottesville, University of Virginia Library, 1954. 229 p. illus. 54–10702 Z733.V66C6

Bibliography: p. 211–213.

The University of Virginia was chartered in 1816, and began instruction in 1825. The library, like the rest of the University, received its main conception and impetus from Thomas Jefferson. His last visit was made in 1826, but his concept of the library lingered long after, and has some effect today, as Mr. Clemons, librarian there from 1927 to 1950, is at some pains to show in his story of the library's development. The book opens with an account of the founding of the library (1816–1826), and goes on to trace its history to the time of the Civil War. Chapter 3 carries the story to 1895, when a fire destroyed the library building and most of the collection. Chapter 4 traces the library's resurgence after the fire to the year 1925, when the centennial of its founding was observed. Chapter 5 is a series of biographical sketches of the nine librarians who preceded Mr. Clemons in the office. The sixth and final chapter carries the story of the library from 1925 to mid-century. The book itself is one of the few relatively thorough studies of the development of a major university research library, and as such is representative of the development of libraries as instruments of American education.

6467. Compton, Charles H. Twenty-five crucial years of the St. Louis Public Library, 1927–

1952. With a supplement, The Library's readers, by Charles H. Compton [and others] St. Louis, 1953. 204 p. 53–11009 Z733.S141C6

St. Louis, eighth in population among American cities in 1950, has one of the outstanding city public libraries. This study tells the story of its modern growth and the expansion of its role in society. Mr. Compton, who has served as assistant librarian, librarian, and librarian emeritus for almost 40 years, writes in his foreword: "It shall be the endeavor of the writer to interpret the St. Louis Public Library as a living, pulsating, changing, and growing reality in the community and to indicate its importance in a free society." His report indicates not only the role of the library and the nature of its collections, but also the financial and administrative problems that have had to be faced. The library was founded in 1865, and some account of its history through 1926 may be found in Compton's earlier Fifty Years of Progress of the St. Louis Public Library, 1876–1926 (St. Louis, St. Louis Public Library, 1926. 84 p.), which was also issued as a supplement to the Annual Report of the Library for 1925–26. This sketch passes rapidly over the early years, and becomes detailed only with the founding of the American Library Association in 1876. It was not meant to be a full history of the institution, but rather "an attempt to trace some of the ideas which have gone into the making of the library and to indicate significant and outstanding points in its development," and "to create in the reader's mind the atmosphere of the library in its earlier years in order that the library of today may be seen to be a natural growth from its infancy and youth."

6468. Keep, Austin Baxter. History of the New York Society Library, with an introductory chapter on libraries in Colonial New York, 1698–1776. New York, Printed for the Trustees by the De Vinne Press, 1908. xvi, 607 p. illus. 8–34672 Z733.N74K

In the early years of this country attempts to create a general library service usually took the form of a group of individuals agreeing to pool their resources for the establishment of a library, so that each might have access to more. Most of these were "society libraries," normally limited to the use of subscribers, with occasional courtesy extension of privileges to relatives and distinguished friends. As free public libraries grew in numbers and strength, the society libraries declined in importance, and often went out of existence or were incorporated into the public library. New York City had one of the larger society libraries, and generous endowments have enabled it to continue, albeit with a limited clientele, to the present day. Mr. Keep's history opens with an account of early New York libraries, and goes on to present a roughly chronological study of the Society Library from its founding in 1754 through its 150th anniversary in 1904. The work not only shows in detail the evolution, problems, and services of such a library, but also reveals much about the reading of New York's social and intellectual leaders throughout the period. The story is brought up to date in Mrs. Marion M. King's less formal Books and People; Five Decades of New York's Oldest Library (New York, Macmillan, 1954. 372 p.). Mrs. King joined the staff in 1907, and her book not only describes the 20th-century activities of the library, but in its year-by-year approach to its subject matter it gives a good picture of the more popular aspects of reading throughout the first half of the century. The anecdotal nature of much of the book also gives it value as a picture of life inside a library.

6469. Mearns, David C. The story up to now; the Library of Congress, 1800–1946. Washington, U.S. Govt. Print. Off., 1947. 226 p. 48–45515 Z733.U6M45

"Reprinted from the Annual report of the Librarian of Congress for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1946, with the addition of illustrations and a slight revision of text."

The Library of Congress was founded in 1800. It was subsequently destroyed when the British burned the Capitol during the War of 1812. In 1815 the Library made a fresh start when Congress purchased the library of Thomas Jefferson (see Adams, no. 6460). Since then the Library has steadily grown, save for a second setback by fire in 1851, until it is probably the world's largest, with a collection of more than 11,700,000 books and pamphlets, over 16,100,000 manuscripts, 2,000,000 items of music, 2,400,000 maps and views, etc., for a total collection of more than 38,100,000 items in 1959. It serves not only Congress, but also, through many services, other government agencies, libraries throughout the world, and the general public. Since the Library is not only the largest in the country, but also the center of a number of the nation's library activities, an understanding of the Library of Congress is essential to an understanding of the role of libraries in the 20th century. Mr. Mearns' history narrates the development of the Library's collections and services from the first proposals for a Government library up to 1946. It emphasizes the work of two great Librarians of Congress, Ainsworth R. Spofford (1825–1908) and Herbert Putnam (1861–1955), whose nearly successive terms ran from 1864 to 1939, in making theirs a truly national library. The early part of the story is related at greater length and without much art in the first and only volume published of William Dawson Johnston's History of the Library of Congress (Washington, Govt. Print. Off., 1904. 535 p.); it reaches 1864. A brief and up-to-date account of the Library is Paul M. Angle's The Library of Congress: an Account, Historical and Descriptive (Kingsport, Tenn., Kingsport Press, 1958. 77 p.); it is based on The Story Up to Now and the subsequent annual reports of the Librarian.

677676 O–63–69

6470. Potter, Alfred Claghorn. The library of Harvard University; descriptive and historical notes. 4th ed. Cambridge, Harvard University Press, 1934. 186 p. (Library of Harvard University. Special publications, 6)
34–20604 Z733.H34P 1934

The Harvard Library is both the oldest and the largest university library in this country. The collection numbers over six million volumes, and is exceeded in size in America only by the Library of Congress and the New York Public Library. This publication, the first edition of which appeared as early as 1903, therefore provides not only a history and analysis of a leading academic and research library, but also an example of the aims and problems of such libraries. A study of the problems currently faced in maintaining and furthering such a library, as well as in making it function to best advantage, is Keyes D. Metcalf's Report on the Harvard University Library; a Study of Present and Prospective Problems (Cambridge, Harvard University Library, 1955. 131 p.); this not only gives a fairly clear picture of the Library's present scope and functions, but devotes considerable attention to the place of the Library, along with other leading research libraries, in the "American library" that is developing as a result of cooperation among libraries through interlibrary loan, microfilming, division of labor in collecting, accessibility to visiting scholars, etc. Second to the Harvard Library in size and age is the Yale University Library. Its main building is described in detail in a well-illustrated article, "The Sterling Memorial Library," which appeared on pages 57–123 of volume 5 (April 1931) of The Yale University Library Gazette. This is a thorough presentation of the physical plant of a leading research library. An interesting series of articles derived from various aspects of the library's collections, especially unusual items and special collections, is Papers in Honor of Andrew Keogh, Librarian of Yale University (New Haven, Priv. Print., 1938. 492 p.). They give an idea not only of some of the more esoteric material that may be found in a general research library, but also of the potential scholarly use and significance of such uncommon items and collections.

6471. Schenk, Gretchen (Knief). County and regional library development. Chicago, American Library Association, 1954. 263 p.
53–7488 Z675.C8S4

Bibliography: p. [258]–260.

Since most early public libraries were established on a city or other local basis, many thinly populated areas found themselves without any public library service, while many small towns struggled to support inferior libraries on inadequate taxes. In recent years improved transportation and communication have made possible an alternative to this in the form of county and regional libraries. These usually involve plans for a shared budget and bookstock over a large area, and by raising the total bookstock, make more books available in each community. At the same time, pooled budgets have in some areas produced better services, such as reference and readers' advisory work, at a comparatively low cost. However, initial costs delayed many such projects. Mrs. Schenk's book was written in anticipation of Federal aid to libraries. Such aid was enacted soon afterwards, giving a great impetus to county and regional libraries. The author does not give a history of the movement, nor does she examine existing libraries in detail. She has rather attempted to synthesize procedures and programs as a guide to what is done for and by such libraries.

6472. Shera, Jesse H. Foundations of the public library; the origins of the public library movement in New England, 1629–1855. Chicago, University of Chicago Press, 1949. xv, 308 p. illus. (The University of Chicago studies in library science)
49–8133 Z731.S55

"Selected bibliography": p. 291–295.

Dr. Shera writes in his introduction: "We are here concerned with those elements in American life which contributed directly or indirectly to the growth of the public library as a social agency and the character of the environment from which it emerged. Though attention is restricted to but one section of the United States, much of what is said here with reference to New England is equally applicable elsewhere as economic and social conditions began to approximate those of the northeastern Atlantic seaboard. But New England, because it is the cradle of American librarianship and because its cultural records have been so assiduously preserved, was the logical, if indeed not inevitable, place to begin." Much the same period and subject matter is covered by Charles Seymour Thompson's somewhat shorter Evolution of the American Public Library, 1653–1876 (Washington, Scarecrow Press, 1952. 287 p.). Sidney Ditzion's Arsenals of a Democratic Culture; a Social History of the American Public Library Movement in New England and the Middle States from 1850 to 1900 (Chicago, American Library Association, 1947. 263 p.) brings the story to a later date. Samuel Swett Green's The Public Library Movement in the United States 1853–1893 (Boston, Boston Book Co., 1913. 336 p.) actually is mainly concerned with the period after 1876, and in large part consists of the author's reminiscences of his participation in the free library movement. Librarian of the Worcester Public Library from 1871 to 1909, he also served, from 1890, on the Massachusetts Free Public Library Commission.

6473. Spencer, Gwladys. The Chicago Public Library; origins and backgrounds. Chicago, University of Chicago Press, 1943. xvii, 473 p. illus. (The University of Chicago studies in library science) A 43–1583 Z733.C531S6

Bibliography: p. 423–435.

The author sums up the scope and purpose of this book in her introduction: "This study endeavors first . . . to present with as high a degree of accuracy and clarity as is permitted by records often incomplete the scenes of library history in Chicago from the beginning through 1872 and, in addition, but more briefly, those in the surrounding state of Illinois as they formed unfolding backgrounds for the establishment in a great metropolitan center of its free public library of today. . . . Secondly, the study attempts to analyze such available data with the purpose of discovering the chief factors that contributed to the inception of this library. Lastly, the study suggests what may be the significance of the factors found to be influential in the origin of the Chicago Public Library as a representative institution in its relation to the history of the American library movement as a whole." The importance of this as a representative work is underscored by the author's thesis "that certain great decisive forces that had previously been and were still at work in Chicago, in the state at large, and even throughout the entire country bore a share of major importance as fundamental cofactors in the creation of the new institution." This investigation of other than immediate and obvious causes has been neglected in most library histories.

6474. U. S. Office of Education. Public libraries in the United States of America; their history, condition, and management. Special report, Department of the Interior, Bureau of Education. Part I. Washington, Govt. Print. Off., 1876. xxxv, 1187 p. illus. 1–9328 Z731.U57

Part II consists of Cutter's Rules for a Printed Dictionary Catalogue, 1876 (2d edition, 1889; 3d edition, 1891).

This landmark in the writing of library history is probably the most thorough work of the kind that has yet been published. Despite its age, it remains of value for its impressive detail on the library situation in America about 1875. It opens with a study of "Public Libraries a Hundred Years Ago." There follow chapters on the many types of public libraries, such as school, law, government, theoretical, historical society, medical, and scientific libraries. A number of chapters are also devoted to various aspects of free town libraries, and town organization libraries. The more technical aspects of librarianship are discussed in the later chapters, concerned with matters such as library buildings, catalogs, cataloging and classification, indexing, binding, reports and statistics, etc. The final chapter (p. 1010–1174) consists of tables of general library statistics and a listing of librarians.

6475. Whitehill, Walter Muir. Boston Public Library; a centennial history. Cambridge, Harvard University Press, 1956. 274 p. 56–6528 Z733.B752W5

In 1848 the Massachusetts legislature authorized the city of Boston "to establish and maintain a public library," thereby making the Boston Public Library the first tax-supported city library to be authorized by statute. The book collection grew rapidly, although the formal opening of the library was delayed for a few years. Mr. Whitehill's history presents in chronological form the story of the initial struggles to establish a public library; the early very rapid growth by which the library soon became one of the largest in the nation; the decline that set in during the late 1870's and continued for nearly a decade; the subsequent resurgence; a second decline resulting from financial stringency; and a new improvement brought about by the bettered financial situation after World War II. Because of its priority, the history of the Boston Public Library reflects much of the public library movement from its inception. Mr. Whitehill gives much detail on the books supplied to the community which was for many years the nation's cultural center. The story of the society library which supplied much of Boston's reading matter before the founding of the public library, and which itself came close to functioning as a public library, may be found in Josiah Quincy's detailed work, The History of the Boston Athenaeum (Cambridge, Metcalf, 1851. 263, 104 p.), which has also been distinguished as the "first formal history of an American library." The story is carried forward in the society's own publication, The Athenaeum Centenary: the Influence and History of the Boston Athenaeum from 1807 to 1907

(Boston, Boston Athenaeum, 1907. 236 p.), the greater part of which is, unfortunately for the general reader, devoted to "a record of its officers and benefactors and a complete list of proprietors."

F. Librarianship and Library Use

6476. American library pioneers. [v.] 1–8. Chicago, American Library Association, 1924–1953. 8 v.

1. Lydenberg, Harry Miller. John Shaw Billings, creator of the National Medical Library and its catalogue, first director of the New York Public Library. 1924. 94 p. 24–20388 Z720.B6L9

2. Shaw, Robert Kendall. Samuel Swett Green. 1926. 92 p. 26–10763 Z720.G8S5

3. Cutter, William Parker. Charles Ammi Cutter. 1931. 66 p. 31–28434 Z720.C99C9

4. Eastman, Linda A. Portrait of a librarian, William Howard Brett. 1940. 104 p. 40–27318 Z720.B85E2

5. Hadley, Chalmers. John Cotton Dana. 1943. 105 p. 43–11446 Z720.D2H2

6. Rider, Fremont. Melvil Dewey. 1944. 151 p. 44–4322 Z720.D5R5

7. Borome, Joseph Alfred. Charles Coffin Jewett. 1951. 188 p. 51–10999 Z720.J59B6

8. Pioneering leaders in librarianship. First series. Edited by Emily Miller Danton. 1953. 202 p. 53–10258 Z720.A4U47

The slender volumes in this series have appeared at widely spaced intervals. They describe the lives, with heavy emphasis on their professional librarian and bibliographical aspects, of persons who have attained prominence in American librarianship. As a group they afford considerable insight into advances in librarianship, particularly during the late 19th and early 20th centuries. These studies have been written largely by librarians for librarians, and as a result suffer somewhat from a limited outlook. They all present very favorable portraits, but few of their subjects emerge as recognizable human beings. This results in part from the emphasis on the professional aspects of their lives; but this same emphasis enables one to obtain a clear idea of their professional advancements. Volume 8, which treats "a wide assortment of distinguished persons who played a strong role in developing American libraries," is the first of a new "omnibus" subseries. Mrs. Danton, who edited the latest volume, took over editorship of the series after the death of Dr. Arthur E. Bostwick in 1942.

6477. Berelson, Bernard. The library's public; a report of the Public Library Inquiry. With the assistance of Lester Asheim. New York, Columbia University Press, 1949. xx, 174 p. 49–10661 Z731.B4 1949

This report is actually a synthesis of two originally separate reports: one based on the results of a personal interview survey conducted in the autumn of 1947, and one based on an analysis of reports published since 1930 on library book use and users. It opens with a discussion of the position of library usage in the context of public usage of the mass media such as newspapers, films, and magazines. Chapter 2 analyzes the various groups who use public libraries and the intensity of their usage. Chapters 3 and 4 take up the questions of why and when people use public library facilities. Chapter 5 discusses the concentration of usage among a relatively small group. The concluding chapters consider what further research is needed to shed more light on this subject, and implications the studies already made have for library policy. The report concludes that the library actually has a number of publics with diverse purposes and fields, and that "it must decide what things it will be to whom." It suggests, without actually concluding, that the library should do less competing with the mass media in the field of entertainment, and more in books and services for "serious-minded people concerned with serious-minded materials."

6478. Brough, Kenneth J. Scholar's workshop; evolving conceptions of library service. Urbana, University of Illinois Press, 1953. xv, 197 p. (Illinois contributions to librarianship, no. 5) 52–10462 Z675.U5B85

Bibliography: p. 178–187.

Mr. Brough's study is "ostensibly limited to developments in the university libraries of Chicago, Columbia, Harvard, and Yale," but, he says, "the story would have varied little if the four institutions selected for investigation had been, say, California, Michigan, Pennsylvania, and Princeton." The author takes 1876 as the starting point for modern librarianship, and from that date he traces such problems of research libraries as services to readers, the nature of the collections, and their accessibility. Throughout the work he compares evolving policy to earlier practices. In the early years of this country the concept governing college libraries had been one of service to advanced scholars. Gradually students were allowed a limited use of the collections, and in time there arose the idea of actually trying to provide specifically for the needs even of undergraduates, as a result of which the libraries became increasingly an essential factor in the teaching program. The story of the early years of these libraries is told in considerable detail in Louis Shores' Origins of the American College Library, 1638–1800 (New York, Barnes & Noble, 1935. 290 p.). A volume edited by Herman H. Fussler, which discusses many of the areas in which the modern college library is concerned, from library architecture and student programing through personal policies and acquisitioning, is The Function of the Library in the Modern College (Chicago, University of Chicago, Graduate Library School, 1954. 117 p.); it consists of "Papers presented before the nineteenth annual conference of the Graduate Library School of the University of Chicago." A parallel work, more concerned with technical problems such as cataloging, cost of maintenance, specialization, etc., is Problems and Prospects of the Research Library (New Brunswick, N.J., Scarecrow Press, 1955. 181 p.), edited by Edwin E. Williams for the Association of Research Libraries; it consists of a group of papers presented at the Monticello [Illinois] Conference of the Association in 1954.

6479. Bryan, Alice I. The public librarian; a report of the Public Library Inquiry, by Alice I. Bryan, with a section on the education of librarians by Robert D. Leigh. New York, Columbia University Press, 1952. xxvii, 474 p. diagrs. 52–8829 Z682.B7

This report concerns itself with the people who work in public libraries, with an emphasis on those on the professional level, secondary interest in those on a subprofessional level, and no attention at all to those on a nonprofessional level. Nearly two thirds of the volume is devoted to a study, based on questionnaires and tests, of the public librarians. The author attempts to determine factors such as personal characteristics (distribution by sex, marital status, recreational activities, personality, etc.), educational status, economic status (salaries, savings, insurance, etc.), and library career activities and attitudes. Also analyzed are the several aspects of personnel administration: management, employee selection, in-service training, promotion and pay systems, labor relations, unions, associations, morale, etc. About a third of the book is occupied by Mr. Leigh's section, "The Education of Librarians." The first chapter of this section gives a brief survey of the "Evolution of Library Schools"; the second studies library school programs; the fourth analyzes the student body (sex, geographical distribution, admission requirements, etc.), and the final chapter surveys "The Faculty and Instructional Resources."

6480. Leigh, Robert D. The public library in the United States; the general report of the Public Library Inquiry. New York, Columbia University Press, 1950. 272 p. 50–9138 Z731.L45

"Methods and sources": p. [247]–263.

Dr. Leigh was the director of the Public Library Inquiry, a project proposed by the American Library Association, carried out by the Social Science Research Council, and financed by the Carnegie Foundation of New York. His general report opens with an account of the purpose, nature, and limitations of the inquiry. There follow chapters which summarize findings and discuss prospective developments in various fields; their scope is indicated by their titles: "The Library Faith and Library Objectives," "The Business of Communication," "Library Units and Structure," "Library Materials," "Library Services," "Library Government and Politics," "Library Financial Support," "Library Operations," "Library Personnel and Training," and "The Direction of Development." Dr. Leigh's report is a balanced presentation of the position and problems of the public library in present-day America. Greater detail on special aspects of the subject is contained in other reports of the Public Library Inquiry by Miller (no. 6441), McCamy (no. 6452 note), Berelson (no. 6477), and Bryan (no. 6479). These studies are all limited by the definition of a public library as a free, tax-supported library available to the community in general, thus excluding, most notably, the free school libraries. However, related aspects of other types of libraries are considered throughout the series of reports. Dr. Leigh, who later became dean of the Columbia School of Library Service, also contributed the first paper, "Changing Concepts of the Public Library's Role," to New Directions in Public Library Development (Chicago, University of Chicago, Graduate Library School, 1957. 104 p.). These eight papers presented before the 22d Annual Conference of the Graduate Library School (1957) were edited by Lester Asheim, and include discussions of the Federal Library Services Act and of community developments. In 1954 the Public Libraries Division of the American Library Association appointed a Coordinating Committee on Revision of Public Library Standards, which, after two conferences and the circulation of a first draft, was able to formulate a new statement of standards for public libraries, revised from the earlier codes of 1933 and 1943: Public Library Service; a Guide to Evaluation, with Minimum Standards (Chicago, American Library Association, 1956. xxi, 74 p.). This offers a numbered series of concise formulations in the realms of structure and government, service, books and nonbook materials, organization and control of materials, and physical facilities. For example, no. 73: "Films, recordings, and pictures should be available for use off the premises."

6481. Marshall, John David, comp. Books, libraries, librarians; contributions to library literature, selected by John David Marshall, Wayne Shirley [and] Louis Shores. Hamden, Conn., Shoe String Press, 1955. xv, 432 p.
55–3034 Z665.M66

Includes bibliographies.

Mr. Marshall opens his introduction thus: "Much of the literature of librarianship cannot be described truthfully as particularly enjoyable reading, for it lacks that intangible and elusive quality known as readability." The literature of librarianship is not the only field that has been plagued by this stylistic problem, and it might be contended that some other fields have a larger percentage of unreadable writings than does librarianship. At any rate, this volume is an attempt to present a selection of interesting and readable contributions from the profession's literature. The volume is therefore not only more readable than many others on libraries and librarianship, but it is also highly informative in its presentation of many aspects of the library world and its problems. The articles are presented in four sections: "Books and Reading," "Libraries," "Librarians and Librarianship," and "Notable Statements of the Librarian's Profession." The topics range widely from children's libraries to research libraries, and from library acquisition policies to the problem of theft of library books.

6482. Phinney, Eleanor. Library adult education in action; five case studies. Chicago, American Library Association, 1956. 182 p.
56–9496 Z711.2.P5

A modern development in the activities of public libraries is that of adult education—education beyond that of having a book stock available for loan. Eleanor Phinney's study is mainly a report on what five libraries of moderate resources have been doing. She selected ones in Mount Vernon, N.Y., St. Mary's County, Md., Carrollton, Ga. (the West Georgia Regional Library), La Crosse, Wis., and Andover, Mass. The kinds of educational activity engaged in included displays and exhibits, reader-interest files and notification service, local radio programs, educational film programs, discussion groups, etc. A chapter on common elements in the programs has been included, emphasizing the importance of a zeal for adult education on the part of the chief librarian, the staff, and the board. The conclusions of a survey of the subject will be found in Helen Lyman Smith's Adult Education Activities in Public Libraries; a Report of the ALA Survey of Adult Education Activities in Public Libraries and State Library Extension Agencies of the United States (Chicago, American Library Association, 1954. 96 p.).

6483. Rothstein, Samuel. The development of reference services through academic traditions, public library practice, and special librarianship. Chicago, Association of College and Reference Libraries, 1955. 124 p. (ACRL monographs, no. 14)
55–9938 Z674.A75, no. 14

Issued also in microfilm form, as thesis, University of Illinois, under title: The Development of Reference Services in American Research Libraries.

Bibliography: p. 111–124.

The author begins his final chapter thus: "To trace the development of reference services in American research libraries is to record the transformation of occasional and casual courtesy into a complex and highly specialized service of steadily increasing scope and importance. In most institutions, it is now taken for granted that one of the Library's primary functions is to make available personal assistance for readers seeking information." The development of this function, central to much of modern librarianship, is presented as "the result of a collocation of particular historical factors distinctive to the American library scene." The story is traced in some detail from 1850, from which year the author dates "The Rise of Research and Research Libraries" (chapter 1). He then studies the growth of reference services in libraries, the development of special libraries, the problems of legislative and municipal reference work, and the recent development of reference service in industrial libraries for professional researchers. After carrying the story to the beginning of World War II, Dr. Rothstein concludes with a chapter on general trends. A detailed picture of reference service as librarians conceive and practice it is presented in a volume edited by the late Pierce Butler: The Reference Function of the Library (Chicago, University of Chicago Press, 1943. 366 p.), consisting of papers read at the Library Institute of the University of Chicago in 1942. The topics dealt with include personnel and training for reference work, its administrative problems, book selection and supplementary reference materials, and reference service in special fields such as art, music, and rare books.

6484. Tauber, Maurice F., ed. Technical services in libraries: acquisitions, cataloging, classification, binding, photographic reproduction, and circulation operations. New York, Columbia University Press, 1954. xvi, 487 p. diagrs. (Columbia University studies in library service, no. 7)

54–10328 Z665.T28 1954

This volume, the work of Mr. Tauber and seven associates, is a study, aimed primarily at library school students, of the more or less technical operations that take place in a library, with a special emphasis on the point of view of a general research library. Since most of this activity goes on behind the scenes in most libraries, it is an aspect of library work that is largely unknown to the general public. While this volume is not aimed at that public, it will enable the layman to gain a just idea of many little-known problems that face the librarian, as well as a conception of the complexities involved in maintaining a modern research, college, or large public library. To a less extent it also reflects the tribulations of smaller public and school libraries. The final chapter concisely discusses the possibilities of applying cost analysis and management analysis to library operations, and of introducing various types of machines as savers of labor and time. A group of lectures which sum up a number of the problems and possibilities of modern librarianship is Challenges to Librarianship (Tallahassee, Florida State University, 1953. 156 p. Florida State University studies, no. 12), edited by Louis Shores; the lectures were originally delivered by distinguished visitors to the university, and cover such topics as censorship, microphotography, the sciences, audio-visual material, and international understanding.

6485. Trautman, Ray. A history of the School of Library Service, Columbia University. New York, Columbia University Press, 1954. 85 p. illus. (The Bicentennial history of Columbia University)
54–5197 Z669.T7

The 19th century witnessed a tremendous growth in the number of American libraries and in the total number of volumes held by most of them. This led to unanticipated complexities in the acquiring, cataloging, and servicing of books. Added difficulties arose out of rapidly expanding conceptions of desirable services to readers. The result was that the idea of professional librarianship began to emerge as an attempt to obtain competent librarians with more complex and skilled functions than merely guarding relatively small book collections. This situation led Melvil Dewey to establish a library school at Columbia University in 1883. A few years later the school moved to Albany, and did not return to Columbia until 1926. Thus, notwithstanding its long residence elsewhere, the Columbia University School of Library Service may claim to be the oldest as well as an outstanding library school. Mr. Trautman's book traces the complicated history of the school, and also offers insight into the evolving concepts of librarianship. Difficulties currently being faced in developing curricula in library schools are brought together in a volume edited by Robert D. Leigh: Major Problems in the Education of Librarians (New York, Columbia University Press, 1954. 116 p.), which resulted from a seminar on education for librarianship held in the Columbia School of Library Service in 1952–53. A work of somewhat wider range is Education for Librarianship (Chicago, American Library Association, 1949. 307 p.), edited by Bernard Berelson and consisting of papers presented at a library conference held at the University of Chicago in August 1948. It covers not only current professional problems, but also a history of the library school movement and a survey of the problems involved in the training of nonprofessional or subprofessional library employees.

6486. Utley, George Burwell. The librarians' conference of 1853, a chapter in American library history; edited by Gilbert H. Doane. Chicago, American Library Association, 1951. 189 p.
51–11154 Z673.A49U7

"Proceedings of the Librarians' Convention, held in New York City, September 15, 16, and 17, 1853. (Reprinted . . . from Norton's Literary and educational register, for 1854)": p. [129]–176.

The librarians' conference of September 15–17, 1853, in New York City was the first general conference of American librarians, and its participants may be regarded as the forefathers of the modern library movement in general and of the American Library Association in particular. To this first conference came leading librarians throughout the nation, although the Northeast, where most libraries of any size were then located, was naturally the most strongly represented. The conference had relatively little direct influence of importance, but indirectly it set off a significant train of events. It initiated greater cooperation among libraries, and in turn this led to a greater attention to and understanding of library problems. It also established a precedent for the 1876 conference, when the American Library Association was founded and modern professional librarianism was firmly set on its way. The proceedings of the meeting are reprinted in offset at the end of this volume (p. 129–176). The final draft of Mr. Utley's book was nearly finished at the time of his death in 1946; the work of completion and editing was carried out by his nephew.

6487. Wilson, Louis Round, and Maurice F. Tauber. The university library; the organization, administration, and functions of academic libraries. 2d ed. New York, Columbia University Press, 1956. 641 p. diagrs. (Columbia University studies in library service, no. 8)

55-11184 Z675.U5W745 1956

Bibliographies at end of chapters.

The first edition of this work was published by the University of Chicago Press in 1945. The authors state that their purpose "is to review the changes which have taken place in the university library in response to the demands made upon it by university growth; to consider systematically the principles and methods of university and library administration; and to formulate generalizations concerning the organization, administration, and functions of the university library to the end that it may serve its clientele more adequately and efficiently than it has in the past." Though much of it sounds like a statement of what should be done, most of it is a statement, frequently in abstract form, of what has been done. Relatively little theory is advanced. This, combined with the emphasis of the study on the research collections and their administration, means that the volume actually offers a fairly thorough prospect of the nature, organization, and administration of large research libraries at the present day. There is relatively little historical material, although some is included in order to illustrate the development and changes in the problems that university librarians have had to face. The whole field is thoroughly covered in College and Research Libraries, the organ of the Association of College and Reference Libraries, a division of the American Library Association. This quarterly, which began publication in December 1939, is currently published at Fulton, Mo., by the American Library Association. An important recent development of great interest to research libraries was the establishment in 1956 of The Council of Library Resources, Inc., which has as its principal objective "to aid in the solution of library problems; to conduct research in, develop and demonstrate new techniques and methods and to disseminate through any means the results thereof." The Council was established at the instance of the Ford Foundation, which has made it a grant of $5 million to be expended over a five-year period. The Council's endeavors are outlined in its Annual Report, 1956/57– (Washington, 1957–).

Appendix: Selected Readings in American Studies

AS EXPLAINED in the Introduction, in June 1954 the Council of the American Studies Association recommended that this Guide should include a separate section containing those titles which have a synthetic approach, bridge the various academic and scholarly disciplines, and are therefore of special significance to teachers or students pursuing courses in American studies. A tentative selection of 100 such titles was submitted to the Council and other prominent members in October of the same year, together with a request for specific suggestions. In consequence of the replies some titles were promptly deleted, and considerably more added. Since then further deletions have been made for various reasons, and a much larger number of additional titles accumulated, many but by no means all of which are publications later than 1954. The result, a list of 190 titles, is below. The 190 may be thus briefly accounted for: 83 are from the original list; 35 were recommended by A.S.A. members in 1954; and 72 are subsequent additions. Of the last 72, nine do not appear in the main Guide; published since work upon the pertinent chapters was concluded, they have been thought too important to omit here.

To facilitate rapid finding, the 190 titles appear in a single alphabetical order. Most entries are limited to author, title, imprint, and pagination, plus a bracketed serial number which directs one to the fuller entry in the main body of the Guide, where the annotation will normally supply a justification for the work's inclusion here. Under authors, titles are also alphabetically ordered save in the case of sequels, which are placed directly after the primary work. For the nine recent works not in the Guide proper, the Library of Congress call and card numbers, and series note when there is one, have been added. In a very few cases the edition entered here is a later one than that in the body of the Guide; in this case also call and card numbers have been included.

Finally, it should be stated that this Appendix does not attempt to incorporate the classics of American thought and expression, of the stamp of Emerson, Thoreau, Whitman, or William James; and that anthologies, save in a very few instances with special reasons for each, have been excluded. It must, of course, be regarded as suggestive rather than exhaustive; anyone can readily make his own amplifications from the chapters that precede it. Important guides to the present state of American studies, which appeared too late to be included in the main body of this book, are Sigmund Skard's American Studies in Europe; Their History and Present Organization (Philadelphia, University of Pennsylvania Press, 1958. 2 v.) and Robert H. Walker's American Studies in the United States, a Survey of College Programs (Baton Rouge, Louisiana State University Press, 1958. 210 p.).

Aaron, Daniel. Men of good hope; a story of American progressives. New York, Oxford University Press, 1951. xiv, 329 p. [6424]

Aaron, Daniel, ed. America in crisis; fourteen crucial episodes in American history. New York, Knopf, 1952. 363 p. [3070]

Allen, Frederick Lewis. The big change: America transforms itself, 1900–1950. New York, Harper, 1952. 308 p. [4514]

Allen, Frederick Lewis. Only yesterday; an informal history of the nineteen-twenties. New York, Harper, 1931. 370 p. [3477]

Almond, Gabriel A. The American people and foreign policy. New York, Harcourt, Brace, 1950. 269 p. [3609]

Andrews, Wayne. Architecture, ambition and Americans; a history of American architecture, from the beginning to the present. New York, Harper, 1955. 315 p. [5698]

Barker, Virgil. American painting, history and interpretation. New York, Macmillan, 1950. xxvii, 717 p. [5742]

Barzun, Jacques. Music in American life. Garden City, N.Y., Doubleday, 1956. 126 p. [5615]

Basler, Roy P. The Lincoln legend; a study in changing conceptions. Boston, Houghton Mifflin, 1935. 335 p. [3395]

Bates, Ralph Samuel. Scientific societies in the United States. 2d ed. New York, Columbia University Press, 1958. 297 p.
57–10143 Q11.A1B3 1958 [4713]

Beard, Charles A., and Mary R. Beard. The rise of American civilization. New York, Macmillan, 1927–42. 4 v.
Contents.—v. 1. The agricultural era.—v. 2. The industrial era.—v. 3. America in midpassage.—v. 4. The American spirit, a study of the idea of civilization in the United States.
[3073, 3479, 3750]

Berelson, Bernard R., Paul F. Lazarsfeld, and William N. McPhee. Voting; a study of opinion formation in a presidential campaign. [Chicago] University of Chicago Press, 1954. xix, 395 p. [6414]

Billington, Ray Allen. The Protestant Crusade, 1800–1860; a study of the origins of American nativism. New York, Rinehart, 1952, ©1938. 514 p. [4515]

Billington, Ray Allen. Westward expansion, a history of the American frontier, by Ray Allen Billington with the collaboration of James Blaine Hedges. New York, Macmillan, 1949. 873 p. [3074]

Blegen, Theodore C. Norwegian migration to America. Northfield, Minn., Norwegian-American Historical Association, 1931–40. 2 v. [4484]

Boas, George, ed. Romanticism in America; papers contributed to a symposium held at the Baltimore Museum of Art, May 13, 14, 15, 1940. Baltimore, Johns Hopkins Press, 1940. 202 p. [3751]

Bowers, David F., ed. Foreign influences in American life; essays and critical bibliographies. Edited for the Princeton Program of Study in American Civilization. Princeton, Princeton University Press, 1944. 254 p. [3768]

Brebner, John B. North Atlantic triangle; the interplay of Canada, the United States and Great Britain. New Haven, Yale University Press for the Carnegie Endowment for International Peace, Division of Economics and History, 1945. xxii, 385 p. [3552]

Bridenbaugh, Carl. Cities in the wilderness; the first century of urban life in America, 1625–1742. [2d ed.] New York, Knopf, 1955. 500 p. [4601]

Bridenbaugh, Carl. Cities in revolt; urban life in America, 1743–1776. New York, Knopf, 1955. xiii, 433, xxi p. [4602]

Brooks, Van Wyck. Makers and finders; a history of the writer in America, 1800–1915. New York, Dutton, 1936–52 [v. 1, 1944] 5 v. [2381]

Brown, Ralph H. Historical geography of the United States. New York, Harcourt, Brace, 1948. 596 p. [2969]

Bryce, James Bryce, viscount. The American commonwealth. London and New York, Macmillan, 1888. 2 v. [4499]

Burlingame, Roger. March of the iron men, a social history of union through invention. New York, Scribner, 1938. xvi, 500 p. [4783]

Burlingame, Roger. Engines of democracy; inventions and society in mature America. New York, Scribner, 1940. xviii, 606 p.
40–27637 T21.B77 [4783n]

Burns, Edward McNall. The American idea of mission; concepts of national purpose and destiny. New Brunswick, N.J., Rutgers University Press, 1957. 385 p.
57–10961 E169.1.B943

Burns, James MacGregor, and Jack Walter Peltason. Government by the people; the dynamics of American national, state, and local government. 3d ed. Englewood Cliffs, N.J., Prentice-Hall, 1957. 990 p. [6134]

Butts, R. Freeman, and Lawrence A. Cremin. A history of education in American culture. New York, Holt, 1953. 628 p. [5104]

Cady, Edwin H. The gentleman in America; a literary study in American culture. Syracuse, N.Y., Syracuse University Press, 1949. 232 p. [2392]

Cahn, Edmond N. The moral decision; right and wrong in the light of American law. Bloomington, Indiana University Press, 1955. 342 p. [6261]

Cash, Wilbur J. The mind of the South. New York, Knopf, 1941. 429 p. [4066]

Chase, Gilbert. America's music, from the Pilgrims to the present. New York, McGraw-Hill, 1955. xxiii, 733 p. [5608]

Cochran, Thomas C. The American business system; a historical perspective, 1900–1955. Cambridge, Harvard University Press, 1957. 227 p. [6005]

Cochran, Thomas C., and William Miller. The age of enterprise, a social history of industrial America. New York, Macmillan, 1942. 394 p. [5875]

Cohen, Morris R. American thought; a critical sketch. Edited and with a foreword by Felix S. Cohen. Glencoe, Ill., Free Press, 1954. 360 p. [3728]

Coleman, Laurence Vail. The museum in America; a critical study. Washington, American Association of Museums, 1939. 3 v. [3049]

Commager, Henry Steele. The American mind; an interpretation of American thought and character since the 1880's. New Haven, Yale University Press, 1950. 476 p. [3738]

Commager, Henry Steele, ed. America in perspective; the United States through foreign eyes. New York, Random House, 1947. xxiv, 389 p. [4231]

Couch, William T., ed. Culture in the South. Chapel Hill, University of North Carolina Press, 1934. 711 p. [4068]

Craven, Wesley Frank. The legend of the Founding Fathers. New York, New York University Press, 1956. 191 p. [3051]

Crèvecoeur, Michel Guillaume St. Jean de, called Saint John de Crèvecoeur. Letters from an American farmer. London, T. Davies, 1782. 318 p. [4500]
A paperback reprint is currently available: Dutton Everyman Paperbacks, D8.

Croly, Herbert D. The promise of American life. New York, Macmillan, 1909. 468 p. [4502]

Curti, Merle E. The growth of American thought. 2d ed. New York, Harper, 1951. xviii, 910 p. [3729]

Curti, Merle E. The roots of American loyalty. New York, Columbia University Press, 1946. 267 p. [4526]

Curti, Merle E. The social ideas of American educators. New York, Scribner, 1935. xxii, 613 p. [5116]

Curti, Merle E., ed. American scholarship in the twentieth century. Cambridge, Harvard University Press, 1953. 252 p. [3739]

Cushman, Robert E. Civil liberties in the United States; a guide to current problems and experience. Ithaca, N.Y., Cornell University Press, 1956. 248 p. [6117]

Davidson, Donald. The attack on leviathan; regionalism and nationalism in the United States. Chapel Hill, University of North Carolina Press, 1938. 368 p. [3781]

Davidson, Marshall. Life in America. Boston, Houghton Mifflin, 1951. 2 v. [5801]

Degler, Carl N. Out of our past; the forces that shaped modern America. New York, Harper, 1959. 484 p. 58–8824 E178.D37

De Grazia, Alfred. Public and republic; political representation in America. New York, Knopf, 1951. xiii, 262, ix p. [6402]

Denny, Margaret, and William H. Gilman, eds. The American writer and the European tradition. Minneapolis, Published for the University of Rochester by the University of Minnesota Press, 1950. 192 p. [2412]

De Voto, Bernard A. The course of empire; with maps by Erwin Raisz. Boston, Houghton Mifflin, 1952. xvii, 647 p. [3161]

De Voto, Bernard A. The year of decision, 1846. Boston, Little, Brown, 1943. xv, 538 p. [3331]

Dorfman, Joseph. The economic mind in American civilization. New York, Viking Press, 1946–49. 3 v. [5876]
Contents.—v. 1–2. 1606–1865.—v. 3. 1865–1918.

Dupree, A. Hunter. Science in the Federal Government, a history of policies and activities to 1940. Cambridge, Belknap Press of Harvard University Press, 1957. 460 p.
57–5484 Q127.U6D78

Edwards, Newton, and Herman G. Richey. The school in the American social order. Boston, Houghton Mifflin, 1947. 880 p. [5140]

Egbert, Donald Drew, and Stow Persons, eds. Socialism and American life. Princeton, Princeton University Press, 1952. 2 v. [3753]

Ekirch, Arthur A. The idea of progress in America, 1815–1860. New York, Columbia University Press, 1944. 305 p. [3754]

Fainsod, Merle, Lincoln Gordon, and Joseph C. Palamountain. Government and the American economy. 3d ed. New York, Norton, 1959. 996 p. 59–6084
HD3616.U47F3 1959 [5885]

Fortune. U.S.A., the permanent revolution, by the editors of Fortune in collaboration with Russell W. Davenport. New York, Prentice-Hall, 1951. xvii, 267 p. [4503]

Frank, Jerome. Courts on trial; myth and reality in American justice. Princeton, Princeton University Press, 1949. 441 p. [6285]

Frazier, Edward Franklin. The Negro in the United States. Rev. ed. New York, Macmillan, 1957. xxxiii, 769 p. [4442]

Gabriel, Ralph Henry. The course of American democratic thought. 2d ed. New York, Ronald Press, 1956. xiv, 508 p. [3741]

Glazer, Nathan. American Judaism. [Chicago] University of Chicago Press, 1957. 175 p. [5458]

Goldman, Eric F. Rendezvous with destiny; a history of modern American reform. New York, Knopf, 1952. xiii, 503, xxxvii p. [3455]

Greer, Thomas H. American social reform movements; their pattern since 1865. New York, Prentice-Hall, 1949. 313 p. [6426]

Hacker, Louis M. The triumph of American capitalism; the development of forces in American history to the end of the nineteenth century. New York, Columbia University Press, 1946. 460 p. [5878]

Hall, Thomas Cuming. The religious background of American culture. Boston, Little, Brown, 1930. xiv, 348 p. [5394]

Hammond, Bray. Banks and politics in America, from the Revolution to the Civil War. Princeton, Princeton University Press, 1957. 771 p. [6000]

Handlin, Oscar. The uprooted; the epic story of the great migrations that made the American people. Boston, Little, Brown, 1951. 310 p. [4411]

Hansen, Marcus Lee. The immigrant in American history; edited with a foreword by Arthur M. Schlesinger. Cambridge, Harvard University Press, 1940. 230 p. [4413]

Hays, Samuel P. The response to industrialism, 1885–1914. [Chicago] University of Chicago Press, 1957. 210 p. 57–6981 HC105.H35

Herberg, Will. Protestant, Catholic, Jew; an essay in American religious sociology. Garden City, N.Y., Doubleday, 1955. 320 p. [5488]

Higham, John. Strangers in the land; patterns of American nativism, 1860–1925. New Brunswick, N.J., Rutgers University Press, 1955. xiv, 431 p. [4422]

A History of American life, edited by Arthur M. Schlesinger and Dixon Ryan Fox. New York, Macmillan, 1927–48. 13 v. [3085]

Hofstadter, Richard. The American political tradition and the men who made it. New York, Knopf, 1948. xi, 378, xviii p. [3099]

Hofstadter, Richard. Social Darwinism in American thought, 1860–1915. Philadelphia, University of Pennsylvania Press, 1944. 191 p. [3755]

Hopkins, Charles Howard. The rise of the social gospel in American Protestantism, 1865–1915. New Haven, Yale University Press, 1940. 352 p. [5489]

Hubbell, Jay Broadus. The South in American literature, 1607–1900. [Durham, N.C.] Duke University Press, 1954. xix, 987 p. [2442]

Huth, Hans. Nature and the American; three centuries of changing attitudes. Berkeley, University of California Press, 1957. xvii, 250 p.
57–12393 QH77.U6H8 [5884n]

Kazin, Alfred. On native grounds, an interpretation of modern American prose literature. New York, Reynal & Hitchcock, 1942. 541 p. [2449]

Key, Valdimer O. Politics, parties, and pressure groups. 4th ed. New York, Crowell, 1958. 783 p. 58–6098 JF2051.K4 1958 [6335]

Knight, Grant C. The critical period in American literature. Chapel Hill, University of North Carolina Press, 1951. 208 p. [2450]

Knight, Grant C. The strenuous age in American literature. Chapel Hill, University of North Carolina Press, 1954. 270 p. [2451]

Koht, Halvdan. The American spirit in Europe, a survey of transatlantic influences. Philadelphia, University of Pennsylvania Press, 1949. 289 p. [3769]

Kouwenhoven, John A. Made in America; the arts in modern civilization. Garden City, N.Y., Doubleday, 1948. xv, 303 p. [5691]

Kraus, Michael. The Atlantic civilization: eighteenth-century origins. Ithaca, N.Y., Cornell University Press, 1949. 334 p. [3770]

Landis, James M. The administrative process. New Haven, Yale University Press, 1938. 160 p. [6312]

Larkin, Oliver W. Art and life in America. New York, Rinehart, 1949. xviii, 547 p. [5693]

Lehmann-Haupt, Hellmut. The book in America; a history of the making and selling of books in the United States, by Hellmut Lehmann-Haupt in collaboration with Lawrence C. Wroth and Rollo G. Silver. 2d [rev. and enl. American] ed. New York, Bowker, 1951. xiv, 493 p. [6440]

Leigh, Robert D. The public library in the United States; the general report of the Public Library Inquiry. New York, Columbia University Press, 1950. 272 p. [6480]

Lerner, Max. America as a civilization; life and thought in the United States today. New York, Simon & Schuster, 1957. 1036 p. 57–10979 E169.1.L532

Leuchtenburg, William E. The perils of prosperity, 1914–32. [Chicago] University of Chicago Press, 1958. 313 p. 58–5680 HC106.3.L3957

Literary history of the United States. Editors: Robert E. Spiller, Willard Thorp, Thomas H. Johnson [and] Henry Seidel Canby; associates: Howard Mumford Jones, Dixon Wecter [and] Stanley T. Williams. New York, Macmillan, 1948. 3 v. [2460]

Lynd, Robert S., and Helen Merrell Lynd. Middletown, a study in contemporary American culture. New York, Harcourt, Brace, 1929. 550 p. [4592]

Lynd, Robert S., and Helen Merrell Lynd. Middletown in transition; a study in cultural conflicts. New York, Harcourt, Brace, 1937. xviii, 604 p. [4593]

Lynes, Russell. The tastemakers. New York, Harper, 1954. 362 p. [5694]

Macleod, William Christie. The American Indian frontier. New York, Knopf, 1928. xxiii, 598 p. [3030]

Mann, Arthur. Yankee reformers in the urban age. Cambridge, Belknap Press of Harvard University Press, 1954. 314 p. [4530]

Matthiessen, Francis O. American renaissance; art and expression in the age of Emerson and Whitman. New York, Oxford University Press, 1941. xxiv, 678 p. [2476]

Maurer, Herrymon. Great enterprise; growth and behavior of the big corporation. New York, Macmillan, 1955. 303 p. [6022]

May, Henry Farnham. Protestant churches and industrial America. New York, Harper, 1949. 297 p. [5492]

Mencken, Henry L. The American language; an inquiry into the development of English in the United States. 4th ed., cor., enl., and rewritten. New York, Knopf, 1936. xi, 769, xxix p.
—— —— Supplement I–II. New York, Knopf, 1945–48. 2 v. [2248]

Miller, Perry. The New England mind; the seventeenth century. New York, Macmillan, 1939. 528 p. [3742]

Miller, Perry. The New England mind: from colony to province. Cambridge, Harvard University Press, 1953. 513 p. [3743]

Miller, William. The book industry, a report of the Public Library Inquiry. New York, Columbia University Press, 1949. xvi, 156 p. [6441]

Mills, Charles Wright. White collar; the American middle classes. New York, Oxford University Press, 1951. xx, 378 p. [4553]

Milton, George Fort. The use of presidential power, 1789–1943. Boston, Little, Brown, 1944. 349 p. [6146]

Morison, Samuel Eliot. The intellectual life of colonial New England. [2d ed.] New York, New York University Press, 1956. 288 p. [3745]

Morison, Samuel Eliot, and Henry Steele Commager. The growth of the American Republic. [4th ed., rev. and enl.] New York, Oxford University Press, 1950. 2 v. [3103]

Morris, Lloyd R. Not so long ago. New York, Random House, 1949. xviii, 504 p. [4519]

Morris, Lloyd R. Postscript to yesterday; America: the last fifty years. New York, Random House, 1947. xxvi, 475 p. [3746]

Mott, Frank Luther. American journalism; a history of newspapers in the United States through 260 years: 1690 to 1950. Rev. ed. New York, Macmillan, 1950. xiv, 835 p. [2847]

Mott, Frank Luther. A history of American magazines. Cambridge, Harvard University Press, 1938–57. 4 v. [2915]

Mumford, Lewis. The brown decades; a study of the arts in America, 1865–1895. [2d ed.] New York, Dover, 1955. 266 p. [5695]

Mumford, Lewis. The golden day; a study in American literature and culture. New York, Norton [1934?] 283 p. [3731]

Mumford, Lewis. Sticks and stones; a study of American architecture and civilization. [2d ed.] New York, Dover, 1955. 238 p. [5701]

Murrell, William. A history of American graphic humor. New York, Whitney Museum of American Art, 1933–38. 2 v. [5803]

Nef, John U. The United States and civilization. Chicago, University of Chicago Press, 1942. xviii, 421 p. [4504]

Nevins, Allan, ed. America through British eyes. [New ed. rev. and enl.] New York, Oxford University Press, 1948. 530 p. [4234]

Oliver, John W. History of American technology. New York, Ronald Press, 1956. 676 p. [4727]

Parkes, Henry Bamford. The United States of America, a history. 2d ed., rev. New York, Knopf, 1959. xviii, 783, xxiv p.
59–6118 E178.P25 1959 [3104]

Parrington, Vernon Louis. Main currents in American thought; an interpretation of American literature from the beginnings to 1920. New York, Harcourt, Brace, 1927–30. 3 v. [2485]

Pearce, Roy Harvey. The savages of America, a study of the Indian and the idea of civilization. Baltimore, Johns Hopkins Press, 1953. xv, 252 p. [3031]

Perry, Ralph Barton. Puritanism and democracy. New York, Vanguard Press, 1944. xvi, 688 p. [3733]

Persons, Stow. American minds; a history of ideas. New York, Holt, 1958. 467 p.
58–6318 B851.P4

Persons, Stow, ed. Evolutionary thought in America. [Edited for the special Program in American Civilization at Princeton University] New Haven, Yale University Press, 1950. 462 p. [3758]

Pickering, Ernest. The homes of America, as they have expressed the lives of our people for three centuries. New York, Crowell, 1951. 284 p. [5702]

Pochmann, Henry A. German culture in America; philosophical and literary influences, 1600–1900. With the assistance of Arthur R. Schultz and others. Madison, University of Wisconsin Press, 1957. xv, 865 p. 55–6791 E169.1.P596

Potter, David M. People of plenty; economic abundance and the American character. [Chicago] University of Chicago Press, 1954. xxvii, 219 p. [3734]

Pressly, Thomas J. Americans interpret their Civil War. Princeton, Princeton University Press, 1954. xvi, 347 p. [3407]

Purcell, Theodore V. The worker speaks his mind on company and union. Cambridge, Harvard University Press, 1953. xix, 344 p. [6055]

Read, Conyers, ed. The Constitution reconsidered. New York, Columbia University Press, 1938. xviii, 424 p. [6082]

Riesman, David. The lonely crowd; a study of the changing American character, by David Riesman in collaboration with Reuel Denney and Nathan Glazer. New Haven, Yale University Press, 1950. xvii, 386 p. [4555]

Riesman, David. Faces in the crowd; individual studies in character and politics, by David Riesman in collaboration with Nathan Glazer. New Haven, Yale University Press, 1952. 751 p. [4556]

Robert, Joseph C. The story of tobacco in America. New York, Knopf, 1949. xii, 296, xxiv p. [5829]

Rosenberg, Bernard, and David Manning White, eds. Mass culture; the popular arts in America. Glencoe, Ill., Free Press, 1957. 561 p. [6443]

Rossiter, Clinton L. Conservatism in America. New York, Knopf, 1955. 326 p. [6067]

Rossiter, Clinton L. Seedtime of the Republic; the origin of the American tradition of political liberty. New York, Harcourt, Brace, 1953. xiv, 558 p. [6068]

Rourke, Constance M. American humor; a study of the national character. New York, Harcourt, Brace, 1931. 324 p. [2501]

Rourke, Constance M. The roots of American culture and other essays. Edited, with a preface, by Van Wyck Brooks. New York, Harcourt, Brace, 1942. 305 p. [3736]

Rural life in the United States, by Carl C. Taylor [and others] New York, Knopf, 1949. xviii, 549, xii p. [4583]

Santayana, George. Character & opinion in the United States. New York, Scribner, 1920. 233 p. 20–26993 B945.S3C5 [5369]
A paperback reprint is currently available: Doubleday, Anchor Books, A73.

Savelle, Max. Seeds of liberty; the genesis of the American mind. New York, Knopf, 1948. xix, 587, xxxi p. [3747]

Schafer, Joseph. The social history of American agriculture. New York, Macmillan, 1936. 302 p. [5832]

Schlesinger, Arthur M. Paths to the present. New York, Macmillan, 1949. 317 p. [3140]

Schlesinger, Arthur M., Jr. The age of Jackson. Boston, Little, Brown, 1945. xiv, 577 p. [3352]

Schneider, Herbert W. A history of American philosophy. New York, Columbia University Press, 1946. xiv, 646 p. [5261]

Schneider, Herbert W. Religion in 20th century America. Cambridge, Harvard University Press, 1952. 244 p. [5409]

Seldes, Gilbert V. The great audience. New York, Viking Press, 1950. 299 p. [4895]

Siegfried, André. America comes of age, a French analysis. Translated from the French by Henry H. Hemming and Doris Hemming. New York, Harcourt, Brace, 1927. 358 p. [4506]

Siegfried, André. America at mid-century. Translated by Margaret Ledésert. New York, Harcourt, Brace, 1955. 357 p. [4508]

Siepmann, Charles A. Radio, television and society. New York, Oxford University Press, 1950. 410 p. [4703]

Sirjamaki, John. The American family in the twentieth century. Cambridge, Harvard University Press, 1953. 227 p. [4571]

Smith, Cecil Michener. Worlds of music. Philadelphia, Lippincott, 1952. 328 p. [5623]

Smith, Henry Nash. Virgin land; the American West as symbol and myth. Cambridge, Harvard University Press, 1950. xiv, 305 p. [3759]

Stewart, George R. American ways of life. Garden City, N.Y., Doubleday, 1954. 310 p. [4521]

Struik, Dirk Jan. Yankee science in the making. Boston, Little, Brown, 1948. 430 p. [4730]

Sutton, Francis X., and others. The American business creed. Cambridge, Harvard University Press, 1956. 414 p. [6010]

Sweet, William Warren. Religion in the development of American culture, 1765–1840. New York, Scribner, 1952. xiv, 338 p. [5411]

Taeuber, Conrad, and Irene B. Taeuber. The changing population of the United States. For the Social Science Research Council in cooperation with the U.S. Dept. of Commerce, Bureau of the Census. New York, Wiley, 1958. 357 p. (Census monograph series) 57–13451 HB3505.T3

Taft, Robert. Photography and the American scene, a social history, 1839–1889. New York, Macmillan, 1938. 546 p. [5781]

Tannenbaum, Frank. Crime and the community. Boston, Ginn, 1938. xiv, 487 p. [4656]

Thistlethwaite, Frank. The great experiment; an introduction to the history of the American people. Cambridge [Eng.] University Press, 1955. 335 p. [3146]

Tocqueville, Alexis C. H. M. C. de. Democracy in America. The Henry Reeve text as rev. by Francis Bowen, now further corr. and edited, with introd., editorial notes, and bibliographies, by Phillips Bradley. New York, Knopf, 1945. 2 v. [4512]

Tunnard, Christopher, and Henry Hope Reed. American skyline; the growth and form of our cities and towns. Boston, Houghton Mifflin, 1955. 302 p. [4609]

Turner, Frederick Jackson. The frontier in American history. New York, Holt, 1950, ©1947. 375 p. [3147]

Turpie, Mary C. A selected list of paintings for the study of American civilization. Minneapolis, Program in American Studies, University of Minnesota, 1953. 109 l. [5757]

Turpie, Mary C., comp. American music for the study of American civilization. [v. 1] Formal compositions. Folk and popular songs. Minneapolis, Program in American Studies, University of Minnesota, 1955. 90 l. [5613]

Tyler, Alice (Felt). Freedom's ferment; phases of American social history to 1860. Minneapolis, University of Minnesota Press, 1944. 608 p. [4522]

Ulman, Lloyd. The rise of the national trade union; the development and significance of its structure, governing institutions, and economic policies. Cambridge, Harvard University Press, 1955. xix, 639 p. [6041]

Vanderbilt, Arthur T. Men and measures in the law; five lectures delivered at the University of Michigan, Apr. 1948. New York, Knopf, 1949. xxi, 156, x p. [6270]

Ward, Alfred Dudley, ed. Goals of economic life. New York, Harper, 1953. 470 p. [5899]

Webb, Walter Prescott. The Great Plains. [Boston] Ginn, 1931. xv, 525 p. [4164]

Wecter, Dixon. The hero in America, a chronicle of hero-worship. New York, Scribner, 1941. 530 p. [4533]

Wecter, Dixon. The saga of American society; a record of social aspiration, 1607–1937. New York, Scribner, 1937. 504 p. [4534]

Welker, Robert Henry. Birds and men; American birds in science, art, literature, and conservation, 1800–1900. Cambridge, Belknap Press of Harvard University Press, 1955. 230 p. [4741]

White, Edward A. Science and religion in American thought; the impact of naturalism. Stanford, Stanford University Press, 1952. 117 p. [3761]

White, Morton G. Social thought in America, the revolt against formalism. New York, Viking Press, 1949. 260 p. [4545]

Wiener, Philip P. Evolution and the founders of pragmatism. Cambridge, Harvard University Press, 1949. xiv, 288 p. [5264]

Williams, Robin M. American society; a sociological interpretation. New York, Knopf, 1951. xiii, 545 p. [4558]

Wilson, Francis Graham. The American political mind; a textbook in political theory. New York, McGraw-Hill, 1949. 506 p. [6070]

Wisconsin. University. Regionalism in America. Edited by Merrill Jensen. Madison, University of Wisconsin Press, 1951. xvi, 425 p. [3785]

Wish, Harvey. Society and thought in America. New York, Longmans, Green, 1950–52. 2 v. [3150]

Wittke, Carl F. The Irish in America. Baton Rouge, Louisiana State University Press, 1956. 319 p. [4498]

Wood, James Playsted. Magazines in the United States. 2d ed. New York, Ronald Press, 1956. 390 p. [2919]

Wright, Louis B. The first gentlemen of Virginia; intellectual qualities of the early colonial ruling class. San Marino, Calif., Huntington Library, 1940. 373 p. [3749]

Wright, Thomas Goddard. Literary culture in early New England, 1620–1730. Edited by his wife. New Haven, Yale University Press, 1920. 322 p. [2549]

Years of the modern; an American appraisal. John W. Chase, ed. New York, Longmans, Green, 1949. 354 p. [4513]

677676 O–63–70

Index

A

AEF. See American Expeditionary Force
AFL. See American Federation of Labor
AFL-CIO. See American Federation of Labor and Congress of Industrial Organizations
ASCAP. See American Society of Composers, Authors, and Publishers
A l'abri, 675
Aandahl, Fredrick, ed., 3292
Aaron, Daniel, 6424
  ed., 3070
Abbot, Charles Greely, about, 4722, 4775
Abbot, Waldo, 4682
Abbott, Charles C., 5976
Abbott, Edith, 4404–5, 4632
Abbott, Francis, ed., 5435
Abbott, George, 2332–33
Abbott, Lyman, about, 5396
Abdy, Edward Strutt, 4311
  about, 4310
Abe Lincoln in Illinois, 1752, 2334
Abegglen, James C., 6029
Abel, John Jacob, about, 4722
Abell, A. S., about, 2876
Abell, Aaron I., 5489
Aberdeen, S. Dak., 3897
Abernathy, Cecil, 1046
Abernethy, Thomas Perkins, 3237, 3273, 4072, 4103
Abilene, Kans., 4157–58
Abolitionism, 56, 178, 216, 239–40, 449, 562, 662, 2279, 3305, 3366, 3370, 3375, 3380–81, 3401, 3404, 3413, 3431
  See also Antislavery movement; Slavery
Abrams, Charles, 4600
Abrams, Ray H., ed., 5409
Absalom, Absalom!, 1388
Academic freedom. See Teachers and teaching—academic freedom Academies (schools), 5155, 5212
  New York (State), 5159
  Philadelphia, 5130
Acadians
  fiction, 745
  poetry, 429
  See also Cajuns
Accent, 2551
Accident Claims Tribunal, 6299
Acculturation, 3041, 4410–11, 4435, 4447, 4456, 4463
Acheson, Dean, 3543, 6316
Acheson, Sam Hanna, 2866
Ackerman, Edward A., 5900
Across Spoon River, 1599
Across the Board on Tomorrow Morning, 2113
Across the Continent, 2301
Across the River and into the Trees, 1499 Across the Wide Missouri, 3330
Act of Darkness, 1225
Actfive, and Other Poems, 1586
Actors and actresses, 1214, 1221, 2475, 4927–39
  biog. (collected), 4931, 4933–34, 4938
  motion picture, 4946
  Negro, 4921
Adam & Eve & the City, 1871
Adamic, Louis, 2578–79
  about, 2579
Adams, Abigail, 96–100, 3277
  about, 99, 2615
Adams, Adeline, ed., 5740
Adams, Agatha B., 1479, 1895
Adams, Andy, 683–87
  about, 687
Adams, Brooks, 2601
  about, 2601, 6424
Adams, Charles Francis (1807–1886), 2580
  ed., 97–99
  about, 688, 2581
Adams, Charles Francis (1835–1915), 52, 2580–82, 3276–77, 4036
  ed., 3279, 3312
  about, 2582
Adams, Ephraim Douglass, 3550
Adams, Franklin P., 865
Adams, George P., ed., 5250
Adams, Henry, 688–700, 2580, 3274–75, 3311
  about, 688, 941, 1231, 2407, 2480, 2544, 2616, 3055, 3058
Adams, Herbert B., 3044
  about, 4540
Adams, James Truslow, 698, 3088
  ed., 2967, 3071
Adams, John, 96, 99, 3276–77, 3279
  about, 2608, 3276, 3278–79, 3285, 4034
Adams, John Luther, about, 5433
Adams, John Quincy, 3312
  about, 3313, 3360, 3529
Adams, Léonie, 1153–54
Adams, Marian, about, 1231
Adams, Nehemiah, ed., 63–64
Adams, Ramon F., 2253
Adams, Randolph G., 6460
Adams, Samuel Hopkins, 1155–60, 2688, 3475
Adams, W. B., 4295
Adams, Walter, ed., 5901
Adams family, 2503
Adamson, W. M., 5909
Addams, Jane, 4614
The Adding Machine, 1689, 2348
Addison, Agnes, 3751
Addison, James T., 5457
Addison, Joseph, about, 381
Addresses. See Lectures and lecturing Ade, George, 701–5
Adirondack Mountains, 3966, 5064, 5765
Adirondack State Park, 3966
Adkins, Nelson F., 134
  ed., 160
Adler, Felix, 5289
  about, 5435
Adler, John H., 5971
Administrative courts, 6316
Administrative law, 6090, 6181, 6201, 6310–16
Administrative procedure, 6311–12, 6316
Administrative reform, 6316
Admiral of the Ocean Sea, 3164
Adolescents. See Youth
Adult education, 5105, 5209, 5219, 6482
Adventurers, outlaws, etc., 51, 66, 5523, 5525, 5531, 5556, 5559, 5562
Adventures of a Novelist, 721
Adventures of a Young Man, 1332
The Adventures of Augie March, 1921–22
The Adventures of Huckleberry Finn, 782–83, 787–93, 811
The Adventures of Tom Sawyer, 778–83, 811
The Adventures of Wesley Jackson, 2119
Advertising, 5962
  fiction, 2188
  hist., 5958
  radio, 4696
  television, 4696
Advice to the Privileged Orders, 103 Aeronautics, 4721 flights, 2714–15, 2977, 4788
  hist., 5938

Aeronautics, commercial, 5943
finance, 5943
govt. regulation, 5941
hist., 5941
Aeronautics, military, 3643a, 3647, 3676, 3711, 3717, 3727
Aesthetic Papers, 586
The Affluent Society, 5886 Africa
descr., 2282
fiction, 1927, 2096
technical assistance to, 3641
travel & travelers, 2282
After Holbein, 1855
After 1903—What?, 1218
After the Genteel Tradition, 2406
After the Lost Generation, 2371
Agard, Walter R., 3739
Agassiz, Elizabeth (Cary), 4742
Agassiz, Louis, 4742, 4744
about, 4721, 4724, 4742, 5222
The Age of Innocence, 1852, 1855
The Age of Reason, 155
Age of Thunder, 2093
Agee, James, 1907–8
Ager, Trygve M., tr., 1723
Agrarian policy, 3285
Agrarianism, 2421, 3420–21, 5833, 5859, 6358, 6372, 6426–27
Middle West, 3446
Southern States, 3286, 3361, 3451
The West, 3361, 3427
The Agrarians (literary movement), 1464, 1809, 2559
Agribusiness. See Agriculture—econ. aspects
Agricultural colleges, 2790
Agricultural credit, 5848
Agricultural economics. See Agriculture—econ. aspects
Agricultural education, 5191, 5836
Agricultural extension work, 5836, 5851
Agricultural fairs, 5827
Agricultural labor, 5846
Agricultural machinery, 5830
Agricultural organizations, 3421 Agricultural products, 5818–19, 5847
hist., 5820
marketing, 5845
Middle Atlantic States, 4329
New England, 4329
New York (State), 4237–38
Northwest, Old, 4329
Ohio, 4119
Pa., 4237–38
Southern States, 4239
Agricultural research, 2790, 5836, 5857
Agriculture, 2943, 2947, 2951–53, 5819–61
cooperatives, 5842
dictionary, 5849
econ. aspects, 4579, 4581–82, 5819, 5832–34, 5838, 5841, 5843–44, 5847, 5850, 5861, 5877, 6358
govt. regulation, 5831, 5838, 5853–56, 5860 handbooks, manuals, etc., 5849
hist., 5819–38
Colonial period, 5821
to 1860, 5820, 5823
Agriculture—Continued price supports, 5855, 5860
soc. aspects, 5899
stat., 4329
yearbooks, 2947, 2951
Calif., 4372
Fla., 4248–50
Ga., 4248–50
Great Plains, 4164
Ky., 4276
Middle West, 5831
Mo., 4108
New England, 4031, 4266, 5840
N.J., 4053
New York (State), 4242–46, 4266
N.C., 4090, 4248–50, 4276
N. Dak., 4165
Northwest, Pacific, 4214
Northwestern States, 4147, 4212
Ohio, 4276
Pa., 4054, 4242–46, 4266
S.C., 4248–50, 4276
Southern States, 4079, 4083, 4266
Tenn., 4276
Tex., 4194
The West, 4156, 4160
Agriculture and state, 5831, 5833–34, 5837–38, 5851–61
Agwani, Mohammed Shafi, 3588
Ah, Wilderness!, 1648, 2327
Ahlstrom, Sydney E., 5424
Ahnebrink, Lars, 2365
Ahrens, Maurice R., 5224
Aiken, Conrad Potter, 844, 1161–66, 1364
ed., 2344
about, 1165
Aiken, George L., 2347
Aikin, Wilford M., 5131
Aikman, Duncan, 4176
The Air-Conditioned Nightmare, 1613
Air Force, about, 3643a
Air Materiel Command, about, 3643a
Air Transport Command, hist., 1551
Air University, about, 3643a
Airlines, 5920, 5941, 5943
Akers, Dwight, 5054
Al Aaraaf, Tamerlane, and Minor Poems, 523–27
Al Que Quierel, 1881
Alabama, 3953, 4079, 4099 editorial, sketches, etc., 194–97, 379–80, 1907
fiction, 1792–95, 1836–38
folksongs & ballads, 5565
guidebook, 3848
hist., 4099, 4104
Alabama claims, 3444
Alaska, 2719–20, 2751, 3554, 3968, 4218–19
climate, 2953
fiction, 2162
guidebook, 3940
hist., 3968, 4219
Indian art, 3016 place names, bibl., 2976 purchase, 3429
short stories, 1048–52, 1058
Albany, N.Y., 3807
Albemarle County, Va., guidebook, 3828
Albertson, Frederick W., 2966
Alberty, Harold B., 5158
Albion, Robert Greenhalgh, 5937, 5951
Albree, John, ed., 672
Albright, Spencer D., 6400
Albright, William Foxwell, 5426
about, 5426
Albro, John A., 59, 65
Albuquerque, N. Mex., 4176, 4187
Alcoa, about, 5908
Alcott, Amos Bronson, 186–87
about, 186, 2280, 5220, 5265–66, 5305
Alcott, Louisa May, 188–89
about, 188, 2615
Alden, John Richard, 3238, 4072
ed., 3683
Alderfer, Evan B., 5902
Alderfer, Harold F., 3475
Alderman, S. S., 3562
Aldrich, Richard, 5626
Aldrich, Thomas Bailey, 706–15
about, 2277, 2922
Aldridge, Alfred Owen, 3187
Aldridge, John W., 2371, 2373
ed., 2372
Aleck Maury, 1466
Alexander, Carter, 5098
Alexander, De Alva Stanwood, 6150
Alexander, Hartley Burr, 3015
Alexander's Bridge, 1277
Alexandria, Va., guidebook, 3829
Alfred Venison's Poems, 1666
Alfriend, Edward M., 2305
The Algerian Captive, 168
The Alhambra, 381
Alias Simon Suggs, 379
Alice Adams, 1802, 1805
Alien and Sedition Acts, 3308
Aliens, 4404–5, 4468, 6117, 6120, 6122
All God's Chillun Got Wings, 1648
All My Sons, 2043, 2046, 2335–36
All the King's Men, 2197
All the Young Men, 1553
The Allegash and East Branch, 594
Allegheny, Pa., hist., 3817
Allegheny County, Pa., 4591
Allegheny Mountains, travel & travelers, 4350
Allegheny River, 3992
Allegiance, 3129, 4526, 4773, 6107, 6115, 6118
See also Loyalty oaths
Allen, Arthur A., 2962
Allen, C. R., 5211
Allen, Charles, 2914
Allen, Edward L., 5903
Allen, Elizabeth L., 4443
Allen, Ethan, 5251, 5408
fiction, 580–82
Allen, Francis H., comp., 599
Allen, Fred, 4964
about, 4964
Allen, Frederick Lewis, 3476–78, 3782, 4514, 5978
Allen, Gardner W., 3678, 3685–86
Allen, Gay Wilson, 620, 647, 660
ed., 645, 648, 2349
Allen, Harry C., 3551
Allen, Harry K., 5164

Allen, Hervey, 1167–71, 1512
ed., 3969, 3977, 3996–4017
Allen, Hollis P., 5099
Allen, James Lane, 716–20, 2296
about, 716
Allen, Jerry, 813
Allen, John Edward, 2900
Allen, Jules Verne, 5503
Allen, Paul, 109
Allen, Raymond B., 4855
Allen, Robert S., 6195
ed., 6195, 6207
Allen, Shirley W., 5862
Allen County, Ohio, guidebook, 3869
Allred, B. W., 2966
Allston, Washington, about, 5760
Almanacs, 122, 131–32, 2493
Almond, Gabriel A., 3609
Almy, Millie, 5148
Alnwick Castle, 324–25
Along This Way, 1539
Alsberg, Henry G., ed., 3822, 3924–25
The Altar of the Dead, 1012
Alterton, Margaret, 534
Altgeld, John Peter
about, 3446
fiction, 1978
Altitudes, 2970
Aluminum Company of America, about, 5908
Alvord, Clarence Walworth, 4128
ed., 4126–32
about, 3058
Always the Land, 1969
Always the Young Strangers, 1732
Amacher, Richard E., ed., 130
Amaranth, 1714
Amargosa Desert, 3947
The Ambassadors, 998–99
about, 1009
Amberg, George, 4967
Ambler, Charles Henry, 3271, 4089
Amdur, Leon H., 4780
America (song), about, 5616
America in literature
European, 3771–72
French, 3773
bibl., 3773
America Was Promises, 1586
The American, 987–88
The American, a Middle Western Legend, 1978
American Academy of Pediatrics. Committee for the Study of Child Health Services, 4841 American Academy of Political and Social Science, Philadelphia, 6106
The American Adam, 2459
American Antiquarian Society, Worcester, Mass., about, 6447
American Anti-Slavery Society, about, 3360, 3370
American Arbitration Association, about, 6299
American Association for Gifted Children, 5205
American Association of School Administrators, 5106, 5240 American Automobile Association, 2952
about, 5005
American Bar Association, about, 6307, 6331–32
American Chemical Society, about, 4731
American Child, 1972
American Civil Liberties Union, about, 6106, 6127, 6322
American Colonization Society, about, 3370, 3375, 4310
The American Commonwealth, 4499
American Council of Learned Societies, 5100
American Council of Learned Societies. Committee on Linguistic and National Stocks in the Population of the United States, 4390
American Council on Education. Cooperative Study of Evaluation in General Education, 5160
The American Crisis, 155
The American Democrat, 265–67
American Dialect Society, 2254–62
American Education Fellowship, 5131
American Educational Research Association, 5247
American English, 2237, 2243, 2245, 5127
See also Language
American Estimates, 2396
American Expeditionary Force, about, 3710
American Expeditionary Force. Division of Urology, about, 4832
American Farm Bureau Federation, about, 5831, 5859
American Federation of Labor, 5906
about, 6034–36, 6050, 6052, 6360
American Federation of Labor and Congress of Industrial Organizations, about, 6034, 6049
American Federation of Musicians, about, 5619 American Folklore Society, 5518
about, 5518
American Foundation for Political Education, 3617
American Foundation for the Blind, about, 4636
American Fur Company, about, 4148, 6024
American Geographical Society of New York, hist., 2941
American Guide Series, 3786–3941
American Harvest, 2354
American Heritage, 2339
American Historical Association, 3050, 6224
American Historical Association. Commission on the Social Studies, 5116
An American Hunter, 1724
American Ideas for English Readers, 461
An American in Paris (music), 5678
American Indians. See Indians, American American Institute of Chemical Engineers, 4793
American Issues, 2355
American Jewish Congress, about, 6106
American Law Institute, 6280
American Legion, about, 3645
American Library Association, 6482
about, 6486
American Library Association. Coordinating Committee on Revision of Public Library Standards, 6480
American Life in Literature, 2340
American Literature and the Dream, 2400
American Medical Association, about, 4806–7, 4882, 4885 American Men of Letters [1st ser.], 2277–82
about, 1136
American Men of Letters [2d. ser.], 2283–89
The American Mercury, 1602
The American Mind, 2491
American Newspaper Publishers Association, about, 2855
The American Notebooks, 349
The American of the Future, 2469
American Outpost, 1757
American Party, about, 4515
American Philosophical Society, Philadelphia, 4059
about, 4718
American Psychiatric Association, 4833
about, 4837
hist., 4833, 4863
American Quarterly, 2553
American Railway Express Company, about, 4667
American Renaissance, 585, 2476
American Revolution, 3089, 3139, 3157, 3237–72, 3678–84, 4038 campaigns & battles, 3238–39, 3680, 3682–83, 4251
sources, 3239
causes, 3128, 3176, 3188, 3231, 3237–38, 3241, 3243, 3246, 3255, 3257–58, 3261–62, 3265, 3272, 3304
commerce, 5948
diplomatic hist., 3519, 3528, 3569
econ. aspects, 6016
European opinion, 3769 foreign participation, 3238, 3248–50, 3269, 3773
for. rel., 3187, 3239, 3272
hist., 2608, 2673, 3179, 3189–90, 3266, 3277, 3279
sources, 3183–84, 3260, 3277
in art, 5775
labor condit., 6057 military hist., 3238–39, 3255, 3261, 3269, 3271–72
sources, 3239
mutinies, 3264
naval operations, 3678
personal narratives, 3244, 4251
politics, 2740
religious aspects, 5406, 5411, 5477
treason, 3264
American Revolution in literature
drama, 105, 1477
fiction, 239, 252–57, 405, 409–11, 546–47, 552–53, 579–82, 766–67, 1222, 1239–40, 1355, 1442, 1695, 1707–11, 1730, 1916, 1974, 1976–77
letters, 96–100

American Revolution in literature—Continued pamphleteering works, 138, 147, 154–60
poetry, 134–39, 146, 148, 165, 167, 323
satire, 147, 165, 167
The American Rhythm, 1196
The American Scene, 1002–3
The American Scholar, 283
about, 230
American Society of Composers, Authors, and Publishers (ASCAP), about, 5621, 5681
American Society of Equity, about, 5831
American Song, 1968
The American Spirit in Letters, 2532
The American Spirit in Literature, 2491
American studies programs, 2553, 5184
American Telephone and Telegraph Company, about, 4673, 4710
American Theatre Wing War Service, Inc., about, 4919
The American Tradition in Literature, 2324
An American Tragedy, 1338
American Unitarian Association, about, 5472
The American Way, 1548
The American Way of Poetry, 2530
The American Weekly Mercury, about, 2854, 2880
The American Writer and the European Tradition, 2412
American Writers Series, 2290–96
Americanisms (language), 2236–41, 2243–48, 2250, 2252, 2269, 2272, 2466, 5127
See also Language
Americans in Great Britain (Colonial period), 3227
America's Coming-of-Age, 2380
America's Lost Plays, 2297–2317
Ames, E. S., 5289
Amherst, Mass., in literature, 984
Amherst College, 2674
curriculum, 5199
hist., 5200
Amish in Pennsylvania, 4058, 4480
Ammen, Daniel, 3700
Amnesty (1861–98), 3388
Among the Corn-Rows, 893
Among the Hills, 669
Amory, Cleveland, 4035
Ampère, Jean Jacques Antoine, 4358–59
about, 4358
Amphibious warfare, 3668
The Anatomy of Nonsense, 2544
Ancestors' Brocades, 851
&, 1313
And Gladly Teach, 2491
And in the Human Heart, 1166
And Still the Waters Run, 3025
Anderson, Charles A., ed., 5466
Anderson, Charles R., ed., 1046
Anderson, Gordon V., 5229
Anderson, Hobson Dewey, 6043
Anderson, John, 4905
Anderson, Lee, 2350
Anderson, Marian, 5673
about, 5673
Anderson, Mary, 2584
about, 2584
Anderson, Maxwell, 1171–77, 2332–33, 2335–37, 2348
Anderson, Nels, 5465
Anderson, Odin W., 4886
Anderson, Oscar E., 4794
Anderson, Paul Russell, 5251
Anderson, Sherwood, 832, 1178–87
about, 959, 1182, 1186, 1188–89, 2372, 2406, 2419, 2429
Anderson, William, 6131, 6196
Andersonville, 1544
Andover House, Boston, about, 5438
Andover Review, 5438
Andover Theological Seminary, about, 5438
André, 2337, 2347
Andrews, Charles M., 3176–77, 3202
about, 3046
Andrews, E. A., 4724
Andrews, Frank Emerson, 4615–16, 4623
Andrews, J. B., 6033
Andrews, J. Cutler, 2851
Andrews, Kenneth R., 814
Andrews, Wayne, 5698
Andria, 1864
Anesthesia, hist., 4816
The Angel that Troubled the Waters, 1864
Angell, J. R., about, 5389
Angell, James Burrill, about, 5223
Angels and Earthly Creatures, 1903
Anghiera, Pietro Martire d', 3153
Angle, Paul M., 3395, 6469
ed., 3143, 3391
Anglo-American folklore
Ky., 5529, 5546
Mississippi River, 5523
N.C., 5529
Ozark Mountains, 5543
Southwestern States, 5518
Tex., 5518
Va., 5529
The West, 5526
Anglo-American folksongs and ballads, 5504, 5550, 5566
bibl., 5550
hist., 5566
theories, methods, etc., 5550, 5566
Appalachian Mountains, 5583
Blue Ridge Mountains, 5582
Buchanan County, Va., 5582
Ind., 5571
Maine, 5566
N.C., 5582
Southern States, 5583
Tex., 5521
Anglo-American legends
Southwestern States, 5518
Tex., 5518, 5521
Anglo-French War. See French and Indian War (1755–63)
Anglo-Israel movement, 5439
Angoff, Charles, 4458
The Animal Kingdom, 1201, 2333
Animal lore and mythology, 5513
Ga., 910–16, 922, 924–25
Ky., 5546
Mich., 5535
Animal lore and mythology—Continued
Mo., 5528
N. Mex., 5537
Ozark Mountains, 5544
Animal, Vegetable, Mineral, 2413 Animals, 2954–56, 2960
domestic, 4276
editorials, sketches, etc., 1724–25
hist., 2955
in art, 5806
in folksongs, 5559, 5563–64
prairies, 4188
short stories, 1786, 1790
Death Valley, Calif., 4205
New World, 3155
New York (Colony), 4237–38, 4241
Pa., 4237–38, 4241
S.C., 5087
Ann Vickers, 1565
Anna Christie, 1648
Annand, George, maps, 4001, 4017
Annapolis, Md., 3825
Anne Boleyn, 207–8
Anne of the Thousand Days, 2335
Anni Mirabiles, 1235
Annie Allen, 1938
Anniversary, 1579
Another Animal, 2350
Another Part of the Forest, 1990
Antarctic expeditions, 2977–78
Antheil, George, 4968
Anthony Adverse, 1169
Anthropology, 2986–87, 2989, 2993, 2998, 3006, 3010, 4192, 4722, 5351
See also Ethnology
Antin, Mary, about, 2585
Antioch College, 5125, 5196
The Antioch Review, 2554
Antipathies, 517
Antiques collectors & collecting, 5596, 5598
dictionary, 5596
Antiquities. See Archaeology and prehistory
Anti-Semitism, 4457, 4462
Antislavery movement, 2689, 3360, 3370, 3375
See also Abolitionism; American Anti-Slavery Society; Slavery Anti-Slavery Papers, 463
Antler (Omaha) Reservation, 3042
Apache Indians, 3004, 3010, 3035
Apartment in Athens, 1839
Aphorisms, 3152
Apologetics, 5338
The Apostle, 1190
Appalachian Mountain region, 2933, 3958, 3963
folksongs & ballads, 5583
Appellate procedure, 6302, 6304
Appellate review, 6234
The Apple of the Eye, 1839
Apples by Ocean, 1296
Appleseed, Johnny. See Chapman, John
Appleton, LeRoy H., 2967
Appointment in Samarra, 2070
Appomattox Court House, 2580
Apportionment (election law), 6163
Apprenticeship, 5210
April Twilights, 1277

Aptitude tests, 5229
Arab States, relations with, 3588
Arapaho Indians, 3041, 4160
Arber, Edward, ed., 71
Arbitration, industrial, 6058, 6299
Arbitration and award (law), 6282, 6289, 6299
Arbolino, J. N., 5197
Archaeology and prehistory, 2989–97 mounds & moundbuilders, 2996, 4323
  Calif., 3002
  The East, 2990
  Southwestern States, 2992
Archer, Gleason L., 4683
Architecture, 3969, 3751, 3758, 5698–5725
  bibl., 5709
  Colonial, 3747–48, 5706, 5713–14, 5721–23, 5725, 5796
  Creole, 5703
  domestic, 5698, 5702, 5707, 5711–13, 5717–18, 5721–22, 5725, 5732, 5794, 5796
  exhibitions, 5717–18
  Georgian, 5714
  Greek, 5708–9, 5719
  hist., 5689, 5695, 5698, 5703, 5710, 5714
  Indian, 5723
  library, 6474, 6478 modern, 5705, 5711–12, 5717–18
  Spanish, 5703, 5723
  Conn., 5707
  Nashville, 3765
  Northwest, Old, 5719
  Ohio, 4121
  Southern States, 5706
  Southwest, New, 5723
Archives, 3066–67
  management & functions, 3063
Arciniegas, Germán, 3172
Arctic expeditions, 2979–81
Ardennes, Battle of the, 3720
Argentina, relations with, 3514
Aria da Capo, 1608, 2332
Ariel Poems, 1359
Aristocracy. See Upper class
Arizona, 2737, 4199
  archaeology, 2992
  architecture, Spanish, 5723
  descr., 5073
  deserts, 3947
  guidebooks, 3925–26
  hist., 3956, 3961, 4189, 4199
  Indians, 3023
    Navajo Indians, 3013
  music, 5630
  short stories, 1762
  travel & travelers, 4378
  writers & writings, 4199
Arkansas, 3960, 4079, 4102
  econ. condit., 4102
  folklore, 5542
  folksongs & ballads, 5569
  frontier life, 4097–98
  guidebooks, 3853–54
  hist., 4102
  poetry, 1434
Arkansas River and valley, 3984
The Arkansas Traveler, about, 5507, 5542
Armaments, 3525, 3674
Armed Forces. See specific branches, e.g., Navy Armed Neutrality, 3528
The Armed Vision, 2443
Armenians, 4435
Arminians, 5472
Armistice (1918), 3470
Armitage, Merle, ed., 4968, 5678
Arms, George W., 969, 976, 2374
Arms, John Taylor, about, 5783
Armstrong, Henry, about, 5025
Armstrong, Maurice W., ed., 5466
Army, 3643, 3653–65, 3709
  hist., 2710–11, 3648, 3651–52, 3657, 3659, 3661–64, 4040
    American Revolution, 2673, 3681
    Civil War, 3693, 3697, 3702, 3705
    World War I, 3709–10
    World War II, 3726
  mobilizations, 3661 organization, 3648, 3681
  recruiting, enlistment, etc., 3661, 3665, 3702, 3709
Army. American Expeditionary Force, about, 3710
Army. Armored Force, about, 3658
Army. Cavalry, hist., 3659
Army. General Staff Corps, about, 3653, 3712
Army. Information and Education Division. Research Branch, about, 3724
Army. Medical Dept., hist., 4809
Army Air Forces, about, 3717, 3727
Army Ground Forces, about, 3726
Army Life in a Black Regiment, 2280
Army of Northern Virginia, 3695
Army of the Potomac, 3690–92, 3701, 3706
Army Service Forces, about, 3726
Army technical services, 3726
Arnold, Benedict, about, 2617, 2804, 3149, 3264
Arnold, Byron, comp., 5565
Arnold, Henry H., 3717
Arnold, Matthew, about, 2545
Arnold, Willard B., 1812
Arny, William F. N., about, 3035
Arp, Bill, pseud. See Smith, Charles Henry
An Arrant Knave & Other Plays, 2308
Arrowood, Charles F., 5122
Arrowsmith, 1562
Arsenic and Old Lace, 2334
Art, 4741, 4743, 5351, 5688–97, 5726–32, 5807 foreign influences, 3768, 3774
  hist., 5689–93, 5695
  Indian, 2991, 3016–17, 5785
    Navajo, 3013
    Northwest coast, 2998
    Penobscot, 3011
    Plains, 3006, 3018
  industries. See Arts and crafts Italian, 4497 museums. See Museums.
  Pennsylvania German, 4480
  philosophy of. See Esthetics
  Charleston, S.C., 3763
Art—Continued
  Newport, R.I., 4040
  Ohio, 4121
  Philadelphia, 3764
  See also Artists; Cartoons; Comic strips; Decorative arts; History and art; Painting; Prints; Sculpture
Art and state, 5697, 6130
The Art of Fiction, 986, 1010, 1014
The Art of the Novel, 1004
The Art of Worldly Wisdom, 2098
Arthur, Chester A., about, 3437
Arthur, Timothy Shay, 190–91
Arthur Mervyn, 116–17
Arthur's Home Magazine, 190
Articles of Confederation, 3253, 3302, 6077
Articles on American Literature, 2457, 2552
Articulation (education), 5107, 5131, 5217
Artisans, Colonial, 6044
Artists, 3757, 4198, 5690, 5695, 5760–76, 5779–80, 5783, 5797, 5802, 5806–7
  See also Painters; Sculptors
Arts and crafts, 3748, 3969, 5593–5604, 5787, 5919, 6044 design, 5594, 5600
  hist., 5594, 5602–3
  Indian, 2993
  Pennsylvania German, 5594, 5599–5600
  Shakers, 5594
  themes, motives, 5594, 5600
  Mo., 4108
  Southern States, 4083
  See also Decorative arts
Arundel, 1708
Arvin, Newton, 443, 481, 2284, 2406
  ed., 348, 700
As I Lay Dying, 1384
As I Remember It, 1269
As If, 1953
Asbury, Francis, 5475
  about, 2586, 5463, 5474–75
Asbury, Herbert, 2586–88, 4523, 5474
  about, 2587
Asch, Shalom, 1190–94
  about, 1195
Asgis, Alfred J., 4842
Ash Wednesday, 1357, 1359
  about, 1367
Ashburn, Percy M., 4809
Asheim, Lester, 6477
  ed., 6454, 6480
Asheville, N.C., fiction, 1887–88
Ashley, William H., about, 4175
Ashmore, Harry S., 5206
Ashton, Wendell J., 2867
Ashworth, Mary Wells, 3271 Asia
  fiction, 2088, 2097
  relations with, 3591, 3596
  technical assistance to, 3641
  travel & travelers, 2282
Asia Minor
  fiction, 1979
  travel & travelers, 677–78
The Asiatics, 2088
Asirvatham, Eddy, 5496

Askov, Minn., 4406
Aspects of Fiction and Other Ventures in Criticism, 2466
The Aspern Papers, 1007, 1014
Asseff, Emmett, 4100
Assembly-line methods, 6055
Associated Press, about, 2860
Association for Education by Radio-Television, 5230
Association for Higher Education, 5228
Association of American Law Schools, 6090
Association of American Universities, 5163
Association of American University Presses, about, 6439
Association of Land-Grant Colleges, 5186
The Assyrian, 2118
Aston, Tony, about, 5661
Astor, John Jacob, about, 5882, 6024
Astoria, Oreg., 391, 4148, 6024
Astrology, 5541
Astrophysics, 4722
Aswell, E. C., 1892
Asylums, 19th cent., 4310
At Heaven's Gate, 2195
At Home and Abroad, 414
Athearn, Robert G., 4223
Atherton, Gertrude Franklin (Horn), 721–25, 3943
  about, 721
Atherton, Lewis Eldon, 4109
Athletics, 4989 college, 4993, 4999 high school, 5000
Atkins, Gaius Glenn, 5454
Atkins, John A., 1501
Atkinson, Brooks, 1548, 4907
  ed., 300, 591
Atlanta, Ga., 3838, 4704
Atlantic cable, 4677
Atlantic coastal plain, 2933
The Atlantic Monthly, 368, 449, 706, 964, 2555, 2922
Atlantic seaboard. See Eastern seaboard Atlases and maps, 3786, 4486
  climate, 2952
  historical geography, 2967, 2972, 2974
  language, 2268–69
Atomic energy
  hist., 4747
  in literature, 1992, 2682
Atomic physics, 4722
Atomic warfare, 3621, 3629
The Attack on Leviathan, 3781
Attitudes Toward History, 2387
Attorney General's Committee on Administrative Procedure, 6316
Atwood, E. Bagby, 2263
Atwood, Wallace W., 2933, 4172
Auchincloss, Louis, 1909–13
Auden, W. H., 2512
  ed., 537, 1003
  about, 2378, 2426
Audiences
  motion picture, 4895, 4959
  radio, 4700–3, 4895
  television, 4699, 4702–4, 4895
Audio-visual methods in education, 5231, 5246
Audubon, John James, 4743–44
  about, 2210, 2624, 4724, 4734, 4741, 4743
Augur, Helen, 3154
August, John, pseud. See De Voto, Bernard A.
Augusta, Ga., 3839
Augusta, Maine, 3793–94
Augustana College, Rock Island, Ill., about, 4483
Aumann, Francis R., 6219
Aurora, 141
Aurora Dawn, 2229
The Auroras of Autumn, 1784
Austin, Mary (Hunter), 1196–98
  about, 1196
Austin, Moses, 3314
  about, 3314
Austin, Samuel, ed., 28
Austin, Stephen Fuller, 3314
  about, 3314
Australia, relations with, 3556
Australian ballot, 6400
Austria in literature, 1245
Austrians, 4414
Ausübel, Nathan, tr., 1191
The Author of Beltraffio, 1007
Author-publisher relations, 6449–50
Authors and authorship, 2371, 2373, 2391, 2405, 3746, 3757
  biog. (collected), 2433, 2454–55, 2526
  dictionaries, 2433, 2454–55
  radio & television, 4697
  Calif., 2536
  Southwest, 2525
Authors as journalists
  (1764–1819), 109, 134, 141, 154–60
  (1820–70), 190, 192, 209, 216, 280, 313, 319, 365, 422, 445, 449, 463, 520, 546, 556, 558–59, 585, 612, 619, 655, 657, 662, 674, 677, 2278–79, 2294
  (1871–1914), 701, 704, 732, 768, 836, 862, 878–80, 887, 910, 926, 942, 959, 964, 1048, 1107, 1126, 1136, 2479, 2923
  (1915–39), 1214, 1409, 1602–5, 1809, 1859, 2398, 2503
  (1940–55), 1992, 2017, 2029, 2057, 2133, 2139, 2149
Authors Today and Yesterday, 2455
Authorship in the South before the War, 1103–4
Autobiography. See Biography and autobiography; Biography, collected
The Autobiography of Alice B. Toklas, 1771
The Autobiography of an Idea, 5715
The Autocrat of the Breakfast-Table, 371–74
Automation, 6003
Automobile industry, 4138, 5940
  finance, 5963
  workers, 6055
Automobile motoring, 5002, 5005
Automobile racing, 5001, 5003–7
Automobile Workers' Union, about, 6039
Automobiles, 4519, 5005
Automotive transportation, 5942
Autres Temps, 1851, 1855
Autumn, 1635
The Autumn Garden, 1991, 2335
Averill, Gerald, 2590
  about, 2590
Avery, Clara Louise, 5784
Aviation. See Aeronautics
Avon's Harvest, 1714
Awake and Sing!, 2064, 2348
Award (law). See Arbitration and award (law)
Axel's Castle, 2535
Axt, Richard G., 5165
Ayars, Christine Merrick, 5628
Aydelotte, Frank, 5178
Ayer (N. W.) & Son, Inc., about, 5958
Ayers, Lucille, 2258
Ayres, C. E., 2407
Azalia, 920
Aztec culture, 2997

B

The B. O. W. S., 4919
B.P.O.E. See Elks, Benevolent and Protective Order of Babbitt, Irving, 2375, 2411, 2425, 5115, 5259
  about, 2375, 2479
Babbitt, 1561
Babcock, Kendric Charles, 4482
Babes in Toyland (operetta), about, 5681
Baby Doll, 2220
Bach, George Leland, 5983
Bach Choir, Bethlehem, Pa., about, 2667
Bachman, George W., 4862
Back Home, 2736
Back-trailers from the Middle Border, 898–99
Background to Glory, 3239
Background in Tennessee, 1743
Backgrounds of American Literary Thought, 2441
Backlund. Jonah Oscar, 2895
A Backward Glance O'er Travel'd Roads, 626–27
Backwoods to Border, 5507
Bacon, Eugene H., 3643
Bacon's Rebellion, fiction, 226
Bacteriology, 4722, 4831
Bad Lands, 2683
The Bad Seed, 1177
Badè, William F., ed., 1079, 1081–82
Badger, Kingsbury M., 2319
Baehr, Harry W., 2868
Baer, Julius B., 5952
Bagby, Ellen M., ed., 193
Bagby, George Williams, 192–93
Bailey, James O., 2377
Bailey, Joseph Cannon, 5851
Bailey, Liberty Hyde, about, 2790
Bailey, Robeson, ed., 5071
Bailey, Thomas A., 3471, 3517, 3560
Bainbridge, John, 2920, 4952
Bainton, Roland H., 5423

Baird, Lucy Hunter, 4744
Baird, Spencer Fullerton, about, 4724, 4744, 4775
Bakeless, John E., 3155, 3239–40, 3299
Baker, Carlos H., 1502
ed., 2355
Baker, Elizabeth (Faulkner), 6455
Baker, Franklin T., ed., 373
Baker, George Pierce, about, 4940
Baker, Gladys, 5852
Baker, Harry J., 5207
Baker, Melvin C., 5120
Baker, Newton D., about, 3713
Baker, Oliver E., 4579, 5816
Baker, Ray Stannard, 2591–96, 3470–71
ed., 3469
about, 2592–96, 6432
Baker, Richard Terrill, 2910
Bakewell, C. M., 5252, 5332
Balboa, Vasco Núñez de, about, 3167
Balboa Park (San Diego, Calif.), guidebook, 3932
Balcony Stories, 1034–35
Bald, Frederick Clever, 4137
Balderston, J. L., 2332
Baldwin, Hanson W., 3615, 3618, 3646
Baldwin, James, 1914–15
Baldwin, James Mark, about, 5262
Baldwin, Joseph Glover, 194–97, 2296
Baldwin, Leland D., 3103, 3280, 4061, 4110
Balfour, Walter, 5428
Balkans, relations with, 3516
The Ballad of the Sad Café, 2024
Ballads. See Folksongs and ballads; Songs
Ballads for Sale, 1584
Ballads of Square-Toed Americans, 1295
Ballanta, Nicholas, 5540
Ballantine, Joseph W., 3589
Ballet, 4967, 4969–71, 5656–57
Ballot, 6400
Ballou, Hosea, 5428, 5473
about, 5473
Baltimore, Lord, about, 5396, 5419
Baltimore
editorials, sketches, etc., 1602
hist., 4062
law, 6284, 6291
public health, 4867
soc. life & cust., 4062, 4263
Balz, A. G. A., 5289
Bamberger, B. J., 4458
Bancroft, Frederic, 3359
Bancroft, George, about, 2462, 3057–58, 3060, 3776
Bancroft, Hubert Howe, about, 3048
Band of Angels, 2201
Bandler, Bernard, II, 2425
Bands (music), 5653
Bank of the U.S. first, 4059, 6000
second, 3126, 5999–6000
Bank Street Schools, New York (City), 5234
The Banker's Daughter, 2307
Bankhead, Tallulah, 4928
about, 4928
The Bankrupt, 2300
Banks and banking, 5972, 5974–75, 5983, 5986, 6002
hist., 5979, 5988, 6000
Boston, 5984
Chicago, 5985
New York (City), 5993
Banner by the Wayside, 1158
Banners, 2413
Banning, George Hugh, 5931
Banning, William, 5931
Banta, Richard E., 4003
Baptists, 5404, 5442
hist., 5413, 5443
Bar associations, hist., 6325
Barba, Preston A., 2266
The Barbary Coast, 2586
Barbary Shore, 2027
Barbary States, relations with, 3686
Barbash, Jack, 4672, 6031
Barbella, Rocco. See Graziano, Rocky Barber, Hollis W., 3619
Barber, Rowland, 5028
Barber, Samuel, about, 5674
Barck, Oscar Theodore, 3452
Bardèche, Maurice, 4944
Barefoot in Athens, 1176
Barger, Harold, 5819, 5907, 5920, 5944
Barghoorn, Frederick Charles, 3561
Baring Brothers and Company, hist., 5980
Barker, Charles A., 4535
Barker, Eugene C., 3314
ed., 3314
Barker, Howard F., 4390
Barker, James Nelson, 66, 198–200, 2337, 2347
about, 198
Barker, Shirley Frances, 1916–20
Barker, Virgil, 5742
Barkley, Alben W., 2597–98, 2892
about, 2598
Barlow, Joel, 101–4
about, 101
The Barly Fields, 1637
Barnard, Charles, 2314
Barnard, Ellsworth, 1717
Barnard, Harry, 3418–19
Barnard, Henry, about, 5116, 5128
Barnes, A. C., 5290
Barnes, Al G., about, 4982
Barnes, Eric W., 4927
Barnes, Gilbert Hobbs, 3360
Barnes, Harry Elmer, 4540, 4617, 4639
Barnes, Walter, ed., 765
Barnett, James H., 4546
Barnouw, Erik, 4684
Barns, 5724
Barnum, Phineas T., 4977
about, 2617, 2797, 4977
Baron, Salo W., ed., 5267
Baron Rudolph, 2307
Barr, Alfred H., ed., 5689, 5797
Barrell, Joseph, 4715
Barren Ground, 1460–61
Barrett, Clifford, 5252
ed., 5252
Barrett, Edward L., Jr., 6110–11
Barrett, J. Lee, 5016
Barrett, James Wyman, 2889
The Barretts of Wimpole Street, 4919
Barrow, Edward G., 5008
about, 5008
Barrow, Joseph Louis. See Louis, Joe Barrus, Clara, 2624
Barry, David W., 4702
Barry, Philip, 1199–1203, 2332–34, 2337, 2348
Barry, Phillips, 5566–67
Barrymore, Ethel, 4929
about, 4929
Barrymore, John, about, 4933
Barrymore, Lionel, 4933
about, 4933
Barrymore-Drew family, about, 4929
Barth, A., 4513
Bartlett, Arthur C., 5009
Bartlett, John R., 6447
ed., 89
Bartlett, Ruhl J., ed., 3518
Barton, R. C., 2364
Barton, William, 4758
Bartram, John, 4237–38
about, 4236, 4247, 4745
Bartram, William, 4247–50
about, 4247, 4745
Barzun, Jacques, 5213, 5615
Baseball, 4987, 4990, 4993, 5008–15
short stories, 1554–55
Basler, Roy P., 3395
ed., 420, 3390, 3395
Bassett, John Spencer, 3057, 3315, 3318
ed., 14, 3318
Bassett, T. D. Seymour, 3753
Basso, Hamilton, 2406
Bataan in literature, 1992
Bateman, Mrs. Sidney F., 2347
Bates, Ernest Sutherland, 2884, 6151
Bates, Ralph S., 4713
Bates, Sanford, 4640
Bathe, Dorothy, 4795
Bathe, Greville, 4795
Battistini, Lawrence H., 3590–91
Battle, John J., 5278
The Battle Ground, 1461
The Battle of Bunker-Hill, 105, 2347
The Battle of Stillwater, 2311
Battle of the Bulge, 3720
The Battle of the Kegs, 148
Battle-Pieces and Aspects of the War, 488
Battles. See Campaigns and battles under names of wars, e.g., American Revolution—campaigns and battles; Civil War—campaigns and battles
Battles in art, 5807
Baudelaire, Charles, about, 520
Bauer, G. Philip, 5763
Bauer, Louis Hopewell, 4882
Baum, P. F., ed., 1046
Baumgarten, Eduard, 5254
Baumhoff, Richard G., 4145
Baur, John I. H., 5688, 5745, 5762
Bawden, Henry Heath, 5254
Baxter, James Phinney, 4761, 6130
Bay Psalm Book, 6448
Bayley, Frank W., ed., 5690
Bayou Folk, 760
Bayou l'Ombre, 1033
Beach, Joseph Warren, 988, 1016, 2376
Beach, Lewis, 2332

Beach, Moses S., about, 2874
Beach, William D., 3651
Beachheads in Space, 1959
Beacon of Freedom, 3778
Beadle and Adams (firm), 2444
Beale, Howard K., 3065, 3361, 3527, 5132–33
ed., 3046
Beall, Otho T., 40, 4826
Bean, Louis H., 5837, 6412–13
Bear, Donald, 5748
Beard, Charles A., 3046, 3065, 3073, 3479, 3750, 4499, 5106, 6082, 6247, 6250
about, 2407, 3046, 4545
Beard, Mary R., 3073, 3479, 3750
Beasley, Norman, 5452–53
The Beast in the Jungle, 1007, 1012, 1014
The Beast in View, 2106
Beatty, E. C. O., 3058
Beatty, Richmond Croom, ed., 2320, 2324
Beauchamp murder case, 365, 550
Beaufort, S.C., 3835
Beaumont, William, about, 4818, 4822
Beaumont, Tex., 3918
Beaumont de La Bonninière, Gustave Auguste de, about, 4512
Beauregard, P. G. T., about, 2613
The Beautiful and Damned, 1427
The Beautiful Changes, 2216
The Beautiful People, 2113
Beaver, Joseph, 649
Beavers, 2961
Beck, Earl Clifton, 5567
Becker, Carl L., 4540, 5191, 5222
Beckhart, Benjamin Haggott, 5993
Beckman, Theodore N., 5945, 5949
Beckwith, Martha Warren, 5504
Becky Sharp, 2313
A Bed of Boughs, 741
Bedford Springs, Pa., 4312
Beebe, Lucius M., 4153
Beech Mountain, N.C., folklore, 5529
See also North Carolina—folklore
Beecher, Henry Ward, 1137
about, 2797, 3413, 5428, 5476
Beecher, Lyman, about, 2797, 5395, 5403
Beer, George Louis, about, 3058
Beers, Clifford Whittingham, 4834
about, 4834
Beers, Henry A., 682
Before Barbed Wire, 4152–53
Before Breakfast, 1648
Before the Gringo Came, 725
Beggar on Horseback, 2332
The Beginning of a Mortal, 2748
The Beginning of Wisdom, 1222
Behaviorism, 4545, 5389, 5393
Behold Our Green Mansions, 5863
Behrman, Samuel Nathaniel, 1204–13, 2327, 2332–33, 2348
about, 1213
Beiman, Irving, 6207
Being a Boy, 1139–41
Beirne, Francis F., 3687, 4062
Belasco, David, 2314–15, 2337, 2347–48
about, 4943
Belden, Henry Marvin, ed., 5568
Belfrage, Gustaf Wilhelm, about, 4734
Belgium, travel & travelers, 426
Belief and doubt (philosophy), 5323, 5370
Belknap, Jeremy, about, 3057
Bell, Alexander Graham, about, 4675, 4678–79
Bell, Bernard I., 5232
Bell, Herbert C. F., 3470
Bell, Whitfield J., 4714
Bell, Book, and Candle, 2335
A Bell for Adano, 1994
Bell-founding, 5628
Bell Telephone System, 4673
Bellamy, Edward, 726–31
about, 726, 2517, 6424
Bellamy, Gladys C., 815
Bellamy, Joseph, about, 5428
La Belle Russe, 2315
La Belle Sauvage, 199
Belles Demoiselles Plantation, 748
Bellevue, Nebr., 3902
Bellevue Hospital Medical College, New York, about, 4831
Bellow, Saul, 1921–22
The Belovéd Adventure, 1858
Bemis, James, about, 6446
Bemis, Samuel Flagg, 3313, 3520–21, 3528–29, 3574
ed., 3519
Benchley, Nathaniel, 1221
Benchley, Robert Charles, 1214–20
about, 1221
Benedict, Clare, ed., 1152
Benedict, Murray R., 5853–55
Benét, Rosemary Carr, ed., 1222
Benét, Stephen Vincent, 1222–24, 1904
ed., 3969, 3975, 3978–95
about, 1908
Benét, William Rose, 1904
ed., 1903, 2321
Benford, Robert T., music arr. by, 5590
Benham, Mrs. Miles, 5647
Benians, E. A., ed., 3179
Benjamin, Florence O., 4057
Benjamin, Judah P., about, 2613, 3396
Benjamin, Marcus, 4049, 4724
Benjamin, Park, 2295
Bennett, Clarence, 2305
Bennett, Hugh H., 2947, 5808
Bennett, James Gordon (1795–1872), 2848
about, 2877
Bennett, James Gordon (1841–1918), about, 2848, 2872, 2877
Bennett, John C., 5899
about, 5433
Bennett, Mildred R., 1279
Bennington College, hist., 5198
Benson, Adolph B., 4246, 4357, 4483
Benson, Egbert, about, 6224
Benson, Louis F., 5633
Benson, Mary Sumner, 4524
Bent, Newell, 5058
The Bent Twig, 1412
Bentley, Arthur F., 5286
Bentley, Eric R., 4908
Bentley, Harold W., 2264, 4999
Bentley, William, 2599–2600
about, 2600
Benton, Elbert J., 3530
Benton, Thomas Hart, 3322
about, 2793, 3321–22, 5783
Berding, Andrew H., 3546
Berelson, Bernard, 6414, 6419, 6477
ed., 6485
Berger, Arthur V., 5675
Berger, Josef, 3801
Berger, Max, 4224
Berger, Meyer, 2869
Bergmann, Leola M. (Nelson), 5664
Bergson, Henri, about, 5326, 5368
Beringause, Arthur F., 2601
Berkeley Square, 2332
Berkshire Hills, Mass., 3799
Beowulf, translation, 1556
Berenike, 2101
Berkhof, Louis, about, 5433
Berkson, I. B., 4457
Berlandier, Jean Louis, about, 4734
Berle, Adolf A., 6011–12
Berle, Alf K., 4781
Berlin, Irving, about, 5639
Bernard, Francis, about, 3257
Bernard, Jessie, 4536
Bernard, Luther L., 4536
Bernard, William B., 518
Bernard, William S., ed., 4418
Bernard Clare, 1376
Bernardo, C. Joseph, 3643
Bernhard Karl, duke of Saxe-Weimar-Eisenach, 4297–99
about, 4297
Bernstein, Mel, illus., 3081
Berrey, Lester V., 2272
Berry, Robert Elton, 4746
Berry, W. E., 5442
Berryman, John, 821, 1923–24, 2285
Berson, Robert C., 4861
Berthoff, Rowland Tappan, 4488
Bertsch, Carl W., illus., 3170
Best, Harry, 4628–29
Best, Katharine, 5059
The Best of Two Worlds, 2453
Beston, Henry, 3979
Bestor, Arthur E., 4525, 5233
Bestsellers, 2402, 2482, 6443, 6449
See also Popular books
Bethlehem, Pa., Bach Choir, 5667
Bethlehem Steel, 5918
Bethune, Mary McLeod, 5426
about, 5426
The Betrothal, 207–8
Bettmann, Otto, 4986
Between the Thunder and the Sun, 2807
Between Two Worlds, 1758
Beulah Land, 1314
Beveridge, Albert J., 6237
about, 3058, 3453
Beverley-Giddings, Arthur R., ed., 5079
Beyond Dark Hills, 2166
Beyond Life, 1262
Beyond the Horizon, 1648, 2337
Beyond the Hundredth Meridian, 2161
Beyond the Mountains, 2098–2101
Bianca Visconti, 2337
Bianchi, Martha (Dickinson), ed., 842
Bible (English)
fiction, 1190
influence on literature, 118, 505, 619

Bibliography, 3773, 6447, 6460
See also Books—and reading; Rare books; and also under specific subjects, e.g., Education—bibl.
Bickel, Alexander M., 6248
The Bicycle Rider in Beverly Hills, 2121
Biddle, George, about, 5783
Biddle, Nicholas, about, 3126
Bidwell, Percy Wells, 5820
Bierce, Ambrose (Gwinnett), 732–39
about, 520, 732, 738, 926, 2380
Bierring, Walter L., 4807
The Big Bear of Arkansas, 613
The Big Bonanza, 2317
Big Bone Lick, 4336
Big Boy Leaves Home, 2234
The Big Cage, 2014
Big Fiddle, 1246
The Big Knife, 2067
The Big Money, 1325, 1328
The Big Rock Candy Mountain, 2162
The Big Sea, 1522
The Big Sky, 1489
Bigelow, John, ed., 125, 132
Bigelow, Melville M., ed., 6100
Biggar, Henry P., 3169
ed., 3156
Biggs, Hermann M., about, 4868
The Biglow Papers, 456–57
Bikle, Lucy Leffingwell (Cable), 747, 751
Bilingualism, 2267
Bill Arp: From the Uncivil War to Date, 556
Bill Arp, So Called, 557
Bill of Rights, 6106, 6108, 6121, 6127
Billings, John Shaw, about, 4403, 4819, 4845, 6476
Billings, Josh, pseud. See Shaw, Henry Wheeler
Billington, Ray Allen, 3074, 4146, 4515
Billy Budd, 487, 496, 2335
Billy the Kid, 2305
Bingham, George Caleb, about, 5761
Bingham, Millicent (Todd), 851–53
ed., 843
Binkley, Wilfred E., 6132–33, 6140, 6347
Binns, Archie, 4930
Biography, a Comedy, 1205
Biography (collected), 2682, 2774, 3072, 3080, 3099, 3145, 3198
bibl., 3080, 3101–2
dictionaries, 3080, 4049
See also under particular subjects, e.g., Civil War—biog. (collected)
Biography and autobiography, 2578–2844
Biracial education, 5206
Bird, George L., ed., 2927
Bird, Robert Montgomery, 201–5, 2309, 2337
about, 205
Birds, 2956, 2960, 2962, 4247, 4741, 4743 game, 5077, 5091
in literature, 4741, 5535
protection, 4741
Birge, Edward Bailey, 5668
Birmingham, Ala., politics, 6207
Birney, James Gillespie, 3360
about, 3375, 3413
Birth, 1454
Birth of a World, 1445
Birthright, 1792
Bishop, Cortlandt F., 6401
Bishop, Elizabeth, 1925–26
about, 2426
Bishop, Farnham, 4796
Bishop, John Peale, 1225–27, 2406
ed., 2354
about, 1227
Bishop, Joseph Bucklin, 4796
Bishop, Morris, 3156
The Bishop's Wife, 1637
Bisland, Elizabeth. See Wetmore, Elizabeth (Bisland)
Bison, 2799
Bissell, Richard P., 4019
Bitter Creek, 1239
Bittinger, D. W., 5442
Bixler, J. S., 5335–36
Bixler, Paul, ed., 2554
Bjorka, Knute, 5869
Black, C. E., 3562
Black, John Donald, 5839–40
Black, Theodore Milton, 6348
Black April, 1654
Black Armour, 1903
Black Boy, 2232
The Black Cat, 529
Black Hawk (Sauk chief), about, 2645
Black Hills, S.D.
Custer State Park, 3898
Mount Rushmore National Memorial, 5737
Black Is My Truelove's Hair, 1705
Black Jews, 5498
The Black Man, 2303
The Black Panther, 1858
The Black Riders, 835
The Black Rock, 1433
Black Spring, 1611
Blackfeet Indians, tales, 3000
Blackford, Launcelot Minor, 2602–3
Blackford, Mary, about, 2603
Blackmur, Richard Palmer, 1001, 1004, 1228–35, 2443, 3768
Blackwell, Elizabeth, about, 4820
Blaine, James Gillespie, about, 2616, 3442, 6373
Blair, Francis Preston, about, 3410
Blair, Frank P., about, 3410
Blair, James, about, 5396
Blair, Montgomery, about, 3382, 3410
Blair, Walter, 5505–6
ed., 2323
Blair family, 3410
Blake, Aldrich, 6341
Blake, Florence G., about, 4854
Blake, Forrester, ed., 5530
Blake, Harrison G. O., ed., 599
Blake, Nelson Manfred, 3452, 4797
Blake, William, about, 2128
Blakeslee, G. H., 3562
Blakey, Roy G., 5970
Blanchard, Dorothy C. A., 4038
Blanchard, Ralph H., 5990
Blanchard, Thomas, about, 4786
Bland, Richard, about, 6068
Blanshard, Brand, ed., 5335
Blanshard, Paul, 5444
Blau, Joseph L., 5253
ed., 3319, 5261, 5418
Bledsoe, Thomas A., ed., 895
Blegen, Theodore C., 4141–42, 4484
ed., 4143, 4485
Blesh, Rudi, 5641
Blind education of, 4628
law & legislation, 4628
libraries for, 4636 rehabilitation, etc., 4628, 4636
Blind, 1656
The Blind Bow-Boy, 1829
The Blithedale Romance, 333
Bloch, Bernard, ed., 2268
Bloch, Julia, 2268
Blodgett, Harold W., 648
ed., 644, 2276
Blondel de Nesle, about, 2186
Blood Lines, 5066
Bloodstoppers & Bearwalkers, 5533
The Bloody Tenent Yet More Bloody, 89
Bloom, Leonard, 4469
The Bloudy Tenent, of Persecution, for Cause of Conscience, 20, 86, 89
The Bloudy Tenent Washed and Made White in the Bloud of the Lambe, 20, 86
Blough, Roy, 5965
Blue books (society), 4534
The Blue-Grass Region of Kentucky, 717
The Blue Hotel, 824
Blue Ridge Mountains
descr., 3963
folksongs & ballads, 5582
Blue Voyage, 1162
Blum, Daniel C., 4899, 4931, 4946
ed., 4906
Blum, John Morton, 3466
ed., 3465
The Boarding Schools, 2302
Boardman, F. W., Jr., 5197
Boas, Franz, ed., 3042
about, 2407
Boas, George, 5291
ed., 3751
Boas, Louise S., 3178
Boas, Ralph P., 3178, 3751
Boatmen, French-Canadian, 3170
Boatright, Mody C., 5520
ed., 5507–9, 5518, 5521
Boats and boating, 4110, 5016–22
Bode, Boyd H., 5234, 5254, 5336
Bode, Carl, ed., 598, 607, 2339
Bodmer, Charles paintings by, 3330
about, 4307
Body, Boots & Britches, 5548
The Body of Liberties, 75, 78
Body of This Death, 1237
Boerker, Richard H. D., 5863
Bogan, Louise, 1236–38, 2357
Bogart, Ernest Ludlow, 4131–32
Bogart, Leo, 4699
Bogue, Donald J., 4393
Bogue, Jesse P., 5162

Bohemianism
hist., 3757
in literature, 732, 1828
Bok, Curtis, 6130
Bok, Edward William, 2604–5
about, 2605
Boker, George Henry, 206–8, 2300, 2337, 2347
Bolívar, Simón, about, 1445
Boll, Jacob, about, 4734
Bolton, Charles Knowles, 3679
ed., 6149
Bolton, Ethel (Stanwood), 5593
Bolton, Herbert E., 3075, 3157–58
ed., 3203, 4202
Bolton, Isabel, pseud. See Miller, Mary Britton
Bolton, Theodore, 5759
Bolts of Melody, 843, 846
The Bomb that Fell on America, 2682
The Bombardment of Algiers, 2310
The Bonanza Trail, 4177
Bonaparte, Napoleon. See Napoleon I
Bonaventure, 745
Bonbright, James C., 6013
Bond, Beverly W., Jr., 4111, 4121
Bond, Horace M., 4443, 5206
Bond, Thomas, about, 4850
Bone, Hugh A., 6349
Bonfils, Frederick Gilmer, about, 2878
Bonifacius, 45
Bonner, S., 2296
The Bonney Family, 1798
Bontecou, Eleanor, 6110, 6112
Boodin, J. E., 5252
Book, F., 2364
Book of Moments, 2387
Book of Mormon, 5465
Book-of-the-Month Club, 6463
Book of Uncles, 1294
Book reviews (literary). See Criticism, literary—essays; Literature—periodicals Books and reading, 14, 40, 171, 177, 2407, 2418, 2482, 2549, 3751, 6443, 6454, 6477, 6481–82 teaching methods, 5127, 5226
Ariz., 4199
Boston, 6475
Charleston, 3763
New York (City), 6468
Southwest, New, 4190 banned, 1932
clubs, 6435, 6437–38, 6440–41, 6463
collectors & collecting, 6440, 6460–62, 6464–65
illustration, 2391 industries & trade, 6435–36, 6441, 6445, 6448 popular. See Popular books
Books That Changed Our Minds, 2407
Booksellers and bookselling, 2391, 6435–38, 6440–41, 6444, 6447, 6462–64
New England, 3745
Boom towns, 772–74
Boon Island, 1712
Boone, Daniel, about, 310, 1873, 3240
Booth, Bradford Allen, ed., 4377
Booth, Catherine, about, 5497
Booth, Edwin, about, 4938
Booth, William ("General")
about, 5497
poetry, 1581
Booth family, 4938
Boothe, Clare, 2327, 2333
Borchard, Edwin M., 6294
Borglum, Gutzon, about, 5737
Boring, E. G., 3758
Born, Wolfgang, 5743–44
Born Yesterday, 2334
Borome, Joseph Alfred, 6476
Borsodi, Ralph, 4579
The Boss, 2337
Bossard, James H. S., 4559
Bossing, Nelson L., 5225
Boston
booksellers, Colonial, 6436 concerts, 5649
culture, 4518
descr., 1437, 4258, 4315, 4334
econ. condit., Colonial period, 4602
essays, 979, 1002–3
fiction, 726, 967–70, 982, 992–95, 1004, 1008
foreign population, 4410
govt., 6207
guidebook, 3800
harbor, 3800
hist., 3800, 4036, 5481
law, 6292
libraries, 6475
music, 5648–49, 5672
industries, 5628
photographs, 1437
siege (1775–76), 3245
soc. condit. (1880–1900), 4530
soc. life & cust., 4035, 4239, 4261, 4602
Boston, First National Bank, hist., 5984
Boston. Museum of Fine Arts, 5745
Boston. Public Library, hist., 6475
Boston Academy of Music, about, 5684
Boston Adventure, 2157
Boston Athenaeum, 6475
about, 6475
Boston Psychopathic Hospital, about, 4838
Boston Symphony Orchestra, hist., 5648–49
The Boston Transcript, about, 2870
The Bostonians, 992–95
Bostwick, Arthur E., ed., 6476
Boswell, Peyton, 5748
Botany, 2788, 2957, 4219, 4236, 4715, 4760
Both Your Houses, 1172
Botkin, Benjamin A., 4068, 5570, ed., 5510–12, 5515, 5522–26 , Boucher, Chauncey S., 5178
Boucicault, Dion, 2298, 2337
Boulding, Kenneth E., 5899
Bound East for Cardiff, 1648
Boundaries, 2970, 2974, 3351, 3540, 3553–55, 3569
Bourget, Paul Charles Joseph, 4387–89
about, 4387
Bourjaily, Vance, about, 2371
Bourke-White, Margaret, photographs, 5447
Bourne, Edward Gaylord, ed., 3215
Bourne, Randolph
about, 2380
fiction, 2413
Bowditch, Nathaniel, about, 4746
Bowen, Catherine (Drinker), 2606–8
Bowen, Francis, tr., 4511–12
Bowen, Howard, 5899
Bowen, Trevor, 5500
Bowers, Claude G., 3281, 3320, 3362
Bowers, David F., ed., 3768
The Bowery in literature, 1002–3
Bowes, Frederick P., 3763
Bowker, Richard Rogers, 6435
Bowles, Ella (Shannon), 4032
Bowles, Paul Frederic, 1927–31
about, 2371
Bowles, Samuel, 4384
about, 2614, 2879, 4383
Bowman, Isaiah, 2934
about, 2941
Boxing, 4987, 5023–33
biog. (collected), 5025
heavyweight, 4991, 5026
Negroes, 5025
television, 5033
Boy Meets Girl, 2327, 2333
Boyd, Anne Morris, 6138
Boyd, Ernest, 2411
Boyd, James, 1239–41
Boyd, Julian P., 6073
ed., 3292
Boyle, Kay, 1242–51
Boynton, Henry Walcott, 6436
Boynton, Percy, 780
The Boys in the Back Room, 2536
A Boy's Town, 982
A Boy's Will, 1452
Bracebridge Hall, 388–89
Bracke, William B., 3944
Brackenridge, Henry Marie, 2609–10
Brackenridge, Hugh Henry, 105–8, 2347
Bradbrook, M. C., 1367
Bradbury, Ray, 1932–36
Braddy, Haldeen, 539
Braden, Charles S., 5439
Bradfield, H. J. S., tr. & ed., 4296
Bradford, Andrew, about, 2880
Bradford, Cornelia, about, 2880
Bradford, Gamaliel, 2611–19
Bradford, Thomas Gamaliel, tr., 4314
Bradford, William, 1–6, 3204
Bradley, A. G., ed., 71
Bradley, Francis W., 2258, 2260
Bradley, Omar N., 3718
Bradley, Phillips, ed., 4512
Bradley, Sculley, 630
ed., 206, 628, 2324
Bradstreet, Anne (Dudley), 7–11
about, 79, 368, 3198
Brady, Mathew B. illus., 829
about, 821
Brain surgery, 4821
Branch, Edgar M., 816
Branch, Edward Douglas, 4516
Brandeis, Elizabeth, 6033
Brandeis, Louis Dembitz, 6247–48
about, 6246–48, 6266

Branden, Paul Maerker, 4891
Brandt, Lilian, 4623
Brandwein, Peter, ed., 4984
Brandywine Creek, 2394, 3981
Brant, Irving, 3282
Brasillach, Robert, 4944
Brassware, antique, 5787
Braun, F. X., 4481
Brave Men, 2745
A Bravery of Earth, 1351
Brawley, Benjamin, ed., 860
Brazer, Esther (Stevens), 5726
Brazil, relations with, 3582
Brazos River, Tex., folklore, 5527
Bread out of Stone, 1531
The Bread-Winners, 941
Break the Heart's Anger, 1968
Breakers and Granite, 1433
Breathe upon These Slain, 1743
Brebner, John B., 3159, 3552, 4473
Bredemeier, Harry C., 4550
Bremer, Fredrika, 4355–57
about, 4354
Brent, Charles H., about, 5457
Bretall, Robert W., ed., 5432–33
Bretnor, Reginald, ed., 2377
Brett, G. S., 5335
Brett, William Howard, about, 6476
Bretz, Rudy, 4697
Brevoort, Henry, about, 392
Brewer, Daniel Chauncey, 4026
Brewer, John Mason, 5527
Brewsie and Willie, 1770
Brewster, Paul G., 5585
ed., 5571
Brewster, Stanley F., 6295
Brickell, Herschel, ed., 2351
Brickman, William W., ed., 5248
The Bride Comes to Yellow Sky, 835
The Bride of the Innisfallen, 2209
The Bridegroom Cometh, 1448
The Bridegroom's Body, 1246
Bridenbaugh, Carl, 3764, 4517, 4601–2, 5704, 6044
ed., 4240
Bridenbaugh, Jessica, 3764
The Bridge (Crane), 1303–4
The Bridge (Poole), 1656
The Bridge of San Luis Rey, 1867
The Bridge of Years, 2123
Bridger, Jim, about, 2831
Briggs, Arthur E., 650
Briggs, Harold E., 4147
Brigham, Clarence S., 2852, 6447
Bright, James R., 6003
Bright and Morning Star, 2234
Bright Center of Heaven, 2030
The Bright Doom, 1858
Bright Journey, 1962
Brightman, Alvin C., ed., 6275
Brightman, Edgar S., 5252
about, 5259, 5433
The Brimming Cup, 1414–15
Brimming Tide, 1724, 5087
Brink, Wellington, 5808
Brinley, George, about, 6460
Brinton, Clarence Crane, 3502
Brinton, Howard H., 5468
Brisco, Norris B., 5949
Brissenden, Paul F., 6045
Brissot de Warville, Jacques Pierre, 4258–60
about, 4258
British ballads. See Anglo-American folksongs and ballads
British English, 2237, 2243, 2245
British immigrants, 4046, 4488
British relations with Illinois, 4133
Britishisms (language), 2272
Britt, George, 2913
Britten, Benjamin, 487
A Brittle Heaven, 2413
Broadax and Bayonet, 3663
Broadcasting. See Radio broadcasting; Television broadcasting Brockunier, Samuel Hugh, 3197
Brodbeck, May, 2358
Broder, Nathan, 5674
Broderick, Edwin B., 4688
Brodie, Fawn (McKay), 5464
The Broken Span, 1878
The Broker of Bogota, 205, 2337
Brokmeyer, Henry C., about, 5305
Bromfield, Louis, 3782, 4594
Bronx County, N. Y., Democratic Committee, 6384
Brook, Alexander, 5800
Brook Farm, 280, 585, 2278–79, 2881, 5256
Brookings, Robert S., about, 2685
Brookings Institution, Washington, D.C., 3634
Brookings Institution, Washington, D.C. Institute for Government Research, 3038, 4762
Brookings Institution, Washington, D.C. International Studies Group, 3598
Brooklyn, 2703–4
foreign population, 4046
hist., 4046
soc. life & cust., 4263
Brooklyn Bridge, 4801
Brooklyn College, 632
Brooks, Charles F., 2953
Brooks, Cleanth, 1367, 2378–79
about, 1809
Brooks, Gwendolyn, 1937–39
Brooks, John Graham, 4225
Brooks, Philiips, about, 5457
Brooks, Robert C., 4499
Brooks, Stella B., 910
Brooks, Van Wyck, 1016, 2380–82, 2411, 5773
ed., 2618–19, 3736
about, 2394, 2406, 2417, 2443, 5508
Brooks, William Keith, about, 4724
Broom, Leonard, 4469
Brophy, Arnold, 3643a
Brother to Dragons, 2200
Brough, Kenneth J., 6478
Brougham, John, 2311
Broun, Heywood, 729
Broussard, James F., 2265
Brown, C. E., 5442
Brown, Charles Brockden, 109–117
about, 109, 117, 2294, 2465, 2509
Brown, Charles H., 2901
ed., 657
Brown, Clarence A., comp., 2383
Brown, David Paul, 2347
Brown, Dee, 4158
Brown, Edward Killoran, 1280
Brown, Elmer E., 5152
Brown, Emily Clark, 6053
Brown, Ernest Francis, 2869
Brown, Esther L., 4800, 6317–18
Brown, Francis J., ed., 4426
Brown, George Rothwell, 4063
Brown, Gerald S., 3555
Brown, H., 4513
Brown, H. C., 5254, 5289
Brown, Herbert R., 2384
ed., 2352
Brown, J. Hammond, ed., 5065
Brown, John, about, 2617, 3149, 3414
poetry, 1222, 1224
Brown, John Crosby, 5979
Brown, John Mason, 4909
Brown, Josephine Chapin, 4630
Brown, Mark H., 4151–52
Brown, Milton W., 5746
Brown, Ralph H., 2968–69
Brown, Ralph Sharp, 6107
Brown, Ray A., 6271
Brown, Richard Lindley, 2425
Brown, Robert Eldon, 3046, 3241
Brown, Spenser, 2350
Brown, Stuart Gerry, ed., 5360–61
Brown, William Adams, 3636, 5953, 5993
Brown, William Norman, 3503
Brown Brothers and Company, 5979
The Brown Decades, 5695
Browne, Charles Albert, 4731, 4753, 5616
Browne, Charles Farrar, 209–15, 5524
about, 212, 557, 862, 2857
Browne, Sir Thomas, about, 2481
Brownell, Baker, ed., 4579
Brownell, Emery A., 6330
Brownell, Gertrude Hall, 2386
Brownell, William Crary, 2385–86, 2411
about, 2513, 2504
Browning, Robert, about, 2545
Brownlow, Louis, 6141
Brownstone Eclogues, 1166
Bruce, Alfred W., 5926
Bruce, B. G., 5078
Bruce, H. R., 6336
Bruce, S. D., 5078
Bruce, William Cabell, 2620–21, 3187
Brucker, Herbert, 2928
Brummé, Carl Ludwig, 5733
Brunner, Edmund de S., 4406, 4581, 5485
Bruno, Frank J., 4618
Brutus, 2347
Bryan, Alice I., 6479
Bryan, George S., 4782
ed., 4977
Bryan, James E., 4817
Bryan, Leslie A., 5943
Bryan, Mina R., ed., 3292
Bryan, Patrick W., 2939
Bryan, Wilhelmus Bogart, 4064
Bryan, William A., 4835
Bryan, William Jennings, 6350
about, 3135, 3446–47, 3457, 5430, 6359
Bryan, Ohio, 3863

Bryant, Billy, 4978
about, 4978
Bryant, William Cullen, 216–25, 2858
about, 223–24, 323, 2277, 2290, 2295, 2374, 2422, 2486, 2513, 2534, 2873
bibl., 224
Bryce, James Bryce, viscount, 3554, 4499
about, 4225
Bryson, Lyman, 5426
about, 5426
Buccaneers, 3168
Buchanan, Annabel (Morris), ed., 5549
Buchanan, James, about, 3399
Buchanan, Lamont, 5034
Buchanan County, Va., folksongs, 5582
Buchler, J., 5197, 5350
ed., 5348
Buck, Elizabeth Hawthorn, 4054
Buck, Paul Herman, 3083, 3363
Buck, Pearl (Sydenstricker), 1252–60
about, 1260
Buck, Solon J., 3420–21, 4054, 4127, 4132
The Buck in the Snow, 1609
Bucke, Richard M., ed., 627, 637
Buckham, John Wright, ed., 5318
Buckingham, James Silk, 4329–33
Buckingham, Nash, 5066–69
The Bucktails, 517, 2337
Budget, Federal. See Government—appropriations & expenditures
Buechner, Frederick, about, 2371
Buehler, Alfred G., 5969
Buehrer, E. T., 5442
Buel, Elizabeth C. Barney, ed., 5793
Buffalo, N.Y., in art, 5762
Buffalo Bill's Wild West Show, 4979
Buffaloes, 2965, 4147, 4151, 4153
Buffington, A. G., 4479
Buffington, Albert F., 2266
Bugbee, Harold D., drawings, 4195, 5874
The Build-Up, 1874, 1882
Building materials, 5700, 5711–12, 5718
Buley, Roscoe Carlyle, 4112, 4810
Bulfinch, Charles, about, 5720
Bull Run, 1st Battle (1861), 4378–81
The Bulwark, 1343
Bunce, Oliver Bell, 2347
A Bunch of Keys, 2306
Bunche, Ralph J., 4446
Bundy, McGeorge, 3547
ed., 3543
Bunker-Hill, Battle of, drama, 105
Bunn, Charles, ed., 6281
Bunn, Charles Wilson, 6281
Bunner, H. C., 2467
Bunner Sisters, 1851, 1855
Buntline, Ned, pseud. See Judson, Edward Zane Carroll
Bunyan, Paul, about, 5506, 5516, 5567
Burchfield, Charles, about, 5762
Burchfield, Laverne, 4580
Bureau of Chemistry and Soils, about, 4772
Bureau of Indian Affairs, about, 3038–39
Bureau of Plant Industry, Soils, and Agricultural Engineering, about, 2947 Bureau of Soils, about, 2943, 2947
Bureau of the Budget, 3725
about, 6144
Bureau of the Census, 4400
Burgess, Ernest W., ed., 4441
Burgess, John William, about, 4540
Burgoyne's invasion (1777), 3682
fiction, 1709
A Buried Treasure, 1702
Burk, John N., 5648
Burke, Arvid J., 5098, 5144
Burke, Charles, 2347
Burke, Kenneth, 656, 2387–90
about, 2443
Burke, William J., 2391
Burke, Idaho, 4176
Burks, Arthur W., ed., 5346
Burlesque, 4976
Burlingame, Roger, 4783, 5939, 6449
Burlington, Iowa, guidebook, 3890
Burma, John H., 4470
Burma, World War II, 3726
Burnett, Edmund Cody, 3242
ed., 3242
Burnham, James, 3620
Burning City, 1224
The Burning Mountain, 1435
The Burning of Fairfield, 121
Burns, Edward McNall, 2622–23, 3283
Burns, Eveline M., 4631
Burns, James A., 5101–2
Burns, James MacGregor, 3496, 6134, 6152
Burns, John Horne, 1940–43
about, 2371
Burns, Robert, about, 216, 662
Buros, Oscar K., 5229
Burr, Aaron, about, 1873, 2617, 2771, 3149, 3273
Burr, George Lincoln, ed., 41, 3205
Burr, William H., ed., 82
Burr Conspiracy (1805–7), 3273
Burr Oaks, 1351
Burrage, Henry S., ed., 3206
Burrage, Walter L., 4804
Burrell, John Angus, ed., 2325
Burroughs, Alan, 5747
Burroughs, John, 740–44, 2624–28
about, 2422, 2492, 2624, 2628
Burroughs, Julian, 744, 2628
Burstein, Abraham, tr., 1195
Burt, Alfred L., 3553
Burt, Maxwell Struthers, 3971
Burt, Struthers, 1148
Burtis, Mary Elizabeth, 2646
Burton, Hal, 4603
Burtt, Edwin, 5289
Bury the Dead, 2145, 2333
Bus lines, 5942
Bus Stop, 1998
Busch, Francis X., 6296
Bush, Vannevar, 4778
about, 4803
Bushnell, Horace, about, 5428, 5436, 5476
Business, 3094, 6003–30
control, 6004
govt. regulation, 5885, 6006, 6099
Business—Continued
hist., 6005, 6007, 6016
small, 6021
statistics, 6025
New York (City), 4047
Ohio, 4121
Southern States, 4083
Tex., 4194
Business and education, 5116, 5168, 5181, 5190
Business cycles, 5922, 5968, 6015, 6025
Business education, 6017
Business ethics. See Social and business ethics Business management, 6009
Business research, 4777
Businessmen, 4387, 6010, 6023, 6027–29
See also Capitalists and financiers
But Gently Day, 1635
But Look, the Morn, 1543
But Not Forgotten, 4920
Butcher, Devereux, 5866
Butler, Benjamin Franklin, about, 2617
Butler, George D., 4997
Butler, Nicholas Murray, 2629–30, 3554
Butler, Pierce, 6483
Butler, Richard, 5375
Butler, Samuel, about, 165, 2480, 2504
Butler County, Pa., 3819
Butte, Mont.
hist., 4176
politics, 6207
Butterfield, Lyman H., ed., 3292, 3313, 4830
Butterfield 8, 2074
Butterworth, Julian E., 5208
Butts, R. Freeman, 5103–4
By These Words, 3143
Byerly, Carl L., 5307
Byrd, Richard Evelyn, 2977–78
about, 2980
Byrd, William, 12–16, 2296
about, 16
Byrnes, James Francis, 3544
Byron, George Gordon Noel Byron, 6th baron, about, 216, 323, 458, 520, 2545

C

CIO. See Congress of Industrial Organizations
The Cabala, 1864
Cabbages and Kings, 1112–13
Cabell, James Branch, 1261–69, 3980
about, 1268–69, 2406
Cabeza de Vaca, about, 3158
Cabinet officers, 3382–84, 6145, 6148
See also specific offices, e.g., Secretaries of State; also names of incumbents, e.g., Dulles, John Foster
Cable, George Washington, 745–52, 2296
about, 748, 751–52, 2366
Cabot, Henry B., 6292
Cabot, John, about, 3174, 3215
Cabot, Richard Clarke, about, 4805
Cabot, Sebastian, about, 3174

Cady, Edwin Harrison, 2392
ed., 2326
Caesar, Julius
about, 5325
fiction, 1869
Caesars of the Wilderness, 3170
Café des Exilés, 748
Cahalane, Victor H., 2954
Cahill, Holger, 5594, 5602
ed., 5689
Cahn, Edmond N., 6261
Cain, James Mallahan, about, 2427, 2536
The Caine Mutiny, 2230
Cairo, Ill., guidebook, 3876
Cajuns
fiction, 745
language (dialects, etc.), 759–61
New Orleans, 4101
short stories, 759–61
Calamity Jane, 4147
Calavar, 202
Calaynos, 207–8
Caldwell, Erskine, 1271–75, 2333, 2376, 2427
ed., 3942–68
about, 2508
Caldwell, June, 4176
Caldwell, Lynton K., 6170
Caldwell, S. L., ed., 89
A Calendar of Sin, 1746
Calhoun, Arthur W., 4560
Calhoun, John Caldwell, 2296, 3328
about, 3327–28
Calhoun, Robert, about, 5433
California, 3955, 3957, 4200–11
architecture, 5723
descr., 1073–74, 1077, 5082
drama, 2110
fiction, 985, 1089–93, 1196, 1775, 1777, 2110, 2213
fishing, 5083
folklore, 5518
frontier & pioneer life, 3641, 3737 gold discoveries, 2659, 4201–2, 4351
govt., 6195
guidebooks, 3927–34
hist., 2658–59, 3943, 3959, 3974, 3998, 4189, 4200–4, 5354
Indians, 985, 3002, 3022–23
language (dialects, etc.), 2260
literature, 4202, 4204
music, 5630
natural hist., 1073–74, 1077
Orientals, 4468
pictorial works, 4202
poetry, 1064, 1066–67, 1532
short stories, 725, 733–34, 739, 926, 2110
theater, hist., 4923
travel & travelers, 1073, 2753, 4345, 4351, 4372, 4378
California. Senate. Fact-Finding Committee on Un-American Activities in California, 6111
California Folklore Quarterly, 5518
California Youth Authority, 4644
The Call of the Wild, 1051–52
Callahan, Jennie (Waugh), 4685
Callahan, North, 3945
Callender, Clarence N., 6282
Calvinism, 5299, 5411, 5428
in literature, 17, 26, 40, 562
essays, 230–31
fiction, 333
poetry, 79–83
sermons, 24, 32, 59
Cambridge, Mass.
in literature, 979
printing, Colonial, 6448
Cameron, Norman, 5336
Camino Real, 2226
Camp, Charles L., 4202
Camp, William Martin, 4208
Camp-meetings, 5407
Campaigns, political. See Political Campaigns Campaigns and battles. See under names of wars, e.g., American Revolution—campaigns & battles
Campbell, Bartley, 2316
Campbell, Harry M., 1397
Campbell, John C., comp., 3634
Campbell, John W., Jr., 2377
Campbell, Killis, 526
ed., 527
Campbell, Laurence R., 2912
Campbell, Marjorie E., 4004
Campbell, Olive Dame, music by, 5583
Campbell, Persia C., 5954
Campbell, Roy, 1366
Campbell, Thomas (clergyman), about, 5455
Campbell, Thomas (poet), about, 323
Campbell, Walter Stanley. See Vestal, Stanley, pseud.
Campbell, William Edward March, 1177
Campbell, William V., comp., 5166
Camping on My Trail, 1553
Can Grande's Castle, 1584
Can Such Things Be?, 733–34, 739
Canada
econ. relations with, 3638, 4052
fiction, 2162
relations with, 3272, 3552–55, 4473–74
Canal Town, 1157
Canal Zone, 4218
Canals, 4312, 5928
See also Waterways, inland
Canals, interoceanic, 4221
See also Panama Canal
Canary, Martha Jane, about, 4147
Canby, Henry Seidel, 444, 817, 1017, 2394–98, 3981
ed., 605, 2398, 2460–61, 2557
Cancer research, 4722
The Candle in the Cabin, 1581
Canfield, Dorothy. See Fisher, Dorothea Frances (Canfield)
Canfield, William M., maps, 4053
Canham, Erwin D., 4513, 5427
about, 5427
Cannery Row, 1780
Cannon, Carl L., 6461
Cannon, Ida M., 4805
Canton Island, 4218
The Cantos, 1665
about, 1672, 1674
Cantwell, Robert, 2406
Canvassing for a Vote (painting), 5761
Canwell Committee. See Washington (State) Legislature. Joint Fact-Finding Committee on Un-American Activities
Canzoni, 1666
Cape Cod
fiction, 1640
fishing, 5083
Cape Cod, 596–97, 606
Cape Cod Pilot, 3801
Capers, Gerald M., Jr., 4105, 6207
Capital, U.S. at Philadelphia, 4059
See also Washington, D.C.
Capital punishment, 239
Capitalism, 5882, 5887, 6007, 6357
fiction, 1334–37
hist., 3443, 3476, 5878
Capitalism and labor, 3439, 6094
Capitalism and state, 3352, 3361, 3421, 3424–25, 3438–39, 3446, 6066, 6101, 6195, 6207, 6352, 6366, 6374, 6430, 6434
Capitalists and financiers, 5880, 5882, 6023, 6027 Capitol Building, Washington, D.C.
architecture, 5708, 5720
paintings, 5775
Caplow, Theodore, 4547
Capote, Truman, 1944–47
about, 2371
Captain Abby and Captain John, 1290
Captain Caution, 1708–9
Captain Craig, 1714
Cardozo, Benjamin Nathan, 6262
about, 6251
Cardwell, Guy A., 745
A Careful and Strict Enquiry into the Modern Prevailing Notions of . . . Freedom of Will, 26
Carey, Jane (Clark), 6198
Carey, Mathew, 171, 177
Carey & Lea (firm), about, 6451
Cargill, Oscar, 629, 2399
ed., 608, 1898, 2276
Caribbean region, relations with, 3509, 3577, 3584, 3587
Caricatures. See Cartoons
Caridorf, 2309
Carlborg, Edith M. L., tr., 4246
Carleton, Will, 753–55
Carlson, Oliver, 2877, 2884, 6341
Carlyle, Thomas, about, 280, 633
Carman, Harry J., 3103, 5426
ed., 5426, 5827, 6054
Carmel, Calif., 3930
Carmer, Carl, 3972, 4020, 4047
ed., 3969, 3975, 3978–95, 4002–25
Carnegie, Andrew, 3434
about, 2503, 3434, 5880
Carnegie, Mrs. Andrew, about, 3434
Carnegie Corporation of New York, about, 5163
Carnegie Institution of Washington. Geophysical Laboratory, 4715
Carnera, Primo, about, 4987
Carnes, Cecil, 2908
A Carnival of Buncombe, 6421
Carnivals, 4980
Carolina, hist., 3216, 4073
Carolina Chansons, 1168, 1512

Caroline Islands, 4218
Carpenter, Frederic Ives, 302, 2400
ed., 299
Carpenter, Jesse T., 6059
Carpenter, Niles, 4395
Carpenter, Paul S., 5623
Carpenter, Ralph E., 5794
Carpenter, William S., 6283
Carr, Charles C., 5908
Carr, Harry, 4207
Carr, Harvey, about, 5389
Carr, Lowell Juilliard, 4586
Carr, Malcolm Wallace, 4842
Carr, Robert K., 6110, 6113–14, 6128, 6130
ed., 6106
Carr, William G., 5106
Carrier, Lyman, 5821
Carrière, Joseph Médard, ed., 5528
Carrington, Walter, 6091
Carroll, Eber Malcolm, 6351
Carroll, John, Abp., about, 5449, 5451, 5477
Carroll, John Alexander, 3271
Carroll, William, about, 4103
Carruth, Gorton, ed., 3076
Carry Me Back, 2842
Carson, Gerald, 5955
Carson, Joseph, 4856
Carson, Kit, about, 2831
Carson, William G., 4913
Carstensen, Vernon R., 5194
Cartels. See Trusts, industrial Carter, Clarence E., 3047
Carter, Everett, 977
Carter, Hodding, 2631–32, 3488, 3946, 3982
about, 2632
Carter, William G. Harding, 3653–54
about, 3653
Cartmell, Van H., 1124
ed., 2327
Cartoons
motion picture, 4957
politics, 2859, 2917, 5803
Cartwright, Peter, 2633–34
about, 2633–34
Caruthers, William Alexander, 226–29
about, 226
Carver, George Washington, about, 2690, 5825
Cary, Edward, 2278
Case, Robert Ormond, 4893
Case, Shirley Jackson, 5413
Case, Victoria, 4893
The Case of Mr. Crump, 1573
Cash, Wilbur J., 4066
Cass, Lewis, about, 3358, 6078
Cass Timberlane, 1568
Cassidy, Frederic G., 2251
Cast a Cold Eye, 2020
Castaigne, A., illus., 1101
Castañeda, Pedro de, 3217
Caste. See Class distinction
Castell, Alburey, ed., 5333
Castellón, Federico, about, 5783
Castilian Days, 941
Castle Hayne, N. C., 4406
Castle Nowhere, 1150
Casualty, 2012
Caswell, Hollis L., 5147
Cat on a Hot Tin Roof, 2228, 2336
Catalogues and Counters, 5956
The Catcher in the Rye, 2108
Cate, James Lea, ed., 3727
Cate, Wirt Armistead, 3364
Cater, Douglass, 5899
Cathay, 1666
Cather, Willa Sibert, 832, 1029, 1031, 1276–78
about, 821, 1279–83, 2406, 2429
The Catherine Wheel, 2159
Catholic Church, 5404–5, 5444–47
bibl., 5449
doctrine, 2034, 2036, 2038, 2040–42
hist., 5448, 5450–51, 5477
schools, 5101–2
soc. thought, 5484, 5488
sources, 5449
Catholic (Uniate) Church, Ukrainian, 4492
Catholics, 3040, 4428, 4515, 5450, 5495
Catlin, George paintings by, 3330
about, 5802
Catlin, Russ, 5001
Caton, John Dean, about, 4680
Cats in literature folklore & hist., 1828
poetry, 1359
Catskill Mountains, 5064
in literature, 740
Cattell, J. McKeen, ed., 5212
Cattell, Jacques, ed., 4712
Cattle and cattle trade, 4153–54, 4157–58, 4163, 4165, 4190, 4196, 4214, 5868–69, 5873 brands & branding, 687, 5503, 5507, 5509, 5526
fiction, 1686–87
ranges, 4153, 5858, 5873
Cattle trails
fiction, 684–86
short stories, 687
Catton, Bruce, 3690–92, 3696
Catullus, translation, 1482
Caughey, John W., 3048, 4200–1
ed., 4202
Causality (philosophy), 5289
Cauthen, Charles Edward, ed., 2635
The Cavaliers of Virginia, 227
Cavalry, hist., 3659
Cavan, Ruth (Shonle), 4561
Cavanaugh, John, Father, 5041
Cavender's House, 1714
Caves, 2946
Cavins, Harold M., 4863
Cawdor, 1534
Cawley, Elizabeth Hoon, ed., 4321
Cayton, Horace R., 4439
Cedar Mountain to Chancellorsville, 3695
Cedar Rapids, Iowa, guidebook, 3891
Ceiling Unlimited, 5938
Cenci family, fiction, 2087
Censorship, 6106
in 1917, 3462
motion pictures, 4947
Census, 2972, 4390, 4400, 4403
See also Population
Central Medical Group of Brooklyn, 4889
Central Pacific Railroad, about, 5927
Century Magazine, 992, 2923
Century of Conflict, 3226
A Century of Dishonor, 985
Ceramic industries, 5792
Ceremony, 2217
Cerf, Bennett A., ed., 1124, 2325, 2327, 2370
The Certain Hour, 1262
Chadwick, French Ensor, 3569, 3707
Chafee, Zechariah, 6108–9, 6128, 6130
Chaffee, Adna R. (1842–1914), about, 3654
Chaffee, Adna R. (1884–1941), about, 3658
Chagres River and valley, 4014
Chaikin, Joseph, 2898
Chaim Lederer's Return, 1192
Chain stores, 5961
The Chainbearer, 268–69
XAIPE (Chaire), 1313
The Chambered Nautilus, 368
Chamberlain, D. E., 6195
Chamberlain, John, 2406–7
Chamberlain, Joseph P., 6153
Chamberlain, Lawrence H., 6110, 6115, 6142
Chamberlain, Neil W., 6046–47
Chamberlin, Joseph Edgar, 2870
Chambers, Whittaker, about, 6114
Chambers, William Nisbet, 3321
Champaign County, Ohio, 3871
Champlain, Samuel de, 3156, 3207
about, 1873, 3156, 3171
Chance, Love, and Logic, 5347
Chandler, Lester V., 5975
Channel Islands, Calif., 3957
Channing, Edward, 3083
about, 3058
Channing, William Ellery, 230–38, 5428, 5472
ed., 594, 596
about, 230
Channing, William Henry, about, 2279
Chanute, Octave, 4788
Chapelle, Howard I., 3666
Chapin, Francis Stuart, 4548
Chapin, Howard M., 85
Chaplin, Charlie, about, 4953
Chapman, Arthur, 4661
Chapman, Herman H., 5909
Chapman, John, about, 4533, 5506, 5519
Chapman, John A., ed., 4897
Chapman, John Jay, 2697
about, 2539, 2697
Chapman, Robert, 487, 2335
Chappell, Louis W., 5517
Chappell, Matthew N., 4700
Character (psychology), 4556
Charavay, Etienne, 3250
The Chariot of Fire, 2415
Charities, 4615–16, 4618, 4621, 4626, 4628–30, 4634, 6209
Jewish, 4461
Allegheny County, Pa., 4591
New England, 4341
Pittsburgh, 4591
See also Medicine—charities
The Charity Ball, 2314
The Charity Patient (sculpture), 5739

Charlemont, 550
Charles River, Mass., 3991
Charles the Second, 2337
Charleston, S.C.
descr., 1002–3, 4093
econ. condit. (Colonial period), 4602
fiction, 1145, 1512–13
hist., 4093
intellectual life (Colonial period), 3763
soc. life & cust., 4602, 4288
Charlotte, N.C., guidebook, 3832
Charlotte; a Tale of Truth, 162
Charlotte Temple; a Tale of Truth, 163
Charlottesville, Va., guidebook, 3828
A Charmed Life, 2022
Charteris, Evan, 5771
Charters, Colonial, 6086, 6100
Charvat, William, 2331
ed., 2294
Chase, Gilbert, 5608
Chase, Harold B., 5002
about, 5002
Chase, John W., ed., 4513
Chase, Mary Ellen, 1284–89, 3782, 5214
Chase, Philander, about, 5457
Chase, Richard
comp., 5586
ed., 925, 5529
Chase, Richard V., 494, 497, 651, 656, 854
Chase, Salmon Portland, about, 3382
Chase, Stanley P., 2425
Chase, Stuart, 6392
Chastellux, François Jean, marquis de, 4252–54
about, 4251, 4254, 4258
Chattanooga, hist., 4104
Chatters, Carl H., 6135
Chauncy, Charles, about, 5472
Chautauquas, 4893
Cheever, Daniel S., 3610
Chelsea Rooming House, 1483
Chemical engineering, 4793
Chemical industry, 4735
Chemistry, 4715, 4731, 4740
Chemistry, physiological, 4732
Chemists, 4735, 4740
Cheney, Orion H., 6441
Cheney, Sheldon, ed., 4972
Chêng, Tê-ch'ao, 4463
Cherokee Indians, 4104, 4233, 4248–50
See also Five Civilized Tribes
Chesney, Alan M., 4845
Chesnut, Mary Boykin (Miller), 2636–37
Chesnutt, William C., 6284
Chesnutt, Charles Waddel, 756–58
about, 756
Chesnutt, Helen M., 756
Chester, Giraud, 4686
Chesterfield, Philip Stanhope, Earl of, about, 2481
Chesterton, G. K., 4343
Chesuncook, 594
Chevalier, Michel, 4313–14
about, 4312
The Chevalier of Pensieri-Vani, 887
Cheyenne, Wyo., 4176
Cheyenne Indians, 2799, 2999–3000, 4160
soc. life & cust., 2999–3000
Cheyney, Edward P., 5192
Chicago
banks & banking, 5985
descr., 4134, 4136
econ. condit., 3425
fiction, 887–89, 956–58, 1094–95, 1333–34, 1337, 1339, 1372–74, 1376, 1921–22, 1939, 2054, 2232–33, 2235
frontier life, 4136
govt., 6208
hist., 3987, 4135–36 land values, 5812
libraries, 6473
music, 5644, 5651–52, 5660
Negroes, 4439, 4451
poetry, 1727, 1731, 1937–38
politics, 6207, 6375, 6380, 6386
public health, 4864
soc. condit., 2836, 4599, 4614, 4658, 6380
soc. life & cust., 4134
Swedes, 4486
underworld, 2586
Chicago. Home Rule Commission, 6208
Chicago. Public Library, about, 6473
Chicago. University, 5201
Chicago. University. College, 5182
Chicago. University. Dept. of Education, 5249
Chicago. University. Laboratory School, 5117
Chicago Bears, 5040
Chicago-Cook County Health Survey, 4864
Chicago fire (1871), 4136
Chicago Poems, 1731
The Chicago Renaissance in American Letters, 2419
Chicago Review, 2556
Chicago River, 3987
"Chicago school" of architecture, 5705
"Chicago school" of criticism, 2410
Chicago strike (1894). See Pullman strike
Chicago Symphony Orchestra, 5651–52
Chicago Tribune, about, 2862
Chickasaw Indians, 3027
Chickering, Geraldine Jencks, ed., 5575
Chidsey, Donald Barr, 5027
Child, Francis James, 5550
Child, John L., 5254, 5291
Child, Lydia Maria (Francis), 239–44
about, 239, 244, 2280
Child, Robert, about, 3198
Child study, 5149
Childhood and youth in literature
drama, 2023
fiction, 188, 778–83, 787–93, 811, 878–80, 1126–27, 1132, 1184, 1372–74, 1376, 1412, 1415–17, 1635, 1683, 1802–4, 1839, 1888, 1944–45, 1964, 2023, 2032, 2107–8, 2213, 2229
personal narratives, 706–10, 906–7, 1078, 1204, 1213, 1284, 1292, 1543, 2394 Childhood and youth in literature—Continued
poetry, 878, 1126
short stories, 1786, 1790
Children, 4315, 4559
behavior, 4559
books, 17, 188–89, 239, 580–82, 906–7, 984, 1132, 2500, 4190
development, 5149–50, 5247
education, 5105, 5148–50
employment, 4569
exceptional, 5114, 5205, 5207, 5246
folklore, 5588, 5592 guidance, 5149 institutional care, 4644
periodicals, 190, 239
protection, 4618
songs, 5510, 5559, 5563, 5588
Children and Older People, 1796
Children Are Bored on Sunday, 2160
Children of God, 1424
Children of Swamp and Wood, 1724, 5087
The Children of the Night, 1714
The Children's Hour (drama), 1989, 2333
The Children's Hour (periodical), 190
Childs, H. L., 6336
Childs, James Rives, 3599
Childs, Marquis W., 5899
Childs, Richard S., 6425
Chile, relations with, 3580
Chillicothe, Ohio, 3864
Chills and Fever, 1676
A Chilmark Miscellany, 2380 China
econ. relations with, 3638
fiction, 1252–56, 1259
influences on literature, 1583
relations with, 3506, 3589, 3591–96, 3619
World War II, 3726
Chinard, Gilbert, 3278
Chinaware, 5791–92
Chinese, 3437, 4463–64, 4467–68
The Chinese Nightingale, 1581
Chinese poetry, translations, 1664, 1667
Chipman, Nathaniel, about, 5121
Chiricahua Apache Indians, 3010
Chiropractic, 4811
Chisholm, Jesse, about, 4158
Chisholm, Leslie L., 5153, 5228
Chisholm Trail, 4157
Chita, 946–48, 951–52, 955
Chittenden, Hiram Martin, 4148, 4182
ed., 2663
Chittenden, Russell H., 4732
Chittick, Victor L. O., 709
Chitwood, Oliver Perry, 3323
Chivalry, 1262
Chivers, Thomas Holley, 540
Choate, Julian Ernest, 4162–63
Choate, Rufus, about, 2676
Choctaw Indians, hist., 3024–25, 3027, 4233, 4248–50
The Choice, 1851
Choirs (music), 5632, 5664–67, 5672
Chopin, Kate (O'Flaherty), 759–761
about, 759
Chorus for Survival, 1483
Chosen Country, 1331

677676 O–63–71

Chotzinoff, Samuel, 2638–39
  about, 2639
Chouart, Médard, sieur des Groseilliers, about, 3170
Christ-Janer, Albert, 5761
Christchurch, 1295
Christensen, Erwin O., 5594
The Christian Disciple, 231
The Christian Examiner, 230–31
The Christian Philosopher, 46
Christian Science, 5404, 5439
  hist., 5452–53
Christianity, 5338, 5351, 5358, 5899
Christiansen, F. Melius, about, 5664 Christmas
  hist., 4546
  songs, 5563
Christmas-Night in the Quarters, 1135
The Christmas Tree, 1616
Chronicler of the Cavaliers, 226
Chu, Pao Hsun, 4662
Chugerman, Samuel, 4537
Chujoy, Anatole, 4969
Church and education, 5419, 5491, 5494
Church and society, 5482, 5484–97
  Catholic Church, 5484, 5488
  Judaism, 5488
  Protestant churches, 5485–86, 5488–89
Church and state, 4550, 5395, 5400, 5406, 5409, 5418–22, 5444–45, 6117 educational aspects, 5103, 5236, 5238
  in literature, 17, 19, 84, 92–95
  Mass., Colonial period, 3178, 3182, 3199, 3235
  New England, Colonial period, 3197, 3743
Church history, 5394–96, 5399–5401, 5405–6, 5409, 5411, 5441–42
  Colonial period, 43, 5408, 5410, 5417
Church music
  hist., 5632–34
  Mormons, 5630
  Protestants, 5631
  New England, 5633
  Philadelphia, 5629
Church, of Christ, Scientist. See Christian Science
Church of God, Anderson, Ind., 5442
Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints. See Mormons and Mormonism Church of the Brethren, 5442
Churches of Christ, 5442
  hist., 5455
The Churches Quarrel Espoused, 93, 95
Churchill, Henry S., 4604
Churchill, Winston (1871–1947), 762–67
Ciardi, John, 1948–53
Cimarron, 1406
Cincinnati
  descr., 4303, 4310, 4312
  guidebook, 3865
  intellectual life, 3767
  soc. life & cust., 4122, 4303
Cincinnati Symphony Orchestra, 5647
The Circuit Rider, 872–73
Circus, 4894, 4977, 4982
The Circus in the Attic, 2198
Cistercians, 2040
Cities and towns, 3095, 4360, 4576, 4587, 4594–95, 4598, 4601–2, 5510, 6207, 6213, 6218
  climate, 2952
  frontier, 4151, 4153
  growth, 4601–2, 4609
  guidebooks, 3786
  hist., 4609
  in art, 5801
  place-names, 2976
  planning, 4575, 4587, 4603–7, 4612–13, 5707 population, 4393
  recreation, 4997–98
  soc. condit., 4395
  water supply, 4797
  Colo., 3913
  Conn., 4041
  Eastern seaboard, 4358
  Middle Atlantic States, 4263
  Middle West, 4109
  Mo., 4108, 4281
  Nev., 3955, 4184
  New England, 3965, 4239, 4261, 4279
  N.J., 4053
  N.Y., 4239
  Northwest, Old, 4358
  Rocky Mountains, 4176
  Southern States, 4083, 4288, 4595
  Southwest, New, 4187
  Southwest, Old, 4098
  Va., 4086
  The West, 4150, 4176–77
  See also Communities, urban Cities and towns in literature
  drama, 1688–89, 2049, 2063, 2145
  editorials, sketches, etc., 701–5
  essays, 1791, 1859
  fiction, 887–89, 956–58, 1090–95, 1190, 1300, 1327, 1332, 1372–74, 1561, 1656–58, 1828–29, 1831, 1845, 1908, 1911–12, 1914–15, 1921–22, 1939, 1940, 1943, 1966–67, 2054, 2069, 2074, 2182, 2184, 2229, 2415, 2431
  poetry, 1727, 1731, 1870, 1937–38, 2060, 2133
  short stories, 1111, 1114–19, 1510, 1851, 1855, 1910, 1913, 2057, 2071–75, 2145
Citizen Tom Paine, 1977
Citizenship, 4424, 6122, 6133, 6139
  Negroes, 4443
  Orientals, 6120
The City and the Pillar, 2180, 2183
City Ballads, 753
The City Boy, 2229
City government. See Local government
The City in the Dawn, 1171
City-manager plan, 6210, 6213, 6216, 6425
City of Discontent, 1582
The City of Trembling Leaves, 1956
Civil Aeronautics Act (1938), 5943
Civil arbitration, 6299
Civil cases (law), 6280
Civil control of the military, 3646, 3650
Civil disobedience, 585–86, 593, 604–5, 607–8
Civil liberties and rights, 3308, 3401, 6075, 6106–30, 6134, 6338
  hist., 6117
  minorities, 6129
  Negroes, 4445
  Calif., 6111
  N.Y. (State), 5115
Civil procedure (law), 6289, 6295, 6300, 6304
Civil service, 6172, 6178–81, 6183, 6186, 6188, 6192–93
  hist., 6174
Civil Service Commission, 6174
  about, 6174, 6186, 6190
Civil service reform, 3422–23, 3431, 3437, 6174, 6178, 6186–87, 6363, 6373, 6382
Civil War, 2580, 2710–11, 2757, 3073, 3092, 3141, 3373, 3387–88, 3554, 3690–3706, 4481
  art, 5765
  biog. (collected), 2613–14, 3695
  campaigns & battles, 2828–30, 3450, 3690–93, 3695–99, 3701, 3703, 3706, 4378
    bibl., 3365
  causes, 3065, 3122, 3366, 3370, 3398, 3400, 3409 foreign opinion, 3536, 3550, 3769 foreign rel., 3359
  hist., 1729, 3374, 3382, 3393, 3408, 3416, 3450, 4076, 6081
    sources, 2416, 3395
  interpretations of, 3073, 3106, 3407
  naval operations, 3700
  personal narratives, 277, 2280, 2637, 2823, 2828–30, 3693, 3696, 3704–5, 4378–81
    bibl., 3365, 3378
  photographs, 829
  regimental histories, 3690–92, 3695
    bibl., 3365
  reporters & reporting, 2851
  songs & music, 5569
  sources, 3697, 3700
Civil War in literature
  editorials, sketches, etc., 556–57, 633, 1099, 1103–4, 1106
  fiction, 188–89, 245, 247–50, 278–79, 745, 763–65, 821, 825–29, 836, 1241, 1382, 1389, 1449, 1468, 1541–42, 1544, 1618–19, 1730, 1745, 2201, 4912
  poetry, 206, 456–57, 459, 486, 488, 614, 616–17, 623, 666, 1222, 1224, 1811, 1824
  propaganda, 422
  short stories, 556–57, 733–37, 739, 1099–1102, 1106, 1225, 1790
Civilian Conservation Corps, 5884
Civilian Public Service Camps, 3649
Clancy, William P., 5447
Clapesattle, Helen B., 4827
Clapp, Margaret, 4047
Clappe, Louise Amelia Knapp (Smith), 2640–41
Clare, Thomas H., 5309
Clark, Dan Elbert, 3078
Clark, David L., 109, 115

Clark, E. H., 2240
Clark, Elmer Talmage, 5440, 5442, 5463
Clark, George Luther, 6272
Clark, George Rogers, 3239
about, 3239
Clark, Harry Hayden, 970, 2424–25, 2515
ed., 139, 142, 158, 468, 2290, 2330, 2337, 2401
Clark, Jane Perry. See Carey, Jane (Clark)
Clark, John Maurice, 3454, 5898, 6004
about, 5888
Clark, John Spencer, 5304
Clark, Lawrence E., 5983
Clark, Leadie M., 652
Clark, Lewis Gaylord, 2295
Clark, Thomas D., 2853, 3983, 4097, 4106
Clark, Victor S., 5904
Clark, Walter Van Tilburg, 1954–58, 4176
Clark, William, 3298
about, 3167, 3299
Clark, William L., 6275–76
Clark, William Smith, II, ed., 469
Clark County, Ohio, 3870
Clarke, Eric, 5617
Clarke, James F., ed., 313
Clarke, William N., about, 5428
Clark's Field, 958
Clash by Night, 2066
Class distinction, 4524, 4534, 4542, 4547, 4549–51, 4556–58, 4561, 4564, 4566, 4585, 5146
Classic Americans, 2397
Classical influences on authors, 201, 205, 611, 1532, 1556, 1864, 2098, 2101, 2479, 2493
Classics and Commercials, 2540
Clavers, Mary, pseud. See Kirkland, Caroline Matilda (Stansbury)
Clavière, Étienne, 4259
Clawson, Marion, 5809, 5839
Clay, Henry, 3344
about, 3342–44
Clay, Lucius D., 3570
Clayton-Bulwer Treaty, 3559
The Clear Sun-Shine of the Gospel Breaking Forth upon the Indians in New England, 62
Clearing in the Sky, 2171
Cleaveland, Moses, about, 4118
Cleaves, Freeman, 3325
Clegg, Charles, 4153
Cleland, Robert Glass, 4186, 4203–4, 4353
Clemens, Olivia (Langdon), 801
Clemens, Samuel Langhorne. See Twain, Mark
Clemmer, Donald, 4641
Clemons, Harry, 6466
The Clergyman's Advice to the Villagers, 121
Cleveland, Grover, 3422
about, 2616, 3423, 6359, 6373
Cleveland, Ohio
concerts, 5630
politics, 6207, 6428–29
The Cliff-Dwellers, 888
Clifford, Cornelius, 5289
Climate, 2937, 2951–53, 2959, 2966, 5816
maps, 2951–52
Nev., 4184
New York (State), 4237–38
Pa., 4237–38
Southern States, 4084
Southwest, Far, 4189
Utah, 4183
The Climate of Eden, 1493
Clinch, C. B., 2311
Cline, Howard F., 3504
Clinical medicine, 4827, 4829, 4831, 4885
Clinical Sonnets, 1625
Clipper ships, 5937
The Clod, 2332
The Clouds, Aigeltinger, Russia, &c., 1878
Clough, Benjamin C., ed., 5513
Clubs, social, 4574, 4578
Clugston, W. G., 6207
Clurman, Harold, 4914
Clymer, Joseph Floyd, 5003
Coad, Oral Sumner, 4899
Coalfields, 4336
Coan, Otis W., 2402
Coast and Geodetic Survey, about, 4766
Coastwise navigation, 3787
Coats, Robert H., 4474
Cobb, Irvin Shrewsbury, 2642–43
about, 2643
Cobbett, William, 2647
Cobden, Richard, 4321
about, 4320
Coblentz, Edmond D., comp., 2884
Coblenz, Constance G., 3630
Cochise, about, 3004
Cochran, Negley D., 2890
Cochran, Thomas C., 3103, 4047, 5875, 5927, 6005
Cochrane, Alexander, about, 4735
Cochrane, Willard W., 5850
Cockerell, Theodore D. A., about, 4734
Cockrell, Ewing, 6297
Cocks Must Crow, 1684
The Cocktail Party, 1359
Coe, Eva (Johnston), 5593
Coe, Wesley R., 4715
Coeur d'Alene Valley, 4176
Coeur de Lion, Richard, about, 2186
Coffin, Charles Carleton, about, 2851
Coffin, Robert Peter Tristram, 1290–97, 3973
about, 1292
Coffin, Tristram P., 5518, 5550, 5556
Coffman, Stanley K., 2403
Cogswell, Joseph Green, about, 2462, 3776
Cohane, Tim, 5035
Cohen, Elliot E., ed., 4452
Cohen, Felix S., ed., 3728, 5267
Cohen, Haskell, 5030
Cohen, I. Bernard, 4719
ed., 122, 4750
Cohen, Morris R., 3728, 5267–70, 6268
ed., 5347
about, 5267
Cohn, Alfred E., 4865
Cohn, David L., 3782, 5822
Cohn, Sarah W., 4407
Cohon, S. S., 4458
Coit, Margaret L., 3327–28
Coker, Francis W., ed., 6060
Colby, Merle, 3940
Colby, Vineta, ed., 2455
Cold Morning Sky, 1905–6
A Cold Spring, 1926
Colden, Cadwallader, 3194, 5251
about, 3194
Cole, Arthur Charles, 3092, 4130, 5193
Cole, Arthur Harrison, 5910
Cole, Cyrenus, 2644–45, 4144
Cole, Fay-Cooper, about, 2990
Cole, Stewart G., 5430
Cole, Thomas, about, 3751
Colean, Miles L., 4605, 4610
Coleman, James S., 6455
Coleman, Laurence Vail, 3049, 4716, 5794
Coleman, Roy V., ed., 2967, 3071
Coleman, William, 2858
Coleridge, Samuel Taylor, about, 520
Colfax, Schuyler, about, 4383–84
Collect, 633, 638
Collective bargaining, 3132, 6038, 6046, 6053
The College Widow, 701
Colleges and universities, 3113, 4719, 5160, 5204
administration, 5135, 5194, 5201, 5244
criticisms, 5179, 5190, 5232, 5235 curricula, 5100, 5178, 5180, 5182, 5184, 5187, 5196, 5199 development and innovations, 5169, 5178, 5180, 5182, 5184, 5187, 5195–99, 5215, 5246 directories, 5112, 5161
England, 5167, 5179
enrollment, 3786, 5163, 5170 faculties, 5181, 5201
fiction, 2001, 2021
finances, 5135, 5163–68, 5172, 5175, 5189, 5194 geographical distribution, 5171
govt. relations, 5094, 5165, 5167 graduate instruction, 5099, 5105, 5195
hist., 5101–2, 5113, 5122, 5125, 5134, 5143, 5169, 5176–77, 5183, 5186, 5188, 5191–5204
libraries, 5201, 6478, 6487
museums, 3049, 5201
needs & objectives, 5173, 5178, 5180, 5182, 5187, 5189, 5194 organization, 5135, 5174, 5189
periodicals, 5244
personal narrative, 2394
poetry, 165–67
religious foundations, 5411 scientific education, 4723, 4725
soc. aspects, 5177, 5183, 5191, 5193–94
stat., 5114, 5174
students, 5170, 5175, 5194 surveys, 5114, 5186, 5201–2, 5206
Germany, 5179
Gt. Brit., 5167, 5179

Colleges and universities—Continued
Southern States, 4723, 5176
See also Agricultural colleges; Athletics—college; Catholic colleges; Community colleges; Dental schools; Football—college; Junior colleges; Land-grant colleges; Music—education; State colleges and universities; and names of individual colleges and universities, e.g., Bennington College.
Collier, Donald, 2993
Collier, John, 4428
Collier, T., 6195
Collinge, Patricia, 4919
Collins, Carvel, ed., 1092
The Colloquy of Monos and Una, 529
Colm, Gerhard, 5898
Colombia, relations with, 3585
Colombo, Cristoforo. See Columbus, Christopher Colonial life in literature, 1–6, 12–16, 43–44, 66–71
diaries, journals, etc., 15–16, 36–39, 49, 53–58, 90–91
fiction, 226, 239, 251–52, 258, 333, 405, 511, 546, 548–49, 665, 1439, 1441, 1707, 1916–18, 1920 legal documents, 32, 78
poetry, 7–11, 72–73, 79–83, 427, 433, 1222
religious writings, 17–35, 40, 43–48, 59–62, 84, 86–89, 90, 92–95
satire, 51–52, 75–76
See also Social life and customs
Colonial Williamsburg, Inc., 5595
Colorado, 3964, 3967, 4180–82
descr., 4174
fiction, 1249
guidebooks, 3912–13
hist., 3913, 3956, 3961, 4147, 4174, 4180, 4189
poetry, 1409–10
theater, hist., 4925
travel & travelers, 4378
Ute Indians, 3041
Colorado Desert, 3947
Colorado River, 4017, 4757
Colorado Springs, hist., 4150
Colton, Calvin, ed., 3344
Columbia, 118
Columbia Plateau, Nez Percé Indians, 3001
Columbia River, 4022
Columbia River Valley, fiction, 1314
Columbia University, about, 5136, 5181, 5185
Columbia University. Bureau of Applied Social Research, 4701
Columbia University. Columbia College, hist., 5197
Columbia University. Graduate School of Journalism, 2889, 2910
Columbia University. New York State Hospital Study, 4846
Columbia University. School of Library Service, hist., 6485
The Columbiad, 104
Columbus, Christopher, 3163–64
about, 381, 1873, 3163–65
poetry, 104
Columnists, 732, 878, 2017
Coman, Katharine, 4149
Comanche Indians, 3014, 4160
Come Back, Little Sheba, 1996, 2335
Come into My Parlor, 2836
Comedy farcical, 701 frontier & pioneer, 518 lyrical, 1647 marital, 1518 musical, 701, 705
periods
(1764–1819), 168–70
(1820–70), 198, 517–18, 676
(1871–1914), 701, 705
(1915–39), 1199–1212, 1491–93, 1518, 1545–50, 1647–48, 1749
romantic, 676
satiric, 517, 1491–93, 1545–50, 1749
social, 168–70, 1199–1212, 1317
theory, 5351
See also Drama
Comfort, William Wistar, 3222
Comic strips, 2865
The Coming Forth by Day of Osiris Jones, 1166
Coming Home, 1851
Coming to the Parson (sculpture), 5739
Commager, Henry Steele, 982, 3058, 3103, 3274, 3348, 3738, 4513, 5481, 6082, 6130
ed., 3079, 4231
Command Decision, 2337
Commentary, 4452–53
Commerce, 4069, 5944–64
foreign, 5946–48, 5950, 5953, 6002 govt. regulation, 5946–48, 5950 cases, 6095, 6104
hist., 5944, 5948, 5955, 5960, 6016
maritime, 3524 reporting, 2869, 2902, 2918, 2924
New England, 4266
New York (City), 5951
New York (State), 4242–46, 4266
Pacific Northwest, 4212, 4214
Pa., 4242–46, 4266
Southern States, 4266
The Thirteen Colonies, 3193, 3243, 3262, 3289
See also Trade
Commercial arbitration, 6299
Commercial policy, 3285, 3340, 3638–39, 5953
See also General Agreements on Tariffs and Trade; Tariff
Commins, Saxe, ed., 400, 3268, 3271
Commission on Financing Higher Education, 5163–75
Commission on Freedom of the Press, 4687, 4947
Commission on Graduate Medical Education, 4857
Commission on Hospital Care, 4847
Commission on Life Adjustment Education for Youth, 5224
Commission on Medical Education, 4858
Commission on Organization of the Executive Branch of the Government, 4671, 5099, 6184, 6199
Committee for Economic Development, about, 5983
Committee for the Study of Recnt Immigration from Europe, 4407
Committee on American History in Schools and Colleges, 3050
Committee on Public Information, 3462
Committee on the Costs of Medical Care, 4883–84
Commodity exchanges, 5952
The Common Glory, 1477
Common law, 6222–23, 6230–31, 6236
Common Sense, 155, 160 Commons, John R., 6033, 6038
about, 5888
The Commonweal, 5446
Communication Workers of America, about, 4672
Communications, 3724, 4661–4711, 4787, 5246, 5899, 6454, 6480
See also individual means of communication, e.g., Books and reading; Language; Newspapers Communism, 3620, 5351, 5445, 6128, 6130, 6134, 6356 guilt by association, 6111, 6117
Calif., 6111, 6114
Washington (State), 6116
Communists and the Communist Party, 3149, 3490
Communitarian experiments. See Utopias (settlements)
Communities, 4551, 4656
Jewish, 4454, 4457–58
Negro, 4442, 4446
Norwegian, 2267
Calif., 2641
Communities, rural, 2764, 4109, 4576
bibl., 4580
econ. condit., 4585
See also Farm and rural life
Communities, urban, 4548, 4550, 4561, 4576, 4609
See also Cities and towns
Community centers, Jewish, 4454
Community colleges, 5162
Community life, Japanese, 4466
Community music, 5625
Community organization, 4575
Compacts, New England (Colonial period), 6079
The Company She Keeps, 2018
Compensation, 285
Compensation for judicial error, 6294
Composers, 146, 1927, 5605, 5609–11, 5614, 5620, 5639, 5656, 5672
See also Musicians
Composition, literary. See Literary composition
Comprehensive high schools, 5156
Compromise of 1850, 3118, 3344
Compton, Arthur H., 4722, 4747, 5187, 5434
about, 4747
Compton, Charles H., 6467
Compton, Frances Snow, pseud. See Adams, Henry Compton, Karl T., 4693
Comptroller General, 5996

Comstock Lode, Nev., 4185
fiction, 1420
Comte, Auguste, about, 4536
Conant, James Bryant, 5134, 5180
Conceived in Liberty, 1974
Concerning the Jews, 798–99
Concerts
hist., 5612, 5679
Boston, 5649
Calif., 5630
Cleveland, 5630
New York (City), 5626–27
Concord, Mass.
essays, 1002–3
hist., 4037
Concord Circle, 186, 230, 280, 333, 585, 619, 2278
Concord School of Philosophy, 5220
Concord Sonata, 5682
Condit, Carl W., 5705
The Conduct of Life, 292–93
Conductors (orchestra), 5620
Confederate States, 2637, 2828–30, 3694–95, 3698
biog. (collected), 2613, 3384, 3695
for. rel., 3539
govt., 6081
hist., 3373, 3383–84, 3396, 3698, 4076
bibl., 3365, 3378
sources, 3697, 3700
origins, 3404
soc. condit., 3373
Confederate States Army, 3369 cavalry, 3703 military life, 3704–5
sources, 3697
Confederate States Navy, sources, 3700
The Confederation (1781–89), 3190, 3245, 3256, 3301–2
Conference for Progressive Political Action, 6356
Confessions of a Congressman, 6165
The Confessions of a Reformer, 6428
Confessions of an Actor, 4933
The Confidence-Man, 485, 491
The Confident Years, 2381
The Confidential Clerk, 1360
Conformity, 6130
The Congo, 1581
Congregational-Christian Churches, 5442
Congregational churches, Colonial, 17, 19, 32, 40, 43–44, 59, 92–95 Congregationalists, 5404
hist., 5415, 5454
Congress, 6084, 6089, 6150–69, 6340
committees, 6159
foreign affairs, 3604, 3610–11, 3615–16
functions, 6151–52, 6154–55, 6167, 6169, 6191
hist., 3450, 6140, 6142, 6150–51
investigating committees, 6154, 6160, 6164
organization, 6150, 6152, 6155, 6162, 6167, 6169
rules & practice, 6150, 6162, 6167, 6169
See also Legislative branch
Congress. House, 6150, 6163, 6165, 6415
committees, 6156
election districts, 6163
rules & practice, 6150, 6165
Congress. House. Committee Investigating Un-American Activities, 6112
Congress. House. Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs, 3039
Congress. House. Committee on Un-American Activities, hist., 6114
Congress. House. Select Committee on Lobbying Activities, 6397
Congress. Joint Committee on the Economic Report, 5970 Congress. Senate
functions, 6158, 6161
hist., 6158
rules & practice, 6157–58, 6161
Congress. Senate. Committee on the Judiciary, 4424
Congress of Industrial Organizations, 6034–36
Congress of Industrial Organiztaions. Political Action Committee, 6394
Congressional elections. See Elections
Congressional investigations, 6128, 6154, 6160, 6164
The Conjure Woman, 757
The Conjurer's Revenge, 757
Conkle, E. P., 2332
Conklin, Edwin Grant, 5427
about, 5427
Connecticut, 3965, 4041–42 architecture, Colonial, 5707 early settlers, 32
guidebook, 3805
hist., 4041
pol. & govt., 2652
Connecticut Courant (Hartford), 2875
Connecticut Fundamental Orders of 1639, 32
Connecticut in literature, 32, 34, 118, 562
essays, 165
fiction, 1299, 1301
poetry, 121, 1782
Connecticut River and valley, hist., 4009
Connecticut Wits, 101, 118, 165, 2465
A Connecticut Yankee in King Arthur's Court, 794–97, 811
Connelly, Marc, 1545–46, 2327, 2332–33, 2348
Conner, Frederick W., 2404
Connor, A. J., 2953
Conover, Merrill B., 4621
Conover, Milton, 4768
Conquering the Wilderness, 4044
The Conqueror, 723–24
The Conquest of Canaan (novel), 1802
The Conquest of Canaan (poem), 119
The Conquest of Mexico, History of, 2294
The Conquest of Peru, History of, 2294
Conquistador, 1585
Conrad, Robert T., 2347
Conscientious objectors
Civil War, 3702
World War II, 3649, 6124
Conservation of natural resources, 1072, 1075–76, 2790, 2956, 2960, 4099, 5810, 5884, 5900 Conservatism, 3139, 6340
hist., 6067, 6070
Colonial period, 3195, 3255, 3262
American Revolution, 3253, 3267
19th cent., 3303, 3336
Conservatism Revisited, 2189
Conservative Judaism, 5460
Considine, Robert B., 5012
The Conspiracy of Kings, 103
The Conspiracy of Pontiac, 3171
The Conspirators, 2092
Constable, William G., 5426
about, 5426
Constitution, 3046, 3116, 3304, 4266, 4334, 6075–78, 6080–82, 6084–89, 6091–93, 6100, 6121, 6129, 6133–34, 6137, 6143, 6157, 6199, 6411 amendments, 6098, 6102–3
Civil War, 6064, 6121
1st, 6107, 6109, 6123
5th, 6097, 6108
14th, 6078, 6094–95, 6097 article 5, 6098
commerce clause, 6096 compact clause, 6206 contract clause, 6105
econ. aspects, 3139
See also Bill of Rights
The Constitution of the United States (Annotated), 6102
Constitutional Convention (1787), 6082, 6087–88
Constitutional history, 3141, 3195, 3253–54, 3256, 3282, 6059, 6073–89, 6094, 6100 Constitutional law, 6072, 6085, 6090–6105, 6166, 6255, 6257, 6259, 6266, 6277 cases, 6084, 6089–92, 6095, 6099–6100, 6102–5, 6121, 6127, 6129
Civil War, 6081
Constitutions, state, 6080, 6086, 6195
Construction industry, 4600, 4610
Consular service. See Diplomatic and consular service
Consumption (economics), 5954
Contemplations, 7
Contemporaries, 2280
Contemporary Trends, 2276
Continental Army Medical Dept., 4830
Continental Congress, 3242 church influence in, 5406
1st (1774), 3262
2d (1775–89), 3304
Executive branch, 6083
Presidency (1774–89). See Presidency—Continental Congress (1774—89)
See also The Confederation (1781–89)
The Continuing Spirit, 5453
Contracts, 6101, 6105
cases, 6279
laws, 6275
The Contrast, 168–70, 2337, 2347
Convention of 1818 with Gt. Brit., 3542

Conventions, political. See Political conventions Conversation at Midnight, 1609
Conversations, 313
Converse, Paul D., 5945
Conway, H. J., 2311
Conway, Moncure, 2646–48, 4049
ed., 155
about, 2646, 2648
Cook, Beatrice G., 5070
Cook, Elizabeth Christine, 2854
Cook, Frederick A., about, 2979
Cook, George A., 92
Cook, Reginald L., 609
Cook, Sherburne F., 3002, 3022
Cooke, Bob, ed., 4984
Cooke, George Willis, 5470
ed., 2328
Cooke, Jay, about, 5988
Cooke, John Esten, 66, 245–51, 2296
Cooley, Charles Horton, about, 4542
Cooley, Thomas W., 6091
Cooley, W. F., 5289
Coolidge, Archibald C., ed., 924
Coolidge, Calvin, 3481
about, 3480–81
Coolidge, Dane, 3013
Coolidge, Mary Elizabeth Burroughs (Roberts) Smith, 3013, 4464
Cooper, Frank E., 6310
Cooper, James Fenimore, (1789–1851), 252–73, 2290, 2295
about, 252, 546, 579, 674, 2277, 2286, 2364, 2385, 2397, 2456, 2471, 2509, 2544
Cooper, James Fenimore (b. 1858), ed., 270
Cooper, Peter, about, 3443
Cooper, Thomas, 5251
about, 3303, 4721
Cooperative societies, 5842, 5964, 6008
Cope, Alfred Haines, ed., 3108
Cope, Edward Drinker, about, 4724, 4748
Copland, Aaron, about, 5675
Copley, Frank Barkley, 4798
Copley, John Singleton, about, 5749, 5763
Coppée, François, about, 2466
Copper, antique, 5787
"Copperheads," 901
Copyright law, music, 5621, 5681
Cora, Anna. See Mowatt, Anna Cora
Coral Gables, Fla., 3846
Coram, Robert, about, 5121
Cordier, Ralph W., 4057
The Cords of Vanity, 1262
Core courses in schools, 5158, 5225, 5237
Coriolanus and His Mother, 2134
Cork, J., 5291
Corle, Edwin, 3947, 4005
Corliss, Carlton J., 5927
Corn, 3948
Corn (Engle), 1968
Corn (Lanier), 1038
Corn Country, 3948
Cornelius, Charles Over, 5727–28, 5796
Cornell, William Bouck, ed., 5906
Cornell University, 6110–25
hist., 5191
Cornhuskers, 1731
Corning, Howard McKinley, 3937, 3939
Cornish folklore, Mich., 5533
Coronado, Francisco Vásquez de, about, 3158, 3217
Corporation law, 6008, 6011, 6236
Corporations, 4616, 6011–12, 6018, 6020, 6022
finance, 4616, 5967
hist., 6014–15
Corpus Christi, Tex., 3919, 4476
Corrupt practices acts, 6338
Corruption (in politics), 6195, 6207, 6333, 6342–44, 6377, 6389, 6383, 6385, 6387–93, 6404, 6407, 6410, 6425, 6430, 6432, 6434 See also Spoils system
Cortesi, Arnaldo, 3615
Cortissoz, Royal, 5735
Corwin, Edward H., 4848, 4851
Corwin, Edward S., 3758, 6092–94, 6143
ed., 6102
Cory, Daniel, 5367
ed., 1741
Cosby, William, about, 2931
Cosgrave, John O'Hara, II, illus., 748, 3974, 4012, 4019
Cosmic Optimism, 2404
Cosmogony of the Universe, 531
Cosmology, 5252, 5303
Coss, John J., 5178, 5289
Cost and standard of living, 4567, 4593, 4595, 5883, 6048
Cotes, Peter, 4953
Cotterill, Robert S., 4067
The Cotter's Saturday Night, 662
Cotton, James Harry, 5362
Cotton, John, 17–20, 89
about, 5396
Cotton and cotton production, 3539, 4084, 4367–68, 4476, 4789, 5822
editorials, sketches, etc., 1907
fiction, 1159, 1786
Couch, William T., ed., 4068
Coughlan, Robert, 1398
Coulson, Thomas, 4752
Coulter, Edith M., 4202
Coulter, Ellis Merton, 3365, 4076–77, 4094, 5176
ed., 3404, 4072
Coulter, John Merle, 4724
about, 2789
Council-manager plan. See City-manager plan
Council of Economic Advisers, 6144
Council of State Governments, 5135, 6197, 6199
Council of State Governments. Committee on State-Local Relations, 6200 Council on Foreign Relations, 3634, 3637
Council on Library Resources, Inc., 6487
about, 6487
Counseling in education, 5228
Counsellor-at-Law, 1689
Counter-Statement, 2387
Country Cured, 2654
The Country Girl, 2068
Country Growth, 1963
Country life. See Farm and rural life
The Country of the Pointed Firs, 1027–29, 1031
Country People, 1796
Country stores, 4086, 5955
Country theater, 4902
Countryman, Vern, 6110, 6116
Counts, George S., 5106, 5136
County agricultural agent, 5852
County fairs, 5827
County government. See Local government
County libraries, 6471
Courier (Louisville, Ky.), about, 2892
The Course of Empire, 3161, 3299
The Court of Fancy, 144
Courtney, Marguerite (Taylor), 4932
Courts, 6078, 6097, 6280–93, 6306, 6309–10
decisions & opinions, 3756, 6090–91 6100, 6103, 6126
hist., 6290
reform, 6307
Mass., 6292
Mo., 4108
See also Supreme Court
Courts, administrative (state), 6311
Courts, federal, 6280–82, 6286, 6293
Courts, military, 6289
Courts, state, 6281–82, 6293
Courts, traffic, 6307
Courts, trial, 6285
Courts-martial and courts of inquiry, 6289
Courtship, 4572
The Courtship of Miles Standish, 433
Cousins, N., 4513
Covarrubias, Miguel, 3016
illus., 474, 566
The Covenant of Grace Opened, 35
Covenants, New England (Colonial period), 6079 Covered bridges, 5724
Covey, Cyclone, 3747
Cowboys, 2657, 2700, 4152–54, 4158, 4161–63
bibl., 4190
dances, 5591
fiction, 683–86, 1145–48, 1484–86, 1686–87
folklore, 5503
in art, 5770, 5802
in literature, 4162–63
language (dialects, etc.), 2253, 5503
short stories, 687, 1145, 1686–87
songs & music, 5503, 5556, 5558–60
Cowdrey, Mary Bartlett, 5768
Cowell, Henry, 5682
Cowell, Sidney (Robertson), 5682
Cowie, Alexander, 2405
ed., 549
The Cowled Lover, 2309
Cowley, Malcolm, 642, 955, 2406, 2408–9, 3758
ed., 357, 2406–7
Cox, John Harrington, ed., 5572
Cox, Reavis, 5963
Cox, William, 2295
Coxe, Louis O., 487, 2335
Coxey, Jacob S., about, 3440

Coyle, David Cushman, 5884
Cozens, Frederick W., 4983
Cozzens, James Gould, 1298–1302
Crabtree, Arthur B., 5299
Crabtree, Lotta, about, 2798
"Cracker" dialect in literature, 556, 1038
Craddock, Charles Egbert, pseud. See Murfree, Mary Noailles Crafts. See Arts and crafts
Craig, Gordon, 4972
Craig, Hardin, 534
Craigie, Sir William A., ed., 2236
Craig's Wife, 2332
Cram, Ralph Adams, 694
Cramer, Clarence H., 5476
Cranch, Mary (Smith), 100
Crane, Edward M., 6453
Crane, Hart, 1303–6, 2544
  about, 520, 1306, 1480, 2497, 2499, 2527
Crane, Milton, ed., 3494
Crane, Ronald S., ed., 2410
Crane, Stephen, 821–37
  about, 821, 1278, 1923, 2285, 2365, 2372, 2430
Crane, Verner W., 122, 3180, 3186–87
  ed., 3184
Crapy Cornelia, 1008
Craven, Avery O., 3058, 3366–67, 4075
  comp., 3079
  ed., 3357, 3784
Craven, Wesley Frank, 3051, 4073
  ed., 3727
Crawford, Bartholow V., 604
Crawford, Kenneth G., 6393
Crayon, Geoffrey, gent., pseud. See Irving, Washington
The Crayon Miscellany, 381
Crazy Horse (Oglala Sioux chief), about, 2801, 3036
The Crazy Hunter, 1246
The Cream of the Jest, 1261–62
Creative Intelligence, 5254 Credit, 5963, 5974 agricultural, 5848
  public, 3289, 3291
  Chicago, 5985
Creech, Margaret, 4632
Creeds, comparative studies, 5397
Creek Indians, 4233, 4248–50
  See also Five Civilized Tribes
Creel, George, about, 3462
Creighton, James E., about, 5259
Cremin, Lawrence A., 5104, 5137
Creole dialect, 2265
  in literature, 745, 759–61, 1032
Creole Sketches, 951–52, 954
Creoles in literature, 759–61, 946–52, 954–55
  fiction, 745–50
Cress, Eleanor Chittenden, 4182
Cress Delahanty, 2213
Cresson, Margaret (French), 5736
Cresson, William P., 3284
The Cretan Woman, 1532, 1536
Crèvecoeur, Michel Guillaume St. Jean de, 4232, 4500–1
  about, 2456
Cricket, 5063
Crime and criminals, 2888, 4405, 4617, 4619, 4639, 4641, 4645–48, 4655–56, 4659, 6306, 6308
  biog. (collected), 4652
  Colonial period, 6056 identification, 6294
  labor, 6056
  language (dialects, etc.), 2274
  rehabilitation, etc., 4639–40, 4643, 4648, 4652
  The West, 6220
  See also Women—delinquents
Crime prevention, 6309
Crimea Conference, Yalta, Russia, 3109, 3544, 3567
Criminal cases, 6280
Criminal justice, 6294, 6303, 6306
Criminal law, 4645, 6292, 6308
  administration, 6303
  digests, 6276
Criminal procedure (law), 4645, 6282, 6289, 6294–95, 6298, 6301–3, 6305–6, 6308
  Mass., 6292
  New York (Colony), 6221
Criminal psychology, 2716–17, 4641
Criminal trials, hist., 6229
Criminology, 4639
Cripple Creek, Colo., 4174
  hist., 4181
The Crisis, 763–65
The Crisis of the Old Order, 3500
Crissey, M. H., ed., 3357
A Critical Fable, 1584
The Critical Period in American Literature, 2450
Critical realism, 5255
Critical Woodcuts, 2505 Criticism, literary and art, 5688
  anthologies, 2372, 2383, 2410–11, 2531, 2538
  bibl., 2550
  Chicago school, 2410
  drama, 2466, 2468
  essays, 2425, 2472, 2477, 2479–81, 2498, 2503–5, 2511, 2519–20, 2535–48, 2550
  fiction, 2373, 2466, 2491, 2495
  hist., 2507, 2510, 2515
  Marxist, 2439
  methods, 2443, 2550
  "New Criticism," 2378, 2421, 2559
  periodicals, 2492, 2551–77 periods when written (1764–1819), 109
    (1820–70), 230, 313, 345, 449, 458, 465–67, 520, 533, 536, 538, 551, 614, 618
    (1871–1914), 896–97, 964, 977, 979, 986, 1004, 1010, 1016, 1022, 1044, 1136
    (1915–39), 1225–26, 1228–29, 1231, 1233–36, 1238, 1278–83, 1304, 1306, 1312, 1347–49, 1357–58, 1361, 1363–71, 1375, 1377, 1397–1402, 1501–5, 1622, 1675, 1678–79, 1809, 1823, 2423
Criticism, literary—Continued periods when written—Continued (1940–55), 1923, 1999–2000, 2125, 2128, 2356–63, 2373, 2388–90
  poetry, 520, 614, 1044, 2378–79, 2452, 2491 principles, 2494
  short stories, 2495
  techniques, 2494
  theory, 2421, 2512
Criticism and art, 5688
Criticism and Fiction, 977
The Crock of Gold, 2311
"Crocker poems," about, 323
Crockett, David, 2296, 2649–50
  about, 2649–50, 2796, 3353, 5506
  drama, 2301
Crofut, Florence S. M., 4041
Croker, Richard, about, 6432
Croly, Herbert D., 3424, 4502, 6352
Cronin, John F., 5484
Cronkhite, Bernice (Brown), ed., 5215
Cronon, Edmund David, 3046
The Crooked Mile, 2415
Cross, Barbara M., 5476
Cross, Wilbur Lucius, 2651–52
  about, 2652
The Cross and the Crown, 5452
Cross Creek, 1685
The Crossing, 766–67
Crotchets and Quavers, 5659
Crothers, Rachel, 2337, 2348
Crouse, Nellis M., 3160, 3170
Crouse, Russel, 1317, 2327, 2334–35
Croushore, James H., ed., 3693
Crow Indians, 3005
Crowder, Walter F., 6030
Crowell, Paul, 6207
Crowell, Pers, 5867
Crowl, Philip A., 3668
Croy, Homer, 2653–57, 3948
  about, 2654–55
The Crucial Decade, 3484
The Crucible, 2048
Cruger, Jacob W., about, 6446
The Cruise of the Cow, 2746
Crum, Mason, 4436
Crumbling Idols, 896–97
Crusade in Europe, 3719
Crutchfield, Richard S., 5390
A Cry of Children, 1940, 1943
Cuba, 3569
  fiction, 1500
  independence, 3575
  relations with, 3581
Cubberley, Ellwood P., 5138
Cuber, John F., 4549, 4619
Cullen, Countee, 1307–8
Cults, 5397–98, 5404–5, 5439–40, 5498
Culture, 3115, 3736, 3738, 3741, 3750, 3771, 3779, 3786, 4502–4, 4546, 4586, 5351
  and education, 5099, 5104, 5126–27, 5136, 5200, 5203, 5243
  European criticism & interpretation, 3771–72, 3779, 4223, 4225, 4230, 4234, 4271, 4300, 4303, 4336, 4506

Culture—Continued
foreign influence, 3146, 3227, 3474, 3737, 3740, 3758, 3768–70, 3774, 4187, 4189, 4197–98
bibl., 3768
hist., 3737
Colonial period, 3740, 3747–48
19th cent., 3399, 3436, 3744, 3754, 4293, 4312
20th cent., 3474, 3479, 3746
urban, 4530, 4590
See also Indians, American—culture; Intellectual life; Jews—culture; also under place names, e.g., Massachusetts—culture
Culture, 292
Cumberland Mountains, short stories, 1084
Cumberland Road, 5931
Cumming, William K., 4688
Cummings, Edward Estlin, 1309–13
about, 1310, 1312, 2426
Cummings, Homer S., 6227
Cummins, R., 5442
Cunningham, G. W., 5252
Cunningham, John T., 4053
Cunz, Dieter, 4480
A Cure of Flesh, 1299
Curme, George O., 2242–43
Curoe, Philip R. V., 5210
Currency question. See Monetary policy
Current, Richard N., 3336, 3368, 3395
Currier, Thomas F., comp., 377
Currier & Ives
about, 5778–79
bibl., 5778–79
A Curtain of Green, 2203
Curti, Merle E., 3065, 3103, 3729, 3785, 4526, 5116, 5194
ed., 2355, 3739
Curtis, George William, 2278
about, 2278
Cushing, Caleb, about, 2675
Cushing, Harvey W., 4829
about, 4821
Cushing, Marshall H., 4663
Cushman, Harvey B., drawings, 4110
Cushman, Robert E., 6117, 6181
ed., 6110–25
Custer, George Armstrong, about, 3036
Custer State Park, S. Dak., guidebook, 3898
Custis, George Washington Parke, 2337
The Custom of the Country, 1850
Cutter, Charles Ammi, about, 6476
Cutter, William Parker, 6476
The Cynic's Word Book, 732

D

D., H. See Doolittle, Hilda
D. A. R. See Daughters of the American Revolution
Dabney, Thomas Ewing, 2871
Daddy Grace, about, 5498
Dade County, Fla., 3846
Dahl, Robert A., 3611
Daiches, David, 656, 660, 1281, 2407
Daily Journal (Louisville, Ky.), about, 2892
Daily News (New York), about, 2862
Daily newspapers, 2847, 2849, 2903
The Daily Picayune (New Orleans), about, 2871
Daisy Miller, 1007, 1014
Dakota Indians, 4147 Dakotas
frontier life, 2683
Norwegians, 4487
Dale, Edgar, 5231
Dale, Edward Everett, 3023, 4154, 4744, 5868
The Dallas Morning News, about, 2866
The Dallas News, about, 2866
D'Alonzo, Constance A., ed., 4873
Dalton, A. P., 2257
Daly, Augustin, 2317, 2337
Damaged Souls, 2617
Damrosch, Walter, 5676, 5678
Dana, Charles A., about, 2848, 2874, 2881
Dana, Henry Wadsworth Longfellow, 5760
Dana, James Dwight, 4744, 4749
about, 4721, 4724, 4749
Dana, John Cotton, about, 6476
Dana, Julian, 2658–60, 3974
Dana, Richard Henry (1815–1882), 274–76
about, 276, 479, 2492, 2580
Dana, Richard Henry (1851–1931), about, 2491
Dancing, 4967–72
hist., 4971
See also Ballet; Games and dances; Folk dances; Square dances
Danckaerts, Jasper, 3208
Danes, 4482
Danforth, Samuel, about, 2493
Dangerfield, George, 3329
Dangerfield, Royden J., 3612
The Daniel Jazz, 1581
Danielian, Noobar R., 4673
Daniels, Jonathan, 3488, 4449
Danilevsky, Nadia, 4401
Danilov, Victor J., 2905
Danish West Indies purchase, 3571
The Danites in the Sierras, 2337
Dankers, Jasper, 3208
Dankert, Clyde E., 6036
Danner, Edwin R., 2266
Dante Alighieri, 437
about, 1303, 2281
Danton, Emily Miller, ed., 6476
Danz, Louis, 4968
Danzig, Allison, 5036, 5046
ed., 4984
Dargan, Marion, 3058, 3080
The Daring Young Man on the Flying Trapeze, 2110
The Daring Young Men, 5755
The Dark Bifocals, 5351
Dark Bridwell, 1422
Dark Carnival, 1933
Dark Glory, 5501
Dark Green, Bright Red, 2185
The Dark Hills Under, 1916
Dark Laughter, 1183
Dark of the Moon, 1814
Dark Summer, 1237
Darkness at Noon, 2335–36
Darley, F., illus., 271, 555, 1138
Darling, Arthur Burr, 3531
Darrah, William C., 4757
Darrow, Clarence, 2816
about, 2816, 5430
D'Arusmont, Frances (Wright), 4291–92
about, 4290
Darwin, Charles Robert, about, 695, 716, 5274
Darwinism, 3755, 3768, 4721, 5181
See also Evolution
Dauer, Manning J., 3285
The Daughter of Bugle Ann, 1541
A Daughter of the Middle Border, 898
Daughters of the American Revolution, about, 3644, 4574
Davenport, Basil, 347
Davenport, Eugene, 2661
about, 2661
Davenport, Francis Garvin, 3765, 4107
Davenport, Russell W., 4503
Davenport, Walter, 6353
David, Henry, 3425
ed., 6054
Davidson, Donald, 554, 3781, 4006, 4068
Davidson, Edward H., 360
Davidson, J. Brownlee, about, 4803
Davidson, Levette J., 5514
ed., 5530
Davidson, Marshall, 5801
Davidson, P. G., 3058
Davidson, Percy E., 6043
Davidson, Thomas, about, 5267
Davidson, William R., 5945
Davie, Maurice R., 4407, 4437
Davies, John D., 3752
Davies, Wallace Evan, 3079, 3644
Davis, Allison, 4438
Davis, Charles T., ed., 645
Davis, Clyde Brion, 3984
Davis, Curtis C., 226
Davis, Elmer Holmes, 3621
Davis, Hallie (Ferguson) F., 4915
Davis, Harold Lenoir, 1314–16
Davis, Jefferson, about, 1809, 3369, 3383–84, 3388
Davis, Joe Lee, ed., 2329
Davis, John, 4274–75
about, 4273
Davis, John H., 5841
Davis, Joseph S., 4391, 6014
Davis, Julia, 3997
Davis, Kenneth S., 3482
Davis, Kingsley, ed., 4550
Davis, Merrell R., 478
Davis, Michael M., 4885
Davis, Nathan Smith, about, 4807
Davis, Owen, 2337, 2348
Davis, Pearce, 5911
Davis, R. S., 6207
Davis, Richard B., ed., 540, 4280
Davis, Theodore R., about, 5806
Davis, William T., ed., 4, 3204
Davison, Archibald, 5631, 5669
about, 5672
Davison, Henry P., about, 5987
Davison, W. P., 3615
Davy Crockett, 2301
Dawes Severalty Act, 3034

Dawn, 1344
Dawn in Lyonesse, 1287
Dawson, Howard A., 5208
Day, Arthur Grove, 4220
Day, Benjamin H., about, 2874
Day, Clarence, 1317–18
Day, Donald, 2657, 3949
ed., 545, 2794, 5507
Day, Matthew, about, 6442
The Day of Doom, 79–83
The Day of the Locust, 1844
The Days Before, 1659
The Days of Armageddon, 3465
Days Off, 5096
Days Off in Dixie, 5087
A Day's Pleasure, 893
Days to Come, 1989
Days without End, 1648
De Orbe Novo, 3153
De Rebus Oceanis et Orbe Novo Decades Tres, 3153
De Rerum Natura, translation, 1556
The Deacon's Masterpiece, 368
Dead End, 2327, 2333
Deaf, 4629
Dealey, J. Q., 4540
The Dealings of God, Man, and the Devil, 2805
Dean, John W., ed., 82
Dean, Vera (Micheles), 3505
Deane, Charles, ed., 2
Deane, J. R., 3562
Dear Judas, 1534
Dearborn, Henry, about, 3660
Dearing, Charles L., 5921
De Armond, Anna Janney, 2880
Dearstyne, Howard, 4086
The Death and Birth of David Markand, 1447 Death Comes for the Archbishop, 1276–77
about, 1278
Death in the Woods, 1185
Death of a Man, 1245
Death of a Salesman, 2047, 2335–36
The Death of General Montgomery, 105
Death of the God in Mexico, 5351
Death Valley, Calif., 4205
guidebook, 3928
Debo, Angie, 4170–71
Debs, Eugene Victor, about, 2819, 6045
Debts, public, 3125, 5976–77
De Camp, Lyon Sprague, 4781
A Decent Birth, a Happy Funeral, 2117
Decentralization in government. See Government—centralization Declaration of Independence, 3116, 3255, 6073–74
Declaration of Independence (painting), 5775
Decorative arts, 5594, 5600, 5602–3, 5784–93
See also Arts and crafts
Decorative design, 5726, 5728, 5732, 5796
Dedmon, Emmet, 4134
Deems, M. M., 5442
The Deep Sleep, 2055
The Deepening Stream, 1416
Deephaven, 1024–26
The Deer Park, 2028
Deering, Ferdie, 5856
The Deerslayer, 258
The Deerstalkers, 5080
Defenses, 3525, 3618, 3639, 3646, 3725
Definitions, 2394–96
Defoe, Daniel, about, 1278
De Forest, John William, 277–79, 3963
about, 277
De Forest, Lee, 4689
about, 4689
De Gogorza, Maitland, illus., 3973
De Grazia, Alfred, 6402
De Grey, 1012
De Groot, Alfred T., 5455
Deism, 5408
Deitrick, John E., 4861
De Kruif, Paul Henry, 1520
Delaware
guidebooks, 3822–23
hist., 3214, 4043
Delaware Indians, 3020
Delaware infantry (Revolutionary War), 3683
Delaware River and valley, hist., 3993
DeLeon, Daniel, about, 6045
A Delicate Affair, 1035
The Delicate Prey, 1929
The Deliverance, 1461
Delo, David M., 2973
Delta Wedding, 2206
The Deluge, 1107
The Demagogue, 422
Demagoguery, fiction, 2197
De Mille, Agnes, 4970
about, 4970
De Mille, Henry C., 2314
De Mille, William C., 2313
Demobilization, 3652
Democracy, 3112–13, 3142, 3197, 3241, 3252, 3254, 3281, 3283, 3368, 3434, 3463, 3733, 3741, 3778, 4069, 4103, 4115, 4499, 4509–12, 4522, 4542, 4550, 4557, 5279, 5284, 5445, 6060, 6066, 6069–6071, 6078–79, 6134, 6137, 6139, 6178, 6357, 6362–63, 6370, 6414, 6424, 6434
sources, 3143, 3319
See also Liberty; Politics
Democracy, an American Novel, 689–90
Democracy and education, 5100, 5106, 5115, 5118, 5125, 5134, 5136, 5146, 5186, 5189, 5209, 5211, 5224–25, 5243
Democracy and Leadership, 2375
Democracy and Other Addresses, 460 Democratic ideals in literature, 740, 2514 documents, 32
fiction, 794–97
poetry, 459, 619–30, 636–37, 639, 642, 1580
prose, 84, 92–95, 101, 103, 178–85, 265–67, 631, 635, 638, 642, 652
speeches, addresses, etc., 460–61
Democratic National Committee, 6364, 6384
Democratic newspapers, 2851, 2863, 2866
Democratic Party, 3141, 3400, 3438, 3443, 3500a
hist., 6359, 6369, 6373–74
National Convention (1912), 6350–51
National Convention (1924), 6421
National Convention (1932), 6354
platforms, 6367
publicity, 6348
Chicago, 6386
New York (State), 6384
Southern States, 6378–79
Democratic-Republican Party. See Republican Party (Jeffersonian) Democratic-Republican societies. See Political clubs Democratic Vistas, 631–32
Demography, 4391, 4403, 4459
Dempsey, William Harrison (Jack), 5023
about, 3488, 4987, 5023
Demuth, Charles, about, 5744
Denervaud, Marie V., 672
Denison, Tex., guidebook, 3920
Denmark, relations with, 3571
Dennett, Raymond, ed., 3562
Dennett, Tyler, 3426
Denney, Reuel, 4555
Dennie, Joseph, about, 2465
Dennis, A. P., 5222
Dennis, Martin, about, 4735
Denny, Margaret, ed., 2412
Denominations. See Cults; Religion; Sects
Dental health services, 4871
Dentistry, 4842–43
Denver, 4176
hist., 2878, 4150
politics, 6207
The Denver Post, about, 2878
De Paolo, Peter, 5006
about, 5006
Dept. of Agriculture, 2947, 2951, 5816–17, 5837
about, 5836, 5856–57
Dept. of Justice, about, 6226–27
Dept. of Justice. Civil Rights Division, 6106, 6113
Dept. of Labor, about, 6051
Dept. of State
about, 3599, 3604
hist., 3601–2, 3606
functions, 3601, 3606
Dept. of State. Secretary of State's Public Committee on Personnel, 3600
Dept. of the Army. Office of Military History, 3665, 3726
Department stores, 5956–57, 5959
Dependency, 4618, 4632, 4634
Depression (1929), 3098, 3485, 5877
fiction, 1775, 1777, 1887, 1891
Derber, Milton, ed., 4635
Derleth, August William, 1959–65, 3985
A Descent into the Maelström, 529
A Description of New England, 69
Deseret News (Salt Lake City), about, 2867
Desert Island Decameron, 2370
The Desert Music, 1883

The Desert Year, 2453
Deserts, 3947
soils, 2944
Calif., 2753
Designed for Reading, 2569
The Desire of the Moth, 1687
Desire under the Elms, 1648, 2332
De Smet, Pierre Jean, 2662–63
about, 2663
DeSoto, Clinton B., 4690
De Soto, Hernando, about, 3158, 3217
Destler, Chester McArthur, 3427
Destruction and Reconstruction, 2829–30
The Destruction of the Pequods, 121
Detective and mystery fiction, 1959, 2415, 2435–36
Detective Story, 2335
Determinism, 5323
The Detour, 2348
Detroit
hist., 4138
politics, 6207
Deutsch, Albert, 4642, 4836–37
Deutsch, Babette, 2413–14
Deutsch, Helen, 4916
Deutsch, Leonhard, music arr. by, 5581
The Devil and Daniel Webster, 1222
The Devil's Dictionary, 732, 739
The Devil's Pretty Daughter, 5545
Devotional books, 45, 87–89
De Voto, Bernard A., 818, 2415–18, 3161, 3299, 3330–31, 5526
ed., 781, 790, 812, 3298
about, 2498
Dew and Bronze, 1295
Dewey, Davis Rich, 5966
Dewey, Jane M., ed., 5294
Dewey, John, 5117–20, 5123, 5254, 5272–88, 5290–91, 5335–36, 5347, 5494, 6268
about, 2407, 3761, 4545, 5116, 5222, 5239, 5254, 5262, 5271, 5278, 5283, 5287–96, 5494
Dewey, Melvil, about, 6476
"Dewey School," 5117
Dewhurst, J. Frederic, 5647, 5896
Dewitt, David Miller, 3412
Dexter, Henry M., 4036
The Dial (1840–44), 280, 313, 315, 585, 2279
Dialects. See Language—dialects & regionalisms Dialects in literature
Cajun, 759–61
Cracker, 556, 745, 1038
Creole, 745, 759–61, 1032–35
French, 1032–35
Hoosier, 867, 1126
humorous, 542–45
Irish, 862
Negro, 192–93, 756–59, 856–60, 910–16, 922, 924–25, 1032, 1038, 1099–1102, 1106, 1133–35, 1526–29, 1653
Pike, 933–34, 937, 941–44, 1126 poor white (South), 910, 917–21
Yankee, 456–57, 558
Ala. (north) 1836
Fla. (backwoods), 1680
Ga. (backwoods), 445–48, 556
Dialects in literature—Continued
Ky. (rural), 1697
Middle West, 701, 753–55, 768, 941, 1126
New England (rural), 209, 558, 562, 881–86
Tenn. (east), 330–32
Tenn. (mountain), 1084–88
Va. (rural), 192–93
The West, 684–87, 878
Dialogues in Limbo, 1738
Diaries, journals, personal records, etc. (Chap. I, Literature)
(Colonial), 12, 15–16, 36–39, 49, 56–57, 90–91
(1764–1819), 109, 178–85
(1820–70), 186–87, 276, 294–95, 393, 414, 438, 489, 577, 585, 600–01, 603
(1871–1914), 1009, 1080
(1915–39), 1170, 1310
(1940–55), 1965
Dibble, Roy F., 5027
Dice, Charles Amos, 5981
Dichter, Harry, 5611
Dick, Everett N., 4098, 4155–56
Dick Boyle's Business Card, 937
Dickason, David Howard, 5755
Dickens, Charles, 4342–43
about, 4341
Dickerson, Oliver Morton, 3243
Dickinson, Edward, 853
Dickinson, Emily, 838–50, 2363, 2544
about, 851–55, 984, 2615
Dickinson, Henry W., 4784
Dickinson, John, 3709, 6268
Dickinson, Thomas H., 1070
Dictionaries (language). See Language—dictionaries
Dictionary of American Biography, 3080
Dictionary of American History, 3071
Diedrich Knickerbocker's History of New York, 383, 2295
Dies Committee. See Congress. House. Committee Investigating Un-American Activities
Diff'rent, 1648
Digges, Jeremiah, pseud. See Berger, Josef Dilliard, Irving, ed., 6264
Dillon, William A., 4973
about, 4973
Dilts, Marion May, 4674
Diman, J. L., ed., 89
Dime novels, bibl., 2444
The Diminished Mind, 5237
Dimock, Marshall E., 6006, 6154
Dinks, pseud., 5076
Dinosaurs, 4754
Dionysus in Doubt, 1714
Diphtheria, control, 4881
Diplomatic history (to 1945), 2580, 3141, 3144, 3237, 3313, 3426, 3444, 3448, 3452, 3473, 3486, 3498–99, 3501–97, 3669, 4114, 4259–60, 6075
American Revolution, 3187, 3239, 3272, 3519, 3528, 3569
bibl., 3519, 3521, 4229
Civil War, 2757, 3359, 3536, 3539, 3550
Diplomatic history—Continued
See also Foreign relations
Diplomatic and consular service, 3598–3600, 3602, 3606
Diplomatic privileges and immunities, 3606
Dirks, Rudolph, about, 2865
Disabled, rehabilitation, etc., 4628–29, 4636–37
Disarmament, 3525
Disciples of Christ, 5442
hist., 5455
Discordant Encounters, 2535
Discovery and exploration, 4736, 4749, 4757
Minn., 4142
Utah, 4183
Washington (State), 4215
The West, 2971, 3335, 4149
See also under New France; The New World; Spanish North America
Discovery of Europe, 2498
Diseases, 4870
control, 4867, 4874, 4877, 4881
etiology, 4829–30, 4867, 4881
stat., 4864, 4867
The Disenchanted, 1425
The Disinherited of Art, 2421
Dismal Swamp, 4336
Disney, Walt, about, 4957
Disobedience, civil. See Civil disobedience
The Dispossessed, 1924
Disston, Hamilton, about, 4096
Distribution (economics). See Marketing
District of Columbia. See Washington, D.C.
District of Columbia, 1332
Ditzion, Sidney, 6472
Divine, Robert A., 4419
The Divine Comedy of Dante Alighieri, translation, 437
The Divine Pilgrim, 1166
The Divinity School Address, 284
Divinity schools. See Theology—study & teaching
Divorce, 3022, 4561
Divorce, 2317
Dix, Dorothea, about, 4834, 4837, 4839
Dixon, George, about, 5025
Dixon, Roland B., 3002
Do I Wake or Sleep, 1615
Doane, Gilbert H., ed., 6486
Dobert, E. W., 4481
Dobie, James Frank, 687, 4190, 5509, 5520, 5527, 5531
ed., 5507, 5518, 5532
Dobzhansky, T., 3758
Dr. Bergen's Belief, 2134
Dr. Heidenhoff's Process, 727
Dr. Sevier, 745
Doctors. See Physicians and surgeons
The Doctor's Son, 2071
Documentary films, 4958
Dodd, William E., 3286, 3369, 4069
ed., 3469
about, 3057
Dodd, Mead and Co., about, 6445
Dodds, Harold W., 5167
Dodge, Roger Pryor, 5644

Dodsworth, 1564
Doerflinger, William Main, comp., 5551
Dog on the Sun, 1478
Dogs in fiction, 1051, 1541, 1635
Doherty, Robert Ernest, about, 4803
Dollar, Melvin L., 4886
A Dome of Many-Coloured Glass, 1584
Domesday Book, 1601
Domestic animals, 4276
A Domestic Dilemma, 2024
Dominations and Powers, 1739
Dominican Republic, relations with, 3575, 3584, 3587
Domnei, 1262
Don, the Story of a Lion Dog, 1486
Donahey, William, 783
Donnan, Elizabeth, ed., 3045
Donne, John, about, 1902
Donner party, 3331
  fiction, 1420
Donovan, Leo, 6207
Donovan, Robert J., 3482
Don't Go Away Mad, 2117
Dooley, Mr., pseud. See Dunne, Finley Peter Doolittle, Hilda, 1319–24
The Doomed City, 526
Dorati, Antal, about, 5654
Dorfman, Joseph, 4538, 5876
Dorr, Thomas W., about, 3149
Dorris, Jonathan Truman, 3388
Dorson, Richard M., 5533–34
  ed., 2345, 3244, 5535
Dos Passos, John, 1325–32
  about, 2371, 2376, 2406, 2427–28, 2508–9
Dot, 2298
The Double Agent, 1228–29
Dougall, Herbert E., 5967
Douglas, Dorothy (Wolff), 4569
Douglas, Edward M., 2970
Douglas, Frederic H., 3017
Douglas, Marjory (Stoneman), 4007
Douglas, Paul H., 6048, 6182, 6342
Douglas, Stephen A., about, 3397, 3399
Douglas, William Orville, 2664–65
  about, 2665
Douglass, Aubrey A., 5105
Douglass, Elisha P., 3241
Douglass, Harl R., 5154, 5224
  ed., 5224
Douglass, Harlan Paul, 5485–87
Doull, James A., 4877
Dow, George Francis, 3181
Dow, Lorenzo, about, 2805
Dow, Peggy, 2805
Dowell, Austin Allyn, 5869
Down an Unknown Jungle River, 1486
Down by the Riverside, 2234
Down in the Holler, 2270
Downer, Alan S., 2359
Downes, Irene, ed., 5627
Downes, Olin, 5627, 5678
Downing, Major Jack, pseud. See Smith, Seba
Downs, Joseph, 5796
Doyle, John A., 3
The Dragon and the Unicorn, 2102
Dragon Harvest, 1758
Dragon Seed, 1259
Dragon's Teeth, 1754, 1758
Drake, Daniel, 2666–67
  about, 2667, 4822
Drake, Durant, 5255
Drake, Sir Francis, about, 3173
Drake, Francis S., 4036
Drake, Joseph Rodman, 328, 2295
  about, 323
Drake, St. Clair, 4439
Drake, Samuel G., comp., 41
Drama
  anthologies, 2327, 2332–37, 2347–48, 4892–98, 4924 classical themes, 201, 205, 1532, 1535–36, 1556, 2101 collections, 2297–2317
  experimental, 1357, 1359–60, 1647–48, 1864, 2226
  folk. See Folk drama historical themes, 198, 200, 206–8, 365, 1477, 1491, 1520, 1752, 2048
  hist. & crit., 1175, 1571, 2378, 2466, 2468–70, 2472–73, 2475, 2506, 4900, 4904–5, 4907, 4924
    bibl., 4905
  Negro themes, 1821
  periods
    (1764–1819), 105, 144–45, 168–70, 2297–2317
    (1820–70), 198–201, 205–8, 365, 511, 517–18, 674, 676, 2297–2317
    (1871–1914), 701, 705, 1013, 1069–70, 2297–2317
    (1915–39), 1172–74, 1176–77, 1199–1212, 1271, 1317, 1357, 1359–60, 1403, 1473, 1475, 1477, 1491–93, 1518–20, 1532, 1536, 1545–50, 1556, 1587, 1608, 1688–90, 1740, 1749–53, 1762, 1821, 1864–65, 1868, 1877
    (1940–55), 1988–91, 1995–98, 2023, 2043, 2046–49, 2063–68, 2098, 2101, 2110, 2112–14, 2117, 2133–35, 2145, 2218–21, 2223, 2225–26, 2228
  psychological, 2218, 2221, 2223, 2228
  radio, 4966
  realistic, 1518–20, 1647–48, 1688, 1995–98, 2023, 2043, 2046–47, 2049, 2063 regional, 1475, 1477, 4926 social themes, 1069–70, 1199–1204, 1271, 1519–20, 1647–48, 1688–91, 1996–98, 2045–47, 2049, 2063, 2145 symbolism in, 2218–19, 2226
  verse. See Verse drama
  See also Comedy; Theater
Draper, John W., about, 3761
Draper, Lyman Copeland, about, 3053
Drayton, John, 4262
  about, 4261
Dream Girl, 1689, 2334
A Dream of Love, 1877
The Dream of Success, 2464
A Dreamer's Journey, 5270
The Dreamy Kid, 1648
Dred Scott case, 6258
Dreiser, Helen (Patges), 1346
Dreiser, Theodore, 1334–45
  about, 821, 887, 957, 1089, 1344, 1346–49, 2372, 2406, 2430, 2464, 2476, 2509
Drepperd, Carl W., 5596
Dressel, Paul L., 5160
Dressler, David, 4643
Drew, Elizabeth A., 1361
Drexler, Arthur, ed., 5718
Drifting Apart, 2304
Drinker, Henry S., 6319
Driver, Carl S., 3287
Drucker, Peter F., 6012
Drucker, Philip, 2998
Drude, Oscar, ed., 2957
Drug traffic, vocabulary, 2274
Drum-Taps, 623–24
Drummond, Andrew L., 5441
Drummond, Thomas, about, 4734
Drums, 1240–41
Drums along the Mohawk, 1355
Drury, Betty, 4407
Drury, C. M., 5442
Drury, John, 5794
Drury, Newton B., 4211, 5866
Dubinsky, David, about, 6049
Du Bois, Guy Pène, 5800
Dubuque, Iowa, guidebook, 3892
Ducange, Victor, 2299
Du Courteil, Lafitte, about, 5121
Due, John F., 5971
Due process of law, 6094–95, 6097, 6106
Duer, William, about, 6014
Duffey, Bernard I., 2419
Duffy, John, 4877
Duke University, 643
Duker, A. G., 4457–58
Duker, Sam, 5226
The Duke's Motto, 2311
Dulany, Daniel, about, 3257
Dulcy, 2348
Dulles, Foster Rhea, 3428, 3532–33, 3563, 3592, 4620, 4985, 6034
Dulles, John Foster, 3622
Dulles, Joseph H., 5344
Dumbauld, Edward, 6074
Dumond, Dwight Lowell, 3370–71
Dunaway, Wayland F., 4055, 4490
Dunbar, Paul Laurence, 856–61
  about, 859
Dunbar, Seymour, 4226
Duncan, Delbert J., 5945
  ed., 6019
Duncan, Harry, 2350
Duncan, Isadora, 4972
  about, 4972
Duncan, Otis Dudley, 4395
Dunellen, N. J., 3812
Duniway, Clyde Augustus, 2929
Dunkards, 4480
Dunlap, Leslie W., 3052
Dunlap, Lloyd A., ed., 3390
Dunlap, William, 109, 2299, 2337, 2347, 4905, 5690
  about, 5690
Dunn, D., 5442
Dunn, Esther C., 4917
Dunn, Frederick Roger, comp., 3079
Dunn, Waldo Hilary, 3271

Dunne, Finley Peter, 862–66
about, 558
Dunning, Philip, 2332
Dunning, Wilbald, about, 4540
Dunning, William Archibald, 3372, 3554
Du Noüy, Lecomte, about, 5434
Dunster, Henry, about, 3198
Dupee, Frederick W., 1018–19
ed., 1015
Du Pont, Eleuthère Irénée, 5912
Du Pont, Henry A., about, 5912
Du Pont, Lammot, about, 5912
Du Pont Company, about, 5912
Du Pont de Nemours, Pierre Samuel, about, 5121
Dupuy, Richard Ernest, 3644a
Dupuy, Trevor N., 3644a
Durand, John D., 4392
Durant, John, 4986, 5024
Duren, William Larkin, 5475
Durham, Frank, 1514
Duron, Jacques, 1742
D'Usseau, Arnaud, 2334
Dust and Light, 1858
Dust Bowl, fiction, 1775, 1777
Dutch
in Brooklyn, 4046
in New York
fiction, 511, 514–15
humor, 382–83
in the Middle West, 4493
Dutch, Pennsylvania. See Pennsylvania Germans
The Dutchman's Fireside, 514–15
Dutton, William Sherman, 5912
Duveen, Joseph Duveen, baron, about, 1204
The Dwelling Place of Light, 762
Dwight, Sereno E., ed., 29, 31
Dwight, Timothy, 118–21, 4271–72
about, 4271
Dwight, Timothy, Jr., 4271
Dwight, William T., 4271
Dyer, Brainerd, 3332–33
Dyer, Frank L., 4782
Dyer, W. A., 5222
Dykeman, Wilma, 4021
Dykstra, C. A., 5336
Dynamo, 1648

E

Eagle in the Egg, 1551
The Eagle, the Jaguar, and the Serpent, 3016
Eagles, 2958
The Eagle's Shadow, 1262
Eakins, Thomas, about, 5764
Eardley, Armand J., 2942
Earle, Alice (Morse), 4227
Earle, Edward Mead, 6075
Early Americana, 1692
An Early Martyr, 1881
The Early Worm, 1214
Earnest, Ernest P., 4745, 4828, 5177
Earth Horizon, 1196
Earth Song, 4202
The Easiest Way, 2347
East, Robert A., 6016
The East (general)
archaeology, 2990
geology, 2936
guidebooks, 3788, 3790
historic houses, 5722, 5794
language (dialects, etc.), 2263, 2269
physiography, 2936
travel & travelers, 4235–36, 4251, 4262
trees, 2963
See also Eastern seaboard; Middle Atlantic States; New England
East Church, Salem, Mass., 2600
East of Eden, 1779
East River, a Novel, 1193
East Wind, 1584
Eastern seaboard
geography, 2968–69
in literature, 2459
language (dialects, etc.), 2263
travel & travelers, 171, 1002, 4239, 4273, 4279, 4334, 4336, 4358
Eastern shore, Md., 3999
Eastern Star, Order of the, about, 4574
Eastman, George, about, 5671
Eastman, Joseph B., about, 2678
Eastman, Linda A., 6476
Eastman School of Music, Rochester, N.Y., University, about, 5671
The Easy Chair, 2415
Eaton, Amos, about, 4737
Eaton, Clement, 3344, 3373, 3766, 4070
Eaton, Margaret L. (O'Neale) Timberlake, 2668–69
about, 2668–69
Eaves, T. C. Duncan, ed., 554
Ebaugh, Franklin G., 4859
Eberhart, Richard, 1350–52
Eberman, Edwin, 2908
Ebersole, Luke E., 4551
Eby, Edwin H., 653
The Ecclesiastical History of New England, 43–44
Ecclesiastical law, 5420–22
Eckelberry, R. H., ed., 5244
Eckenrode, Hamilton J., 3419
Eckert, Ruth E., ed., 5202
Eckman, Jeannette, 3822
Eckstorm, Fannie Hardy, 5566
Ecological Society of America, 2956
Ecology, 3022, 5810
Economic assistance to foreign nations, 3598, 3636–37, 3639–40
Economic conditions, 3440, 3734, 3786, 4505–8, 4550, 4567, 4634, 4777, 4783, 5883, 5894–99, 6005, 6136, 6372
atlases, 2972, 2974
hist., 3073, 3085–98, 5877, 5881, 5883, 6016
Civil War, 3374, 3539
19th cent., 3352, 3399, 3421, 3436, 3447, 4315–17, 5875
20th cent., 3436, 3474, 3478–79, 3500, 5875
rural communities, 4585
See also Geography—economic; also subdivisions History and Economic conditions under names of places and regions, e.g., Montana—hist.; Southern States—econ. condit.
Economic Cooperation Administration, about, 3640
Economic influences on literature, 2485
Economic themes in literature
editorials, sketches, etc., 1907
fiction, 726, 728–31, 775–77, 887–89, 941, 956–58, 973–76, 978, 1090–95, 1107–10, 1270–75, 1333–37, 1339, 1372–74, 1376, 1754–56, 1758, 1775, 1777, 1792, 1887, 2079, 2088, 2194, 2229, 2517
poetry, 1038, 1061–63, 1069, 1664, 2079
short stories, 887 tracts, 1754
Economics, 4513, 5254, 5875–6058
hist., 3106, 3139, 3497, 3500, 3747, 3758, 4538, 5876, 5886, 6082 social & ethical aspects, 5899
sources, 3319
See also Commercial policy; Foreign economic relations
Economists, 5888
Ecumenical movement, 5401, 5405, 5487
Eddy, Mary Baker, about, 5439, 5453
Eddy, Mary O., comp., 5573
Eddy, Richard, 5473
Edel, Leon, 1020, 1280
ed., 990, 1006, 1012–14
about, 1016
Edelman, Jacob M., 4706
Edgar Huntley, 114–15, 117
Edge, Mary E., comp., 398
Edgell, David P., 230
Edgewater People, 885
Edidin, Ben M., 4454
Edison, Thomas Alva, about, 4782
Editing, 2901, 2906–7, 3047, 6438, 6449
See also Journalism
Editorials, sketches, etc.
(1764–1819), 140–43
(1820–70), 192, 194–97, 332, 379–80, 422–26, 445–48, 463, 546, 556, 558–61, 612–13, 674
(1871–1914), 701–5, 732, 739, 862–66, 923, 1064–65, 1068, 1099, 1103–4, 1106
(1915–39), 1214–20, 1238, 1263, 1267–69, 1294, 1312, 1317–18, 1375, 1378, 1409, 1602, 1622, 1659, 1724–26, 1815–20, 1859–63
(1940–55), 1907, 2149–52, 2155, 2189, 2191
See also Essays; Journalism; Short stories
Edman, Irwin, 287, 5197, 5222, 5289, 5291
ed., 5120, 5288, 5374
Edmunds, Walter Dumaux, 1353–56
Education, 3469, 3740, 4387, 4513, 4550–51, 5098–5249, 5254, 5285, 5289–91
administration, 5139, 5247
articulation, 5107, 5131, 5217 associations & societies, 5106, 5112, 5116, 5131, 5150, 5157, 5162–63, 5181, 5186, 5205, 5228, 5230, 5242–43, 5246–47

Education—Continued
bibl., 5108, 5110–11, 5241, 5244, 5247–49
developments & innovations, 5117–20, 5134, 5137, 5157–58, 5224–25, 5227, 5230–31, 5237, 5246–47 direct., 5112
editorials, sketches, etc., 655, 2425
fiction, 583–84, 1417, 1792
finances, 5105, 5135, 5141, 5247
foreign countries, 5242
foreign population, 4421, 4483, 4493
German immigrant influence, 4477
hist., 5101–2, 5104–5, 5108–10, 5113, 5116, 5121–22, 5125, 5127–28, 5130
index, 5241
Jews, 4457–58, 4461
library manual, 5098
methods & techniques, 2767, 5224–31
Negroes, 4443, 4450, 5116, 5206
periodicals, 5128, 5230, 5242, 5244–45, 5247–49
philosophy, 5115–30, 5236, 5246, 5307
poetry, 165–67
problems & controversies, 5226, 5232–39 reference books, 5098, 5110–12, 5161 research, 5098, 5111, 5246–47
rural, 5105, 5208, 5246
sectional, 5113 secular, 5103
segregated, 5206, 5236
soc. aspects, 5109, 5116–18, 5126, 5128, 5134, 5136–38, 5140, 5142, 5146, 5150, 5155, 5158, 5177, 5183, 5206, 5208–9, 5211, 5215, 5224, 5240
sources, 5108, 5121–22, 5125, 5127–28, 5130, 5138, 5143, 5191–92, 5201, 5212, 5240–49
stat., 5114
surveys, 5114, 5186, 5201, 5205–6 theories, 460, 5115–30, 5220, 5237
women, 165, 167, 5116, 5193, 5198
bibl., 5212
yearbooks, 5240, 5243, 5246
Ala., 4099
British Commonwealth, 5134
Charleston, S. C., 3763
England, 5129
Germany, 5310
Ky., 4107
Mass., 5125
Nashville, 3765
New England, 3745, 4261, 4271
N.C., 4090
Northwest, Old, 4112
Ohio Valley, 5121
Pa., 4055
Philadelphia, 3764
S.C., 4091
Southern States, 4083, 5108, 5116, 5145, 5206
Tex., 4194
Va., hist., 5122
W. Va., 4089
See also Television in education; also types of education, e.g., Adult education; under school subjects, e.g., Music—education; and subdivision Study and teaching under special subjects, e.g., Law—study & teaching
Education and business, 5116, 5168, 5181, 5190
Education and church, 5419, 5491, 5494
Education and civilization, 5136, 5140, 5153
Education and political ideas, 5138
Education and state, 5099, 5141, 5164–65, 5167, 5189, 5211, 6135
The Education Index, 5241
The Education of an American, 2891
The Education of Henry Adams, 695–98
about, 2407
Educational law and legislation, 5139
Educational measurements and testing, 5229, 5247
Educational plans (early), 5121–23
Educational Policies Commission, 5106, 5205
Educational psychology, 5307
Educational reform, 165–67, 186–87, 5117
Educational research, 5098, 5112, 5247
Educational trends, 5100, 5104
Edwards, Alba M., 6043
Edwards, Everett E., comp., 3147
Edwards, Herbert W., 2441
Edwards, John H., 1669
Edwards, Jonathan, 21–31, 2290, 5297–98
about, 21, 29–30, 2288, 2480–81, 5297, 5299, 5396, 5428, 5436, 5472
Edwards, Newton, 5139–40
Egan, John, about, 3439
Egbert, Donald Drew, 3758, 3768
ed., 3753
Eggan, Fred R., 2990
Eggleston, Edward, 867–77, 3740
about, 3058
The Ego and the Centaur, 1982
Ehlers, Henry, ed., 5236
Eidesheim, Julie, ed., 1171
Eight-year study (education), 5131
Eimi, 1311
Einstein, Alfred, about, 5434
Einstein, Lewis, 3267
Einstein, 1586
Eire Railroad Co. v. Tompkins case (1938), 6293
Eisenhart, Luther P., about, 4059
Eisenhower, Dwight D., 3633, 3637, 3719
about, 3482
Eisenstadt, Abraham S., 3046
Eisner, Simon, 4606
Eitel, Edmund H., ed., 1128
Eiteman, Wilford John, 5981
Eitt, Mrs. G. Embry, 5503
Ekirch, Arthur A., 3754, 6061
Ekström, Kjell, 2366
Ekwall, E., 2364
El Paso, Tex., 4176, 4187
Elder, George W., 5017
Eldorado, 2282
Eldorado, or, Adventures in the Path of Empire, 4352–53
Election law, 6338, 6400, 6403, 6406–8, 6410
Elections, 6149, 6336, 6340, 6404, 6407–8, 6411–12, 6416, 6418, 6422
hist., 6347, 6401
of 1824, 3313
of 1840, 3326
of 1866, 3361
of 1876, 3417–18, 3430, 3432
of 1884, 6373
of 1896, 3135
of 1912, 3473
of 1924, 6362
of 1940, 6419
of 1948, 6414
stat., 6413–15
Detroit, 6420
Ill., 6383
Wis., 4139
Electoral college, 6411
Electricity, 4750
Elementary education, 5243
administration, 5135, 5151
curricula, 5142, 5158, 5226
developments & innovations, 5147
European influences, 5142
finances, 5135
hist., 5142, 5147, 5151
methods, 5142
organization, 5135, 5151
philosophy, 5117
soc. aspects, 5142
See also Primary education
Elements of Critical Theory, 2421
Elfenbein, Julien, 2902
Elfving, Fredrik, ed., 4243–44
Elias, Robert H., 1347
Eliot, Charles William, 2670–71
about, 4034, 5203
Eliot, John, about, 3198
Eliot, Thomas Stearns, 1357–60, 2411, 2425
ed., 1668
about, 1225, 1361–71, 2426, 2443, 2476, 2497, 2499, 2527, 2535, 2544
bibl., 1362, 1367
Eliot Indian Bible, 6448
Elizabeth the Queen, 1172, 1174
Elkin, Henry, 3041
Elks, Benevolent and Protective Order of, about, 4574
Eller, P. H., 5442
Ellingston, John R., 4644
Ellington, Duke, 5642
Ellinwood, Leonard Webster, 5606, 5632
Elliott, Charles Winslow, 3655
Elliott, George R., 2375, 2425
Elliott, John Lovejoy, about, 5435
Elliott, Maud (Howe), 4040
Elliott, William Y., 3608, 3642
Ellis, Elmer, ed., 865
Ellis, George C., 4036
Ellis, George E., 3182
Ellis, Harold Milton, ed., 2330
Ellis, Howard S., 3637
Ellis, John Howard, ed., 9–10

Ellis, John Tracy, 5448, 5478
ed., 5449
Ellis, Lewis Ethan, 3058, 3100, 3517
Ellison, Ralph, 1966–67
Ellison, William Henry, 4202
Elmer Gantry, 1563
Elmtown's Youth, 4564
Elovson, H., 2364
Elsbree, Willard S., 5216
Elsie Venner, 375
Elsworth, Ralph H., 5842
Ely, Mary L., ed., 5209
Ely, R. T., ed., 5811
Emberson, Frances G., ed., 5569
Embroidery, 5593, 5785
The Emergence of Modern America, 3093
Emerson, Edward Waldo, 297
ed., 294
Emerson, Ralph Waldo, 280–301, 2290, 2544
ed., 313
about, 21, 186, 230, 302–6, 470, 585, 606, 610, 621, 633, 740, 1010, 2277, 2280, 2375, 2380, 2385, 2397, 2404, 2422–23, 2476, 2479–80, 2492, 2502–3, 2513, 2545, 5222, 5254, 5265, 5300–1, 5472, 6424
Emerson, Thomas I., ed., 6126
Emery, Edwin, 2845, 2855
Émigrés. See Refugees, political Emmet, Boris, 5956
Emmet County, Iowa, guidebook, 3893
Emmons, Nathanael, about, 5428
The Emotional Discovery of America, 2503
Emotions, 5339
Empedocles. Fragments, translation, 1556
The Emperor Jones, 1648, 2348
Emrich, Duncan, 5526
The Encantadas, 484
Encounter in April, 2123
Encyclopædia Britannica, 5748
End of Summer, 1208, 2333
Enderbury Island, 4218
Endocrinology, 4722
The Enemy, 1684
The Enemy Gods, 1551
Engel, Edwin A., 1650
Engineers and engineering, 4793–4803
England, travel & travelers, 96–98, 249, 252, 263–64, 280, 333, 350, 426, 449, 460–61, 489, 674, 677–78, 688, 986, 1357, 1968
Englander, R., 2364
Engle, Paul Hamilton, 1968–72
Engler, Adolf, ed., 2957
English, Van H., maps, 3255
English Bards and Scotch Reviewers, 458 English influences
culture, 3227, 3737, 3740
education, 5191
literature
drama, 168–70, 206–8, 517
poetry, 7, 72–74, 118–19, 144–45, 323, 614–17, 1303, 1902, 2098, 2530
English influences—Continued literature—Continued
prose, 12, 43–44, 75–77, 122, 165, 333, 350, 585, 2854
Southern colonies, 4073
English language. See Language
English national characteristics, 96, 263, 280, 291, 350
The English Notebooks, 350
English Traits, 291, 298
Engravings, 5595, 5763, 5780, 5782
See also Prints
The Enlightenment, 2412, 2503
The Enormous Room, 1310
Entertainment, 2808, 4098, 4121, 4162–63, 4281, 4497, 4520, 4550, 4577, 4593, 4892–4982, 5801
See also specific types, e.g., Opera; Sports
Entomology, 4722
Entrepreneurship, 6023
Epic poetry. See Poetry—epic & extended narrative
Epics, translations, 1556
Epidemics, 4874
Colonial period, 4809, 4830, 4877
hist., 4877
See also Smallpox—epidemic (1721); Yellow fever—epidemic, Philadelphia (1793) Episcopal Church, 5404, 5442
hist., 5456–57
Epistle to Prometheus, 2413
Epitaphs, collections, 4527
Epstein, Lenore A., 4448
Equality, 728
Equality before the law, 6060, 6063, 6094, 6106, 6126, 6374
Equitable remedies, 6279
Equity, 6279, 6282, 6300
Erickson, Charlotte, 4408
Ericsson, John, about, 4786
Erie, guidebook, 3818
Erie, Lake, 3868
Erie Canal, fiction, 1155, 1157–58, 1160, 1353–54, 1356
Erie County, Pa., guidebook, 3818
Erie Water, 1356
Ernst, James E., 3197
Ernst, Morris L., 6127
Ernst, Robert, 4409
Erosion, 5808, 5818
Erskine, John, ed., 2393
Ervenberg, Louis Cachand, about, 4734
Esarey, Logan, 4123
Escapade, 1743
Eskimos, Alaskan, 2719–20
Espey, John J., 1670
Espinosa, José Manuel, 5537
The Esquimau Maiden's Romance, 798–99
Essay on Rime, 2142
An Essay on the Use and Advantages of the Fine Arts, 165–66
Essays
(1764–1819), 146–48, 179, 184–85
(1820–70), 230, 280–83, 285–87, 291–93, 298–301, 381, 465, 467, 469, 520, 533, 618
Essays—Continued
(1871–1914), 701, 705, 740–44, 896–97, 900, 945, 951–52, 955, 964, 977, 979, 1038, 1046, 1096
(1915–39), 1226, 1229, 1233–34, 1267, 1357–58, 1378, 1445, 1585, 1602, 1664, 1668, 1673, 1735, 1738–39, 1783, 1791, 1810, 1828, 1873, 1884
(1940–55), 2017
(20th cent.), 2372, 2375–80, 2383, 2388, 2394–98, 2401, 2406–7, 2410–12, 2415, 2421, 2424–25, 2435, 2449, 2466–72, 2474–75, 2477, 2479–81, 2492, 2497–98, 2503, 2505, 2511–13, 2515, 2519–20, 2530–31, 2535–42, 2544–48, 2550
See also Editorials, sketches, etc.
Essays, familiar
(1820–70), 192, 368, 406–8, 414, 449, 465, 467, 506–10, 674, 1136–38
(1915–39), 1317, 1859–63
Essays To Do Good, 45
Essert, Paul L., 5209
Estavan, Lawrence, ed., 4918
Esther, 691–92
Esther Wynn's Love-Letters, 984
Estherville, Iowa, guidebook, 3893
Esthetics, 5254, 5282, 5289–91, 5351, 5366, 5694
literary, 2387, 2453, 2512, 2529
Ethan Frome, 1848
Ethical Culture movement, 5435
Ethics, 3758, 5252, 5254, 5257, 5273, 5289, 5291, 5312, 5319, 5323, 5346, 5354, 5357–58, 5375
legal, 6319–20
political, 3760, 6342–44
See also Social and business ethics
Ethics and law, 6261–62
The Ethics of Living Jim Crow, 2234
Ethnology, 2982–83, 2985, 3004, 3007, 3010, 3012, 3030
See also Anthropology; Archaeology and prehistory
Ethridge, M., 3562
Etiquette, 4532
Eureka, 531, 533
Euripides. Medea, translation and adaption, 1535 Europe economic relations, 3539, 3619, 3637, 3639
relations with, 3138, 3528, 3536, 3617, 3769–71
travel & travelers
(1764–1819), 96–98, 101, 122
(1820–70), 222, 252, 263–64, 280, 313, 323, 381, 414, 426–27, 449, 489, 506, 674, 677–78, 2282, 2462
(1871–1914), 713, 768–71, 887, 941, 964, 984, 986, 1136 (1915–39), 1242, 1432, 1659, 1766, 1839, 1845, 1887, 1889–90
anthologies, 2498
fictional, 986–91, 996–1001, 1004, 1007, 1845, 2091, 2187

Europe—Continued
World War I, 3541
World War II, 3718–19, 3722, 3726–27
Europe in literature
descr., 2282
diaries, journals, etc., 350, 414, 489, 1079
editorials, sketches, etc., 313, 426, 674, 677–78, 941, 964, 984
essays, 414, 506
fiction, 333, 971–72, 987–91, 996–1001, 1004, 1008, 1242–45, 1247, 1251, 1396, 1495, 1656, 1887, 1889–90, 2091–93, 2123, 2146
hist., 693–94
letters, 96
poetry, 323
satire, 769–71
short stories, 1004, 1007, 1242, 1250, 1659
soc. life & cust., 96, 252, 263–64, 426
Europe without Baedeker, 2535
European immigrants, 4407–8, 4412–14, 4419, 4422, 4460
European influences
culture, 3146, 3474, 3758, 3769–70
education, 5128, 5142–43
literature, 2365, 2399
Colonial, 17
(1764–1819), 104–8, 118, 120
(1820–70), 201, 205–8, 323, 333, 381, 393, 427, 430, 449, 506, 674, 676–78
(1871–1914), 887, 941, 964, 986, 1048, 1089
(1915–39), 1303, 1411
(1940–55), 2123
essays, 2412, 2424
hist. & crit., 2534
poetry, 2530
European literature, hist. & crit., 1235
European Recovery Program, 3638, 3640
European War, 1914–18. See World War I
The Europeans, 1008
Eustis, William, about, 3660
Eutaw, 552
Eva Gay, 1747
Evangelical and Reformed Church, about, 5442
Evangelical Mission Covenant Church, about, 5442 Evangelical United Brethren Church, about, 5442 Evangeline, 429
about, 745
Evangelists, 5403, 5480
Evans, George Heberton, 6015
Evans, Henry Clay, 3580
Evans, Herbert McLean, about, 4721
Evans, Nathaniel, 145
Evans, Oliver, about, 4795
Evans, Walker, photographs by, 1907
Evening in Spring, 1964
The Evening Post (New York), 2873
about, 2882
The Evening Sun (Baltimore), about, 2876
Everett, C. W., 5197
Everett, Edward, about, 2462, 3776
Everglades, Fla., 4007
Everleigh sisters, 2836
Every Man His Own Boswell, 371–74
Every Soul Is a Circus, 1581
Everyday Is Saturday, 1860
Evjue, W. T., 6195
Evolution, 4537 and philosophy, 3758, 5259, 5274, 5289, 5303, 5317
and pragmatism, 5264
and religion, 3758, 5337, 5428–30
See also Darwinism
Evolution (theories) in literature, 695–98, 716, 2404, 2480
Ewan, Joseph A., 4734
Ewbank, Henry L., 4691
Ewen, David, 5678, 5685
comp., 5605
Ewers, John Canfield, 3018
Ewin, Cortez A. M., 6239, 6415–16
Excavations: A Book of Advocacies, 1828
Executive branch, 6075, 6084, 6133, 6140, 6146, 6184, 6191, 6193, 6310, 6312–13
Continental Congress, 6083
functions, 3725, 6137, 6172–73, 6178, 6180–81, 6311–12, 6316
hist., 6194
interdepartmental committees, 6189 laws. See Administrative law local. See Local executive branch organization, 6173–74, 6178, 6180–81, 6185, 6187
See also States—executive branch
Executive-legislative relations, 3610–11, 6140, 6142–43, 6156–57, 6178, 6191, 6342
Executive Office of the President, about, 6144
Executive power, 6093, 6140, 6142–43, 6146–48, 6178, 6180–81, 6340, 6355, 6370, 6422
Civil War, 6081, 6191
The Exile, 1257–58
Exile's Return, 2408
Exotics and Retrospectives, 951–52
Expansionism, 3154, 3167, 3180, 3306, 3312, 3322, 3335, 3428, 3448–49, 3533, 3586–87, 3760
in literature, 2441
See also Territorial expansion
Expatriate authors, 986, 1242, 1357, 1432, 1494, 1611, 1766, 1839, 2087, 2408, 3768
Expatriated Americans, 986
fiction, 989–91, 1004, 1611, 2376
The Expense of Greatness, 1231
Experience and Art, 2453
Experimental writing. See Literature—experimental writing
Experimentalism, 5271
Experiments of Spiritual Life and Health, 87
Exploration. See Discovery and exploration; Polar exploration
Explorers, 4114, 4211, 4213
See also Names of individual explorers, e.g., Columbus, Christopher Expression in America, 1571
Exultations, 1666
Ezekiel, Mordecai, 5898

F

A Fable, 1379, 1396
A Fable for Critics, 402, 458
Fables in Slang, 702
Fabricant, Solomon, 5905, 6136
The Face of Time, 1374
Faces in the Crowd, 4556
Faculty psychology, 5307
Fadiman, Clifton, 739, 1118
comp., 3152
ed., 1011
Fagin, Nathan B., 541
Fagley, Frederick L., 5454
Fahrenheit 451, 1932
Fahrney, R. R., 3058
Fainsod, Merle, 5885
Faint Clews & Indirections, 643
Faint Perfume, 1456
Fairbank, John King, 3506
Fairchild, Henry Pratt, 4427
Fairchild, Herman Le Roy, 4717, 4733
Fairfax, 2316
Fairs, 4100, 4124, 5827
Fairyland, 526
The Faith Healer, 1069–70, 2337
Faith healing, 4811
Faithful Are the Wounds, 2127
A Faithful Narrative of the Surprising Work of God, 22–23
Falconer, John I., 5820
Falk, Isidore S., 4883
Falk, Robert, 2401
Falkner, William. See Faulkner, William
The Fall of British Tyranny, 2347
The Fall of the City, 2333
The Fall of the House of Usher, 529
False Dawn (The 'Forties), 1845
False Shame and Thirty Years, 2299
Family, 4441, 4466, 4469, 4550–51, 4558, 4560–62, 4567, 4571–72, 5070
A Family Matter, 1553
The Family Reunion, 1359
The Famous Mrs. Fair, 2348
Faner, Robert D., 654
Fantastic Fables, 739
Fantastics and Other Fancies, 951–52
Far East policy, 3594, 3596 question, 3568
relations with, 3426, 3591, 3596, 3617, 3632
World War II, 3723
The Far Side of Paradise, 1431
Farber, Norma, 2350
A Farewell to Arms, 1496
Fargo, Lucile F., 4217
Faris, R. E. L., 3758
Farley, James A., 6354–55
about, 6354–55
Farm and rural life, 2891, 4395, 4397, 4466, 4500–1, 4561, 4579, 4581–85, 4594, 5832 art, 5765
bibl., 4580
drama, 1475

Farm and rural life—Continued
editorials, sketches, etc., 556, 558–61, 1724, 1907
essays, 506, 509, 1137–38, 1859, 2591
fiction, 402, 716, 718, 1290, 1299, 1301, 1355, 1379, 1388, 1403–4, 1420–22, 1474, 1476, 1541, 1653, 1681–83, 1698, 1702, 1704, 1720–23, 1775, 1777, 1786, 1792, 1796, 1839, 2005–6, 2030, 2052, 2161, 2166, 2210, 2212–13, 2282
poetry, 662, 753–55, 1126–31, 1290, 1295, 1451–52, 1727, 1731, 1823, 1968, 2166, 2172
short stories, 563, 612–13, 881–86, 890–95, 1023–31, 1379, 1476, 1724, 1796–97, 2166–68, 2170–71
Conn., 4041
Middle West, 2655
Vt., 2742
See also Communities, rural; Farmers; Plantation life
The Farm and the Fireside, 556
Farm Ballads, 754–55
Farm Legends, 753
Farm management, 5839
Farm mechanization, 5822, 5830
Farm produce. See Agricultural products
Farmer-Labor Party, about 6356
Farmers, 5837
editorials, sketches, etc., 1907
fiction, 1474, 1775, 1777
folklore, 5523
German, 4479
immigrant, 4406
Irish, 4498
songs & music, 5559, 5576
Rocky Mountains, 4172
Southern States, 4081
The West, 4149
See also Farm and rural life; Sociology, rural
The Farmer's Advice to the Villagers, 121
Farmers' Alliance, about, 6358
The Farmer's Almanack, 5524, 5541
about, 5524, 5541
The Farmers Hotel, 2077
Farmers' movement. See Agrarianism
Farmers Union, about, 5831
Farming. See Agriculture
Farquhar, Francis P., ed., 4210
Farra, Kathryn, 4624
Farragut, David (sculpture), 5740
Farrand, Max, ed., 126, 3357, 3784, 6087
Farrar, Victor J., 3429
Farrell, James Thomas, 1132, 1372–73, 5291
about, 2372, 2376, 2427, 2509
Fascism, 3149
Fashion, 2337, 2347
Fashionable Follies, 2347
Fashions in Literature, 1136
Fast, Howard Melvin, 1973–80
ed., 159, 1345
Fatal Interview, 1609
Fate, 292
Father and Son, 1374
Father Divine, about, 5439, 5498
Fatout, Paul, 732
Faulkner, Harold U., 3081, 3096, 5877, 6034
Faulkner, William, 1379–96, 2406
about, 1397–1402, 1809, 2372, 2376, 2427–28, 2508
Fauna. See Animals
Faunce, Roland C., 5225
Fauset, Arthur Huff, 5498
Faust, Albert Bernhardt, 4477
Faust, Clarence H., 2401
ed., 30
Faust, translation, 2282
Fay, Albert H., 4177
Fay, Bernard, 3773
Fay, Jay Wharton, 5388
Fay, Theodore Sedgwick, 2295
Faye, Harold, maps, 4057
The Feast of Ortolans, 1174
Feather, Leonard G., 5642
Fechner, Gustav Theodor, about, 5326
Fechter, Charles, 2313
Federal Communications Commission, 4710
Federal Council of the Churches of Christ, 5487
about, 5405
Federal courts, 6280
Federal Emergency Relief Administration, about, 4630
Federal government. See Government
Federal Housing Administration, about, 4600
Federal Library Services Act, 6480
Federal-local relations, 6218
The Federal Radio Commission, about, 4706
Federal Reserve Bank of New York, about, 5983
Federal Reserve System, about, 5983, 5986, 5993
Federal Reserve System. Board of Governors, 5986
Federal-state relations, 6076, 6078, 6090, 6096, 6099, 6103, 6198–99, 6206, 6293
Federal Theater Project, hist., 4915
Federal Writers' Project, 3786, 5515
Federal Writers' Project. New York (City), 4497 Federalism
Colonial period, 3245
18th cent., 3141, 3245–46
New England, 3275
The Federalist, 2291, 6075
Federalist newspapers, 2873, 2875
Federalist Party, 3279–81, 3285, 3305, 3308, 6374
The Federalists, 6175
Feibleman, James, 5351
about, 5351
Feidelson, Charles N., 2420
Feild, Robert D., 4957
Feinberg, Charles E., 659
Feis, Herbert, 3483, 3593
Feldman, William Taft, 5278
Feller, John Henry, 4975
Felton, William R., 4151–53
The Feminine Fifties, 2489
Fenn, Percy Thomas, 6095
Fenneman, Nevin M., 2935–36
Fenno, Richard F., ed., 3109
Fenton, Charles A., 1503
Ferber, Edna, 1403–8, 1545, 1547, 2333
about, 1403
Ferdinand and Isabella, History of, 2294
Fergus, Robert, about, 6446
Ferguson, Charles W., 4574
Fergusson, Erna, 4176, 4187, 4198
Ferm, Vergilius T. A., ed., 31, 5425, 5442
Fernandina, Fla., guidebook, 3844
Fernow, Bernhard Eduard, about, 2791
Fernow, Berthold, 4049
Ferré, Nels F. S., about, 5433
Ferril, Thomas Hornsby, 1409–10
Fertility, 4396, 4402
Fesler, James W., 6201
The Festival of the Dead, 1033 Festivals
music, 5667
La., 4100
Fetching the Doctor (sculpture), 5739
Fetrow, Ward W., 5842
Fetter, Frank W., 5971
The Feud of Oakfield Creek, 5354
A Few Figs from Thistles, 1609
Fiction
bibl., 2402
detective. See Detective fiction dictionaries, handbooks, etc., 2526, 2528 didactic, 161–64, 190–91, 239 economic, 726, 728–31, 775–77, 956–58, 964, 973–76, 978, 1089–98, 1107–10, 1270–75, 1333–37, 1372–74, 1376, 1664, 1754–56, 1758, 1775, 1777, 1907, 2079, 2194, 2229
ethical themes, 986, 1907–8, 1914, 1940, 1944, 2156
experimental, 1242–47, 1249, 1251, 1379, 1450, 1842, 2082
historical. See Historical themes in literature—fiction
hist. & crit., 345, 896–97, 977, 986, 1004, 1010, 2365, 2371–73, 2376, 2378, 2384, 2402, 2405, 2418, 2425, 2427–31, 2458, 2508–9, 2517, 2523, 2526, 2528, 2530, 2536
humanitarian, 2084
humorous, 768, 775–83, 787–97, 1802, 2149, 2202
in periodicals, 2864, 2874, 2913, 2916, 2926
See also Literary periodicals industrial, 941, 1159, 1178, 1183, 1507, 1754–56
"international," 971–72, 986–91, 996–1001, 1004, 1007, 1014, 1242–47, 1249, 1251, 1754, 1758, 1839, 2187 naturalistic, 821–29, 835–37, 1048, 1051–52, 1054–57, 1059, 1089–98, 1333–39, 1372, 1621, 1743, 1775 picaresque, 105–8, 1169, 1921, 2052
political, 277, 422, 689–90, 722, 762, 775–77, 1107, 1155–56, 1566, 1792, 2025, 2027, 2148, 2197

Fiction—Continued
popular, 2384
See also Bestsellers
production, 2418
psychological, 368, 375, 727, 986–1001, 1004, 1149, 1163, 1379, 1470, 1927, 1944–45, 1954, 2017–18, 2021, 2023, 2052, 2107–8, 2156, 2174–75, 2178, 2184, 2224
realistic, 277–79, 562, 721, 821–29, 835–37, 867–77, 887–89, 956–76, 978, 980, 982–1004, 1007–8, 1014, 1089, 1107–10, 1333–39, 1343, 1372, 1379, 1445–50, 1453, 1460–62, 1494, 1559, 1571, 1611, 1680, 1720–23, 1743–48, 1754–56, 1758, 1775, 1792, 1796, 1932, 1940, 1954, 1992–94, 2003–4, 2011, 2025–28, 2045, 2052–56, 2069–70, 2074, 2076–78, 2128, 2210, 2229–31
romantic, 201–4, 226–29, 245–60, 268–69, 311, 333, 341–47, 356, 405, 471–78, 546–50, 552–53, 555, 716, 745, 749–50, 762–67, 1048, 1054, 1089–95, 1099, 1105–6, 1145–48
satiric, 105–8, 689–90, 775–77, 794–97, 1261, 1381, 1508, 1559, 1589, 1635, 1643, 1688, 1792, 1842, 1845, 2001, 2017, 2053, 2082, 2154, 2180, 2229 science. See Science fiction sentimental, 161–64, 239, 241, 716, 867, 2384
social questions, 689–92, 616, 718–20, 726, 728–31, 756, 821–24, 835–37, 887–89, 956–70, 973–76, 978, 980, 982, 986–88, 992–95, 1008, 1048, 1055, 1089–95, 1107–10, 1136, 1142–43, 1155–56, 1190, 1270–75, 1333–39, 1372–74, 1376, 1414, 1417, 1445–50, 1453, 1460–62, 1467, 1559, 1571, 1589, 1656–57, 1754–56, 1758, 1775, 1777, 1907, 1932, 2045, 2050–51, 2059, 2079, 2081, 2084, 2090, 2148, 2180, 2182–84 stream of consciousness writing, 1161–62, 1183, 1379, 1579, 1887, 2055, 2174–75 surrealistic, 1987, 2079, 2081, 2084
symbolism in, 333, 470, 481–83, 491, 1379, 1494, 1500, 1947, 1954, 1992, 2023, 2081, 2212
techniques, 2372
theories, 333, 345, 867, 896, 964, 977, 986, 1004, 1010, 1014, 1096, 1136
Utopian, 726, 728–31, 956, 978
Fiction, periods
(1764–1819), 105–17, 161–64, 168
(1820–70), 188–91, 201–4, 226–29, 239, 241, 245–60, 268–69, 277–79, 312, 333–47, 356, 365, 368, 375, 402–13, 415–18, 422, 470–83, 485, 487, 491, 511, 514–16, 546–53, 555, 562–76, 578–84, 674
Fiction, periods—Continued
(1871–1914), 683–86, 689–92, 706–10, 716–20, 722–24, 726–31, 745, 749–50, 756, 762–68, 775–83, 787–97, 821–30, 835–37, 856, 867–77, 887–90, 900, 941, 945–52, 955–76, 978, 980, 982, 984–1001, 1004, 1007–8, 1014, 1032, 1048, 1051, 1053–57, 1059, 1089–99, 1105–10, 1136, 1142–43, 1145–48
(1915–39), 1155–59, 1161–63, 1168–69, 1171, 1177–78, 1180, 1183, 1190–94, 1222–25, 1239–47, 1249, 1251–57, 1259, 1261–62, 1264–66, 1270–74, 1276–77, 1284–90, 1298–1302, 1314–18, 1325–28, 1331–39, 1343, 1353–56, 1372–74, 1376, 1379–92, 1395–96, 1403–7, 1412, 1414–17, 1420–29, 1437–50, 1453–62, 1465–72, 1474, 1489–90, 1493, 1495–1500, 1511–13, 1515, 1527–29, 1541–42, 1544, 1551–52, 1559–69, 1571, 1573–74, 1576–79, 1589–97, 1611–12, 1614–19, 1635–44, 1646, 1653–58, 1661, 1680–83, 1686–88, 1691, 1693–1702, 1704–5, 1707–12, 1720–23, 1727, 1730, 1733, 1736, 1743–48, 1754–56, 1758–60, 1762–63, 1771, 1775, 1777–81, 1786–89, 1796, 1798–1800, 1802–6, 1823, 1828–33, 1836–40, 1842–50, 1852–54, 1864, 1866–67, 1872, 1874–75, 1882, 1887–91, 1902, 1904, 2371
(1940–55), 1907, 1909, 1911–12, 1914–18, 1921–22, 1927–28, 1930–32, 1934, 1940–45, 1947, 1954–57, 1959–62, 1964, 1966–67, 1973–80, 1984–85, 1987, 2001, 2003–6, 2011–14, 2017–19, 2021–23, 2025–28, 2045, 2050–56, 2059, 2069–70, 2074, 2076–78, 2081–82, 2084–85, 2087–94, 2096–97, 2107–8, 2110–11, 2115, 2119–20, 2122–23, 2125, 2127–30, 2132, 2146, 2148–49, 2153–59, 2161–64, 2166, 2169, 2173–75, 2180–88, 2193–95, 2197, 2199, 2201–2, 2204, 2206, 2208, 2210, 2212–13, 2224, 2229–31, 2371, 2373
The Fiddler in Barly, 1637
Fiedler, Leslie, 656
Field, Cyrus W., about, 4677, 5882
Field, Eugene, 878–80
Field, Joseph M., 2311
Field, Roswell M., 1880
Field and Stream, 5071
The Field God, 1475, 2337
The Field of the Grounded Arms, 323
Field sports, 2665, 2794, 5065–97
Fielding, Henry, about, 2651
Fields, Annie, ed., 577
Fields, Harry H., 4701
Fields, James Thomas, about, 2922
Fields, W. C., about, 4956
The Fields, 1694
The Fields Were Green, 2374
Fife, Alta (Stephens), 5538
Fife, Austin, 5538
The Fifth Column, 1498
The Fifty-Minute Hour, 2718
Figh, Margaret Gillis, 2257
Fighting Angel, 1258
"Fighting Furies," 5025
Figureheads, 5603
Figures for an Apocalypse, 2037
Figures of Earth, 1262
Files on Parade, 2072
Filipinos, 4470
Fill 'Er Up, 5005
Filler, Louis, ed., 866
Finance, 5965–6002
agricultural, 5848
bibl., 5966
hist., 3476, 5966, 5973, 5999–6000 municipal, 5973
public, 3126, 3289, 3291, 3310, 3322, 3431, 3448, 5969, 5971, 5983 state, 5973
Chicago, 5985
The Financier, 1336–37
Financiers. See Capitalists and financiers Find Me in Fire, 2013
Findlay, Ohio, 3866
Fine, Nathan, 6356
Fine Clothing to the Jew, 1521
Fink, Arthur E., 4621
Fink, Mike, about, 5506
Finkelstein, Louis, ed., 5426–27
Finkelstein, Simon J., 5426
about, 5426
Finletter, Thomas K., 3623
Finney, Charles Grandison, about, 3360, 5395, 5403, 5428, 5490
Finnish folklore, Mich., 5533
Finnish-language newspaper, 2896
Fir-Flower Tablets, 1584
Fire, Chicago (1871), 4136
Fire and Cloud, 2234
Fire and the Hammer, 1916
The Fire-Bringer, 1069
Fire for the Night, 2413
Firecrackers, 1831
Fireside Travels, 467
Firman, Sidney G., ed., 1068
First Flowers of Our Wilderness, 5750
The First Gentlemen of Virginia, 16, 3749
The First Man, 1648
The First Morning, 2192
The First Thousand Days, 3498
First Will & Testament, 2080
Firth, Margaret A., ed., 4729
Fiscal policy. See Finance—public
Fisch, Max Harold, 5251
Fischer, Carlos, 5654
Fischer, John, 3624
Fish, Carl Russell, 3091, 6183
Fish, Hamilton, about, 3444
Fish, John Charles Lounsbury, 4800
Fish, Lounsbury S., 6018
Fishbein, Morris, 4806–7
Fisher, Anne (Benson), 3998
Fisher, Dorothea Frances (Canfield), 1412–19, 4033
Fisher, Galen M., 5495
Fisher, Vardis Alvero, 1420–24
Fisheries, 4744, 5948
New England, 5872
Fishing. See Hunting and fishing
Fishman, Solomon, 2421

677676 O–63–72

Fisk, Ethel F., ed., 5304
Fisk, James, about, 5880
Fiske, John, 5302–4
  ed., 3080
  about, 3058, 3761, 5264, 5302, 5304
Fiske, Minnie Davey, about, 4930
Fitch, Clyde, 2337, 2347–48
Fitch, James Marston, 5699
Fitch, John, about, 4784
Fitch, John A., 5899, 6037
Fite, Emerson David, 3374
Fite, Gilbert C., 5737, 5843, 5860
Fithian, Philip Vickers, 2672–73
Fitzgerald, F. Scott, 1425–29
  about, 821, 1222, 1425, 1430–31, 2371–72, 2429
Fitzgibbon, Russell H., 3581
Fitzpatrick, John C., ed., 3271
The Five Books of Youth, 1516
Five Civilized Tribes, 3025–27
Five Generations, 1152
Fladeland, Betty L., 3375
Flagg, Edmund, 4322–23
  about, 4322
Flagler, Henry M., about, 4096
Flaherty, Robert, about, 4958
Flame and Shadow, 1814
Flanagan, Hallie. See Davis, Hallie (Ferguson) F.
Flanders, Helen (Hartness), comp., 5574
Flanders, Ralph Edwards, about, 4803
Flanner, Hildegarde, 2406
Flaubert, Gustave, about, 2504
Fleischer, Nathaniel S., 5025–27, 5031, 5060
Fleming, Allan J., ed., 4873
Fleming, Denna Frank, 3534
Fleming, Donald H., 4831
Fleming, Roscoe, 6207
Fleming, Walter L., 3377
  ed., 3376
  about, 3057
Flesch, Rudolf F., 5226
Fletcher, John Gould, 1432–35, 4102
  about, 1432, 1436, 1809
Flexner, Abraham, 5179, 5195
Flexner, Atherton, 6052
Flexner, James T., 4784, 4822, 4831, 5749–51
Flexner, Simon, 4831
Flick, Alexander Clarence, 3430
  ed., 4044
Flint, Emily, ed., 2922
Flint, Timothy, 307–12
  about, 307
The Floating World and Other Poems, 2350
Flood, Jessie B., musical arr. by, 5589
Floods and flood control, 2949, 2951, 4147
Flora, Snowden D., 2948
Flora. See Plants
Florey, Robert, 4944
Florida, 3953, 4007, 4079, 4096 architecture (Spanish-Colonial), 5723
  descr., 1685
  essays, 1002–3
  fiction, 1222, 1302, 1526–29, 1680–83, 2051
  fishing, 5083
Florida—Continued
  folksongs & ballads, 5581
  guidebooks, 3843–47
  hist., 3158, 3980, 4096
  language (dialects, etc.), 2258
  short stories, 1680, 1684
  travel & travelers, 4248–50, 4256–57, 4293
Flour milling, Minn., 4141–42
The Flourishing Village, 121
Flower, Milton Embick, 2776
Flowering Judas, 1660
The Flowering of New England, 2381
The Flowering of the Rod, 1324
Flowers in art, 5768
Floyd, Theodora A., about, 4854
Flush of Gold, 1058
The Flush Times of Alabama and Mississippi, 195–97
Flying Scud, 2298
Flynn, Edward J., 6384
  about, 6384
Focus, 2045
Foerster, Norman, 2422–24, 2512
  ed., 468, 2331, 2424–25
Fogdall, Soren J. M. P., 3571
Fogle, Richard H., 361
The Folded Leaf, 2032
Foley, Martha, ed., 2322
Folk, Joseph W., about, 6432
Folk art and crafts. See Arts and crafts Folk dances, 5587, 5589–90 analysis, 5591
  hist., 5591
  Appalachian Mountains, 5583
  New England, 5580
  Southern States, 5583
  The West, 5591
Folk drama, 1473, 1475
Folk heroes, 2649, 3353, 4533, 5505–06, 5511–13, 5516–17, 5519–20, 5522–25, 5529–30, 5532, 5538, 5544, 5548
Folk humor. See Humor—frontier
Folk literature. See Folklore; Legends and tales; Tales, folk; Tall tales Folk magic, 5509, 5528–29, 5537
Fok medicine, Mich., 5533
Folk pottery, 5791
Folk religion. See Religion, folk Folk rhyme. See Rhyme, folk Folk sermons, Negro. See Preacher tales
Folk singers, 5557, 5561, 5565, 5572, 5578, 5580
Folk speech (Colonial period), 3740
Folk tales, See Tales, folk Folke, Leander, 5293
Folklore, 3740, 3969
  analysis, 5528–29, 5534, 5536, 5579
  bibl., 5536–37, 5542, 5544
  cowboy, 4162–63
  Creole, 2265
  definitions, 5504, 5514
  hist., 5534, 5536, 5581
  Indian, 3021
  literary influence, 5534, 5548 migration, 5509
  Negro. See Negroes—folklore railroad, 5512 Folklore—Continued
  rural, 4579
  sources, 5514, 5524, 5529, 5534, 5536, 5546, 5548
  themes, motives, etc., 5509, 5528, 5535, 5545–46 theory, methods, etc., 5504, 5514 urban. See Urban folklore
  Northwestern States, 4147
  Southwest, New, bibl., 4190
  See also Folkways
Folklore in literature
  drama, 1473
  fiction, 1526
  poetry, 1532, 1580
  Calif., 1532
  Fla., 1526
  Ky., 2166
  N.H., 1222
  Va., 1267
The Folks, 1799
Folks from Dixie, 860
Folksongs and ballads, 79–83, 146, 148, 427–28, 753–55, 910, 922, 933–34, 941–44, 1126–31, 1222, 1224, 1295, 1580, 4025, 5509–12, 5517, 5549–84
  analysis, 5555–57, 5559, 5561, 5564, 5570, 5577, 5579
  bibl., 5556, 5569, 5613
  definitions, 5556
  hist., 5556, 5564, 5570, 5577, 5580 influence on poetry, 1697
  sources, 5504, 5555, 5580
  themes, motives, etc., 5555–56, 5560, 5564, 5576–77, 5581 theories, methods, etc., 5569–70
  Ala., 5565
  Ark., 5569
  Fla., 5581
  Ky., 5584
  Maine, 5567
  Mich., 5567, 5575
  Miss., 5576
  Mississippi River, 5523
  Mo., 5568–69
  New England, 5524, 5554, 5574, 5580
  New York (State), 5548
  N.C., 5536
  Ohio, 5573
  Okla., 5570
  Ozark Mountains, 5569
  Pa., 5578–79
  St. Helena Island, S.C., 5540
  Schoharie County, N.Y., 5539
  Southern States, 5525, 5561, 5572. 5577
  Tex., 5518
  Vt., 5574
  The West, 5518, 5526, 5560, 5569
  W. Va., 5572
  See also Anglo-American folksongs and ballads; Cowboys—songs & music; Religious folksongs
Folkways, 2407, 5504, 5506, 5511, 5513–14, 5516, 5538, 5553, 5555–56, 5558, 5585, 5588
  Ala., 5565
  Ark., 5542
  Beech Mountain, N.C., 5529

Folkways—Continued
Kans., 4168
Mich., 5533, 5535
Miss., 5547, 5576
Mississippi River, 5505, 5523
Missouri River, 5505
New England, 5524, 5534, 5574
N. Mex., 5537
N.C., 5536
Ohio River, 5505
Ozark Mountains, 5543
Pa., 4480, 5579
St. Helena Island, S.C., 5540
Southern States, 4079, 5525, 5577
Tex., 5521
Vt., 5574
The West, 5526
See also Folklore
Follett, Wilson, ed., 832–33
Folmer, Henry, 3162
Folwell, William Watts, 4142
Fombombo, 1792
Foner, Philip S., ed., 156
The Fool of Five Forks, 930
Football, 4990, 4993, 5034–45
Foote, Harry W., 4715
Foote, Henry Wilder, 5633
Footner, Hulbert, 3999
For the Sake of Shadows, 2752
For Whom the Bell Tolls, 1497
The Forayers, 552–53
Forays and Rebuttals, 2415
Forbes, Esther, 1437–44
Forbes, James, 2348
Forbes, Waldo Emerson, ed., 294
Forbidden Fruit, 2298
Force, Juliana, about, 5800
Force, Peter, about, 3057
Ford, Alice E., 5597
Ford, Edward, 4758
Ford, Guy Stanton, 3064
Ford, Henry, about, 5939
Ford, Henry Jones, 4489
Ford, Paul Leicester,
comp., 123, 125, 177
ed., 152, 3293
Ford, William E., 4715
Ford, Worthington Chauncey, 2580
ed., 5, 699, 3313
Ford Foundation, about, 5206
Ford Motor Company, about, 5939
Foreign correspondents, 2872
Foreign economic relations, 3546, 3636–42
Foreign exchange, 6002
Foreign influences on culture, 3146, 3227, 3474, 3737, 3740, 3758, 3768–70, 3774, 4096
bibl., 3768
Foreign language periodicals, 2895–99
Foreign population, 2897, 2899, 4297, 4390, 4395, 4406–7, 4411–17, 4421–22, 4426, 4515
education, 4421, 4483, 4493
in literature
fiction, 1190, 1720–22, 1796, 2578
reporting, 2161
suffrage, 6409
Brooklyn, 4046
Milwaukee, 4140
Foreign population—Continued
New England, 4026, 4435
New Haven, 4042
Sunderland, Minn., 4406
Wis., 4139
See also Refugees; and names of national groups, e.g., Chinese; Norwegians
Foreign relations (since 1945), 3482, 3501, 3523, 3526, 3529, 3570, 3598–3642, 4503
See also Diplomatic history; and names of countries, e.g., France, relations with Foreign reputation of authors
(1764–1819), 109
(1820–70), 209, 230, 252, 280, 313, 381, 427, 449, 520, 562, 585, 619, 674
19th cent., 2412, 2432
(1871–1914), 768, 964, 1048, 1061
(1915–39), 1252, 1357, 1379, 1445, 1484, 1494, 1559, 1754, 1759, 2412, 2508
Foreign service. See Diplomatic and consular service Foreign trade. See Commerce—foreign Forensic psychiatry. See Psychiatry, forensic
The Forest and the Fort, 1171
Forest Life, 418
The Forest of the South, 1471
Forester, Frank, pseud. See Herbert, Henry William Forestry as a profession, 5865
Forests and forestry, 1072, 1079, 2791, 5816, 5862–63, 5865 fossil, 4182
soils, 2934, 2944
Mass., 3803
S.C., 5087
Southern States, 4084
Va., 4085
The Forge, 1793
Forked Lightning, 1548
Form, William H., 4552
Forman, Henry Chandlee, 5706
Forman, Jonathan, 4594
Forman, Sidney, 3656
Formosan policy, 3589
Forrest, Edwin, about, 201, 4937
Forrest, Nathan, fiction, 1468
Forster, John, 4341
Forster, John Reinhold, tr., 4245–46
Fort Laramie, Wyo., 4179
Fort Worth, Tex., 4187
The Fortunate Mistress, about, 1278
Fortune, 4503
XLI Poems, 1313
42nd Parallel, 1325, 1328
Forty-eighters, 4481
Foscue, Edwin J., 2940
Fosdick, Harry Emerson, 5426
about, 5426
Fosdick, Raymond B., 4622
Foshay, A. Wellesley, 5147
Foster, Sir Augustus John, bart., 4280
about, 4279
Foster, Charles H., 562
Foster, Elizabeth S., ed., 491
Foster, Frank Hugh, 5428
Foster, Frank K., about, 4530
Foster, Maximilian, 1120
Foster, Ruel E., 1397
Foster, Stephen, about, 5677
bibl., 5677
Fothergill, John, about, 4247
The Foundling (sculpture), 5739
The Fountain, 1648
A Fountain in Kentucky, 2062
Four Faces West, 1686
The Four Million, 1114–15
Four Quartets, 1359
about, 1366–67
Four Saints in Three Acts, 1771
Four-Square, 1418
Foust, Clement E., 205
Fowler, Dorothy (Ganfield), 4664
Fowler, Gene, 2878, 4933
about, 2878
Fowler, Lorenzo, about, 3752
Fowler, Orson, about, 3752
Fox, Dixon Ryan, 3090, 3221, 3730, 4027, 6374
ed., 3085–98, 3200
Fox, George, about, 5468
Fox Indians, 3041
The Fox of Peapack, 1859
Foxeman, Grant, 3026–27
Frampton, Merle E., ed., 5207
France, Anatole, about, 2471
France
economic relations with, 4259–60
fiction, 1242–44, 1247, 1251, 1411, 1416, 1495, 1578, 1611, 2093
personal narratives, 1310, 1766, 1769–71 relations (general) with, 3508, 3528, 3531, 3685–86, 3773–75
American Revolution, 3187, 3250, 3307
bibl., 4229
Civil War, 3536
World War I, 3710
short stories, 1242, 1413
soc. life & cust., 96, 264
travel & travelers, 96, 130, 264, 426, 1411, 1766, 1839
fiction, 987, 998, 2376
France and Great Britain in the New World, 3171, 3188–89, 3191, 3226
France and Illinois, 4133
France and Spain in the New World, 3162, 3171
France and Texas, 3577
Francesca da Rimini, 206–8, 2337, 2347
Francis, John F., about, 5744
Francis Berrian, 311
Frank, Barbara, 6298
Frank, Jerome, 6263, 6285, 6298
Frank, L. K., 5291
Frank, Ruth, photographs by, 4187
Frank, Waldo David, 1445–50
ed., 1304
about, 1743
Frankenberg, Lloyd, 2426
Frankenstein, Alfred V., 5744
Frankfort, Ky., guidebook, 3857
Frankfurter, Felix, 3785, 5418, 6096, 6286
Franking, Mae, 1659

Franklin, Benjamin, 122–33, 2290, 3183–84, 4750
about, 36, 45–46, 122, 171, 1873, 2277, 2412, 2456, 2465, 2503, 2523, 2620, 2773, 3123, 3183, 3185–87, 4533, 4721, 4750, 4850, 5130, 5803, 6068
bibl., 123
Franklin, John Hope, 4440
Franklin, William Temple, ed., 124, 126
Frantz, Joe B., 4162–63
Fraser, Chelsea C., 4799
Fraser River, 4013
Fraud and mistake cases, 6279
Frazier, Edward Franklin, 4441–42
Frederick, John H., 5943
Frederick, John T., ed., 2329
Free, 1341
Free enterprise, 3424, 4538, 5875, 5877, 5885, 5901, 6026, 6060, 6063, 6067, 6094, 6101, 6392
Free Joe, 920–21
The Free Man, 1695
Free Religions Association, Boston, about, 5435
Free soil controversy, 3141, 3339
Free verse, 619, 821, 1583, 1599, 1727, 1731, 1813
See also Experimental writing
Free will, 5297, 5472
Freedman, Florence B., ed., 655
Freedom. See also Liberty
Freedom and education, 5103, 5124, 5132–33, 5181, 5187, 5236
Freedom and Fate, 306
Freedom of accommodation, 6106, 6129
Freedom of assembly, 6117, 6121, 6123
Freedom of association, 6107
Freedom of belief, 6107
Freedom of labor, 6106, 6121, 6126, 6129
Freedom of opinion, 6060, 6065, 6108, 6164
Freedom of petition, 6117, 6121
Freedom of religion, 4069, 5395, 5418–21, 6106, 6117, 6123, 6126
Freedom of speech, 3462, 3766, 6106–09, 6117, 6121, 6123, 6126, 6128
Freedom of teaching. See Teachers—academic freedom
Freedom of the franchise, 6106, 6126
Freedom of the person, 6117, 6121, 6126
Freedom of the press, 2846, 2867, 2880, 2889, 2906, 2928–29, 2931–32, 3462, 5307, 6106, 6108, 6117, 6121, 6123, 6127–28
Freedom of the seas, 3558, 3571
Freedom of the will, 26
Freedom of thought, 3766
Freehof, S.B., 4458
Freeman, Douglas Southall, 3269, 3378, 3694–95, 5525
Freeman, Frank S., 5229
Freeman, Frederic Barron, ed., 487
Freeman, Mary E. (Wilkins), 881–86
about, 2486
Freeman, Otis W., ed., 4212
Freemasons. See Masons (Freemasons)
Freidel, Frank B., 3495
Frémont, Jessie Benton, about, 2818
Frémont, John Charles, 3334, 3535
about, 3335, 3345, 4734
Fremont, Ohio, 3867
French, Daniel Chester, about, 5736
French and Indian War (1755–63), 3171, 3271
French Broad River Valley, 4021
French Canadians, 4413, 4435 folklore, Mich., 5533
French influences
culture, 3774
folklore, 5523, 5528
in literature, 1032–35
language, 2265
Philadelphia, 4263
French population, New Orleans, 4101
Freneau, Philip Morin, 134–43
about, 134, 2465, 2486
Freud, Sigmund, about, 2407, 5392
Freudian concepts in literature, 1161, 2441
drama, 1647–48, 2506
fiction, 1571
hist., 2440
Freund, Paul A., 6248
Freund, Robert, ed., 5755
Friden, George, 2364
Friederici, Georg, 3169
Friedman, Albert B., 5550
Friedman, Lillian, 2258
Friedman, Philip, 4459
Friedman, Theodore, ed., 4458
Friedrich, C. J., 4481
The Friend of My Youth, 711
The Friendly Persuasion, 2211
Friendly societies, 4574
Friends, Society of, about, 5404, 5442, 5467–68, 5479
See also Quakers
The Friends of the Friends, 1012
Friendship, 285
Friendship Village, 1453
Fries, Charles C., 2244
Fries, John, about, 3149
Friess, H. L., 5289, 5291
Fritz, Percy Stanley, 4180
Frohman, Daniel, 5637
Frohock, Wilbur M., 2427
From a Bench in Our Square, 1155
From Bed to Worse, 1214
From Here to Eternity, 2004
From Jordan's Delight, 1230
From Main Street to Stockholm, 1570
From Milo to Londos, 5060
From Ponkapog to Pesth, 713
From Rags to Riches, 2305
From the Easy Chair, 2278
From the Hidden Way, 1262
From the "London Times" of 1904, 798–99
From Time to Time, 1952
The Front Page, 2327, 2332
Frontenac, Louis de Buade, comte de, about, 3171 Frontier and pioneer life, 2407, 2802, 3074, 3078, 3082, 3105, 3147, 3151, 3188, 3737, 4372, 5508 arts & crafts, 5596, 5604
dances, 5590
Frontier and pioneer life—Continued
folklore, 5505, 5513, 5516, 5519–20, 5526, 5542
folksongs & ballads, 5526, 5549, 5553–56, 5559–60, 5570
Indians, 2988–89, 3030, 3032, 3035
law, 6220
legends, 3353, 5505, 5507, 5519, 5530
religion, 5411–16
Ariz., 4199
Dakota, 2683
Fla., 4293
Ill., 4129, 4136
Ind., 3995, 4123
Middle West, 4097–98, 4136, 4810
Minn., 4143
Mississippi River Valley, 3975, 5505
Missouri River and valley, 4147, 5505
Nebr., 2799–2800
New York (State), 4269
Northwest, Old, 4112, 4307
Northwest, Pacific, 4213–14
Northwestern States, 3663, 4147
Ohio, 4121
Ohio River and valley, 2610, 5505
Pa., 3280, 4269
S.C., 3180
Southern Plains, 4160
Southern States, 3180, 4097
Southwest, Old, 4098
Tenn., 3287, 3353
Tex., 3353, 4365, 4734
Va., 4251, 4269
The West, 3331, 3348, 4097, 4146, 4151–56, 4158, 4160–63, 4175, 4177, 4223, 4235, 4281, 4320, 4661, 4667
Wis., 4347
Wyo., 3971
Frontier and pioneer life in literature
bibl., 2502
comedy, 518
descr., 307–10, 365–67, 381, 399, 772–74, 784–86, 890, 898–99, 1078
drama, 1556
editorials, sketches, etc., 194–97, 379–80, 1064–65, 1068, 2424
fiction, 105–8, 114–15, 117, 201–4, 252, 258–60, 312, 415–18, 511, 514–16, 546, 550, 555, 579–84, 684–86, 766–67, 778–83, 787–93, 980, 1145–48, 1171, 1239, 1314–15, 1420, 1422, 1441, 1488–90, 1644, 1646, 1694, 1696, 1701, 1707, 1720–21, 1786, 1840, 1960–62, 1969, 2129, 2415–16
hist. & crit., 2437, 2502
humor, 2501
poetry, 933–34, 941–44, 1064, 1066–67, 1132, 1644–45, 1825
short stories, 319, 322, 330–32, 612–13, 687, 733–34, 739, 926–32, 935–40, 1145
Ala., 194–97
Alaska, 1048–52, 1058
Calif., 733–34, 739, 926–40, 1064–68
Ga., 445–48
Idaho, 1420, 1422

Frontier and pioneer life in literature—Continued
Ky., 366, 516, 766–67, 1469, 1701
Maine, 1707
Mich., 415–18
Middle West, 1644–46
Miss., 194–97
Mississippi River and valley, 307, 319–22, 768, 778–83, 787–93
Mo., 366
New England, 1441
Northwest, Old, 366
Ohio, 980, 1694
Ohio River Valley, 319–21
Okla., 1403, 1406
Oreg., 391, 1314–15
Pacific Coast, 1064–68
Pa., 105–8, 366, 1694
Rocky Mountains, 312
S. Dak., 1720–21
Southern States, 194–97, 379–80, 612–13, 1786
Tenn., 330–32, 366
Utah, 1420, 1424
Vt., 579–84
Va., 12–16, 366
The West, 683–87, 772–74, 941–44, 1064–68, 1420, 1488–90, 1644–46
Wis., 1078, 1556, 1960–62, 2129
Wyo., 1145–48
Frontier humor. See Humor—frontier
Frontier hypothesis, 3074, 3105, 3127, 3137, 3147, 3357
Frontier in art. See The West—frontier—pictorial works
Froom, L. E., 5442
Frooman, Jack, 3046
Frost, Arthur B., illus., 912–13, 922, 924–25, 1101
Frost, Robert, 1451–52, 5574
about, 1515, 2378, 2527
Frothingham, Octavius Brooks, 2279, 5256
Frothingham, Richard, 3245
Frothingham, Thomas G., 3680
Fruitlands, 5265
Fryburger, Vernon, 5962
Frye, Richard N., 3513
Fuchs, Lawrence H., 4458
Fülöp-Miller, René, 4905
Fuess, Claude Moore, 2674–78, 3336, 3431, 3480, 5217
The Fugitive, 1809
Fuld, James J., 5677
Full Cargo, 1765
Fuller, Arthur B., ed., 316
Fuller, George W., 4213
Fuller, Henry Blake, 887–89
about, 2419
Fuller, Melville Weston, about, 6244
Fuller, Muriel, ed., 2351
Fuller, Richard C., about, 4619
Fuller, (Sarah) Margaret (Marchesa d'Ossoli), 313–18
ed., 280
about, 313, 2280, 2615
Fuller, Zelotes, 5418
Fulton, John F., 4759, 4821
Fulton, Maurice G., 1135
Fulton, Robert, about, 4784, 4786
Functional psychology, 5389
Fund for the Advancement of Education, about, 5206
Fundamentalism, 3761, 5429–30
Funeral rites and ceremonies, 4527, 5507
Funk & Wagnalls New "Standard" Dictionary, 2236
Fur trade
fiction, 312, 1962
Northwest, Pacific, 4213
Oregon, 391
Utah, 4183
The West, 3330, 4148–49, 4175, 4186
Furie, W. B., 4458
Furnas, Joseph C., 4562
The Furnished Room, 114–15
Furniss, Edgar S., 3605
Furniss, Norman F., 5429
Furniture, 5727–28, 5731–32, 5796 decoration, 5726
A Further Range, 1452
Fusfeld, Daniel R., 3497
Fussell, Edwin S., 1718
Fussler, Herman H., ed., 6478
Futures, 5952
Fyles, Franklin, 2315

G

GATT. See General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade
Gabriel, Ralph Henry, 3082, 3741, 5420
Gabrielson, Ira Noel, 5870
Gaer, Joseph, 6394
Gaffney, M. Mason, 5817
Gagey, Edmond M., 4900, 4918, 5659
Gagliardo, Domenico, 4633
Gal Young Un, 1684
Galbraith, John Kenneth, 4513, 5886–87
Gale, Zona, 1453–59
Galena, Ill., guidebook, 3877
Galinsky, Hans, 2245
Gall, Elena D., ed., 5207
Gallantry, 1262
Gallatin, Albert, about, 3310–11
The Gallery, 1940–41
The Galley Slave, 2316
Gallico, Paul, 4987
Gallie, Walter B., 5352
Gallion, Arthur B., 4606
Galloway, George B., 6155
Galloway, John Debo, 5927
Gallup, Donald C., 1362
Gallup, George H., 6417
Gallup, N. Mex., 4187
Galveston News, about, 2866
Gama, Vasco da, about, 3169
Gambling, 2586, 4639, 5059
Gambrill, John Montgomery, ed., 3151
Games and dances, 5563, 5585–92
Ind., 5571
Mo., 5569
N.C., 5536
Okla., 5570
Schoharie County, N.Y., 5539
See also Dancing; Recreation; Singing games Gamio, Manuel, 4471
comp., 4472
Gangs, 4598, 4658
Gannett, Henry, 2970
Ganoe, William Addleman, 3657
Gans, Joe, about, 5025
Gans, Roma, 5148
Gantenbein, James W., ed., 3575
Garbo, Greta, about, 4952
Gard, Robert E., 4926
Gard, Wayne, 4157, 6220
The Garden of Adonis, 1467
Gardening, 2790, 5824
Gardiner, Frederic M., 5018
Gardner, Albert Ten Eyck, 5738
Gardner, Burleigh B., 4438
Gardner, Emelyn Elizabeth, 5539
ed., 5575
Gardner, Gilson, 2890
Gardner, Helen L., 1363, 1367
Gardner, Mary R., 4438
Garfield, James Abram, about, 3450
Garis, Roy L., 4420
Garland, Constance, illus., 894
Garland, Hamlin, 890–99
about, 2365, 2419, 2517
Garland, John H., ed., 4113
Garman, Charles Edward, about, 5222
Garnsey, Morris E., 4173
Garrets and Pretenders, 3757
Garrigue, Jean, 1981–83
Garrigues, Charles Harris, 6343
Garrison, Fielding H., 4819
Garrison, Francis Jackson, 3379
Garrison, Garnet R., 4686
Garrison, George Pierce, 3337
Garrison, W. E., 5496
Garrison, Wendell Phillips, 3379
Garrison, William Lloyd, about, 2280, 3379–80
Garrison, Winfred Ernest, 5405, 5455
Garvan, Anthony N. B., 5707
Gary, Elbert H., about, 2825
Gass, Sherlock B., 2425
Gassner, John, ed., 2332–35
Gates, Frederick T., 4622
The Gates of the Compass, 1516
Gateway to a Nation, 4043
Gaudet, Hazel, 6419
The Gauntlet, 1789
Gaus, John M., 3785
Gauthier, Eva, 5678
Gaver, Jack, 2327
ed., 2336
Gavit, Bernard C., 6274
Geare, R. I., 4726
Geddes, Virgil, 4665
Gehrig, Henry L. ("Lou"), about, 4987, 5010
Geiger, George R., 4535
Geiger, R., ed., 2953
Geiger, Theodore, 5898
Geiser, Samuel W., 4734
Geismar, Maxwell D., 2428–30
ed., 646
Gelatt, Roland, 5618
Gelfant, Blanche H., 2431
Gellhorn, Walter, 4773, 6110, 6118, 6130, 6316
ed., 6110, 6119

General Accounting Office, about, 5995–97
General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade (GATT), about, 5953
General education, 5107, 5134, 5160, 5180, 5182, 5184, 5228, 5246
See also Liberal education
General Motors Corporation, about, 5940
General stores, 4086, 5955
General William Booth Enters into Heaven, 1581
The Generall Historie of Virginia, New-England, and the Summer Isles, 70 Generals, Civil War, 3690–92, 3695, 3706
The General's Lady, 1442
Genesis, 2136
Genetics, 4722
The "Genius," 1339
The Genius of America, 2503
The Genteel Tradition at Bay, 1735, 5368
"Genteel tradition" in literature, 2278, 2385–86, 2513
poetry, 2513, 2545
revolt, 926, 1089, 1333, 2406, 2507
The Gentle Lena, 1767
The Gentleman from Indiana, 1802
The Gentleman in America, 2392
A Gentleman of Bayou Têche, 760
Gentleman's Progress, 4240
Gentlemen, I Address You Privately, 1242
Gentles, Ruth G., ed., 1486
The Geographical Review, 2937
Geography, 2933–81
atlases & maps, 2967, 2972, 2974
economic, 2939–40
historical, 2939, 2943, 2967–76, 3139 physical, 1079, 2933–36, 2970, 2973, 2975, 5816
regional, 2933–37, 2939–40, 4113
Great Plains, 4159
Middle West, 4113
Missouri Valley, 4145
N. Dak., 4165
Okla., 4170–71
Southern States, 4084 territories, 4218
Tex., 4192
The West, 4148
See also Language—atlases & maps
Geography and Plays, 1771
Geological Society of America, about, 4733
Geological Survey, about, 4763
Geologists, 4737
Geology, 2935–36, 2942, 2945–46, 2957, 2973, 4336–38
bibl., 4736
hist., 4715, 4733, 4737
maps, 2942
Nev., 4184
Rocky Mountains, 4172
Tex., 4192
Yellowstone National Park, 4182
Geophysical Laboratory, Washington, D.C. See Carnegie Institution of Washington, Geophysical Laboratory
George, Henry, about, 4535, 6424
George Fox Digg'd Out of His Burrowes, 89
George Washington Slept Here, 1548
George's Mother, 824, 836–37
Georgia, 3953, 4079, 4094–95
architecture, 5706
editorials, sketches, etc., 445–48, 556
fiction, 546, 1270–74, 1380, 1544, 1618–19
govt., 6195
guidebooks, 3837–42
hist., 4094, 4104
journalism, 2856
language (dialects, etc.), 2271
newspapers, 2856
poetry, 1038–43, 1046–47
resources, 4095
short stories, 556, 910–22, 924–25, 1270, 1275
travel & travelers, 4248–50
Georgia. University, hist., 5176
Georgia Press Association, about, 2856
Georgia Scenes, 446–48
Gerber, John C., 344
Gericke, Wilhelm, about, 5649
German-American newspapers, 2899
Germans, 4046, 4062, 4360, 4414, 4471–81
folklore, 5523
immigrant influences, 4477
See also Pennsylvania Germans
Germantown, Pa., 4477
Germany economic relations with, 3638
fiction, 1250, 1890–91
relations with, 3570, 3776
travel & travelers, 426, 1890, 2462
Geronimo, about, 3004
Gerontion, about, 1367
Gershwin, George, 1512
about, 5639, 5678
Gershwin, Ira, 5678
Gerson, Robert A., 5629
Gervasi, Frank H., 6184
Gesell, Arnold L., 5149
Gestalt psychology, 5389, 5392
Gethsemani Monastery, about, 2041
Gettysburg, Battle of, 2613
fiction, 1542
Ghent, William J., 3338
Ghent, Treaty of, 3329, 3542
Ghost and Flesh, 1986
Ghost stories, 5515
Mich., 5535
Schoharie County, N. Y., 5539
Tex., 5521
The Ghost Talks, 6364
The Ghostly Rental, 1012
Ghostly Tales, 1012
Giants and ogres in folklore, 5528–29, 5546
Giants in the Earth, 1721
Gibb, G. S., 5913
Gibbons, Herbert Adams, 5957
Gibbs, Josiah Willard, about, 2105, 4721, 4724, 4751
Gibbs, Oliver Walcott, about, 4740
Gibson, John M., 4823
Gibson, Joseph Bannister, about, 6231
Gibson, William M., 972
ed., 835
Giddings, Franklin Henry, about, 4540, 4542
Giddings, J. R., 3360
Gideon Planish, 1567
Gideonse, Harry D., 3608
Gifford, E. W., 3002
Gift-books (annuals, etc.), 2518
The Gift of the Magi, 1114–15
Gila River and valley, 4005
Gilbert, Douglas, 4974
Gilbert, Edmund W., 2971
Gilbert, Sir Humphrey, about, 3223
Gilbert, Josiah, about, 850
The Gilded Age, 775–77, 1136
Gilder, Rosamond, ed., 4896
Gilgamesh, translation, 1556
Gill, Herbert A., 4744
Gill, Norman N., 6209
Gillette, William, 2337
Gilley, John, about, 2671
Gillie, Mildred H., 3658
Gillin, John Lewis, 4540, 4634
Gillmore, Margalo, 4919
Gilman, Daniel Coit, 4724, 4749, 5195 about, 5195
Gilman, Lawrence, 5683
Gilman, Richard C., 5310
Gilman, Roger, 3751
Gilman, William H., 498
ed., 2412
Ginsburg, Jekuthiel, 4739
Gipson, Lawrence H., 3188, 3246
The Girl I Left behind Me, 2315
The Girl of the Golden West, 2348
The Girl with the Green Eyes, 2337
Gissing, George, about, 2481
Gist, Noel P., ed., 4108
Gittler, Joseph B., ed., 4428
Give Your Heart to the Hawks, 1534
The Gladiator, 205, 2337
Glasgow, Ellen, 1460–63
about, 1267, 1463, 2430
Glaspell, Susan, 2332
Glass industry, 5911
The Glass Menagerie, 2219, 2334, 2336
Glass Mountain, 2376
Glassware and glassmaking, 5789, 5796
Glaucus, 2300
Glazer, Nathan, 4555–56, 5458
Glazer, Sidney, 4137
Gleanings in Europe, 263–64
Gleason, Sarell Everett, 3537–38
Glenmary, N.Y., 674
Glenn, Bess, 3967
Glenn, John M., 4623
Glick, Carl, 4901
Glicksberg, Charles I., 2383
Glimpses of Life in Colonial Virginia, 1103–4
Glimpses of Unfamiliar Japan, 951–52
Globe (Atchison, Kans.), about, 2885
Glorious Incense, 539
Glory Never Guesses, 2079
The Glory of the Nightingales, 1714
Glory Road, 3691
Glover, John George, ed., 5906

Glueck, Eleanor T., 4646–51
Glueck, Sheldon, 4645–51
Go Down Moses, 1379
Go Tell It on the Mountain, 1915
Goblins and Pagodas, 1433
God and My Country, 1541
God and My Father, 1318
The Goddess Was Mortal, 1553
Godfrey, Thomas, 144–45, 2337, 2347
Godkin, Edwin Lawrence, 2858, 2882
about, 2882, 2921
The Gods Arrive, 1854
God's Controversy with New-England, 79
God's Little Acre, 1272
Gods of the Lightning, 1173, 2332
God's Promise to His Plantation, 18
God's Trombones, 1538
Godwin, Parke, ed., 223
Goebel, Dorothy Burne, 3326
Goebel, Julius, Jr., 6221, 6234
Goethals, George Washington, about, 4221, 4796
Goethe, Johann Wolfgang von, about, 2282
Gogh, Vincent van, about, 2815
Gohdes, Clarence, 2412, 2432, 2496
ed., 643, 1046, 2338
Going, Charles Buxton, 3339
Going to Pieces, 4911
Going-to-the-Stars, 1581
Going-to-the-Sun, 1581
Gold, 1648
The Gold-Bug, 529
Gold mines and mining
Calif., 2641, 2659, 4201–2
Cripple Creek, Colo., 4181
Rocky Mountains, 4172
Gold rushes
Alaska, 2719–20
Calif., 926, 941, 3737, 4201–2, 4351
Rocky Mountains, 4174
Goldberg, Arthur J., 6049
Goldberg, Isaac, 5635
Goldberg, Ray A., 5841
Golden Apples (Rawlings), 1682
The Golden Apples (Welty), 2207
The Golden Apples of the Sun, 1936
The Golden Bowl, 1000–1
about, 998
Golden Boy, 2064, 2333
The Golden Darkness, 1871
Golden Falcon, 1295
The Golden House, 1142
The Golden Mirror, 1906
Golden Multitudes, 2482
The Golden Vase, 1577
Goldenweiser, Emanuel A., 5983
Goldfield, Nev., 4184
Goldin, Hyman E., ed., 2274
Goldman, Eric F., 3046, 3455, 3484, 3751
ed., 3058
Goldman, Irving, 3041
Goldmann, Franz, 4886
Goldsen, Rose Kohn, 4470
Goldsmith, Alfred F., comp., 633
Goldthwait, James W., 2937
Goldwin, Robert A., ed., 3617
Golf, 4987, 4990, 5048, 5051, 5053
Gomme, Alice, Lady, 5588
Gompers, Samuel, 6050
about, 6050
Gone Tomorrow, 1592
Gone With the Wind, 1619
Good and evil, 5354
The Good Anna, 1767
Good-Bye, My Fancy, 626, 638
Good-Bye Wisconsin, 1841
The Good Earth, 1253
Good Intentions, 1631
Good Men and True, 1687
Good Morning America, 1731
Good neighbor policy, 3491, 3574, 3576, 3578
Good News of Death, 2350
Good Night, Sweet Prince, 4933
The Good Spirit of Laurel Ridge, 2173
Goodale, George L., 4715
Goode, George Brown, 4726
about, 4724, 4726
Goodloe, Daniel R., 4363
A Goodly Fellowship, 1284, 5214
A Goodly Heritage, 1284, 5214
Goodman, Henry, ed., 955
Goodman, Nathan G., 4830
ed., 132
Goodrich, Annie M., about, 4854
Goodrich, Hubert B., 4725
Goodrich, Lloyd, 5764–65, 5773
Goodspeed, Charles Eliot, 5072, 6462
ed., 5690
Goodwyn, Frank, 4192
Goodyear, Charles, about, 4786
The Goophered Grapevine, 757
Gordis, Robert, ed., 4458
Gordon, Albert I., 4456
Gordon, Caroline, 1464–72
Gordon, George A., about, 5428
Gordon, John E., 4877
Gordon, Kate, 5289
Gordon, Lincoln, 5885
Gorgas, William Crawford, about, 4221, 4823
The Gorgeous Hussy, 2668
Gorlin, Selma, illus., 5587
Gosnell, Harold Foote, 6363, 6375, 6385–86, 6418
Goss, Madeleine B., 5609
Gottmann, Jean, 4085
Gottschalk, Clara. See Peterson, Clara Gottschalk
Gottschalk, Louis Moreau, 5679
Gottschalk, Louis R., 3247–50
about, 5679
Goubaux, Prosper, 2299
Goudy, Frederic William, 6456
Gould, George M., 2513
Gould, Jay, about, 5880, 5882
Gould, Laurence M., 2977
Gould, Mary Earle, 5598
Govan, Gilbert E., 4104
Government, 2970, 3106, 4065, 4499, 4551, 6059–60, 6077–78, 6131–39, 6147, 6167, 6170–71, 6179, 6202, 6312 appropriations & expenditures, 6001, 6136, 6139, 6168, 6180, 6182, 6191 centralization, 6061, 6066, 6085, 6093 expansion, 6093, 6099, 6103–4
functions, 2905, 6133, 6139, 6178, 6315 Government—Continued history
17th–18th cent., 3195, 3221, 3245, 6068, 6232
18th cent., 3187, 3192, 6075
American Revolution, 3242, 6083
Confederation, 3190
19th cent., 3320, 3324, 3329, 3333, 3351, 3357, 3419, 4288, 4512, 6373
20th cent., 3416, 3455, 3485–87, 3491, 3498, 3500b
sources, 3349, 3422, 6065
labor policy, 6192
limitations, 6090, 6101
organization, 6173–74, 6178
regulations. See under special subjects, e.g., Commerce—govt. regulations World War II program, 3725
See also Executive branch; Indians, American—govt. relations; Judicial branch; Legislative branch; Separation of powers Government, democratic. See Democracy
Government, local. See Local government
Government, state. See State government
Government and art. See Art and state Government and education, 5099, 5165, 5189
See also State and education
Government and science. See Science and state Government and the press, 2861, 2927–28, 2932 Government officials and employees, 4065, 6421 appointment, qualifications, etc., 6083, 6112, 6136, 6157, 6159, 6183, 6186, 6188, 6193
biog. (collected), 6187
Government ownership, 5885
Government Printing Office, about, 6452
Government publications, 6452
bibl., 6138, 6452
Governors, powers and duties, 6203
Governors' Conference, about, 5135
Gow, James, 2334
Gowan, Olina, Sister, about, 4854
Goyen, William, 1984–87
Grady, Henry W., about, 2856, 3445
Graebner, Norman A., 3340, 3613
Graeff, Arthur D., 3230, 4479
Graf, Herbert, 5655
Graham, C. A., 4176
Graham, Edward H., 5810
Graham, Frank, 5010
Graham, George A., 6344
Graham, Gerald S., 3189
Graham, Ian Charles Cargill, 4491
Graham, J., pseud. See Phillips, David Graham
Graham, Lloyd, 3950
Graham, Martha, 4968
about, 4968

Graham, Philip, 4978
ed., 1046
Grambs, Jean D., 5227
A Grammar of Motives, 2389
Grammars. See Language—grammars
Grand Army of the Republic, about, 3644
Grand Canyon, 4182
The Grand Design, 1332
Grand Inquest, 6164
La Grande demoiselle, 1035
Grandfather Stories, 1160
The Grandissimes, 749–50
Grandmamma, 1035
The Grandmothers, 1840
Grandmother's Grandmother, 1035
Grandsons, 2578
Grange, Harold E. ("Red"), 5037
about, 5037
Granger movement, 3420–21, 6356
Grannis, Chandler B., ed., 6437
Granniss, Ruth, 6440
Grant, Bruce, 2253
Grant, Helen Hardie, 2633
Grant, Margaret, 5647
Grant, Ulysses S., 3696
about, 2280, 3435, 3444, 3696, 3706
Grant, William L., ed., 3156, 3207
Grapes of Wrath, 1775, 1777
Gras, Norman S. B., 5984, 6007
The Grass Harp, 1947
Grasselli, Eugene R., about, 4735
Grattan, C. Hartley, ed., 309, 2375
Grattan, Thomas Colley, 4334–35
about, 4334
Graves, William Brooke, 6171, 6202
comp., 6185
Gray, Asa, 4036, 4760
about, 4724, 4760
Gray, Henry David, 5301
Gray, J. W., about, 2857
Gray, James, 2358, 3986
Gray, Lewis Cecil, 5823
Gray, Wood, 3058
The Gray Wolf's Ha'nt, 757
Grayson, David, pseud. See Baker, Ray Stannard
The Graysons, 876–77
Graziano, "Rocky", 5028
about, 5028
The Great American Fraud, 1155
The Great Awakening, 22–23, 5401–2, 5411, 5419
Great Awakening, 5402
Great Basin, 2971
Great Britain
Colonial policy, 3176–77, 3179, 3188–89, 3191–92, 3195, 3221, 3225, 3241, 3243
commerce, 3193
economic relations with, 3638
relations with, 3187–88, 3221, 3243, 3246, 3307, 3340, 3426, 3444, 3502, 3531, 3551–54, 3557–59, 3777–78
Civil War, 3536, 3550
War of 1812, 3542
Great Britain. Privy Council, about, 6232, 6234
Great Britain and France in the New World, 3171, 3188–89, 3191, 3226
Great Britain and Massachusetts, 3241
Great Britain and Pennsylvania, 3225
Great Britain and Texas, 3554, 3577
Great Circle, 1163
Great Depression (1929). See Depression (1929)
The Great Diamond Robbery, 2305
Great Dismal Swamp, 4336
The Great Divide, 1069–70
The Great Gatsby, 1428–29
about, 1425
The Great God Brown, 1648, 2337
The Great God Pan, 4953
The Great God Success, 1108
The Great Good Place, 1012
Great Lakes, 2803, 3170, 4113–14, 4140, 4315, 4329, 4349
short stories, 1149–50
travels & travelers, 314
See also Waterways, inland
The Great Lawsuit, 315
The Great Meadow, 1701
Great Plains, 2933, 4151–71
geography, 2969
grasslands, 2966
guidebooks, 3895–3909
hist., 3784, 3964
Indians. See Plains Indians
Great Revival, 5402
Great Smoky Mountains, short stories, 1084, 1087–88
The Great Tradition, 2439
The Great Valley, 1601
Greece, fiction, 1839
Greek Anthology, 1599, 2481
Greeks, 4435
Greeley, Horace, 2883, 4373
about, 313, 2770, 2797, 2848, 2858, 2868, 2883, 4372
Greely, Adolphus W., 2981
about, 2980–81
Green, Abel, 4892
Green, Constance McLaughlin, 4789
Green, James A., 3326
Green, Nicholas St. John, about, 5264
Green, Paul, 1473–78, 2332–33, 2337
about, 1479
Green, Samuel Swett, 6472
about, 6476
Green, William, 5906
Green Bay Packers, about, 5045
A Green Bough, 1379
Green Centuries, 1469
Green Fruit, 1227
The Green Leaf, 1635
The Green Mountain Boys, 580–82
Green Mountains, Vermont, 2742
The Green Pastures, 2327, 2333, 2348
Green River, 217
The Green Town, 2350
The Green Wave, 2106
Greenbackers, 3421, 6356, 6362, 6427
Greenberg, Samuel Bernard, 1480–81
about, 1481
Greenblatt, Milton, 4838
Greene, Bertram, drawings, 3164
Greene, Edward L., about, 4734
Greene, Evarts Boutell, 3089, 3190–92, 5419
Greene, Theodore M., 5100
Greene, Theodore P., ed., 3110–11
Greener Fields, 2725
Greenfield, Kent Roberts, ed., 3726
Greenfield Hill, 121
Greenough, Horatio, about, 5738
Greenslet, Ferris, 951, 2679–81
about, 2680
Greenway, John, 5552
Greenwich Village
Bohemianism, 3757
theater, 4916
Greer, Thomas H., 6426
Greever, Garland, ed., 1046
Gregg, Josiah, 4188
about, 4188
Gregory, Herbert E., 4715
Gregory, Horace Victor, 1132, 1482–83, 1905
ed., 1185
Gregory, Mrs. Horace Victor. See Zaturenska, Marya
Gregory, Raymond W., 5224
Gregory, Winifred, 2915
Gress, Edmund G., 6456
Grew, Joseph C., 3545, 3599
Grey, Hugh, ed., 5071
Grey, Zane, 1484–86, 5073–74
about, 1486–87, 5073
Greyslaer, 365, 550
Grieve, George, tr., 4253
Griffes, Charles T., about, 5605, 5680
Griffin, Grace Gardner, 3521
Griffin, James B., ed., 2990
Griffin, Marcus, 5061
Griffis, William Elliot, 2851
Griffith, Louis Turner, 2856
Griffith, Richard, 4958
Griffith, Virgil A., 6273
Grimes, Alan Pendleton, 2921, 6062
Grimm brothers, about, 5504
Grinnell, George Bird, 2999–3000, 4724
Grinnell expeditions, 2980
Griswold, Alexander Viets, Bp., about, 5457
Griswold, Alfred Whitney, 3594
Grodzins, Morton, 4469
Grogan, John M., 4695
Groost, Gerard, about, 3765
Gross, A. H., tr., 1193
Gross, Ben, 4965
about, 4965
Gross, Gerald C., 4707
Gross, Mason W., ed., 5384
Gross, Samuel D., 4824
about, 4824
The Gross Clinic (painting), 5764
Grossman, James, 252, 2286
Grosvenor, Gilbert, ed., 2962
Grosz, George, illus., 1118
The Ground We Stand On, 1329
The Group, 2347
Group dances, 5590
Group theatre, 4914
Grover, Leonard, 2301
Groves, Ernest R., 4563
Groves, Harold M., 5970
The Groves of Academe, 2021
Growth, 1806
Gruchy, Allan G., 5888
Grunder, Garel A., 3595
Gruskin, Alan D., 5752
Guard of Honor, 1302

The Guardian Angel, 375
Guerrant, Edward O., 3576
Guest, Robert H., 6055
Guidance in education, 5149, 5228
Guidebooks. See under names of places and regions, e.g., Alaska—guidebook Guild, R. A., ed., 89
Guilday, Peter K., 5477
Gulf coastal plain, 2933
Gulf States, 3946
Gullah dialect, 2271, 4436, 5540
Gulliksen, Harold, 5229
Gummere, Amelia Mott, ed., 185
Gummere, Francis Barton, about, 5222
Gun Factory, Naval, hist., 3670
Gunderson, Robert Gray, 3326
Gunn, Selskar M., 4863
Gunther, John, 3499
Gustafson, Axel F., 5884
Guthe, Carl E., 2990
Gutheim, Frederick A., 4008
Guthmann, Harry G., 5967, 5971
Guthrie, Alfred Bertram, 1488–90
Guthrie, Paul N., ed., 6054
Guthrie, Ramon, tr., 3773
Gymnasiums, 4990

H

H. M. Pulham, Esquire, 1592
Haas, Theodore H., 4428
Haas, William H., 4218
Habenstein, Robert W., 4527
Haber, David, ed., 6126
Haberle, John, about, 5744
Hacienda, 1660
Hacker, Louis M., 5878
Hackett, Alice Payne, 2482
Hackett, James H., about, 518
Hackett, Walter, 2348
Hadley, Chalmers, 6476
Haefner, George E., 5220
Hafen, Le Roy R., 4179, 4666
Hagedorn, Hermann, 2682–86
Hague, Frank, about, 6388
Hague. Permanent Court of International Justice, about, 3534
Hahn, Milton E., 5228
Haigh, Robert W., 5914
Haight, Gordon S., 279
Hail Columbia (song), about, 5616
Haiman, Miecislaus, 3250
Haines, Charles G., 6240
Haines, Francis, 3001
Haines, George, IV, 3065
Haines, William Wister, 2337
The Hairy Ape, 1647–48, 2332
Haiti, relations with, 3575, 3584, 3587
Hakluyt, Richard, about, 3198
The Halcyon in Canada, 741
Hale, Bryant, 4946
Hale, Carolyn L., comp., 6205
Hale, Edward Everett, 880, 900–9, 4036
Hale, George Ellery, about, 4722
Hale, Robert Beverly, 5754
Hale, William Harlan, 2883
Hales, Dawson W., 5099, 5141
Haley, James Evetts, 4153, 4196
Halford, Francis John, 2687–88
Halich, Wasyl, 4492
Halkin, A. S., 4457
Hall, Basil, 4300–2
Hall, Clayton Colman, ed., 3209
Hall, Clifton L., ed., 5108
Hall, Dorothy, 5196
Hall, Francis, 4286–87
about, 4285
Hall, G. Stanley, about, 5116, 5392
Hall, Gertrude, about, 1278
Hall, James, 319–22
Hall, Margaret E., ed., 6262
Hall, Margaret Hunter, 4300
Hall, Thomas Cuming, 5394
Halleck, Fitz-Greene, 323–29, 2295
about, 329
Hall-marks, pewterers', 5788
Hallenbeck, Wilbur C., 4587
Halline, Allan G., ed., 170, 200, 208, 2337
Hallowed Years, 5066
Hallowell, Maine, guidebook, 3793
Halpert, Herbert, 5545
ed., 5566, 5576
Halsey, Francis W., 163
Halsey, Richard T. H., 5796
Halsted, William S., about, 4821, 4845
The Halt in the Garden, 1516
Hambridge, Gove, ed., 5837
Hamburger, Ernest, 5211
Hamburger, Philip P., 1598
Hamer, Philip M., 3068
Hamilton, Alexander, 2291, 3288–89, 4240, 6075
about, 723–24, 2873, 3125, 3281, 3288–91, 4239, 6015, 6170
Hamilton, Allan McLane, 3291
Hamilton, Andrew, about, 2931
Hamilton, Charles, ed., 4652
Hamilton, Holman, 3333
Hamilton, R. S., about, 4536
Hamilton, Walton, 4513, 5290
Hamilton, William Baskerville, ed., 2571
Hamilton, William J., 2955
The Hamlet, 1391
The Hamlet of A. MacLeish, 1586
Hamlin, Sarah H. (Simpson), 5709
Hamlin, Talbot Faulkner, 5700, 5708–9
Hammarstrand, Nils, tr., 4486
Hammerstein, Oscar, 2337, 5659, 5685
Hammond, Bray, 6000
Hammond, Charles, about, 2857
Hampson, Alfred Leete, ed., 842
Hampton, Wade, 2635
Hampton, S. C., plantation life, 5087
Hampton Institute, about, 2982
Hanau, Stella, 4916
Hanchett, David S., 5948
Hancock County, Ohio, 3866
Hand, Learned, 6264
Handel, Leo A., 4950
Handicrafts. See Arts and crafts
Handkerchiefs from Paul, 2483
Handlin, Mary F., 3083
Handlin, Oscar, 3083, 4410–11, 4428–30, 4455, 4481
ed., 3079, 4323, 5483
Hands Off, 3577
Hanford, A. Chester, 5178
Hanford, James Holly, 5573
Hanley, Louise, ed., 2240
Hanley, Miles L., 2268
Hanna, Alfred J., 3980, 4293
Hanna, Kathryn T. (Abbey), 4096
Hanna, Marcus Alonzo ("Mark"), about, 3424, 6352
Hannah Thurston, 2282
Hansen, Allen O., 5121
Hansen, Alvin H., 5898, 5968
Hansen, Harry, 387, 1122, 3488, 3987
ed., 1125, 2351
Hansen, Marcus L., 2268, 4390, 4412–13, 4473
Hanson, Earl Parker, 4222
Hanson, Howard, about, 5671
Happiness, pursuit of (law), 3756
Happy Days, 1604
The Happy Marriage, 1586
Happy New Year, Kameradesl, 2016
Haraszti, Zoltán, 3279
Harbeson, Georgiana (Brown), 5785
Harbison, Winfred A., 6077
The Harbor, 1657
Harbor of the Sun, 2746
Harbord, James G., 3710
Hard, Walter R., 4009
Hard Candy, 2227
Hard Winter, 1553
Hardee, Melvene D., ed., 5228
Harding, Thomas Swann, 5857
Harding, Walter R.
comp., 589
ed., 610
Harding, Warren Gamaliel
about, 3475
fiction, 1756
Hardman, Jacob B. S., ed., 6032
Hardy, C. De Witt, 5169
Hardy, John, about, 5517
Hare, James H., about, 2908
Hare, Robert, about, 4740
Hare, William H., Bp., about, 5457
Hargrave, Roy, 4968
Harlem (N.Y.)
fiction, 1832, 1914–15
short stories, 1521, 1523–25
Harlow, Alvin F., 4122, 4667, 4675, 5928
ed., 5512
Harlow, Ralph Volney, 2689, 6156
Harman, R. Joyce, 4693
Harmon, Frances B., 5305
Harmon, George Dewey, 3028
Harmon, Nolan Bailey, 5463
Harmon, "Old Council," about, 5529
Harmonium, 1782, 1784
Harmony Society, hist., 3819
Harned, Thomas B., ed., 627, 637
Harnett, William M., about, 5744
Harno, Albert J., 6321
Harnoncourt, René d', 3017
Harp of Columbia, 5577
Harper, Joseph Henry, 6450
Harper, Lawrence A., 3193
Harper, Robert A., 4619
Harper, Wilhelmina, comp., 937
Harper and Brothers, about, 6445, 6450
Harper's Magazine, 2557
The Harpe's Head, 322
Harrigan, Edward, about, 4935
Harriman, Edward Henry, about, 5932

Harriman, Margaret Case, 4931
Harrington, Fred Harvey, 3103
Harriot, Thomas, about, 4721
Harris, Charles K., about, 5635
Harris, George Washington, 330–32
Harris, J. S., 3041
Harris, Joel Chandler, 880, 910–25, 1134–35, 2296
about, 910, 2261
Harris, Joseph P., 6157, 6403–4
Harris, Julia C., ed., 923
Harris, Mark, 1582
Harris, R. E. G., 6207
Harris, Seymour E., 5889–90, 6010
ed., 3638
Harris, Thaddeus W., about, 2280
Harris, William Torrey, 5266, 5306–8
about, 5259, 5305, 5307, 5309
Harrison, James A., ed., 533, 538
Harrison, Joseph B., ed., 938
Harrison, Peter, about, 5704
Harrison, Shelby Millard, 4588
Harrison, William Henry, 2996
about, 3325–26
Harrisse, Henry, 6460
about, 6460
Harrod, James, about, 2726–27
Harshberger, John W., 2957
Hart, Albert Bushnell, 3079, 3083, 3381
ed., 3177, 3301, 3337, 3356, 4034
Hart, Clyde, 4701
Hart, James D., 2433–34, 2482
ed., 2338
Hart, Lorenz, about, 5685
Hart, Moss, 1491–93, 1545, 1548, 2327, 2333–34
Hart, Tony, about, 4935
Harte, Francis Bret, 926–40, 2290
about, 732, 941, 1149, 2534
Hartford, Conn., 32
Hartford Convention, 3305
Hartford Courant, about, 2875
Hartford Wits. See Connecticut Wits
Hartmann, Edward George, 4421
Hartshorne, Charles, ed., 5346
Hartshorne, Richard, 2937
Hartung, Maurice L., ed., 5249
Hartz, Louis, 6063
Harvard Anniversary Address, 460
Harvard College, 3745
Harvard Guide to American History, 3083
Harvard University
about, 2767, 5221, 5670, 5672
curriculum, 5180
hist., 5203
Harvard University. Committee on the Objectives of a General Education in a Free Society, 5180
Harvard University. Divinity School, about, 5424
Harvard University. Library, about, 6470
Harvard University. Philosophy Dept., about, 5369
Harvesting machinery, 5826
Harvey, Alexander, 975
Harvey, Fred, about, 4187
Harvey, William Brinton, 5468
Harwell, Richard B., ed., 2830
Hasse, Adelaide R., 4819, 5834
Hasslacher, Jacob, about, 4735
Hastings, George E., 146
Hastings, Thomas, 5665
The Hasty Heart, 2334
Hasty Pudding, 102
Hatch, Louis Clinton, 3681
The Hatch, 2350
Hatcher, Harlan H., 4114, 4118
Hathorn, Guy B., 6139
Haugen, Einar, 2267
Haunted Ground, 1553
The Haunted Mirror, 1703
Hauser, Elizabeth J., ed., 6429
Haven, Samuel F., 6447
Havighurst, Robert J., 4589, 5146, 5205
Havighurst, Walter, 3975, 4979
Haviland, Henry Field, 3610
Having Wonderful Time, 2327
Hawaii, 2688, 3449, 4218, 4220, 4470
fiction, 2003–4
Hawes, G. R., 5197
Hawgood, John A., 4478
Hawkes, Herbert E., 5178
Hawley, Amos H., 4393
Haworth, Paul Leland, 3432
Hawthorne, Nathaniel, 333–59, 2290, 2406
about, 21, 280, 360–64, 381, 470, 487, 538, 2368, 2385, 2397, 2420, 2456, 2476, 2479, 2503, 2545
Hawthorne, Sophia (Peabody), 349–50
Hay, Clarence L., 944
Hay, John, 941–44, 3395, 3426
ed., 421
about, 689, 1126, 3426
Hay-Pauncefote Treaty, 3559
Hayakawa, S. I., 378
Haycraft, Howard, 2436
ed., 2435, 2454–55
Hayes, Carlton J. H., 3572
Hayes, E. C., 4540
Hayes, Rutherford B., about, 3418–19
Haymarket Riot, 3425
Hayne, Paul H.
ed., 616
about, 614
Hayner, Norman S., 4590
Haynes, Benjamin R., 6017
Haynes, Frederick Emory, 3433, 6427
Haynes, George H., 6158
Haynes, Williams, 4735
Hays, Arthur Garfield, 6127, 6265, 6322
Hays, William Jacob, about, 5806
Haystead, Ladd, 4594, 5843
Hayward, Arthur H., 5786
Haywood, William Dudley ("Big Bill"), about, 6045
Hazard, J. N., 3562
Hazard, Lucy Lockwood, 2437
A Hazard of New Fortunes, 973–76
Hazel Kirke, 2337
Hazelton, George C., 2313
Hazlitt, Henry, 824
He and She, 2337
He Hanged Them High, 2656
He Sent Forth a Raven, 1704
He Went Away for a While, 2749
Head o' W-Hollow, 2167
Heady, Ferrel, 6311 Health
education, 4863
insurance, 4635, 4808, 4882, 4885–90
resorts, etc., 2278 services, 4805, 4814, 4864, 4866, 4868, 4870–71, 4874, 4876, 4878, 4880–81, 4885
hist., 4875, 4877
pediatric, 4841
rural, 4869–70, 4874
Mass., 4879
Heard, Alexander, 6376, 6378
Hearn, Lafcadio, 748, 945–55
about, 953, 955, 2481
Hearst, William Randolph, 2884
about, 2848, 2884
The Heart Is a Lonely Hunter, 2024
The Heart of Happy Hollow, 860
Heart of Man, 2546
The Heart of Maryland, 2315
The Heathen, 1052
The Heathen Chinee, 933
Heathen Days, 1604
Heavens and Earth, 1224
Heaven's My Destination, 1866
Heavy machinery, 4140
Hébert, Marcel, about, 5325
Hechler, Kenneth W., 3456
Hecht, Ben, 2327, 2332
Heck, Arch O., 5207
Heck, Harold J., 5946
Heckscher, August, 5855
Hedge, Frederic Henry, about, 5263
Hedges, James Blaine, 3074
Hedin, Naboth, 4483
Hedrick, Ulysses P., 5824
The Heel of Elohim, 2527
Heely, Allan V., 5155
Heerwagen, Arnold, 2966
Heffelfinger, W. W. ("Pudge"), 5038
Heffen, Thomas, 2335
Heffner, Richard D., 3079
Hegel, Georg W. F., about, 3768, 5305–6, 5326
Heidbreder, Edna, 5389
Heilman, Robert B., 2378
Heilner, Van Campen, 5075
Heindel, Richard Heathcote, 3777
Heinzen, Karl, about, 4481
Heiser, M. F., 2401
Heizer, Robert F., ed., 3002
Heldt, Henning, 6207
Helen of Troy, 1814
Heliodora, 1320
Hellbox, 2075
Heller (Robert) and Associates, 4671
Hellman, George S., ed., 392–93
Hellman, Lillian, 1988–91, 2327, 2333–36
Helm, MacKinley, 5767
Helms, Elva Allen, 6338
Helzner, Manuel, 5898
Hemingway, Ernest, 1494–1500, 2406
about, 821, 1501–5, 2371–72, 2376, 2406, 2427–28, 2508–9, 2537, 2542
Hemmen i den Nya Verlden, 4355
Hemming, Doris, tr., 4506
Hemming, Henry H., tr., 4506
Hendel, C. W., Jr., 5252
Henderson, Algo D., 5196
Henderson, Archibald, ed., 145

Henderson, Daniel M., 3434
Henderson, George F., 3697
Henderson, Ky., guidebook, 3858
Hendrick, Burton J., 3251, 3382–84, 3434, 3716
Hennessey, Joseph, comp., 4911
The Henrietta, 2337
Henry, Andrew, about, 4175
Henry, Caleb Sprague, about, 5263
Henry, John, about, 5506, 5517
Henry, Joseph, about, 4721, 4724, 4752, 4775
Henry, Merton G., 3661
Henry, Nelson B., ed., 5150
Henry, O., pseud. See Porter, William Sydney
Henry, Patrick,, about, 3263
Henry, Ralph Chester, 3951
Henry, Robert Selph, 3385, 3689, 3698, 5926
Henry, Stuart C., 5480
Henry of Navarre, 2281
Herald (Paris), about, 2872
Heraldic eagle, 2958
Heralds of American Literature, 2465
Herberg, Will, 5447, 5488
Herbert, F. Hugh, 2335
Herbert, Henry William, 5076–80
about, 5076–77, 5080
Herbert, Victor, about, 5605, 5681
Here Is New York, 1859
Here Lies, 1651
Hereditary organizations, 3644, 4574
Here's O'Hara, 2074
Hergesheimer, Joseph, 1506–11
Hering, Doris, ed., 4971
The Heritage of Hatcher Ide, 1802
Herlihy, Elizabeth M., ed., 4036
Hermaios, 2101
The Hermit Place, 2130
Herne, James A., 2304, 2337
Heroes, legendary. See Folk heroes Heroism, 285
Herr, John K., 3659
Herrick, Francis Hobart, 2958
about, 4743
Herrick, Robert, 956–58
about, 2419, 2464
Herrick, Virgil E., 5142
Herring, Edward Pendleton, 6357
Herring, James M., 4707
Herron, Ima Honaker, 2438
Hersey, John Richard, 1992–94
Herskovits, Melville J., 4446
Hertzler, Arthur E., 4825
about, 4825
Hervey, John, 5055
Herzberg, Joseph G., 2903
Herzog, George, ed., 5566, 5576
Hesperides, 1821
Hesperothen, 4382
Hesseltine, William B., 3053, 3435, 3785, 4071
Hettinger, Herman S., 5647
Hewitt, Abram S., about 3443
Heyer, William, drawings, 5940
Heyward, Dorothy, 2332
Heyward, Du Bose, 1168, 1512–13, 2332, 5678
about, 1514
Hiawatha, The Song of, 432
Hibbard, Benjamin Horace, 5811
Hibben, Paxton, 3457, 5476
Hickerson, Harold, 2332
Hicks, Granville, 2439
Hicks, John D., 3084, 3436, 5831, 6358
Hicks, Wilson, 2908
The Hidden Public, 6463
Hidy, M. E., 5913
Hidy, Ralph W., 5913, 5980
Higby, Chester Penn, ed., 2293
Higginson, Francis, 3102
Higginson, Henry Lee, about, 5649
Higginson, Thomas Wentworth, 2280, 4036
ed., 839–40
High Border Country, 3951
High Calling, 1789
High Falcon, 1154
High Passage, 1410
The High Place, 1262
High Plains, 4159, 4164
High schools. See Secondary education
High Tor, 1174, 2333, 2336
Higham, John, 4422
Highet, Gilbert, 5218
Highwater Mark, 937
Highwaymen, Colonial, 4227
Highways, 3786, 3788, 4085, 5934
La., 4100
Wyo., 3911
Hiking, 5064
Hildeburn, Charles R., 4049
Hildreth, G. H., 5205
Hildreth, Richard, about, 3058
Hill, Charles E., 3522
Hill, Clyde M., ed., 5236
Hill, Frank Ernest, 5939
Hill, Helen, 3254
Hill, James J., about, 5880, 5882
Hill, Lawrence F., 3582
Hill, Ralph Nading, 4010
Hill, W. H., 5335
Hilliard, William, about, 6446
Hillman, Arthur, 4575
Hillman, Sidney, about, 6049, 6394
The Hills Beyond, 1892
The Hills Give Promise, 1516
Hillsboro, Ill., guidebook, 3878
Hillstrom, Joseph, about, 2164
Hillway, Tyrus, ed., 499
Hillyer, Katharine, 5059
Hillyer, Robert, 1515–17
Hilsman, Roger, 3603
Hindle, Brooke, 4718
Hindus, Milton, ed., 656
Hinkel, Lydia I., ed., 5572
Hinsdale, Burke A., 5125
Hinshaw, David, 3485, 5479
Hinshaw, Kenneth, 5841
Hippolytus, 2313
Hipsher, Edward Ellsworth, 5656
The Hired Man on Horseback, 1686
Hiroshima, 1992
Hirschfeld, Charles, 3058
His Family, 1658
His Human Majesty, 1249
Hiscock, Ira V., 4866
Hislop, Codman, 4011
Hiss, Alger, about, 6114, 6229
Historic houses, 5702, 5713, 5721–22, 5794
guidebook, 3786
Charleston, S.C., 4093
Conn., 3805, 4041
Mount Vernon, Va., 3271
Ohio, 4119
Philadelphia, 4059
Washington, D.C., 4063
Historical Atlas of the United States, 2972
Historical Records Survey. District of Columbia, 5606
Historical research methods, 3054, 3061
Historical societies, 3052
Historical themes in literature
annals, journals, etc., 1–6, 12–16, 36–39, 43–44, 49, 53–58, 66–71, 90–91
drama, 198, 200, 206–8, 365, 1477, 1491, 1520, 2048
essays, 1103–4, 1267, 1873
fiction, 164, 201–4, 226–29, 239, 241, 245–60, 268–69, 277–79, 307, 311–12, 405–13, 511, 514–16, 546–50, 552–53, 555, 579–82, 665, 721, 723–24, 745, 762–67, 821, 825–29, 835, 1105, 1222–24, 1239–41, 1325–28, 1331–32, 1353–56, 1379, 1382, 1388–89, 1403, 1406, 1420, 1424, 1437–39, 1441–44, 1468–69, 1488–90, 1506, 1508, 1511, 1541–42, 1544, 1578, 1618–19, 1644, 1646, 1656, 1691, 1693–96, 1701, 1707–12, 1727, 1730, 1786, 1842, 1916–18, 1920, 1959–62, 1973–80, 2005–6, 2194, 2199, 2201, 2799
hist. & crit., 2458
poetry, 134–39, 323, 368–69, 427–29, 432–34, 486, 488, 614, 616–17, 623, 662, 664, 666, 1069, 1222, 1224, 1585, 1644–45, 1824–25, 2200
short stories, 725, 1100–2, 1222, 1224, 1379, 1389, 1510
Historiography, 3044–69, 3730
bibl., 3064, 3066–67, 3074
local hist., 3061
sources, 3083
theories, methods, etc., 3054–55, 3057, 3062, 3065, 3075, 3083, 3174, 3407
World War II, 3726
Southern States, 3057
History, general American, 2601, 3044–3500b, 3740, 3746, 3754, 3779, 3784
bibl., 3083
chronology, 3072, 3076–77, 3083, 3465
dictionaries, 3071–72 humor, caricatures, etc., 5803 in music, bibl., 5613
philosophy, 693–98, 3628, 3632, 3735, 5269, 5313
pictorial works, 3081–82, 5801, 5804
bibl., 5757, 5775, 5807
popular works, 1222
sources, 3068, 3079, 3100, 3106–36, 3143, 3151, 3183–84, 3195, 3201–19, 3617

History, general American—Continued
study & teaching, 3050, 3055, 3059, 3083
History, local, 2943, 3061, 3781–4222
See also History under names of places and regions, e.g., California—hist.
History and art, 5801–7
See also History, general American—pictorial works
History of Plymouth Plantation, 2–6, 3204
Hit the Line Hard, 1687
Hitchcock, Henry Russell, 5710–11
ed., 5718
The Hive of "The Bee-Hunter," 613
Hoagland, H. E., 6033
Hobart, John Henry, Bp., about, 5457
Hobbs, Edward H., 6144
Hobbs, William Herbert, 2979
Hobomok, a Tale of Early Times, 241
Hobson, Wilder, 5644
Hockett, Homer C., 3054
Hocking, William Ernest, 5252, 5310–16
about, 5310
Hodder, Jessie S., Mrs., about, 4649
Hodge, Frederick W., ed., 2982, 3217
Hodges, Henry G., 6210
Hoebel, Edward Adamson, 3014
Hoeltje, Hubert H., 5265
Hoernlé, R. F. A., 5252
Hoffman, Charles Fenno, 365–67, 550, 2295
Hoffman, Daniel G., 5516
Hoffman, Edward Fenno, ed., 365
Hoffman, Frederick John, 2914, 2360, 2440
ed., 1399, 2326, 2330
Hoffman, Harold M., 6298
Hoffman, M. J., 5442
Hofstadter, A., 5291
Hofstadter, Richard, 3099, 3458, 3755, 5169, 5181
Hogan, William Ransom, 4193
Hohman, Elmo Paul, 5871
Holbrook, Stewart H., 4022, 4028, 4394
Holcombe, Arthur N., 6076, 6336
Holden, Harold, ed., 1481
Holden, Paul E., 6018
Holder, Charles Frederick, 4724, 5081–84
Holding companies, 6008, 6013
Holiday, a Comedy in Three Acts, 1200, 2348
Holism in economics, 5888
Holland, Elizabeth Luna (Chapin), 850
Holland, Josiah Gilbert, 850
Holland, Maurice, 4785
Holland. See Netherlands
Holley, Irving B., 3711
Holliman, Jennie, 4992
Hollingshead, August de B., 4564
Hollinshead, Byron S., 5170
The Hollow Men, 1359
Holloway, Emory, 871
ed., 627, 639
Hollywood, Calif., 2752, 4204, 4948
fiction, 1425, 1833, 1842, 2025, 2028, 2069, 2074, 2154
Holm, John Cecil, 2333
Holmer, N. M., 2364
Holmes, G. F., about, 4536
Holmes, John, about, 2280
Holmes, Oliver Wendell, Sr., 368–78, 2290
about, 375, 377, 449, 2277, 2374, 2513, 2693
bibl., 377
Holmes, Oliver Wendell, Jr., 2607, 6222, 6242, 6277
about, 2542, 2607, 4545, 5264, 6241–42, 6266
Holmes, Thomas J., ed., 48
Holmes, William H., 2991
Holst, Hermann Eduard von, about, 3058
Holt, E. B., 5260, 5335
Holt, Henry, 689
Holt (Henry) and Co., about, 6445
Holt, Rackham, 2690, 5825
Holt, W. Stull, 3739
ed., 3044
about, 3058
Holy Land, travel and travelers, 769–71
Homage to Sextus Propertius, 1666
Homan, P. T., 4540
Home by the River, 1726, 5087
Home Country, 2745
Home Fires in France, 1413
Home manufactures, 5919
Home of the Brave, 2334
The Home Place, 2052
Home rule, Chicago, 6208, 6380
Homer, Winslow, about, 5765
Homestead Act (1862), 5811
Homeward to America, 1949
Hone, Philip, 2691–92
Honest John Vane, 277
Honey in the Horn, 1315
Honey out of the Rock, 2413
Honeywell, Roy J., 5122
An Honorable Titan, 2869
Hook, Sidney, 3065, 5254, 5289, 5291–92
ed., 5257–58, 5291
about, 5259
Hooker, Joseph, about, 2614
Hooker, Nancy Harvison, 3545
Hooker, Thomas, 32–35
about, 6068
Hoole, William S., 379
Hooper, Claude E., 4700
Hooper, Johnson Jones, 379–80
about, 379
Hooper, Osman Castle, 2857
A Hoosier Holiday, 1340
The Hoosier Schoolmaster, 868–71
Hoover, Calvin B., 5891, 5947
Hoover, Herbert Clark, 3485
about, 3485–87
Hoover, Margorie Leonard, 6135
Hoover, Theodore Jesse, 4800
Hoover Commission. See Commission on Organization of the Executive Branch of the Government
Hope of Heaven, 2074
Hopkins, Charles Howard, 5489–90
Hopkins, Frank E., ed., 11
Hopkins, Harry Lloyd, about, 1749, 3499
Hopkins, James F., ed., 3344
Hopkins, Johns, about 4845
Hopkins, Louis B., 5178
Hopkins, Mark, about, 5222
Hopkins, Samuel, about, 5428
Hopkins, Vivian C., 303
The Hopkins Review, 2442
Hopkinson, Francis, 146–48
about, 144, 146, 2465
Hopper, Ida T., comp., 3292
Horace, 2281
Horace Mann-Lincoln Institute. School of Experimentation, 5136
Horgan, Paul, 3782, 4197
Horine, Emmet Field, ed., 2667
Horizon, 2337
Horn, Stanley F., 3386, 5864
Horn, Ted, about, 5001
Horn, Tom, about, 2758
Hornberger, Theodore, 2412, 4719
ed., 2323
Horne, A. R., 2266
Horner, Harlan H., 4843
The Horse and Buggy Doctor, 4825
Horse-racing, 5054–57 dictionary, 2259
Ky., 5057
Horse-Shoe Robinson, 409–11, 2347
Horse-Shoe Trail, Pa., 3820
Horsemanship, 5078
Horses, 2984, 5058, 5078, 5867
in art, 5770
Horticulture, 2790, 5824
Horton, John Theodore, 6224
Horton, Rod W., 2441
Horton, Walter M., about, 5433
Horwill, Herbert W., 2237
Hosmer, James K., ed., 91, 3219
Hospitals, 4310, 4808–9, 4839, 4841, 4862, 4870, 4885
administration, 4847, 4849
finance, 4847–49
services, 4847–49
New York (City), 4851, 4857
New York (State), 4846
See also Psychiatric hospitals
Hot-Foot Hannibal, 757
The Hot Iron, 1475
Hotel Universe, 1199
Hotels, taverns, etc., 4590
Colonial period, 4227, 4251 furniture, equipment, etc., 5526
Va., 4086
Yosemite, 4211
Houghton, Norris, 4901, 4920
The Hour, 2415
Housatonic River and valley, 4000
The House behind the Cedars, 756
House decoration, 5726, 5729–30, 5732, 5796
A House Divided, 1256
The House of Beadle and Adams, 2444
The House of Breath, 1985
The House of Connelly, 1475
The House of Mirth, 1847
The House of Sun-Goes-Down, 2415
The House of the Seven Gables, 345–47
A House Too Old, 2129
Housing, 4395, 4600, 4608, 4610–12, 4617
finance, 4611

Housing—Continued
Negroes, 4448
Willow Run, Mich., 4586
Houston, Sam, about, 3341
Houston, Tex., guidebook, 3921
The Hovering Fly, 1810
Hovland, C. I., 3724
How Santa Claus Came to Simpson's Bar, 930, 937, 939
How To Tell a Story, 798–99
How To Write Short Stories, 1554
Howard, Bronson Crocker, 2307, 2337, 2347
about, 2307, 2471
Howard, Charles P., about, 6049
Howard, Delton T., 5283
Howard, John Tasker, 5607, 5677
Howard, Joseph Kinsey, 4176, 4178, 6207
ed., 4178
Howard, Leland O., about, 4722
Howard, Leon, 449, 482, 500, 2401, 2412
ed., 2339
Howard, Sidney Coe, 1518–20, 2327, 2332, 2337, 2348
Howard, William Travis, 4867
Howe, Edgar W., 959–63, 2885
about, 959, 2885
Howe, Elias, about, 4786
Howe, Frederic C., 6428
about, 6428
Howe, George Frederick, 3437
Howe, Henry F., 4012
Howe, Irving, 995, 1188, 1400
Howe, Julia Ward, 2313
about, 4040
Howe, Mark Antony De Wolfe, 2693–98, 2922, 5648, 6241
ed., 462, 2607
about, 2698
Howe, Will D., 2391
Howe, Winifred E., 5795
Howells, Mildred, ed., 981
Howells, William Dean, 214, 857, 859, 861, 893, 961, 964–83, 2290
about, 277, 279, 706, 887, 890, 971, 977, 983, 986, 1089, 2517, 2520, 2534, 2922, 6424
Hower, Ralph M., 5958–59
Howes, Cecil, 4168
Howes, Charles G., 4168
Howgate, George W., 5376
Howison, George Holmes, 5317–18
about, 5317–18
Howitt, Mary, tr., 4356
Hoyt, Charles H., 2306, 2348
Hoyt, Charles Sherman, 5019
Hoyt, Elizabeth E., 5899
Hoyt, Harlowe R., 4902
Hoyt, Homer, 5812
Hoyt, William G., 2949
Hrdlička, Aleš, about, 4722
Hu, Shih, 5290
Hubbart, Henry Clyde, 4115
Hubbell, Alvin A., 4844
Hubbell, Jay B., 4068
ed., 408, 2340, 2424, 2442
Hubble, Edwin Powell, about, 4721
Huckleberry Finn, The Adventures of, 782–83, 787–93, 811
Hudgins, Bert, 2940
Hudson, Arthur Palmer, 5576
Hudson, Wilson M., ed., 5509, 5521
Hudson, Winthrop S., 5395
ed., 88
The Hudson Review, 1664, 2558
Hudson River and valley, hist., 3972
Hudson River Bracketed, 1854
Hudson River, essays, 1002–3
Huebner, Grover G., 5948
Huegy, Harvey W., 5945
Huff, Theodore, 4953
Huffman, Laton A., about, 4151–53
Huffman, Roy E., 5858
The Huge Season, 2056
Hugh Selwyn Mauberley, 1666
about, 1670
Hughes, Adella Prentiss, 5630
Hughes, Charles Evans, 6243
about, 6254
Hughes, Glenn, 4905
Hughes, Henry Stuart, 3507
Hughes, John, about, 3257
Hughes, Langston, 567, 1521–25, 4440
about, 1522
Hulbert, Archer Butler, 2943
Hulbert, James Root, 2239
ed., 2236
Hull, Cordell, 3546
about, 3549
Hull, John, about, 3198
Hull, William I., 3222
Hull House, Chicago, 4614
Hultgren, Thor, 5922
The Human Comedy, 2115
The Human Fantasy, 1858
Humanism, New, 1735, 2375, 2385–86, 2422, 2425, 2479, 2503, 2511, 5115
Humanitarianism, 6071
essays, 2479
fiction, 2084
poetry, 1061, 1069, 1872, 2079
Humanities, 2375, 2422, 3739, 5100, 5115
A Humble Romance, 882
Humboldt River, Nev., 3989
Hume, Robert A., 688
Humidity, 5816
See also Climate
Humor, 192, 368, 456–57, 542–43, 768, 862–66, 878, 1629–34, 1651–52, 1815–20, 1859–63, 2597–98, 2642–43, 2657, 2735–36, 2796, 2808, 3732, 3735, 4097, 4964, 4991, 4995, 5506–7, 5511, 5513
anthologies, 2370
essays, 1214–20, 1317–18, 2469
frontier, 194–97, 379–80, 445–48, 612–13, 941, 2501, 3353, 4097, 5508, 5542
hist. & crit., 2501
periods
Colonial, 52–53
(1764–1819), 122, 128, 130, 132
(1820–70), 192–97, 209–15, 330–32, 368, 379–81, 422–26, 445–48, 456–58, 511, 542–46, 556–61, 612–13 Humor—Continued
periods—Continued
(1871–1914), 701–5, 768–812, 856–66, 878–80, 910–16, 922, 924–25, 941, 1126–31, 2469
(1915–39), 1214–20, 1317–18, 1523, 1525, 1554–55, 1629–35, 1651–52, 1802, 1815–20, 1828, 1833, 1842, 1859–63
(1940–55), 2052, 2149–55, 2202
Ark., 5542
Ga., 445–48, 556–57
Ky., 5546
Mich., 5533, 5575
Middle West, 701–5, 1126–31
Mo., 5528
Ozark Mountains, 5544–45
Southwest, New, 4190
Tex., 5521, 5527
See also Cartoons; Comic strips; Tall tales
Humphrey, Don D., 5947
Humphrey, Edward F., 5406
Hungarians, 4360
Hungerfield, and Other Poems, 1536
Hungry Gulliver, 1896
Hunt, Gaillard, 3283, 3601
ed., 3283
Hunt, George T., 3009
Hunter, Beatrice Jones, 5929
Hunter, Dard, 6457
Hunter, Louis C., 5929
Hunter, Milton R., 4183
Hunter College Elementary School, about, 5205
Hunting and fishing, 2665, 2794, 4990, 5065–97 essays, sketches, etc., 1724
fiction, 1466, 1500, 1681, 1954, 1957
Huntington, Archer M., about, 2941
Huntsman, What Quarry?, 1609
Hurd, C. F., 6207
Hurlbut, Jesse Lyman, 4893
Hurricanes, 2307
Hurst, Willard, 6225
Hurston, Zora Neale, 1526–29
Hurt, Huber William, 5041
Hutchins, John G., 5930
Hutchins, Robert M., 5235, 6126
Hutchinson, Anne, about, 6229
Hutchinson, Edward P., 4395
Hutchinson, Thomas, about, 3257
Hutchinson, Thomas H., 4692
Hutchinson, William T., 3058, 5826
ed., 3058
Hutchison, Bruce, 4013
Hutchison, John A., 5487
ed., 5496
Huth, Hans, 5884
Hutson, Charles W., ed., 3292
Hutter, Elizabeth L., ed., 3292
Hutton, David Graham, 4116, 4234
Hutton, Joseph, 2347
Huxley, Thomas Henry, about, 2481
Hyde, Arthur Mastick, 3487
Hyde, George E., 3003
Hydroelectric power projects, 4214
Hydrographic Office, about, 4771
Hydrography, 4721
Hydrotherapy, 4840
Hyer, R. V., 6195

Hyman, Harold Melvin, 3387–88
Hyman, Stanley Edgar, 2443
Hymen, 1320
Hymn to the Rising Sun, 1475
Hymns, 662, 5633
  See also Church music; Religious folksongs
Hyneman, Charles S., 3535, 6172
Hyslop, Francis E., ed. & tr., 520
Hyslop, Lois, ed. & tr., 520

I

ITO, about, 5953
I.W.W., about 6045, 6360
I Am a Camera, 2336
I Am a Man, 2645
I Am movement, 5439
I Came out of the Eighteenth Century, 2783
I Cover the Waterfront, 2747
I De Dage, 1721
I Hate Thursday, 1409
I Remember, 6450
I Remember Mamma, 2334
I; Six Nonlectures, 1312
I Thought of Daisy, 2535
I Wonder Why?, 4989
Ibsen, Henrik, about, 896–97
Icebound, 2337
The Iceman Cometh, 1647–48, 2335
Ichihashi, Yamato, 4465
Ickes, Harold L., 3498
Ida, 1771
Idaho, 3961
  guidebooks, 3935–36
  fiction, 1420–22
  hist., 3959, 3961, 4147
  natural resources, 4212
Idealism, 3732, 3769, 5252, 5259, 5262, 5305, 5317, 5334, 5354–55
Ideas of Order, 1784
The Ides of March, 1869
Idiot's Delight, 1751, 2333
The Idols of the Cave, 2094
The Idyl of Red Gulch, 930
Ile, 1648, 2332
Iles, George, 4786
Ilg, Frances L., 5149
Ill Fares the Land, 5846
Illegitimate Sonnets, 1626
Illinois, 3948, 4126–36
  architecture, 5719
  descr., 3988
  econ. statistics, 4132
  fiction, 867, 876–77, 1978, 2029, 2033
  frontier life, 4097–98
  Germans, 4478
  govt., 6195
  guidebooks, 3875–81
  hist., 2757, 3663, 3875, 3986, 4111, 4115, 4126–33
  libraries, 6473
  Norwegians, 4487
  personal narratives, 2251
  poetry, 1825
  politics, 6383
  rural communities, 4109
  travel & travelers, 4322
Illinois. Centennial Commission, 4126–32
Illinois Central Railroad, about, 4320, 5927
Illinois High School Association, about, 5000 Illinois River and valley
  hist., 3986
  travel & travelers, 4322
Illusions, 292
The Illustrated Man, 1935
Illustration of books, 5782
Illustrators, 5806
I'm a Stranger Here Myself, 1630
I'm Sure We've Met Before, 2746
Image and Idea, 2498
Images or Shadows of Divine Things, 21
Imagism, 1319, 1432, 1583–84, 1813, 1872, 2403
Immigrants. See Foreign population
Immigrant's Return, 2777, 4494
Immigration, 3136, 3139, 4147, 4404–17, 4424, 4551, 4617
  Chinese, 3437, 4464
  English, 4488
  Filipinos, 4470
  Japanese, 4465
  Jews, 4460
  Mexicans, 4470–72
  Norwegians, 4484–85
  Orientals, 4468
  policy, 4418–25, 6122
  Puerto Ricans, 4470
  Scotch, 4488–4491
  Welsh, 4488
The Immortal Storm, 2377
Immortal Wife, 2818
Immunology, 4722
Impeachment, Presidential (1868), 3362, 3412
Imperial City, 1688
Imperialism, 1069, 3110, 3428
Implements, utensils, etc., 5596, 5598, 5787–88
The Importance and Means of a National Literature, 230
Imports, 5947
Impressionism, 896–97
In a Farther Country, 1987
In a Yellow Wood, 2182
In Abraham's Bosom, 1473, 1475
In Defense of Reason, 2544
In Ghostly Japan, 951–52
In Mizzoura, 2347
In My Father's House, 1788
In Old Plantation Days, 860
In Ole Virginia, 1100–2
In Reckless Ecstasy, 1731
In Search of Heresy, 2373
In Spite of All, 2308
In Such a Night, 2413
In the American Grain, 1873
In the American Jungle, 1445
In the Days of Youth, 1614
In the Day's Work, 6459
In the Midst of Life, 735–37, 739
In the Money, 1874–75, 1882
In the Tennessee Mountains, 1085–86
In the Zone, 1648
In This Our Life, 1462
In Tragic Life, 1423
In War Time, 666
In What Hour, 2098
Income, 4395, 4448, 5899 national, 5893
  tax, 5970
Incredible Era, 3475
Indentured servants, 6056
Independence Hall, Philadelphia, 4059
Independent Christian Society, about, 5423
Independent Treasury Act (1846), 3351
Index Medicus, 4819
The Index of American Design, 5594
India
  relations with, 3503
  World War II, 3726
Indian agency, Red Cloud, Nebr., 3003
Indian agents, 3023, 3035
Indian place names, 2364
The Indian Princess, 66, 199, 2347
Indian Reorganization Act (1934), 3039
Indian Summer, 971
Indian themes in opera, 5681
Indiana, 3948, 4123–25
  architecture, 5719
  fiction, 867, 1802, 1808, 2005–6, 2210–12
  folksongs & ballads, 5571
  frontier life, 4097–98
  guidebook, 3874
  hist., 3995, 4111, 4115, 4123–25
    sources, 4125
  poetry, 1126
  rural communities, 4109
  travel & travelers, 1340
  writers & writings, 4124
Indiana State Teachers' Association. Historical Section, 4125
Indiana University. Institute for Sex Research, 4566
Indianapolis Journal, 1126
Indianapolis Speedway Race, 5003–4
Indians, American, 66–71, 319, 2663, 2802, 2982–3043, 4038, 4099, 4160, 4169, 4171, 4179, 4188, 4308, 4428
  agriculture, 5821, 5824
  and white civilization. See White civilization—and the American Indians art. See Art—Indians captives of, 53–55, 3032, 4233
  commerce, 3180
  culture, 2319, 2983, 2986, 2988–89, 2998, 3002, 3041–42, 3348, 4054, 4197
  econ. condit., 3039–40, 3043
  education, 2982, 3023, 3040
  folklore, 3021, 5518, 5523, 5526
  govt. relations, 2986, 3023, 3025–29, 3034–35, 3038–39, 3043, 3663
  in art, 5770, 5802, 5806
  language, 85, 2982, 2987, 2989, 3012, 4198, 4308
  legends & tales, 3000, 3005, 3021, 4273, 5518, 5533 missions, 62, 3022, 3030, 3040, 4233, 5451
  poetry, 1196
  religion, 3019–20, 3040

Indian, American—Continued reservations, 1613, 2986, 2989, 3040, 3043, 4154 rites & ceremonies, 3015
soc. life & cust., 66, 68, 70, 85, 2722–25, 2753, 2982, 2989, 2998, 3002, 3006, 3025, 3040, 3042–43, 4172, 4236, 4248–50, 4307 tribes & tribal groups, 2982, 2985–86, 2989, 2998–3014, 3021, 3023, 3025–27, 3039–41, 4148, 4213 wars & warfare, 2645, 2710–11, 3307, 3644a, 3660, 4151, 4153, 4179, 5505
See also names of tribes, e.g., Cheyenne Indians Indians, American, in literature
annals, journals, etc., 1–6, 53–55
drama, 198–99, 4926
editorials, sketches, etc., 62, 149, 1065
fiction, 114, 164, 201–4, 239, 241, 251–52, 258–60, 546, 549, 985, 1196, 1551–52, 1644, 1646, 1696, 1701, 1710, 1786, 1960, 1975, 3000
hist. & crit., 3031–32
poetry, 323, 427, 432, 1644–45
short stories, 1553, 3000
The Indifferent Children, 1909
The Indigo Bunting, 1610
Indiscretions, 1666
Individualism, 3732–33, 6065, 6071, 6101
Industrial arbitration, 6058, 6299
Industrial arts. See Arts and crafts; Decorative arts Industrial chemistry, hist., 4793
Industrial education, 5210–11
See also Workers' education
Industrial management, 4798, 6003, 6010, 6018, 6038
Industrial medicine, 4873, 4887
Industrial relations, 4552, 5894, 6037–38, 6042, 6053, 6055
Industrial Relations Research Association, 4635
Industrial research, 4720, 4777, 4785
Industrial revolution, 6070
Industrial themes in literature
essays, 1445
fiction, 726, 728–31, 762, 887, 941, 956–58, 973–78, 1053, 1055, 1107, 1159, 1178, 1183, 1507, 1754–56, 1758
philosophical writings, 695–98
poetry, 1727, 1731
Industrial trusts, 3121
Industrial Workers of the World, about, 6045, 6360 Industrialization, 3073, 3440, 4586, 5695 opposition to, 1809
Industry, 2824, 2826, 3969, 4095, 4320, 4345, 5901–6, 6030
agricultural, 5847
govt. regulation, 5885, 6006
hist., 4531, 5878, 5904, 5906
in art, 5762, 5772, 5801
labor, 4408, 4488
museums, 3049, 4716
organization, 6004
Industry—Continued
soc. aspects, 5899
Ariz., 4199
Fernandina, Fla., 3844
Ill., 4131
Mitchell, S. Dak., 3899
N.C., 4090
N. Dak., 4165
Pacific Northwest, 4212, 4214
Southern States, 4079, 4083–84
Tex., 4194
Tulsa, Okla., 4171
W. Va., 4089
Industry and state, 5885, 6006
Inflation (finance), 5889
Information service, overseas, 3607
Inge, William, 1995–98, 2335–36
An Ingenue of the Sierras, 937
Ingersoll, Jared, about, 3257
Ingersoll, Robert G., about, 5476
Inglis, Ruth A., 4947
The Injustice Collectors, 1910
The Inmost Leaf, 2449
Inner Landscape, 2123
Inness, George, about, 5766
The Innocent Eve, 1642
The Innocents Abroad, 769–71
Inns. See Hotels, taverns, etc.
Inoculation (smallpox), 4826
Inquiries and Opinions, 2468
Inscription for the Entrance into a Wood, 217–19
The Inside of the Cup, 762
Installment plan, 5963
Instinct vs Reason—a Black Cat, 538
Institute for Education by Radio and Television, about, 5230
Institute for Religious and Social Studies, Jewish Theological Seminary of America, 5491
Instrumentalism, 5271, 5275, 5290, 5291, 5295
Insular possessions. See Overseas possessions
Insurance, 5990, 5992
Intellect, 285
Intellectual America, 2399
Intellectual freedom, 5181, 5190
Intellectual life, 695–98, 6443
bibl., 3729
Colonial, 2549
colleges & universities, 5190, 5213
foreign influence, 3737, 3740, 3758, 3768–80, 4536
hist., 2445, 2459, 2491, 2601, 3073, 3085–98, 3150, 3236, 3297, 3303, 3313, 3352, 3728–80, 4518, 4520, 5104, 5261, 6443, 6446
refugees, 4414
See also Culture; also subdivisions Intellectual life and History under names of places and regions, e.g., New England—intellectual life; Pennsylvania—hist.
Intelligence in the Modern World, 5287
Intelligence service, 3603
The Intent of the Critic, 2512
Inter-American commercial arbitration, about, 6299
International City Managers' Association, 6213
An International Episode, 1007
International law, 3526, 3530, 6277
International News Service, about, 2860
International organizations, 3548, 3631, 5946
International Printing Pressmen and Assistants' Union, about, 6455
International relations. See Foreign relations International themes in literature
fiction, 971–72, 986–91, 996–1001, 1004, 1007, 1014, 1242–47, 1249, 1251, 1754, 1758, 1839, 2187
poetry, 1585
short stories, 986, 1004, 1011, 1242, 1248, 1250
speeches, addresses, etc., 1585
International Trade Organization (proposed), 5953
International Typographical Union, about, 6455
The Interpretation of Dreams, 2407
Interstate Commerce Commission, about, 2678, 5942
Interstate compacts, 6206
Into the Main Stream, 4443
Into the Valley, 1993
Intonation (language), 2275
Intruder in the Dust, 1392
Inventions, 4780–92
hist., 4783, 4787, 4792
protection & management, 4780–81
Inventors, 4783, 4785–87, 4792
Investments, 3639, 3641, 5993–94 in foreign countries, 5989, 6002
Investments, British, in U.S., 5980
Invisible Empire, 3386
Invisible Man, 1967
Involuntary Witness, 2376
Iowa, 2644, 3948, 4144
Fox Indians, 3041
guidebooks, 3889–94
hist., 3663, 4144
Norwegians, 4487
politics, 6427
rural communities, 4109
Iowa in literature
fiction, 1796, 1798–1800, 1830, 1969, 2161
personal narrative, 1543
poetry, 1968
short stories, 1796–97, 1801
Iowa Interiors, 1797
Iphigenia, 2101
Iran, relations with, 3513
Irene, 526
Iris, Federico Scharmel, 1530–31
Irish, 4435, 4498
in Boston, 4410
in Brooklyn, 4046
in New England, 4413
Irish dialect in literature, 862
Iron, 4061, 4113, 4141–42, 5909, 5918
The Iron Chain, 2057
The Iron Heel, 1055
The Iron Pastoral, 2061
Ironwork, 5790
The Irony of Joy, 2350

Iroquois Indians
hist., 3008, 3230, 4236
language, 2364
wars, 3009
Irradiations, Sand and Spray, 1433
Irrigation, 4214, 4383, 5858
Irvine, Rosalind, 5762
Irving, Washington, 381, 2290, 2295, 2337
ed., 219
about, 405, 511, 674, 1136, 2277, 2397, 2532, 2534
Irving, William, 511
Irwin, Mary, ed., 5161
Irwin, Ray W., 3686
Irwin, Robert B., 4636
Irwin, William H., 4963
Is 5, 1313
Is He Living or Is He Dead?, 798–99
Is It Going to Rain?, 741
Is Sex Necessary?, 1816
Isaacs, Edith (Rich), 4921, 4968
ed., 4910
Isaacs, Raphael, 5426
about, 5426
Isely, Jeter A., 3668
Island in the Atlantic, 1449
The Island of Barrataria, 2312
The Island of the Innocent, 1420
The Island Within, 1574
Isolationism, 3534, 3537, 3613
Israel, fiction, 1979
Israfel, 526, 1167
It Beats Working, 4991
It Can't Happen Here, 1566
It Pays to Advertise, 2348
Italian-American literature, 4497
The Italian Bride, 2303
The Italian Notebooks, 350
Italians, 4046, 4435, 4494, 4496–97, 4598
Italy
fiction, 333, 971–72, 1000, 1496, 1499, 1940–41, 2087
relations with, 3507
travel & travelers, 333, 887, 964, 971–72, 1149
It's an Old Wild West Custom, 5526
Iverson, William J., 5227
Ives, Burl, 5506
comp., 5553
about, 5553
Ives, Charles, about, 5682
Ives, James Merritt. See Currier & Ives
Ives, Sumner, 2261
The Ivory Tower, 1004, 1008
Ivy, Andrew C., 4818

J

Jablonski, Edward, 5678
Jack, P. M., 2406
Jack Cade, 2347
Jack tales, 5529, 5546
Jackson, Andrew, about, 2772, 2820, 3126, 3315–18, 3320, 3352, 4533, 6177, 6258, 6359
Jackson, C. D., 3615
Jackson, C. S., about, 2863
Jackson, Clarence S., 5777
Jackson, George Pullen, 5555, 5577
ed., 5554
Jackson, Harry P., 6017
Jackson, Helen Maria (Fiske) Hunt, 984–85
Jackson, Joseph Henry, 1780, 3782
Jackson, Percival E., 6265
Jackson, Rachel, fiction, 2820
Jackson, Thomas Jonathan ("Stonewall"), about, 245, 1809, 3697
Jackson, William, 6087
Jackson, William H., 5777
about, 5777
Jacksonian democracy, 3139, 3318–19, 3322, 3351–52, 6177, 6351
See also Democracy
Jacob, Philip E., 3649, 6124
Jacobs, Helen Hull, 5047
about, 5047
Jacobs, James Ripley, 3660
Jacobs, Lewis, 4944
Jacobs, Philip P., 4868
Jacobs, Robert D., ed., 2442
Jacob's Ladder, 1684
Jaffe, Bernard, 4721–22
James, Alice, 5319
about, 2476, 5319
James, Bartlett Burleigh, ed., 3208
James, Edwin, about, 4734
James, Frank Cyril, 5985
James, Henry (1811–1882), 2476, 5319
about, 2529, 5319–20
James, Henry (1843–1916), 986–1015, 1152, 2290, 5319
ed., 5328
about, 817, 1015–22, 1149, 2376, 2385, 2405, 2476, 2498, 2539, 2616, 5319
bibl., 5328
James, Henry (1879–1947), 5335
ed., 5330
James, James Alton, ed., 3239
James, Macgill, 5758
James, Marquis, 3316–18, 3341, 5992
James, Preston E., ed., 2938
James, Reese D., 5659
James, Will, 2699–2700
about, 2700
James, William, 5123, 5319, 5321–33, 5362, 5431
ed., 5319
about, 2476, 3733, 3761, 5116, 5222, 5254, 5264, 5319, 5321, 5333–35, 5354, 5369, 5389
James, Sir William M., 3678
James family, 2476, 5319
James River, Va., hist., 3977
James Shore's Daughter, 1223
Jameson, John Franklin, 3045, 3057, 3064, 3208
ed., 3201, 3210–11, 3252
about, 2974
Jameson, William J., 6331
Jamestown, Va., poetry, 1222
Jandy, Edward C., 4539
Jane, Lionel Cecil, ed., 3163
Jane, 1212
Jane Talbot, 117
Janeway, Eliot, 5879
Janis, Harriet (Grossman), 5641
Janis, Sidney, 5696
Janowsky, Oscar I., ed., 4457
Japan
economic relations with, 3638
in literature, 945, 951–53, 955
relations with, 3483, 3510, 3538, 3545, 3590–91, 3594, 3619, 3780
Japanese, 2811–12, 4204, 4428, 4465–66, 4468–69, 6120
Jarratt, Devereux, about, 5463
Jarrell, Randall, 1999–2002, 2363
about, 2497
Java Head, 1508
Jay, John, 6075
about, 3304, 3519
Jay, John C., 5062
Jay's Treaty, 3304
Jazz music, 5641–46
analysis, 5645
bibl., 5641.
discography, 5641–42
influence on art, 5691
See also Popular music and songs
Jean Huguenot, 1222
Jean-ah Poquelin, 748
Jeanie with the Light Brown Hair (song), 5677
Jeffers, Edmund V., 5670
Jeffers, Robinson, 1532–36, 2335
about, 2406, 2527
Jefferson, Joseph, 4934
about, 2616, 4934
Jefferson, Thomas, 149–53, 2291, 2296, 2337, 3292–94, 5418, 6073
about, 46, 2775, 2996, 3281, 3294–97, 4533, 4753, 5122, 5291, 5408, 5418, 6170, 6359, 6460, 6466, 6469
drama, 1477
sculpture, 5737
Jeffersonian democracy, 6071, 6176
See also Democracy
Jeffords, Thomas J., about, 3035
Jehovah's Witnesses, about, 5404, 5439
Jenkins, William Sumner, 3389
Jennie Gerhardt, 1335
Jennifer Lorn, 1904
Jensen, Merrill, 3253, 3302
ed., 3785
Jersey City, politics, 6388
Jessop, G., 2301
Jessup, Philip C., 3459
Jesuits, 3075, 3158, 3171, 5447
Jeuck, John E., 5956
The Jewel Merchants, 1262
Jewett, Charles Coffin, about, 6476
Jewett, Clarence F., 4036
Jewett, Sarah Orne, 1023–31
about, 881, 1278, 2476
bibl., 1023
Jewish-American literature, 4457–58
Jews, 1445, 2585, 4407, 4428, 4435, 4452–62, 5270, 5459, 5495
biog. (collected), 4453
culture, 4452–53, 4456–59
econ. condit., 4457, 4459
fiction, 1190, 1571, 1574, 1578, 1635, 1921–22, 1979, 1992, 2045, 2231
Polish, 1992
Baltimore, 4062
Brooklyn, 4046
Jim Bludso, 942–44

Jingling in the Wind, 1700
Joan of Arc
drama, 1172
fiction, 768
Joan of Lorraine, 1172
Job and His Children, 2311
The Jockey, 2024
Joe, 1035
Joerg, Wolfgang L. G., 2937
Joffe, Natalie F., 3041
Johannsen, Albert, 2444
John, Walton C., ed., 5309
John Brown's Body, 1222, 1224
John Dawn, 1290
John Deth, a Metaphysical Legend, 1166
John Dewey Society, 5243
John Godfrey's Fortunes, 2282
John Marr and Other Sailors, 488
John of the Mountains, 1080
Johnny Appleseed. See Chapman, John
Johnny Johnson, 1475, 2333
Johns, Ethel, 4845
Johns Hopkins Hospital, about, 4819, 4829, 4831, 4845
Johns Hopkins University, about, 4831, 4845, 5195
Johns Hopkins University. School of Medicine, about, 4819, 4821, 4829, 4831, 4845
Johns Hopkins University. School of Nursing, hist., 4845
Johnson, Allen, ed., 3080, 3158, 4792, 5113
Johnson, Alvin S., 2701–2, 4513, 5219, 5426
about, 2702, 5426
Johnson, Andrew, 3376
about, 3361–62, 3411–12, 3447, 4103
Johnson, Burges, 1115
Johnson, Charles A., 5407
Johnson, Charles S., 443–44, 5426
about, 5426
Johnson, Clifton, 214, 2627
Johnson, Donald Bruce, comp., 6367
Johnson, Edward, 3211
ed., 73–74
Johnson, Emory R., 5948
Johnson, Frederick Ernest, ed., 5491
Johnson, G. Orville, 5207
Johnson, Gerald W., 2869, 2876, 3782
Johnson, Guy Benton, 5517, 5540, 5561
Johnson, H. B., 4481
Johnson, Harold Earle, 5649
ed., 5626
Johnson, Icie F., 2887
Johnson, Jack, about, 5025
Johnson, James Weldon, 1537–40
about, 1539
Johnson, Joseph E., ed., 3562
Johnson, Mary Louise, 5021
Johnson, Orlin, about, 5016
Johnson, Pamela H., 1896
Johnson, Robert, 3031
Johnson, Robert Underwood, 2923
about, 2923
Johnson, Samuel, 5251
Johnson, Thomas Cary, 4723
Johnson, Thomas H., 855
ed., 30, 846, 2345, 2460–61
Johnson, Tom L., 6429
about, 6428–29
Johnson, Walter, 2893
comp., 3079
ed., 3545, 3567
Johnston, Alexander, 5029
Johnston, Henry Phelps, 4049
Johnston, James, about, 2856
Johnston, Joseph E., about, 2613
Johnston, William Dawson, 6469
Johnswood, 1436
Joint-stock companies, 6008
The Jolly Corner, 1008, 1012, 1014
Jolly Flatboatmen (painting), 5761
Jonah's Gourd Vine, 1527
Jonas, Klaus W., 1834
Jonathan Draws the Long Bow, 5534
Jonathan Gentry, 1824
Jones, Barbara (Slatter), 5198
Jones, Bobby, about, 5048
Jones, Clarence F., 2975
ed., 2938
Jones, E. E. Duncan, 1367
Jones, Fred Mitchell, 5960
Jones, George, about, 2869
Jones, Howard Mumford, 2424, 2445–47, 2521, 3756, 3774
ed., 378, 1187, 2341, 2460–61
Jones, James, 2003–4
Jones, John Paul, about, 1873
Jones, Joseph Cranston, silhouettes by, 5547
Jones, Joseph Stevens, 2347
Jones, Llewellyn Rodwell, 2939
Jones, Marcus E., about, 4734
Jones, Richard Seelye, 3645
Jones, Robert C., tr., 4472
Jones, Robert W., 2846
Jones, Rufus M., 5426
about, 5426, 5479
Jones, Victor, 6211
Jones, William Melville, ed., 6238
Joplin, Scott, about, 5641
Jordan, David Starr, ed., 4724
about, 2623, 3761, 5434
Jordan, Donaldson, 3536
Jordan, Philip D., 4121, 5931
ed., 4143
Jordy, William H., 3055
Jorgenson, Chester E., ed., 131
Joseph, Samuel, 4460
Joseph and His Brethren, 2312
Joseph and His Friend, 2282
Josephson, Bertha E., ed., 3061
Josephson, Matthew, 3438, 3460, 5880
Josh Billing's Farmer's Allminax, 542
Joslyn, Carl S., 6027
Journal-Courier (Louisville, Ky.), about, 2892
Journal for Josephine, 1640
Journal of a Visit to Europe and the Levant, 489
Journal of a Visit to London and the Continent, 489
The Journal of Albion Moonlight, 2081
Journal of American Folklore, 5518
Journal of Experimental Medicine, 4831
The Journal of Higher Education, 5244
The Journal of Madam Knight, 38–39
The Journal of Medical Education, 4855
Journal of Speculative Philosophy, 5305
The Journal of the AERT, 5230
A Journal of the Transactions and Occurrences in the Settlement of Massachusetts, 91
Journal up the Straits, 489
Journalism, 4479, 6432
bibl., 2850
business, 2902
education, 2910
hist., 2845–48, 2857, 2930
legal reporting, 6288
photography, 2908
policies & practices, 2900–12 schools, 2889, 2910
Ga., 2856
Ohio, 2857
Oreg., 2863
See also Magazines; Newspapers
Journalists. See Authors as journalists; Newspapermen; Reporters and reporting; and names of individual journalists
The Journey, 1761
A Journey in the Back Country, 4366
A Journey in the Seaboard Slave States, 4364
Journey into Fame, 5736
Journey of Tapiola, 1635
A Journey to Greatness, 5678
Journey to Love, 1885
Journey to the Coastal Marsh, 5351
A Journey to the Land of Eden, 13
Joyce, James, about, 1887
Judaism, 4457–58, 5267, 5404, 5458
Conservative, 5460
Reform, 5459
social thought, 5488
Judd, Sylvester, 402–4
Judge Not ——, 1192
Judges, 6101, 6224, 6231, 6237–39, 6241–60, 6264, 6280–93, 6320
See also Lawyers
Judgment Day (Farrell), 1373
Judgment Day (Rice), 1689
The Judgment of Paris, 2187
The Judgment of Solomon, 2312
Judicial administration, 6287, 6309
Judicial branch, 6075, 6084, 6133, 6137
Judicial decisions. See subdivision Decisions and opinions under Courts and under Supreme Court Judicial error, cases, 6294, 6298
Judicial-legislative relations, 6089
Judicial power, 6257
Judicial review, 6089, 6092, 6094–95, 6101–2, 6164, 6238
Judicial statistics, 6280
Judiciary, state, 6293
Judson, Edward Zane Carroll, about, 2759
Judson, Isabella Field, ed., 4677
Julia Bride, 1008
Julian, John, 5633
Juneau, Solomon, about, 4140
The Jungle, 1754–55
Junior colleges, 5162
Junior high schools, 5157
Junius Redivivus, pseud., 4295
Jurgen, 1261–62
Juries, 6295–96
Jurisdiction, 6281, 6290, 6293

Jurisprudence, Colonial period, 6100
Jurists. See Judges; Lawyers
The Just and the Unjust, 1301
Justice, 6219–6332 administration of, 4645, 4656, 6265, 6280, 6289–92, 6297–98, 6300, 6305–9
  See also Law
Justice and Expediency, 663
Justices of the peace, 6282, 6307 Juvenile delinquency, 4639, 4650, 5028 case studies, 4651
  causes, 4657
  control, 4644, 4651, 4657
  hist., 4657
Juvenile literature. See Children—books

K

Kabakoff, Jacob, 4458
Kadelpian Review, 5242
Kähler, Alfred, 5211
Kaempffert, Waldemar B., ed., 4787
Kahn, Ely J., Jr., 4935, 5636
Kahn, James M., 5008
Kalbfleish, Martin, about, 4735
Kalijarvi, Thorsten V., ed., 3635
Kallen, Horace M., 4457, 5124, 5254, 5290–91, 5331, 5335
  ed., 5258, 5331
Kallir, Otto, ed., 2763
Kalm, Pehr, 4241–46
  about, 4241
Kalorama, 101
Kammerer, Gladys M., 6159, 6186
Kamphoefner, H. H., 4594
Kane, Elisha Kent, 2980
  about, 2980
Kane, Harnett T., 3952, 6377
Kane, Henry B., illus., 1083
Kanin, Garson, 2334
Kansas, 2730, 3944, 3948, 3964, 4167–68
  frontier life, 4156
  guidebooks, 3904–7
  hist., 3990, 4167–68, 4189
  in literature, 1997
  rural communities, 4109
  soc. life & cust., 4168
Kansas City
  culture, 2887
  politics, 6207
Kansas City Star, about, 2887
Kansas-Nebraska Act (1854), 3397
Kansas River, 3990
Kant, Immanuel, about, 5289
Kantor, J. R., 5335
Kantor, Mackinlay, 1541–44
Kaplan, Abraham D. H., 6020–21
Kaplan, Morton A., 3630
Kappa Delta Pi, about, 5242
Karolik, Mr. & Mrs. Maxim, 5745
Karpel, Bernard, 5696
Karpeles, Maud, ed., 5583
Karr, Jean, 1487
Kaser, David, 6451
Katharine Walton, 547
Kauffman, Henry, 5787
Kaufman, George Simon, 1403, 1491, 1545–50, 2327, 2332–34, 2348
Kaufman, Paul, 2424
Kaufmann, Edgar, ed., 5712
Kaufmann, F., 5291
Kavanagh, 430
Kaw River, 3990
Kaysen, Carl, 6010
Kayser, S. S., 4458
Kazeck, Melvin E., 4165
Kazin, Alfred, 610, 2412, 2448–49, 2703–4
  ed., 1348, 1430
  about, 2704
Kearney, James J., ed., 6276
Keefer, Elizabeth E., illus., 5520
Keefer, Lubov, 3751
Keelboats, 4110, 4281
Keeler, Oscar B., 5048
Keeley, James, 2862
Keenleyside, Hugh Llewellyn, 3555
Keep, Austin Baxter, 6468
Kegley, Charles W., ed., 5432
Keim, Sarah, about, 4818
Keith, E. Gordon, 5971
Keller, Franklin J., 5156
Keller, Helen Adams, 2705–9
  about, 2706–8
Keller, Robert J., ed., 5202
Kelley, Pearce C., 5949
Kelley, Robert F., 5020
Kelley, Stanley, Jr., 6345
Kellog, Ansel Nash, about, 2864
Kellogg, Charles E., 2944
Kellogg, Louise Phelps, ed., 3212
Kellogg, Remington, 2955
Kellogg, Idaho, 4176
Kellor, Frances A., 6299
Kelly, Alfred H., 3058, 6077, 6128
  ed., 6128
Kelly, Clyde, 4668
Kelly, Fanny, about, 3032
Kelly, Fred C., 4788
  ed., 705
Kelly, George, 2332, 2348
Kelly, Howard A., 4872
Kelly, Melville Clyde, 4668
Kelly, Robert L., 5183
Kemler, Edgar, 1606
Kemmerer, Donald L., 5986
Kemmerer, Edwin Walter, 5986
Kempfer, Homer, 5209
Kendall, George Wilkins, about, 2871
Kendall, John S., 4922
Kendall, Patricia L., 4701
Kendrick, Myron Slade, 5969
Kenkel, William F., 4549, 4619
Kennan, George, 3625, 5932
Kennebec River and valley, 1290, 3793, 3973
Kennedy, Albert J., 4624
Kennedy, Gail, 5189
  ed., 3112–15, 5199
Kennedy, John Pendleton, 405–14, 2296
Kennedy, Richard, ed., 3145
Kennedy, Stetson, 3953
Kenner, Hugh, 1671
Kent, Donald Peterson, 4414
Kent, Frank R., 2876, 6333–34, 6359
Kent, James, 6277
  about, 6223, 6231
Kent, Rockwell, 5021
  about, 5783
Kent, Sherman, 3603
The Kentuckian, 518
The Kentuckian in New York, 226
Kentucky, 3963, 4079, 4106–7
  caves, 2946
  culture, 3737
  folklore, 5529, 5546
  folksongs & ballads, 5584
  frontier & pioneer life, 2667, 2726–27, 4098
  guidebooks, 3856–60
  hist., 3240, 3983, 4106–7
  language (dialects, etc.), 1697, 2257
  legends, 5529, 5546
  soc. life & cust., 5584
  travel & travelers, 366, 4276, 4283, 4310, 4322
Kentucky Derby, 5057
Kentucky in literature
  editorials, sketches, etc., 716–17
  fiction, 202–4, 322, 516, 546, 550, 716, 718, 766–67, 1464–65, 1468–69, 1511, 1697–99, 1701, 1705, 2166, 2169, 2173, 2193–94, 2199, 2201
  personal narratives, 2166
  poetry, 2166, 2172, 2193, 2196, 2200
  short stories, 716, 1697, 1703, 1706, 2166–68, 2170–71
Kentucky River, 3983
Kentucky Tragedy (1825)
  drama, 365
  fiction, 365, 550, 2199
Kenyon, John Samuel, 2273
  ed., 2238
The Kenyon Critics, 2559
The Kenyon Review, 2559
Keogh, Andrew, about, 6470
Kepler, Thomas S., ed., 183
Keppel, Frederick Paul, about, 5197
Kerfol, 1851
Kern, Alexander, 2401
Kern, Jerome, about, 5639
Kerr, Chester, 6439
Kerrison, Irvine L. H., 5210
Kertzer, M. N., 4458
Kerwin, Jerome G., ed., 3646
Kesselring, Joseph, 2334
Kessler, Henry H., 4637
Ketchum, Marshall D., 5994
Kettell, Russell Hawes, ed., 5729
Key, Valdimer O., 6335, 6378
A Key into the Language of America, 85, 89
Key Largo, 1174
Key West, guidebook, 3845
Key West, 1304
Keyes, Erasmus Darwin, 2710–11
  about, 2711
Keys, Alice Mapelsden, 3194
The Keys of the Kingdom of Heaven, 19
The Kid, 1166
Kidd, William, Captain, about, 6229
Kienitz, John F., 3785
Kieran, John, 4988
Kies, Marietta, ed., 5308
Kiewiet, Cornelis W. de, 4428
Kikuchi, C., 4469

Kilpatrick, William H., 5123, 5289
Kimball, Fiske, 5713
Kimball, J. Golden, about, 5538
Kimball, Sidney Fiske, 5713
Kimble, George H. T., 2950
Kimbrough, Emily, 2809
Kimmel, Stanley P., 4938
Kin, David, pseud., 3152
Kincer, Joseph B., 5816
Kindergartens, 5105, 5148
King, Clarence, 4210
King, E. J., 5577
King, Grace Elizabeth, 1032–37, 2296
about, 1136
King, Henry C., about, 5428
King, Mrs. Marion M., 6468
King, Willard L., 6244
King Cotton Diplomacy, 3539
King George's War (1744–48), 3171
King Jasper, 1714
King of the Delawares, 2835
King of the Fur Traders, 2831
King Philip's War (1675–76), 3213
fiction, 1441
King William's War (1689–97), 3171, 3213
The Kingdom of God in America, 5399
Kingdom of the Saints, 5465
The King's Henchman, 1608
Kingsblood Royal, 1569
Kingsley, J. Donald, 6188
Kingsley, Sidney, 2327, 2333–36
Kinne, Wisner Payne, 4940
Kinneman, John A., 4576
Kinney, Jay P., 3029
Kino, Eusebio Francisco, about, 3158
Kinsey, Alfred C., 4565–66
Kintner, William R., 3629
Kiowa Indians, 3007, 3035, 4160
Kiplinger, Willard M., 4065
Kipnis, Ira, 6360
Kirby, Gustavus T., 4989
about, 4989
Kirk, Clara M., ed., 983
Kirk, Grayson L., 3614, 4045
Kirk, Rudolf, ed., 983
Kirk, Russell, 2621
Kirk, Samuel A., 5207
Kirkland, Caroline Matilda (Stansbury), 415–18
Kirkland, Edward C., 5881, 5933
Kirkland, Jack, 1271, 2333
Kirkland, Joseph, about, 2419
Kirkpatrick, Frederick A., 3165
Kirkpatrick, Sidney D., ed., 4793
Kirstein, Lincoln, 4968
Kiser, Clyde V., 4396
Kitsuse, John I., 4469
Kittredge, George Lyman, 5541, 5558
about, 5222
Kleeberg, Gordon S. P., 6361
Klees, Frederic, 4480
Klein, Arthur J., 5186
Klein, David, 5021
Klein, Philip, 4591
Klem, Margaret C., 4887
Klineberg, Otto, ed., 4446
Klinkhamer, Marie Carolyn, Sister, 6245
Klipstein, August, about 4735
Klipstein, Ernest C., about, 4735
Klondike, short stories, 1048–52, 1058
Klondike gold rush, 2719–20
Kluckhohn, Clyde, 3015
Knapp, Robert H., 4725
Knapp, Seaman A., about, 5851, 5859
Knave and Queen, 2307
Knickerbocker, Diedrich, pseud. See Irving, Washington
Knickerbocker Group, 2295
The Knife of the Times, 1872
Knight, Edgar W., 5108
Knight, Grant C., 716, 2450–51
Knight, Henry Cogswell, 4284
about, 4283
Knight, Sarah (Kemble), 36–39
A Knight-Errant of the Foothills, 937
Knight's Gambit, 1393
Knights of Labor, about, 6034, 6054
Knights of Pythias, 4574
The Knights of the Horseshoe, 228–29
Knorr, Frederick, tunes arr. by, 5591
Knott, Thomas Albert, ed., 2238
Know-Nothings, 4515
Knowing and the Known, 5286
Knowlton, E. H., 5913
Knox, Dudley W., 3667
Knox, Israel, 5483
Knox, Samuel, about, 5121
Kob, Walter, music arr. by, 5584
Kober, Arthur, 2327
Koch, Adrienne, ed., 3279
Koch, Robert, about, 4868
Koch, Vivienne, 1886
Kocher, Alfred Lawrence, 4086
Koenig, Samuel, 4407
Köppen, N., ed., 2953
Koht, Halvdan, 3769
Kolb, John H., 4581
Kolehmainen, John I., 2896
Kollmorgen, N. M., 4479
Kolodin, Irving, 5657
Komarovsky, Mirra, 4577
Konefsky, Samuel Joseph, 6250, 6266
Konvitz, Milton R., 5291, 6120–23, 6129
Kooken, Olive, 4930
Koos, Leonard V., 5157
Koppman, Lionel, 4461
Kora in Hell, 1881
Korean War, 2746, 3597, 3738
Korn, Bertram Wallace, 4461
Korson, George G., ed., 5578–79
Korzybski, Alfred, about, 5392
Kosciuszko, T., about, 3250
Kossuth, Louis, about, 4360–61
Kotto, 951–52
Kotzebue, August von, 2299
Koury, Phil A., 4961
Koussevitzky, Serge, 5678
about, 5648–49
Kouwenhoven, John Atlee, 4045, 5691
Kraenzel, Carl Frederick, 4159
Kramer, Dale, 4963
ed., 2565
Krapp, George P., 2246
Krauch, Elsa, tr., 1191–92
Kraus, Michael, 3056–57, 3770, 4518
ed., 2294
Krech, David, 5390
Krehbiel, Henry Edward, 5564, 5658–59
Kreidberg, Marvin A., 3661
Kreymborg, Alfred, ed., 2342
Krieger, Murray, 2452
Kriesberg, Martin, 3615
Krinsky, Fred, ed., 3108
Kroeber, Alfred L., 2983, 3002
Kronenberger, Louis, 2406–7
ed., 4897
Krooss, Herman E., 5973
Krout, John Allen, 3090, 4528, 4990
ed., 4047
Krutch, Joseph Wood, 590, 2287, 2348, 2453, 4900
Ktaadn, 594
Ku Klux Klan, hist., 3386
Kull, Irving S., 3077
Kull, Nell M., 3077
Kunitz, Stanley J., ed., 2454–55
Kuniyoshi, Yasuo, about, 5783
Kurath, Hans, 2243, 2269
ed., 2268
Kurtz, Stephen, 3279
Kurtzman, David Harold, 6389
Kuykendall, Ralph S., 4220
Kwaidan, 951–52, 955
Kyrk, Hazel, 4567

L

La, La Lucille (music), 5678
Labaree, Leonard Woods, 3195
Labatut, Jean, ed., 5934
Labor and capitalism, 3439, 6094
Labor and laboring classes, 3440, 4408, 5905, 6031–58 addresses, essays, lectures, etc., 235, 239
agriculture, 5846
British immigrants, 4488
Colonial period, 3740
education, 5210, 5243
See also Vocational education
fiction, 941, 973–76, 1656–57, 1754–56, 1775, 1777, 2578
folklore, 5523
hist., 3425, 6033–34, 6057
Irish immigrants, 4498 laws & legislation, 6033, 6053
Mexican immigrants, 4476
poetry, 1061–63
radicalism, 6039
Cripple Creek, Colo., 4174
Nueces County, Tex., 4476
The West, 4149
Labor disputes, 6058
See also Industrial relations; Strikes
Labor-management education, 5210
Labor-Management Relations Act (1947), 6053
Labor movement, 3425, 3427, 3439, 3446, 4216, 4458–59, 6356, 6372, 6426
Labor relations. See Industrial relations
Labor supply, 4392, 4401, 6037, 6040
Labor turnover, 6038
Laboratories, directory, 4720
Lace and lacemakers, 5793
Ladies and Gentlemen, 1263
Lady Baltimore, 1145

Lady Barberina, 1007
Lady Franklin Bay expedition, 2981
The Lady Is Cold, 1859
The Lady of Fashion, 4927
The Lady's Maid's Bell, 1855
Laemmar, Jack W., 4696
LaFarge, John, 4428, 5447
La Farge, Oliver, 1551–53, 3039
Lafayette, Marquis de, about, 3247–50 portrait, 5769
La Follette, Belle (Case), 3461
La Follette, Fola, 3461
La Follette, Robert M., about, 3446, 3461, 6432
La Follette, Suzanne, 5692
La Fontaine, Jean de. Fables, translation (Creole), 2265
La Guard, Theodore de, pseud. See Ward, Nathaniel La Jolla, Calif., 2746
Laissez-faire. See Free enterprise
Lamar, Lucius Q. C., about, 3364
Lamb, Charles, about, 381
Lambert, B., tr., 4278
Lamberton, Bernice (Grieves), 239
Lamers, William M., 4527
Lamke, Tom A., ed., 5247
Lamont, Thomas W., 5987
The Lamp and the Bell, 1608
Lamprecht, S. P., 5289
Lamps, 5786
Lancaster, Lane W., 6212
Lancaster County, Pa., 4058
Lancelot, 1714
Land, 5808–18
Colonial period, 3740
law. See Land tenure monopoly, 4535 utilization, 5810, 5817–18
Calif., 4202
Chicago, 5812
New England, 5840
Texas, 4193
The West, 4149
A Land and a People, 1919
Land-Grant College Act, 5113, 5186, 5191
Land-grant colleges, 5186, 5191
The Land Lies Open, 4142
The Land of Little Rain, 1197
The Land of Silence, 2126
Land of Their Choice, 4485
Land of Unlikeness, 2008
Land tenure, 4266, 5811, 6120, 6230, 6278
Indian, 3029, 3043
New York (Colony), 3200
The West, 3237
Land Where Time Stands Still, 2753
Landis, James M., 6286, 6312
Landis, Kenesaw Mountain, about, 5015
Landis, Paul H., 4568
Landon, Melville D., 212
Landor, Walter S., about, 2545
Landsberg, Hans H., 5819
Landscape West of Eden, 1166
Lane, Wheaton J., 5935
ed., 5934
Laney, Al, 2872
Langbein, Walter B., 2949
Langdon, William Chauncy, 4529
Langeluttig, Albert G., 6226
Langer, William L., 3537–38
Langford, Sam, about, 5025
Langland, John, 2350
Langley, Samuel Pierpont, 4726
about, 4721, 4775
Langner, Lawrence, 4941
Language, 2236–75, 2466, 3737, 3740, 5291
atlases & maps, 2268–69
dialects & regionalisms, 2240–41, 2244–46, 2248, 2253–71, 4093, 4098, 4198, 4271, 4436, 5516, 5526, 5531, 5533, 5536, 5540
See also Dialects in literature dictionaries, 2236–41, 2246, 2253, 2259, 2264, 2266, 2272, 2274, 5127
essays & studies, 2364–68, 2466 grammars, 2242–44, 2249, 2265–66
slang, 2248, 2253, 2272, 2274, 5503, 5507, 5578
Language As Gesture, 1228, 1233
Lanham, C. T., 4513
Lanier, Henry W., ed., 886
Lanier, Mary (Day), ed., 1040–43
Lanier, Sidney, 1038–47, 2296
about, 2277, 2280, 2422, 2616
bibl., 1046
Lanny Budd Series, 1758
Lansing, John, 6087
Lanterns on the Levee, 2779
Lapham, Jesse E., 2947
Lapham, Macy H., 2947
Lardner, John, 4991
Lardner, Ring, 1545, 1554–55
about, 2428
Larkin, Oliver W., 4676, 5693
Larks in the Popcorn, 2152
Larned, Kans., guidebook, 3905
La Rochefoucauld-Liancourt, François Alexandre Frédéric duc de, 4267–68
about, 4266
Larsen, Roy E., 5145
Larson, Adlowe L., 5845
Larson, Cedric, 3462
Larson, Henrietta M., 5988, 6007
Las Vegas, Nev., 4184, 5059
Laserson, Max M., 3564
Lasker, Bruno, 4470
Laski, Harold J., 2542, 4512
Lasswell, Harold D., 6130
The Last Adam, 1299
Last Chapter, 2745
The Last Circle, 1222
The Last Duel in Spain, 2303
The Last Frontier, 1975
The Last Look, 1827
The Last Man, 2310
Last of the Bad Men, 2758
The Last of the Mohicans, 258
The Last of the Provincials, 2429
The Last of the Valerii, 1012
The Last Puritan, 1736
The Last Trek of the Indians, 3027
The Lasting Elements of Individualism, 5313
Late City Edition, 2903
The Late George Apley, 1549, 1590
Latham, Earl, ed., 3107–36
Lathrop, George P., 351
ed., 340
Latin America
documents, 3575
economic relations with, 3546, 3638
in literature
fiction, 2185
short stories, 1111–13
independence, 3569
relations with, 3442, 3515, 3549, 3554, 3574, 3676, 3578–80, 3617, 3619, 3632, 3635 technical assistance to, 3641
travel & travelers, 1445
Latourette, Kenneth S., 3596, 5466
Latrobe, Benjamin Henry, about, 5708
Laughing Boy, 1551–52
Laughing in the Jungle, 2579
The Laughing Matter, 2122
Laughing to Keep from Crying, 1524
Laughlin, James, ed., 2560
Laughlin, Ledlie Irwin, 5788
The Launching of a University and Other Papers, 5195
Laurents, Arthur, 2334
Laurie, Joseph, 4892, 4974
Lavender, David, 4174
La Verendrye, Sieur de, about, 3170
La Violette, Forrest E., 4466
Law, 6219–6332
anecdotes, facetiae, satire, etc., 194–97, 556–57
codification, 6236
Colonial period, 75, 78, 6230, 6232, 6234
digests, 6271–79
hist., 6166, 6219, 6225, 6230–31, 6236
Baltimore, 6284, 6291
Boston, 6292
La., 6245
Md., 6284
Mass., 6228, 6242, 6292
Nebr., 6233
New York (Colony), 6221
The West, 6220
philosophy, 3728, 5269, 5290, 5291
study & teaching, 6270, 6289, 6317–18, 6321, 6326–27
theory, 6263
Law, administrative, 6090, 6181, 6201, 6310–16
Law, constitutional. See Constitutional law
Law, corporation, 6008, 6011, 6236
Law, criminal. See Criminal law
Law, ecclesiastical, 5420–22
Law, election, 6338, 6400, 6403, 6406–8, 6410
Law, immigration, 4404–5, 4420, 4425, 4468
Law, international, 3526, 3530, 6277
Law, land. See Land tenure
Law, libel, 2906, 2931–32
Law, municipal. See Municipal law
Law, public health, 4876
Law and ethics, 6261–62
Law enforcement, 6309
A Law for the Lion, 1912
Law libraries, 6328

The Law of Civilization and Decay, 2601
Law reform, 6285, 6302–3
Mass., 6292
Lawrence, David Herbert, 2456
Lawrence, Ernest Orlando, about, 4721
Lawrence, J. E., 6195
Lawrence, William, Bp., about, 5457
Lawrenceville School, about, 5155
Laws, George Malcolm, 5556
Lawton, Sherman P., 4691
Lawyers, 3746, 6101, 6224–25, 6231, 6236, 6311–32
See also Judges
Lay My Burden Down, 5515
Lazarsfeld, Paul F., 4701, 6414, 6419
ed., 3724
Lazarus Laughed, 1647–48
Lazzaro, Ralph, 5424
comp., 5400
Lea, M. Carey, about, 4740
Lea and Febiger, about, 6451
Leach, H. S., ed., 3469
Leach, MacEdward, 5550
Leach, Maria, 5506
Leacock, John, 2347
Leader of the Revolution, 3269
The League of Frightened Philistines, 1375
League of Nations, 3534, 3541, 3632
Leander, Folke, 2375
The Leaning Tower, 1662
Lear, Walter J., 4887
Learned, Henry Barrett, 3519, 6145
Learning and scholarship, 3739, 4458–59
Leary, Lewis G., 2457, 2552
ed., 1672
Leatherstocking Tales, 258
The Leatherwood God, 980
Leavenworth, Kans., guidebook, 3906
Leaves from the Diary of an Impressionist, 951–52
Leaves of Grass, 619–30, 636–37, 639, 642
about, 656
concordance, 653
Leaves of Grass One Hundred Years After, 656
Lebhar, Godfrey M., 5961
Leckie, George G., 3837
Le Clair, Robert C., 1021
Lecture at Amory Hall, 286
Lectures and lecturing
(1820–70), 186, 192, 209, 230, 233–35, 280, 283–84, 286, 313, 531, 538, 542
(1871–1914), 745, 768, 900, 1126
(1915–39), 1235, 1445, 1585, 1783, 1823
Lectures on Modern Idealism, 5354
Ledésert, Margaret, tr., 4508
Le Duc, Thomas H., 5200
Ledyard, John, about, 3154
Lee, Alfred McClung, 2847
Lee, Charles, 6463
Lee, Charles, General, about, 3149
Lee, Gordon C., 5109
Lee, "Mother Ann," about, 5469
Lee, Richard, about, 3251
Lee, Robert E., about, 245, 1099, 1267, 2580, 2612, 3388, 3694–95, 4533
Lee family, about, 3251
Lee's Lieutenants, 3695
Leffler, George L., 5982
Lefler, Hugh Talmage, 4090
Legal aid, 6309, 6317, 6329–30
Legal education. See Law—study & teaching
Legal ethics, 6319–20
Legal institutions, 6289
Legal philosophy, 5269, 5290-91, 6266, 6268
Legal profession, 6317–32
Le Gallienne, Eva, 4936
about, 4936
Legaré, H. S., 2296
The Legend of Sleepy Hollow, 381
Legends and tales, 5503–5548
See also Folk heroes; and under regions, ethnic groups, etc., e.g., Indians, American—legends & tales Legends of the Old Plantation, 911
Legends of the West, 322
Leggett, William, 2295
Legislation, 6142, 6153, 6165–67, 6198
Legislative branch, 6075, 6133, 6140
functions, 6137
Legislative investigating committees, 6342
Legislatures, 6153, 6195, 6203, 6338, 6434
Colonial period, 6401
committees, 6156
functions, 6166–67
organization, 6166–67
rules & practice, 6166–67
Le Goullon, Lamartine, illus., 5553
Lehmann-Haupt, Hellmut, 6440
Leidecker, Kurt E., 5309
Leidy, William Philip, 6452
Leigh, Robert D., 6479–80
ed., 6485
Leighton, Isabel, ed., 3488
Leighton, J. A., 5252
Leisure. See Recreation
Leisure class. See Upper class
Leisy, Ernest E., 2424, 2458
ed., 411, 2341
Leiter, Robert David, 5619
Leites, Nathan, 4951
Lenin, Nikolai, about, 2407
Lenox, James, about, 6465
Leonard, John P., 5158
Leonard, William Ellery Channing, 1556–58
Leone, Lucile Petry, about, 4854
Leong, Gor Yun, 4467
Leonor de Guzman, 207–8
Leopold, Richard William, 2712–13
ed., 3100
Lerner, Max, 2407
ed., 6242
Leroux, Emmanuel, 5254
Lerwill, Leonard L., 3665
Lescohier, D. D., 6033
Lester, John A., ed., 5063
Lestschinsky, Jacob, 4459
Le Sueur, Meridel, 3954
Let Freedom Ring, 6127
Let It Come Down, 1930
Let Me Lie, 1267
Let Us Now Praise Famous Men, 1907
Let Your Mind Alone!, 1817
A Letter Addressed to the People of Piedmont, 103
A Letter on White-Washing, 148
A Letter to His Countrymen, 262
A Letter to Robert Frost and Others, 1515
A Letter to the National Convention of France, 103
Letters
Colonial period, 14, 58, 89–91
(1764–1819), 96–101, 109, 122, 129, 132–33, 171, 177
(1820–70), 244, 270, 296, 329, 377, 392, 438, 449, 462, 466–67, 469, 502, 532–33, 554, 577, 599–601, 639, 643, 672
(1871–1914), 699–700, 738, 745, 751, 800–2, 847–50, 951–53, 981, 1005–6, 1046, 1152
(1915–39), 1187, 1305, 1570, 1608, 1664, 1713, 1715–16, 1741, 1893–94
Letters and Leadership, 2380
Letters from an American Farmer, 4500–1
Letters from the West, 320
Letters from under a Bridge, 675
Letters of a Traveller, 222
Leuchs, Fritz A. H., ed., 608
Levant in literature, 489
Le Veillard, Louis Guillaume, tr., 126
LeVene, Clara Mae, 4754
Levenson, Jacob C., 3055
Levenson, William B., 5230
Levi, Werner, 3556
Levin, Harry, 2412
Levine, Isaac Don, 3647
Levinger, Lee J., 4461
Levy, Beryl Harold, 5459
Levy, Leonard W., 6228
Levy, Marion J., Jr., 4550
Lewinson, Paul, 6379
Lewis, Benjamin M., 2915
Lewis, Cleona, 5989
Lewis, Edith, 1282
Lewis, Edward R., 6064
Lewis, Edwin, about, 5433
Lewis, George T., about, 4735
Lewis, Harold MacLean, 4607
Lewis, John L., about, 6049
Lewis, Lloyd, 3696, 3699, 4135
Lewis, Meriwether, 3298
about, 3167, 3299
Lewis, Nelson P., 4607
Lewis, Orlando F., 4653
Lewis, Oscar, 3955
Lewis, Richard W. B., 2459
Lewis, Sinclair, 1559–70
about, 2406, 2429, 2504
Lewis, Theodore H., ed., 3217
Lewis, Wilmarth S., 6464
Lewis and Clark Expedition, 3298
Lewisohn, Ludwig, 1571–79, 4501
Lexington, Ky.
guidebook, 3859
intellectual life, 3767
Leyda, Jay, ed., 493, 495, 501

Leys, Wayne A. R., 4428
Libel law, 2906, 2931–32
Liberal Catholic Church, about, 5439
Liberal education, 5100, 5187, 5190, 5196–97, 5199, 5246
See also General education
The Liberal Imagination, 2519
Liberal Republican Party (1872), 6369, 6427
The Liberal Tradition in America, 6063
Liberalism, 3766, 4530, 5270, 5284, 5425, 6061, 6063, 6065, 6070–71, 6164
Liberator, about, 3380
The Liberties of the Massachusetts Collonie in New England, 78
Liberty, 1329, 3143, 3250, 3256, 3279, 3308, 3313, 3381, 3747, 4258, 4370–71, 4502–3, 4513, 4543, 6060–61, 6063, 6068, 6071, 6079, 6094, 6099, 6108, 6127–28, 6130, 6134
See also Democracy; Politics
Liberty against Government, 6094
Liberty of the press. See Freedom of the press
Librarians, 6466, 6474, 6476, 6479, 6481, 6485
The Librarians' Conference of 1853, 6486
Libraries, 6452, 6466–75, 6477–84, 6486–87
Colonial, 14, 40, 73
reference dept., 6483
stat., 6474
Ariz., 4199
Charleston, S.C., 3763
Chicago, 6473
Ill., 6473
Middle States, 6472
Mo., 4108
Nashville, 3765
New England, 2549, 3745, 6472
New York (City), 4049
New York (State), 6468
See also special types of library, e.g., Law libraries; Public libraries Library of Congress, 5807
about, 6460
hist., 6469
Library of Congress. Aeronautics Division, 4788
Library of Congress. Jefferson Collection, 6460
Library of Congress. Legislative Reference Service, 6102
Library of Congress. Prints and Photographs Division, 5807 Library of Congress. Reference Dept., 659–60
Library of the World's Best Literature, 1136
Library schools, 6479, 6485
Library science, 6452, 6454, 6460, 6474, 6478, 6481, 6484
research, 6487
study & teaching, 6479, 6485
Library surveys, 6477, 6480, 6482
Lichten, Frances, 5599
Liddell Hart, Basil H., 3699
Lidice, Czechoslovakia, poetry, 1608
Lie Down in Darkness, 2175
Lieb, Frederick G., 5014
Lieberman, Herman, 1195
Lieberman, Judith Berlin, 5427
about, 5427
Liebling, Abbott J., 2904
Lief, Alfred, ed., 6247
Life adjustment education, 5224, 5235, 5237, 5240
Life along the Passaic River, 1872
Life among the Modocs, 1065
Life and Death of an Oilman, 2731
Life and Gabriella, 1461
Life and Liberty in America, 4370–71
The Life and Times of King Cotton, 5822
Life Doubles in Brass, 4973
Life in a Putty Knife Factory, 2150
Life in America, 5801, 5804
Life insurance, 5991–92
Life Is My Song, 1432
Life (magazine), about, 2908
The Life of Billy Yank, 3705
The Life of Johnny Reb, 3704–5
The Life of Poetry, 2105
The Life of Reason, 5367, 5375
Life on the Mississippi, 784–86, 811
Life on the Texas Range, 4153
Life with Father, 1317–18, 2327, 2334
Life with Mother, 1318
Light in August, 1386
The Light in the Forest, 1696
The Light of Distant Skies, 5751
Light up the Sky, 1492
The Lightning-Rod Man, 484
Lighting, Colonial, 5786
Lilienthal, David E., 5892
Liljeblad, S., 2364
Liljegren, Sten B., 2364, 2367
Lillard, Richard G., 2402, 3101, 4184
Lillibridge, George D., 3778
Lima, Ohio, guidebook, 3869
The Limestone Tree, 1511
The Limits of Evolution, 5317
Limners and Likenesses, 5747
Lin McLean, 1145
Linblad, K. E., 2364
Lincecum, Gideon, about, 4734
Lincoln, Abraham, 419–21, 3390, 3395
about, 557, 941, 1727–29, 1873, 2542, 2757, 2824, 3382, 3391–95, 3416, 3426, 3706, 4533, 5186, 6081
bibl., 2757, 3395
drama, 1752
fiction, 332, 763–65, 876–77, 2821
poetry, 206, 459, 623, 1061
sculpture, 5736–37
Lincoln, Charles H., ed., 55, 3213
Lincoln, Mary Todd, fiction, 2821
Lincoln, Nebr., guidebook, 3903
Lincoln Finds a General, 3706
Lincoln Memorial (Washington, D.C.), 5736
Lind, John, 4143
Linda Condon, 1509
Lindbergh, Charles Augustus, 2714–15
about, 2715, 4533, 5938
Lindeman, Eduard C., ed., 301
Lindheimer, Ferdinand Jakob, about, 4734
Lindholm, Richard W., 5943
Lindley, Harlow, 4121
Lindner, Robert Mitchell, 2716–18
Lindquist, Everet F., ed., 5229
Lindquist, Gustavus E. E., 3040
Lindsay, Howard, 1317, 2327, 2334–35
Lindsay, Nicholas Vachel, 1580–81
about, 1582, 2419
Lindsey, Almont, 3439
Lindsley, Philip, about, 3765
Line, Ralph Marlowe, 5715
The Line of Love, 1262
The Lineage of Lichfield, 1262
Linford, Dee, 4176
Linford, E., 6195
Lingelbach, William E., about, 4059
Lingg, Claire, 4865
Linguistic Atlas of New England, 2268
Link, Arthur S., 3472–73, 3489
ed., 3100
Link, Eugene Perry, 3300
Linscott, Eloise Hubbard, ed., 5580
Linscott, Robert N., ed., 940
Linton, Ralph, ed., 3041
The Lion and the Honeycomb, 1234
The Lion and the Rose, 2124
The Lion of the West, 518
Lionizing, 529
Lipman, Jean (Herzberg), 5601
Lippmann, Walter, comp., 3634
Lipset, Seymour Martin, 6455
Lipsius, Morris, ed., 2274
Lipson, Leslie, 6203
Lisbon, Portugal, fiction, 2092
The Listening Landscape, 1906
Litchfield, Edward H., 6420
Literary annuals, 2518
The Literary Apprenticeship of Mark Twain, 816 Literary Centres, 896–97
Literary composition, theories, 40, 47–48, 618
Literary Culture in Early New England, 2549
Literary Encounters, 1277
The Literary Fallacy, 2417
Literary form, 2388
Literary Friends and Acquaintances, 979
The Literary History of the American Revolution, 2522
Literary History of the United States, 601, 670, 2460–61
Literary Importations, 134
The Literary Life in America, 2380
Literary Opinion in America, 2550
Literary Pioneers, 2462, 3776
Literary Prophecy, 896–97
The Literary Record, 2355
Literary research, essays & studies, 2364–68
Literary Review, 689
The Literary Situation, 2409
Literary Values, 740
The Literati, 520, 533
The Literati of New York City, 415
Literature, 1–2235
and land, 6262
anthologies, collections, & series, 2276–2370, 2383, 2551, 2554, 2557, 2559–60, 2563, 2565–66, 2569, 2571, 3142

Literature—Continued
bibl., 2393, 2402, 2448, 2460, 2552–53, 6467
biographical series, 2276–89
dictionaries, handbooks, etc., 2433, 2441, 2447, 2454–55
esthetics, 2387, 2512, 2529
experimental writing
drama, 1357, 1359–60, 1647–48, 1864, 2226
fiction, 1242–47, 1249, 1251, 1379, 1450, 1771, 1842
periodicals, 2560
personal narratives, 1768–70
poetry, 1303–4, 1306, 1309, 1313, 1357, 1359, 1432, 1583–84, 1620–21, 1766, 1782, 1784, 1872, 2034, 2079, 2098, 2134
short stories, 1242, 1771
hist. & crit., 1235, 1571, 2356–2550, 3731–32, 3747–48, 3751
bibl., 2457
influence on art, 5691
periodicals, 2551–77, 2854, 2895, 2914, 2922, 2925
philosophy, 2453, 2529
popular, 2384, 2402, 2434, 6443
See also Bestsellers
post World War II, 2373
techniques, 1664
theory, 1664, 2423, 2529
See also Folklore; Legends and tales; also forms of literature, e.g., Fiction; and names of individual authors
Literature and Morality, 1377
Literature and science, 21, 40, 46, 2493
essays, 2425
poetry, 649, 2412
Literature and the American College, 2375
Literature & Theology in Colonial New England, 2483
Lithic industries (Indian), 2991
Lithographers, 5611, 5778–79
Little, Nina Fletcher, 5730
Little, Shelby (Melton), 3270
Little Big Horn Battle, 3036
A Little Book of Profitable Tales, 878
A Little Book of Western Verse, 878
Little Breeches, 942–44
Little Compton, 920
The Little Convent Girl, 1035
Little Dies Committee. See California Senate. Fact-Finding Committee on Un-American Activities in California
The Little Fellow, 4953
The Little Foxes, 1989, 2327
Little Friend, Little Friend, 1999
A Little Journey in the World, 1142–43
"Little magazines," 2563, 2914, 2925
bibl., 2914
Little Orphant Annie, 1126
A Little Rebellion, 3309
Little Rivers, 5095
Little theaters. See Theater—little theater movement
The Little White Girl (painting), 5776
Little Women, 189
Littlefield, George E., 6436, 6448
Littleton, Mark, pseud. See Kennedy, John Pendleton Live Another Day, 1951
Lively, Charles E., 4397
Livestock, Southern States, 4084
Livezey, William E., 3595
Living Authors, 2455
Livingood, James W., 4104
Livingston, Burton E., 2959
Livingston, Robert R., about, 3519
Livingston, N. J., hist., 3813
Llano Estacado, Tex., 4196
Lloyd, Elizabeth, 672
Lloyd, Hannibal Evans, tr., 4309
Lloyd, Henry Demarest, about, 6424
Lloyd, Margaret, 4968
Lo, the Former Egyptian!, 2151
Loans, 5848, 5993
Lobbying, 6338, 6392–93, 6395–97, 6399
Lobrano, Gustav S., 3430
Local civil service, 6192
Local Color in Art, 896–97
Local color in literature. See Regionalism and local color in literature Local government, 3195, 3221, 3224, 3229–30, 3443, 6131, 6133–35, 6137, 6139, 6207–18, 6391, 6425, 6432 budget, 5973, 6195, 6208–10, 6212–15, 6217–18
executive branch, 6193
functions, 2905, 6195, 6211–15, 6217
labor policy, 6192
officials & employees, 6209–10, 6212–15, 6218
organization, 6195, 6208, 6213–15, 6217
publications, 6452
See also subdivisions Government and History under names of places and regions, e.g., New York (City)—govt.
Local history, 2943, 3061, 3781–4222
See also History under names of places and regions, e.g., California—hist.
The Local Novel, 896–97
Locke, David Ross (Petroleum V. Nasby), 422–26, 2857
Locke, John, about, 5289
Locke Amsden, 583–84
Lockridge, Ross Franklin, 2005–6
Lockwood, Francis Cummins, 3004, 4199
The Locomotive-God, 1557
Locomotives, 5926
Locust and Wild Honey, 741–42
Lodge, Henry Cabot, 2582, 4036
ed., 696
Loeb, Martin B., 5146
Loeher, Rodney, 3061
Loescher, Frank S., 5499
Loesser, Arthur, 5622
Loetscher, Lefferts A., ed., 5466
The Log of a Cowboy, 684–85
Logan, Edward B., 6336
ed., 6336
Logan, James, about, 3229
Logan, Joshua, 2335, 2337
Logan, Rayford W., 4440, 4445
Loggins, Vernon, 5582, 5679
Logic, 5254, 5257, 5267, 5275, 5283, 5286, 5290, 5306, 5346, 5359
Lomax, Alan, 5643
comp., 5558–60
Lomax, John A., 5557
comp., 5558–60
about, 5557
Lombardi, John, 6051
Lomen, Carl J., 2719–20
London, Jack, 1048–60, 5021
about, 2430, 2464, 2486, 2815
Lone Cowboy, 2700
The Lonely Crowd, 4555
Long, Crawford W., about, 4822
Long, David F., 3103
Long, E. B., ed., 3696
Long, E. Hudson, 1111
ed., 2324
Long, Edward Le Roy, 5434
Long, Haniel, 3956, 4176
Long, Huey, about, 3488, 6377
Long, John Davis, 4036
Long, John Luther, 2337
Long, Orie William, 2462, 3776
Long Black Son, 2234
Long Branch, N.J., hist., 3814
A Long Fourth, 2177
The Long Habit, 5351
Long Hunt, 1239
Long Island
fiction, 1425
in art, 5768
travel & travelers, 4279
Long Remember, 1542
The Long Run, 1851
The Long Stay Cut Short, 2220
The Long Valley, 1776
The Long Voyage Home, 1648
Longfellow, Ernest W., illus., 439
Longfellow, Henry Wadsworth, 427–44, 2290
tr., 437
about, 427, 438, 441, 449, 633, 706, 745, 979, 2277, 2280, 2374, 2462, 2486, 2513, 2534, 3776
Longfellow, Samuel, ed., 438
Longstreet, Augustus Baldwin, 445–48, 2296
Longstreet, James, about, 2613
Longstreth, Thomas Morris, 5064
Longworth, Nicholas, about, 4369
Lonn, E., 4481
Look at the U.S.A., 3782
Look Homeward, Angel, 1888–89
Look (magazine), 2161, 3782
about, 2908
Looking Backward, 728–31
about, 726
Loomis, Alfred F., 5022
Lopez, M., 200
Lord, Clifford L., 2972, 3676
Lord, Elizabeth H., 2972
Lord, Otis Phillips, about, 852
Lord Chumley, 2314
Lord Weary's Castle, 2007, 2009
The Lords of Creation, 3476
Lorimer, George Horace, about, 2925
Lorwin, Lewis L., 6052

Los Angeles
descr., 4207
guidebooks, 3929
hist., 4150, 4206–7
music, 5630
politics, 6207
Los Angeles County, Calif., 3957
Loshe, Lillie Deming, 2463
Losses, 1999
Lossing, Benson J., 3687
The Lost Colony, 1475
Lost Face, 1058
"Lost generation," 2371, 2406, 2408, 2417
Lost in the Horse Latitudes, 2150
A Lost Lady, 1276–77
Lost Springtime, 2658
Lotus Eating, 2278
Louis XI, 2298
Louis, Joe, 5030
about, 5025, 5030
Louisiana, 3952, 4079, 4100–1
fiction, 745, 749–50, 1032, 1945
govt., 6195
guidebooks, 3851–52
hist., 4100–1
language (dialects, etc.), 2265
law, 6245
politics, 6245, 6377
short stories, 746–48, 759–61, 1032–35
Louisiana. Legislative Council, 4100
Louisiana Hayride, 6377
Louisiana Purchase, 3531, 3660
Louisville, Ky., guidebook, 3860
Lounsbury, Thomas R., ed., 1144
Louttit, William Easton, Jr., 3426
Love, 285
Love and Liberation, 1858
Love Charm, 1553
Love Conquers All, 1214
Love, Death, and the Ladies' Drill Team, 2214
Love in '76, 2347
Love Is Eternal, 2821
The Love Nest, 1554
Lovejoy, Arthur O., 5255, 5259
Lovell, John W., about, 6446
Love's Old Sweet Song, 2112
Lovett, Robert Morss, 2406
ed., 1071
Lovingood, Sut, pseud. See Harris, George Washington
Low, Samuel, 2347
Low, Seth, about, 6432
Low Man on a Totem Pole, 2150, 2155
Lowe, H. A., 6195
Lowe, Victor, 5335, 5385
Lowell, Amy, 832, 1583–84
about, 2681
Lowell, James Russell, 449–69, 610, 2290, 5222
about, 402, 449, 466, 585, 2277, 2374, 2385, 2422–23, 2492, 2513, 2534, 2545, 2681, 2922
Lowell, Robert, 2007–10, 2363
about, 2426
Lowell family, 2681
The Lowering Clouds, 3498
Lowes, John Livingston, 4250
Lowie, Robert H., 3005–6
Lowman, Guy S., Jr., 2268
Lowry, Robert, 2011–16
Loyalty oaths, 3387–88, 6107–8, 6110
See also Allegiance
Loyalty-Security Program (1947), 6107, 6110, 6112
Loyola, Ignatius, 2281
Lozier, Herbert, 5004
Lubbock, Percy, ed., 1004–5
Lubell, Samuel, 5947, 6346
Lucas, Henry S., 4493
Luce, Clare (Boothe), 2327, 2333
Lucifer with a Book, 1940, 1942
The Luck of Roaring Camp, 927–32, 937, 939
Luckman, Sid, 5039
about, 5039
Lucky Sam McCarver, 2348
Lucretius. De Rerum Natura, translation, 1556
Lucy Church Amiably, 1771
Lucy Gayheart, 1277
Luden, Heinrich, ed., 4298
Ludwig, Richard M., ed., 2341
Lueders, Edward G., 1835
Lull, Richard Swann, 4715
Lumber industry, 5864
Minn., 4141–42
Mississippi Valley, 3975
Lumbermen
folklore, 5523, 5533
language (slang, etc.), 5516
songs & music, 5551, 5556, 5558–59, 5562, 5567, 5575
Lummus, Henry T., 6287
Lumpkin, Katharine Du Pre, 2721, 4569
about, 2721
Lumsdaine, A. A., 3724
Lundberg, Ferdinand, 2884
Lundberg, George A., 4577
Lundblad, Jane, 2368
The Lure of the Frontier, 3082
Lustra, 1666
Lutherans, 3231, 4479–80, 5404, 5442, 5461–62
Lutz, E. Russell, 6294
Luxon, Norval Neil, 2924
Lydenberg, Harry Miller, 6476
Lyell, Sir Charles, 4337–40
about, 4336
Lyman, George D., 4185
Lyman, E. W., 5335
Lynch, Denis Tilden, 6387
Lynchburg, Va., 2842
Lynd, Helen Merrell, 4592–93
Lynd, Robert S., 4592–93
Lynes, Russell, 5694
Lynn, Kenneth S., 2464
Lyon, John H. H., 5582
Lyon, Mary, 5193
about, 2615
Lyons, Eugene, 3490
Lyons, James, 5607
Lyons, L. M., 6207
Lyric America, 2342
Lyrics of a Lad, 1530
Lyrics of Lowly Life, 857, 859, 861
Lyrics of the Hearthside, 858–59, 861
Lytle, John Horace, 5085
about, 5085

M

M; One Thousand Autobiographical Sonnets, 1624 Mabbott, Thomas O., 522, 524
ed., 538
Mabee, Carleton, 4676
MacArthur, Charles, 2327, 2332
MacArthur, Douglas, about, 1992
McCabe, Charles R., ed., 2890
McCaffery, John K. M., ed., 1504
McCain, William D., 3583
McCallum, John, 5038
McCamy, James L., 3604, 6452
McCamy, Julia B., 6452
McCann, Franklin T., 3166
McCarran, Patrick, 4424
McCarran Act (1950). See Subversive Activities Control Act
McCarthy, John A., 5211
McCarthy, Joseph R., about, 3482
McCarthy, Mary, 2017–22
McCarty, John L., 4195
McCausland, Elizabeth, 5766
McCleery, Albert, 4901
McClellan, George Brinton, about, 2614, 3382
McClelland, Nancy V., 5728
MacClintock, Lander, 5679
McCloskey, J. J., 2301
McClure, M. T., 5289
McClure, S. S., about, 6432
McCluskey, Ross, ed., 5071
McCollum, Elmer V., about, 4722
McConahey, S. C., 4594
McConnell, Grant, 5859
McCormac, Eugene Irving, 3350–51
McCormick, Cyrus, 5826
McCormick, Cyrus Hall, about, 4786, 5826
McCormick, Medill, about, 2862
McCormick, Robert, about, 5826
McCormick, Robert Rutherford, about, 2862
McCormick family, 2862
McCosh, James, 5337–44
about, 5337, 5344
McCoy, Joseph G., about, 4158
McCoy, Philbrick, 6320
McCoy, Whitley P., 6058
McCracken, Harold, 5770, 5802
McCullers, Carson, 2023–24, 2335–36
McCulloch, Margaret, 4443
McCulloch, W. E., 5442
McCuskey, Dorothy, 5220
McDevitt, Josephine A., 5611
McDonagh, Edward C., 4431
McDonald, Philip B., 4677
MacDonald, William, comp., 3079
Macdougall, A. R., 4972
MacDougall, Curtis D., 2905, 6288
McDougall, William, about, 5392
MacDowell, Edward, about, 2364, 5683
McDowell, Ephraim, about, 4822
McDowell, Tremaine, 255, 300, 5184
ed., 383, 2276, 2343
McFarland, Carl, 6227
McFarland, Marvin W., ed., 4788
McFarland, Raymond, 5872
M'Fingal, 165, 167
McGeary, Martin Nelson, 6160

McGibony, John R., 4849
MacGill, Caroline E., 5923
McGillicuddy, Cornelius, 5011
about, 5011
McGovern, John T., 4999
McGovney, Dudley O., 6405
Macgowan, Kenneth, 4901
McGraw-Hill Book Company, about, 6449
McGregor, John C., 2992
McGregor, Iowa, guidebook, 3894
McGuffey readers, 5126
Machinal, 2332
Machine politics, 3437–38, 6218, 6333, 6338, 6346, 6353, 6357, 6363, 6382, 6384–91, 6410, 6434
McInerny, Mary Alice, 4577
MacIver, Robert M., 5181, 5185, 6082
Mack, Connie. See McGillicuddy, Cornelius
Mack, Gerstle, 4221
Mackay, Alexander, 4344–46
about, 4344
Mackay, Charles, 4370–71
about, 4369
McKay, Donald C., 3508
ed., 3501, 3516
Mackay, John A., about, 5433
MacKay, Kenneth Campbell, 6362
MacKaye, Percy, 2337, 2348
MacKaye, Steele, 2308, 2337, 2347
McKean, Dayton D., 6337, 6388, 6395
McKearin, George S., 5789
McKearin, Helen, 5789
McKee, Samuel, Jr., ed., 3289, 3291
McKelvey, Blake, 4050–52, 4654
McKelway, St. Clair, 2894
Mackenzie, Alexander, about, 3167
Mackenzie, Catherine D., 4678
Mackenzie River, 4015
McKeon, Richard, 5289, 5427
about, 5427
Mackey, David R., 4966
McKibbin, David, 5771
McKiever, Margaret F., 4887
McKinley, William, about, 3424, 3447–48
McLaughlin, Andrew Cunningham, 3301, 3349, 6078–79
McLaughlin, George D., about, 4785
Maclaurin, William Rupert, 4693
McLean, John G., 5914
MacLean, Malcolm S., 5228
McLean, Murdoch C., 4474
MacLeish, Archibald, 1585–88, 1908, 2333
about, 2378, 2499, 2527
MacLennan, S. F., 5289
Macleod, William Christie, 3030
McLoughlin, William G., 5480
Maclure, William, about, 4737
Macmahon, Arthur W., 6187
McManis, Jack, ed., 1481
McMaster, John Bach, 3046
about, 3046, 3058
Macmillan's Magazine, 989
MacMinn, George R., 4923
McMurry, Donald L., 3440
McMurtrie, Douglas C., 6448
MacNeil, Neil, 2906
MacNutt, Francis Augustus, tr., 3153
Macon, Nathaniel, about, 3286
Macon, Ga., guidebook, 3840
McPharlin, Paul, 4981
comp., 128
McPhee, William N., 6414
McRae, Milton A., 2886
about, 2886, 2890
McReynolds, Edwin C., 4169, 4171
McSorley's Wonderful Saloon, 2755
McTeague, 1090–92
McWilliams, Carey, 3957, 4176, 4462, 4475, 5846
Macy, Anne Sullivan, 2706
about, 2705
Macy, John Albert, ed., 2706
Macy (Rowland H.) and Co., about, 5959
Madame Butterfly, 2337
Madame Célestin's Divorce, 760
Madame Délicieuse, 748
Madame Delphine, 747–48
Madame de Mauves, 1007
Madame De Traymes, 1855
Madame Zilensky and the King of Finland, 2024
Made in America, 5691
Madeleine (opera), 5681
Mademoiselle Olympe Zabriski, 711
Madison, James, 3283, 5418, 6075, 6087
about, 2622, 3282–83
Madmen All, 517
Madrilène, 1033
Madsen, Borge, tr., 4485
Magazines, 2913–26
bibl., 2914–15, 2919
directory, 5958
folklore, 5518
hist., 2914–16, 2918–19 medical, 4809
photography, 2908
publishing, 6449–50
Maggie, a Girl of the Streets, 822–24, 835–37
Maggs, Douglas B., ed., 6090
Magic, folk, 5509, 5528–29, 5537
The Magic Curtain, 4941
Magnalia Christi Americana, 43–44
The Magnificent Ambersons, 1802, 1806
Magnificent Missourian, 3322
The Magpie and the Maid, 2302
Magriel, Paul D., ed., 4971–72
Mahan, Alfred Thayer, 3672, 3688, 3700
about, 3058, 3672
Maher, R. L., 6195, 6207
Mailer, Norman, 2025–28
about, 2371
Main Currents in American Thought, 2485
about, 2407
The Main Line, 2314
Main Line of Mid-America, 5927
The Main Stream, 2503
Main Street, 1560
Main Street on the Middle Border, 4109
Main-Travelled Roads, 891–95
Maine, 2590
econ. condit., 4031
folksongs & ballads, 5566–67
guidebooks, 3792–95
hist., 3473
Maine—Continued
in art, 5767
language (dialects, etc.), 2256
Penobscot Indians, 3011
soc. condit., 4031
Maine, U.S.S., 3530
Maine in literature
essays, 594–95, 606, 1859
fiction, 402–4, 562, 570–71, 1284–85, 1288, 1290, 1707
poetry, 1290, 1295, 1713–14
short stories, 1023–31
Maisel, Edward M., 5680
Major, R. H., 3163
Make Bright the Arrows, 1609
Make Light of It, 1879
Makemie, Francis, about, 5396, 5466
Makers and Finders, 2381
Makers of Literature, 2545
The Making of Americans, 1768
The Making of a Southerner, 2721
The Making of an American, 2785
Making the American Mind, 5126
The Male Animal, 2334
Mall, Franklin B., about, 4845
Mallery, Richard D., 2250
Mallinckrodt, Edward, about, 4735
Malmin, Gunnar J., tr. & ed., 4348
Malone, Dumas, 3295, 3303
ed., 3080
Malone, Kemp, ed., 1046
Malott, Deane W., 5847
Mamba's Daughters, 1512
Mammonart, 1754
Mammoth Cave, Ky., 2946
Mamoulian, Rouben, 5678
Man, prehistoric, 2995–96, 4202
The Man against the Sky, 1714
A Man against Time, 1556
Man and Boy, 2053
Man and Shadow, 2342
Man and Wife, 2317
The Man Coming toward You, 1871
The Man in the Crowd, 529
A Man in the Divided Sea, 2035
A Man Must Fight, 5031
The Man That Corrupted Hadleyburg, 798–99
The Man Who Came to Dinner, 1491, 1548, 2327, 2334
The Man Who Died at Twelve O'Clock, 1475
The Man Who Died Twice, 1714
The Man Who Was There, 2052
Man With a Bull-Tongue Plow, 2166
The Man with the Blue Guitar, 1784
The Man with the Hoe, 1062
The Man without a Country, 901–5, 909
The Managed Casualty, 4469
Manassas to Malvern Hill, 3695
Manchester, Frederick, ed., 2375
Manchester, Herbert, 4992
Manchester, William R., 1607 Manhattan
art, 5767, 5773
fiction, 1449
See also New York (City)
Manhattan Project, 4747
Manhattan Transfer, 1327
Manifest Destiny, 3306, 3340, 3398, 3760

Mankowitz, Wolf, 1367
Manly, John M., 1070
Mann, Arthur, 4530
Mann, Horace, 5125, 5418
about, 5116, 5125
Manners, 286
Manning, Thomas G., ed., 3106
Mannix, Daniel P., 4980
Manpower. See Labor supply
Manross, William W., 5456
Mansfield, Harvey C., 5996
Mansfield, Katherine, about, 1278
Mansfield, Luther S., ed., 491, 499
Mansfield, Richard, about, 4939
Mantle, Robert Burns, ed., 4897
Manuductio ad Ministerium, 47–48
Manufactures, 3291, 5902–6, 6030
hist., 5904, 5906
Ohio, 4119
Many Are Called, 2058
Many Long Years Ago, 1632
Many Mansions, 1617
Many Minds, 2523
Many Thousands Gone, 1225–26
A Map of Virginia, 68
Mapes, James Jay, about, 4735
Mapleson, James Henry, 5659
Maps. See Atlases and maps
Marberry, M. Marion, 1064
Marble, Alice, 5049
about, 5049
Marble, Annie (Russell), 2465, 6447
ed., 595, 597
The Marble Faun (Faulkner), 1379
The Marble Faun (Hawthorne), 333
Marbut, Curtis F., 2947, 5816
about, 2947
Marcel, Gabriel, 5363
March, Peyton C., 3712
March, Richard, ed., 1364
March, William. See Campbell, William Edward March
Marchand, Ernest, ed., 113
Marches Now the War Is Over, 624
Marching On, 1241
Marco Bozzaris, 323
Marco Millions, 1648
Marcosson, Isaac F., 2892
Marcou, Jules, 4742
Marcus Aurelius, 2281
Marden, Charles F., 4432, 4578
Mardi, 478
Maretzek, Max, 5659
Margaret, 402–4
Margaret Fleming, 2337
Marginalia, 533
Maria, the Potter of San Ildefonso, 2723
Marianas Islands, 4218
Marietta, Ohio, 3767, 4030
Marin, John, 5767
about, 5767, 5783
Marine Corps, hist., 3668
Marion, Francis, 171
Maritime commerce, 3524
Maritime rights. See Freedom of the seas
Marjorie Daw, 711–12
Marjorie Morningstar, 2231
Markel, Lester, 3615
Marketing, 5944–45
See also Agricultural products—marketing; Retail trade; Wholesale trade
Markham, Edwin, 1061–63
Marland, Ernest Whitworth, about, 2731
The Marmot Drive, 1992
Marquand, John Phillips, 1549, 1589–97
about, 1598, 2376
Marquesas Islands, fiction, 471–75
Marriage, 4550, 4561, 4571–72, 4617 counseling, 4570
Indian, 3022, 3043
The Marriage of Venus, 1740
The Married Look, 1641
Marriott, Alice Lee, 2722–25, 3007
The Marrow of Tradition, 756
Marryat, Frederick, 4324–28
about, 4324
Mars Jeems's Nightmare, 757
Marse Chan, 1100–2
Marse Covington, 705
"Marse Henry," 2892
Marsh, James, about, 5263
Marsh, Othniel Charles, about, 4721, 4724, 4754
Marsh, Philip M., ed., 143
Marshall, Helen E., 4839
Marshall, John, about, 6096, 6231, 6237–38, 6240, 6258, 6260
Marshall, John David, comp., 6481
Marshall, Thomas F., comp., 2552
Marshall, Thomas M., 3157
Marshall, William L., 6276
Marshall, Okla., 4171
Marshall Islands, 4218
Marshall Mission to China, 3593
Marshall Plan, 3637, 3639–40
The Marshes of Glynn, 1038
Marston, William Moulton, 4975
Martens, Elise H., 5205
The Martian Chronicles, 1934
Martin, Alexander C., 2960
Martin, Asa Earl, ed., 4056
Martin, Boyce F., 5847
Martin, Clyde E., 4565
Martin, Edwin T., 4753
Martin, Eveline C., 3179
Martin, Harry B., 5053
Martin, Howard H., ed., 4212
Martin, John, 4968, 4972
Martin, John Bartlow, 4124
Martin, Paul S., 2993
Martin, Robert F., 5893
Martin, Thomas C., 4782
Martin Eden, 1056–57
Martineau, Harriet, 4315–19
Martínez, María Montoya, about, 2723
Marvel, Ik, pseud., 506–10
Marvin, W. T., 5260
Marx, Herbert L., Jr., ed., 4703
Marx, Karl, about, 1743, 5291
Marxist influence in literature, 1048, 1754, 2421, 2441, 2507, 2539
Marxist interpretation of literature, 2439
Mary, 1190
Mary of Scotland, 1172, 1174
Mary Peters, 1285
Mary Stuart, Queen of Scotland, drama, 1172, 1174 Maryland
architecture, 5706
culture, 3233
fiction, 405, 412–13
Germans, 4480
guidebooks, 3824–25
hist., 3209, 3233, 4073
legal hist., 6284
plantation life, 4517
printing, Colonial, 6448
rivers, 3999
The Maryland Gazette, about, 2854
A Mask for Privilege, 4462
Mask of Silenus, 2413
Mason, Alpheus Thomas, 6246, 6249
ed., 6065
Mason, Daniel Gregory, 5625
Mason, George, about, 3254
Mason, Kathryn Harrod, 2726–27
Mason, Lowell, about, 5684
Masons (Freemasons), 4574
The Masque of Judgment, 1069
The Masque of Kings, 1174, 2348
A Masque of Mercy, 1452
The Masque of Pandora, 435
A Masque of Reason, 1452
The Masque of the Gods, 2282
Mass Communications. See Communications
Mass Culture, 6443
Massachusettensis de conditoribus, 3198
Massachusetts, 3965, 4034–38
courts, 6292
culture, 3178, 3199, 3235, 3241
early settlers, 7, 17–18, 32
education, 5125
govt., 6195
guidebooks, 3798–3803
hist., 2580, 3991, 4012, 4034
Colonial period, 90–91, 3178, 3181–82, 3198–99, 3211, 3235, 3241
in literature, 40–44, 49–58, 62–64, 75–77, 276, 587–93, 596–97, 606
fiction, 562, 665, 1438–39, 1443, 1589, 2293
poetry, 7–11, 79–83, 662
sermons, 18, 33
short stories, 881–86
legal hist., 6228, 6242, 6292
maritime hist., 5936
printing, Colonial, 6448
relations with Gt. Brit., 3241
rivers, 3991, 4012
Massachusetts General Hospital, Boston, hist., 4853
Massachusetts General Hospital, Boston. Social Service Dept., hist., 4805
Massachusetts Historical Society, 696
Massachusetts Medical Society, hist., 4804
Massachusetts Reformatory, Concord, about, 4648
Massachusetts Reformatory for Women, Framingham, about, 4649
Massachusetts State Board of Health, hist., 4879
Master Plan U.S.A., 3624

Masters, Edgar Lee, 1599–1601, 3988
about, 1599, 2419
Masterson, James R., 5542
Materialism, 3134, 6067
Maternal and infant welfare, 4870
New York (City), 4851
Mathematics, 5254 foundations, 5346
hist., 4739
Mather, Cotton, 40–50, 82, 3178, 3199
about, 40, 92, 1873, 2493, 3178, 4034, 4826, 5417
Mather, Frank Jewett, Jr., 2425
Mather, Increase, about, 92, 2483, 3199
Mather, Stephen Tyng, about, 5866
Mathews, John A., about, 4785
Mathews, John Joseph, 2728–31
Mathews, John Mabry, 4132
Mathews, Lois Kimball. See Rosenberry, Lois (Kimball) Mathews
Matschat, Cecile (Hulse), 3976
Matter (philosophy), 5371
Mattfeld, Julius, 5639
Matthews, Basil J., 4450
Matthews, Brander, 770, 791, 2466–75
about, 2504
Matthews, Cornelius, 2295
Matthews, William, 3662
comp., 3102
Matthias at the Door, 1714
Matthiessen, Francis O., 1349, 2476–77, 5319
ed., 1008–9, 2344
about, 2127
Mauberley (Hugh Selwyn), about, 1670
Maud-Evelyn, 1012
Maud Martha, 1939
Maudslay, Robert, 2732–33
Maugham, W. Somerset, 1652
Mauk, James F., comp., 4720
Mauldin, William Henry, 2734–38
about, 2737
Maule's Curse, 2544
Maurer, David W., 2259, 2262
Maurer, Herrymon, 6022
Maury, Matthew Fontaine, about, 4721
Maverick, Maury, 6207
Maverick Town, 4195
Maxims. See Quotations
Maxwell, Allen, ed., 5509, 5521
Maxwell, Desmond E. S., 1365
Maxwell, William, 2029–33
May, Henry Farnham, 5492
May-Day, 289
The May-Pole of Merrymount, 51
Maya culture, 2994
Mayer, Arthur, 4959
about, 4959
Mayer, Frederick E., 5397
Mayers, Lewis, 6289
The Mayfield Deer, 1825
Mayhew, Jonathan, about, 5472, 6068
Mayhew, Lewis B., 5160
Maynard, Harold Bright, about, 4803
Maynard, Harold H., 5945
Maynard, Theodore, 5400, 5450
Mayo, Bernard, 3342, 3344
ed., 3294, 3297
Mayo, Margot, 5587
Mayo, Morrow, 4206–7
Mayo, William W., about, 4827
Mayo Clinic, Rochester, Minn., about, 4827
Mayorga, M., ed., 4898
Mays, Arthur B., 5210
Mays, Benjamin Elijah, 5500
Mays, David John, 2739–40
Mazeppa, 2302
Me and Juliet (music), about, 5685
Mead, Ben Carlton, illus., 5531
Mead, Edwin D., 907
Mead, Frank Spencer, 5398
Mead, G. H., 5254, 5289
Mead, Margaret, 3042
Meade, George Gordon, about, 2614
Meade, Robert Douthat, 3263, 3396
Meadows, John C., 4095
Meadows, Paul, 4757
Meaning, theories of, 5289, 5291, 5346
Means, Gardiner C., 5898, 6011, 6013
about, 5888
Means, James H., 4888
Meany, Edmond S., 4215
Mearns, David C., 3395, 6469
Mears, Eliot Grinnell, 4468
The Measure of Man, 2453
Measurement (education), 5229
Measurement and Prediction, 3724
Meat industry, 5869
fiction, 1754–55
Meat out of the Eater, 79
Mécanique céleste, 4746
Mechanic arts, study & teaching, 5191
Mecom, Jane (Franklin), 129
Medea, translation and adaptation, 1535, 2335
Medical missionaries, Hawaii, 2688
Medical societies, 4812
Middle West (to 1850), 4810
Medical Society of the State of Pennsylvania, hist., 4804 Medicine, 2844, 4721, 4804–91 care & treatment, 4808, 4825, 4885, 4889
case studies, 4815
cost, 4808, 4870, 4882–91
charities, 4820, 4842, 4862–64, 4866, 4868
education, 4813, 4825, 4831, 4855–61 post-graduate, 4857–59, 4861, 4873 premedical, 4861
ethics, 4812, 4817
group practice, 4862, 4886, 4888–89
hist., 4049, 4809, 4814
Colonial period, 4826
18th-19th cent., 4812
19th cent., 3765, 4112
20th cent., 4805, 4862
in literature
Colonial, 40
fiction, 375
See also Physicians and surgeons
laws & legislation, 4809–10, 4882
personnel, 4809, 4835–36, 4838, 4862, 4870, 4885 practice, 4091, 4809, 4811, 4813–15, 4817, 4825, 4827, 4829–30, 4841, 4891
research, 4779, 4819, 4841, 4870
hist., 4813, 4831
Medicine—Continued
schools, 4809–10, 4812, 4831, 4860–61
social work, 4835, 4839
hist., 4805
stat., 4815, 4865
See also Clinical medicine; Industrial medicine; Magazines — medical; Preventive medicine; Quacks and quackery
Medill, Joseph, about, 2862
Medill family, 2862
Medina, José Toribio, 3174
Mediterranean area, relations with, 3573
Meek, Joe, about, 2833
Meetinghouse Hill, 1630–1783, 5417
Megrue, Roi Cooper, 2348
Meh Lady, 1100–2
Meine, Franklin J., 5505
ed., 704
Meisel, Max, 4736
Melanctha, 1767
Meland, Bernard Eugene, 5437
Melcher, Marguerite (Fellows), 5469
Meliboeus-Hipponax, 456–57
Mellichampe, 547
Meltzer, Milton, 4440
Melville, Annabelle McConnell, 5477
Melville, Herman, 470–96, 2290
about, 21, 274, 333, 478, 481, 497–505, 1231, 2284, 2380–81, 2397, 2420, 2456, 2476, 2478, 2544
Melville Goodwin, USA, 1595
Melville Society, 499
The Member of the Wedding, 2023–24, 2335–36
The Memoirs of a Shy Pornographer, 2082
The Memoirs of an American Citizen, 957
Memoirs of an Epicurean, 2281
Memoirs of Carwin the Biloquist, 111
Memoranda, 638
A Memory of Two Mondays, 2049
Memphis, Tenn.
hist., 4105
politics, 6207
Men and Brethren, 1300
Men and Women, 2314
Men at Work, 1548
Men of the Mountains, 2168
Men on Bataan, 1992
Men, Women, and Ghosts, 1583–84
Men, Women, and Pianos, 5622
Mencken, Henry L., 832, 1602–5, 2248, 2411, 2876, 6421
ed., 266–67
about, 1606–7, 2406, 2429, 2486, 2503
Meneely, Alexander Howard, 3702
Menes, Abraham, 4458–59
Menjou, Adolphe, 4954
about, 4954
Menke, Frank G., 5057
Mennonites, 4058, 4480, 5442
Mental hygiene, 4619, 4833–36, 5246
Mentally ill, 4617
care & treatment, 4828, 4830, 4833–34, 4836–40

Mercantilism, Colonial period, 3193, 3242, 3262, 5878
Mercer, Morgan. See Dana, Julian
Merchant marine, 5930
Mercier, Louis J. A., 2375
Mercy Dodd, 2298
Mercy Philbrick's Choice, 984
Merely Colossal, 4959
Mereness, Newton D., ed., 4233
Mergenthaler, Ottmar, about, 4786
Meriam, Lewis, 3038
Merit system. See Civil service reform
Merk, Frederick, 3083
Merlin, 1714
Merriam, Charles Edward, 3646, 4540, 6066, 6363, 6380, 6406
Merriam, George S., 2879
Merriam, Robert E., 3720
Merrick, Elliott Tucker, 2741–42
Merrill, Francis E., 4572, 4625
Merrill, George P., 4737
Merrily We Roll Along, 1548
Merritt, LeRoy Charles, 6452
Merry Mount, 51
Merry-Mount: A Romance of the Massachusetts Colony, 2293
The Merry Partners, 4935
Merrymount Press, Boston, about, 6459
  bibl., 6459
Merton, Robert K., ed., 3724
Merton, Thomas, 2034–42
Merton of the Movies, 1546
Merwin, Frederic E., ed., 2927
Mesick, Jane Louise, 4224, 4228
Mesmeric Revelation, 529
Messiah, 2188
Messiter, Arthur H., 5666
Metalwork, 5596
Metamora, 2311
The Metamorphic Tradition in Modern Poetry, 2497
The Metaphysical Passion, 2499
Metaphysics, 5257, 5260, 5278, 5289, 5291, 5310, 5343, 5346, 5352, 5355–56, 5363
The Metaphysics of Pragmatism, 5254
Metcalf, Clyde H., 3668
Metcalf, Eleanor M., ed., 489, 502
Metcalf, Frank J., 5634
Metcalf, Keyes D., 6470
Meteor, 1206
Meteorology, 2950–51, 4722
The Method of Divine Government, 5337
A Methodist Saint, 2586, 5474
Methodists, 2586–87, 5404, 5442
  hist., 5416, 5463
  Willamette valley, 4213
Metropolitan government. See Local government
Metropolitan Life Insurance Company, about, 5992
Metropolitan State Hospital, Waltham, Mass., about, 4838
The Mettle of the Pasture, 719–20
Metzdorf, Robert F., ed., 276
Metzger, Arnold, 5335
Metzger, Walter P., 2358, 5181
Mexican War. See War with Mexico
Mexicans, 4197, 4204, 4470–72, 4475–76
Mexico
  cession of the Southwest, 3355
  fiction, 311
  hist., 2294
  poetry, 1585
  relations with, 3504, 3575, 3586
  short stories, 1659
  travel & travelers, 1659, 4352–53
Meyer, Adolf, about, 4722
Meyer, Balthasar Henry, ed., 5923
Meyers, Marvin, 3319
Miami, Fla.
  descr., 3846
  politics, 6207
Mich, Daniel D., 2908
Michaux, François André, 4277–78
  about, 4276
Michelson, Albert Abraham, about, 4721
Michelson, Charles, 6364
Michigan, 4137–38
  architecture, 5719
  Dutch, 4493
  folklore, 5533, 5535
  folksongs & ballads, 5567, 5575
  guidebook, 3882
  historical geography, 2969
  hist., 4111, 4137
  Norwegians, 4487
  rural communities, 4109
  short stories, 415–18, 1149–50
  soc. life & cust., 2661
Michigan. University, 5201
Michigan State Medical Society, 4818
Michl, Herman E., 5902
Microbe Hunters, 1520
Mid-Century, 4453
Mid-Century American Poets, 1948
Mid-Channel, 1572, 1575
The Middle-Aged Man on the Flying Trapeze, 1817
Middle Atlantic States, 4043–65
  guidebooks, 3806–26
  hist., 3783–84, 4043
  printing, Colonial, 6448
  public libraries (1850–1900), 6472
  travel & travelers, 4256–57, 4263, 4329
Middle Border in literature, 898–99
Middle classes, 2893, 3774, 4516, 4542, 4553, 6063, 6346
Middle East, World War II, 3726
The Middle of the Journey, 2519
Middle West
  agriculture, 5831
  descr., 4113, 4116
  Dutch, 4493
  econ. condit., 4109, 4115
  folklore, 5518
  geography, 4113
  historic houses, etc., 5794
  hist., 3053, 3147, 3427, 3446, 3784, 4115
  hunting, 2794
  newspapers, 2862, 2887, 2893
  Norwegians, 4487
  pictorial guide, 3782
  play-party songs, 5586
  politics, 4115, 6434
  rural communities, 2655
  singing games, 5586
  soc. hist., 4810, 4827, 4860, 5194 Middle West—Continued
  soc. life & cust., 2893, 4097–98, 4109, 4115–16, 4136, 4564 Middle West in literature
  bibl., 2502
  fiction, 867–77, 959–63, 1178, 1183, 1412, 1416, 1541, 1543, 1559–61, 1564, 1568, 1644, 1646, 1786, 1789, 1802, 1840, 1845, 2052
  hist. & crit., 2502
  poetry, 753–55, 1126–31, 1580, 1644–45, 1727, 1731
  short stories, 701–5, 890–95
  travels & travelers, 314
The Middle Years, 1015
Middlemen, commercial, 5960
Middleton, George, 2743–44
  about, 2744
Middletown, 4592
Middletown in Transition, 4593
A Midnight Bell, 2306
Midstream, 2708
Midway Island, 4218
Midwest at Noon, 4116
Miggles, 930, 937
Mighell, Ronald L., 5844
Migrant labor, 1775, 5846
Migration, internal, 2943, 4028, 4030, 4098, 4226, 4394, 4397, 4561
  Mormons, 4183
  Negroes, 4446
  The West, 4149
Mikesell, Raymond F., 3562, 3639
Miles, Laban J., 2729
Miles City, Mont., pictorial hist., 4151, 4153
Military Academy, West Point, about, 3656
Military Air Transport Service, about, 3643a
Military assistance to foreign nations, 3598, 3636
Military courts, 6289
Military history, 2580, 3141, 3643, 3644a, 3650
  American Revolution, 3238–39, 3255, 3261, 3269, 3271–72
  French and Indian War (1755–63), 3271
  Civil War, 3408
  World War I, 3715
  World War II, 3499
  See also specific branches of the Armed Forces, e.g., Army—hist.
Military life civil relations, 3646, 3650
  Civil War, 3704–5
  in art, 5765, 5807
  Revolutionary War, 3679
  World War II, 3724
Military life in literature
  drama, 1491, 2145–46
  fiction, 821, 825–29, 835–36, 1240–41, 1249, 1326, 1380, 1396, 1496–99, 1541, 1544, 1708–11, 1745, 1940–41, 1992–94, 2003–4, 2011, 2023, 2025–26, 2181, 2229–30
  historical writings, 1551
  personal narratives, 277, 1170, 1310
  poetry, 1599–1601, 1948, 1999, 2139, 2141

Military life in literature—Continued
reporting, 1170, 1769–70, 1992–4, 2044
short stories, 732–37, 2011, 2057
Military music, 5653
Military policy, 3623, 3629, 3634, 3643, 3651
Military psychiatry. See Psychiatry, military Milk for Babes, 17
A Milk White Flag, 2306
Mill, J. S., 5337
about, 5337
Millar, Robert W., 6300
Millay, Edna St. Vincent, 1608–9, 2332
about, 1610, 2406
Miller, Alfred Jacob, paintings by, 3330
Miller, Arthur, 2043–49, 2335–36
Miller, Claude R., 6323
Miller, D. S., 5222, 5335–36
Miller, Delbert C., 4552
Miller, Edgar G., 5731
Miller, George F., 5159
Miller, George J., 2940
Miller, Gerrit S., 2955
Miller, Helen Day (Hill), 3254
Miller, Henry, ed., 4418
Miller, Henry (b. 1891), 610, 1611–13
about, 2498
Miller, Herman P., 4395
Miller, James M., 3767
Miller, Joaquin, 1064–68, 2337
about, 1064, 1068, 2503
Miller, John C., 3255
Miller, Joseph, 3924–25
Miller, Lee Graham, 2745
Miller, Margaret, 5696
Miller, Mary Britton ("Isabel Bolton"), 1614–17
Miller, Max Carlton, 2746–54
about, 2746–54
Miller, Merle, about, 2371
Miller, Paul W., ed., 3838
Miller, Perry, 84, 2288, 2478, 3196, 3742–43, 4513, 5299
ed., 21, 2345–46, 3744
Miller, R. C., 3058
Miller, Robert Moats, 5493
Miller, William, 5875, 6441
ed., 6023
Miller, William H., about, 4785
Miller, William J., 2945
The Miller of Old Church, 1461
Millet, Jean François, about, 1061
Millett, Fred B., 991
Millett, John D., 5171, 6187
ed., 5172
Millikan, Robert A., 4755
about, 4722, 4755, 5434
A Million and One Nights, 4944
Millis, Harry A., 6053
Mills, Charles Wright, 4470, 4553
The Mills of the Kavanaughs, 2010
Milne, Gordon, 2278
Milton, George Fort, 3397, 4068, 6146
Milton, John, about, 231
Milwaukee, Wis., 3885, 4140, 6207
Mimi's Marriage, 1035
Mims, Edwin, Jr., 4899
Mims, Stewart L., 4265
ed., 4264
Mind and Spirit, 4044
The Mind of Primitive Man, about, 2407
The Mind of the South, 4066
A Mind That Found Itself, 4834
Mine Eyes Have Seen the Glory, 2603
Mine the Harvest, 1609
Miner, Ward L., 1401, 2508
Mineral resources. See Mines and mineral resources
Mineralogical Society of America, about, 4733
Mineralogy, 4715
Miners
folklore, 5533, 5578
folksongs & ballads, 5558, 5578
language (dialects, etc.), 5578
Mines and mineral resources, 4174, 5907, 5917
folklore, 5531–32
Calif., 4372
Colo., 3913
Middle Atlantic States, 4255, 4336
Middle West, 4113
Mo., 4108
Nev., 4184–85
N. Mex., 4188
Southern States, 4255, 4336
The West, 4177, 4383
Mingo, 917–19
Minhag America, 5483
The Minister's Wooing, 568–69
Mink and Red Herring, 2904
Minkoff, N. B., 4458
Minneapolis
Jews, 4456
music, 5654
Swedes, 4486
Minnesota, 3663, 3948, 3954, 4141–43
architecture, 5719
fiction, 1560, 1568
guidebooks, 3886–88
historical geography, 2969
Norwegians, 4487
rural communities, 4109
Swedes, 4486
Minnesota. University, about, 5184, 5202
Minnesota. University. Bureau of Institutional Research, 5202
Minnesota. University. Program of American Studies, 2553
The Minnesota Arrowhead Country, 3887
Minnie Field, 2332
Minorcan dialect, 2258
Minorities, 4426–35, 4551
bibl., 4426
civil liberties & rights, 6129 magazines, 2918
Great Plains, 4159
Washington, D.C., 4065
Minority Report, 2415
Minstrels, 2472, 4894, 5637, 5640
Minstrels of the Mine Patch, 5578
Minter, John Easter, 4014
The Minute Man (sculpture), 5736
The Minute Men of 1774–1775, 2304
Minute Particulars, 1227
The Miracle Chapel, 1035
Mirror for Gotham, 4048
A Mirror for the Sky, 2210
A Mirror for Witches, 1439
Mirsky, Jeanette, 2980, 3167, 4789
Miscally, Mildred Lois, 2856
Miss Lonelyhearts, 1843
Miss Lulu Bett, 1455
Miss Marvel, 1440
Miss Mehetabel's Son, 711
Miss Ravenel's Conversion from Secession to Loyalty, 278–79
Missionaries in China, fiction, 1252
Missions, 5411, 5489, 5723
Baptist, 5443
Catholic, 5451
Jesuit, 3075, 3158, 3171
Negro, 5500
overseas, 5405
Hawaii, 2688
Missions, Indian. See Indians, American—missions Mississippi, 4079
folklore, 5547
folksongs & ballads, 5576
guidebooks, 3849–50
hist., 3850, 4024
Mississippi in literature
drama, 2218, 2223, 2225, 2228
editorials, essays, etc., 194–97
fiction, 546–1379, 1786, 2202, 2204, 2206, 2208
short stories, 1379, 2202–3, 2205, 2207, 2209
Mississippi River, 2803, 3975, 3982, 4110
descr., 784–86
folklore, 5523
in art, 5805
legends, 5523
showboats, 4978
travel & travelers, 3170, 4281, 4300, 4324, 4336, 4344, 4369
Mississippi River Delta, 2779, 3952
Mississippi Valley, 3954, 3960, 3975
fiction, 778–83, 787–93, 1403, 1405
geography, 4113
hist., 3147, 3531, 3982, 4164
short stories, 891–95
travel & travelers, 307, 319–21
Mississippi Valley Historical Association, 3050
Missouri, 2764, 3346, 3948, 3960, 4108 caves, 2946
fiction, 763–65
folklore, 5528
folksongs & ballads, 5568–69
frontier life, 4097–98
Germans, 4478
guidebook, 3861
resources, 4108
rural communities, 4109
travel & travelers, 366, 4322
Missouri Compromise, 3346
Missouri Fur Co., 4148
Missouri River and valley, 4001, 4145, 4147
fur trade, 4148
geography, 4113
in art, 5805
travel & travelers, 4307
Mr. Dooley at His Best, 865
Mr. Dooley in Peace and War, 863

Mr. Dooley in the Hearts of His Countrymen, 864
Mr. Dooley: Now and Forever, 866
Mr. Dooley Says, 866
Mr. Dooley's Opinions, 866
Mr. Dooley's Philosophy, 866
Mr. Hodge and Mr. Hazard, 1904
Mr. Pope, 1811
Mister Roberts, 2335
Mister Zip, 2154
Mrs. Bumpstead-Leigh, 2348
Mistress Nell, 2313
Mrs. Ripley's Trip, 893
Mitchell, Broadus, 3291, 4068, 5877
Mitchell, Donald Grant, 506–10
Mitchell, Donald W., 3669
Mitchell, Edward Page, about, 2874
Mitchell, John M., 5007
Mitchell, Langdon, 2313, 2337, 2347
Mitchell, Lucy Sprague, 5234
Mitchell, Margaret, 1618–19
Mitchell, Robert V., 5945
Mitchell, Silas Weir, about, 4828
Mitchell, Stewart, 3441
  ed., 100
Mitchell, Wesley C., about, 5888
Mitchell, William, general, 2981
  about, 3647, 5938
Mitchell, S. Dak., guidebook, 3899
Mitropoulos, Dimitri, about, 5654
Mittelholzer, Edgar, 1493
Mittelman, E. B., 6033
Mixed Company, 2147
Mizener, Arthur, 1431
Mliss, 930, 937, 939
Mobilizations, military, 3661 Moby-Dick, 333, 481–83, 491
Mock, Elizabeth, ed., 5717
Mock, James R., 3462
A Model of Christian Charity, 90
Modern Chivalry, 106–8
A Modern Instance, 965–66, 982
Modern Language Association of America, 2457, 2552
Modern Poetry and the Tradition, 2378
Modern Rhetoric, 2378
The Modern Temper, 2453
Modernist-fundamentalist controversy, 5429–30
Modes of Being, 5382
Modoc Indians, editorials, sketches, etc., 1065
Moeller, Philip, 2337
Moffett, Harold Y., 765 Mohawk River and valley, 4011
  fiction, 1355
Mohr, Charles E., ed., 2946
Mohun, 249–50
Mojave Desert, 3947
Molière, Jean Baptiste Pocquelin, about, 2466, 2474
Mollhausen, Heinrich Balduin, about, 5806
Molloy, Robert, 4093
Monaghan, Frank, 3304, 4229
Monaghan, James (Jay), 2757–59, 3345
Monday Night, 1242
Monetary policy. See Finance—public Money, 5974–75, 5983, 5993
Money Writes, 1754
The Monk and the Hangman's Daughter, 739
Monongahela River, 4019
Monopolies, 6026, 6030, 6392
  radio, 4709
  telephone, 4673, 4710
  See also Oligopoly
Monro, Isabel Stevenson, 5753
Monro, Kate M., 5753
Monroe, Harriet, 2760–61
  ed., 2567
  about, 2760–61
Monroe, James, about, 3284
Monroe, Paul, 5143
  ed., 5110
Monroe, Walter S., 5247
  ed., 5111
Monroe County, N.Y., 3810
Monroe Doctrine, 3138, 3284, 3575, 3577, 3579
Monroe Township, N.J., 3815
The Monster, 835
Mont Saint Michel and Chartres, 693–94
Montague, Ludwell Lee, 3584
Montague, William Pepperell, 5260, 5289
  ed., 5250
Montaigne, Michel Eyquem de, about, 280
Montana, 3951, 4147, 4178
  guidebook, 3910
  in literature, 4179
  resources, 4212
Montcalm, Louis Joseph de, about, 3171
Monte Cristo and Other Plays, 2313
Monteleone, Vincent J., 2274
Monterey, Calif., soc. life & cust., 4352–53
Monterey peninsula, Calif., 3930
Monteux, Pierre, about, 5649
Montez, Lola, about, 4923
Montgomery, D. E., 5898
Montgomery, Richard, drama, 105
Montlezun, baron de, 4289
  about, 4288
The Monument Rose, 1983
Monuments, public, 4049, 5735
  See also specific monuments, e.g., Lincoln Memorial; Mount Rushmore National Memorial Moody, Dwight L., about, 5395, 5403, 5405, 5480
Moody, Helen Wills, about, 4987
Moody, William R., 5480
Moody, William Vaughn, 1069–71, 2337
Moon, Bucklin, 2050–51
A Moon for the Misbegotten, 1649
The Moon Is Blue, 2335
The Moon Is Down, 1780
The Moon of the Caribbees, 1648
Moore, Addison Webster, 5254
Moore, Albert Burton, 4099
Moore, Douglas, 1222
Moore, Edward C., 5660
Moore, Ernest C., 5289
Moore, Glover, 3346
Moore, Harry Estill, 3783
Moore, Marianne, 1620–22
  about, 2426
Moore, Merrill, 1623–27
  about, 1628, 1809
Moore, R. C., about, 5457
Moorhead, Max L., ed., 4188
Moorish Science Temple of America, about, 5498
Moos, Malcolm C., 6132–33, 6366, 6422
  ed., 6421
Morais, Herbert M., 5408
The Moral Argument Against Calvinism, 231
The Moral Decision, 6261
Moral philosophy. See Ethics
Morals, 4315, 4519, 4566
Moravian Church, 4480, 5442
More, Louis Trenchard, 2425
More, Paul Elmer, 2425, 2479–81
  about, 2375, 2479, 2503, 2593
More Clinical Sonnets, 1627
More Fables, 703
More Fish to Fry, 5070
More Stories in the Modern Manner, 2566
Moreau de Saint-Méry, Médéric Louis Elie, 4263–65
  about, 4263
Morehouse, Ward, 4900
Morgan, Arthur Ernest, about, 4803
Morgan, Barbara B., 4968
Morgan, Bayard Quincy, 4481
Morgan, Dale L., 3989, 4176
Morgan, Edmund S., 3100, 3256–57
Morgan, Helen M., 3257
Morgan, Hugh Gerthon, 4589
Morgan, J. Pierpont, about, 5880, 5882, 5978
Morgan, John, about, 4822, 4856
Morgan, Lewis H., 2961, 3008
  about, 3009
Morgan, Murray C., 4216
Morgan, Robert J., 3324
Morgan, Thomas Hunt, about, 4721–22
Morgenstern, Julian, 5427
  about, 5427
Morgenthau, Hans J., 3626
Morison, Elting E., ed., 3465
Morison, Samuel Eliot, 3083, 3103, 3164, 3198, 3271, 3305, 3536, 3721, 3745, 5203, 5936
  ed., 6, 3171, 5203
Morley, Christopher, 5222
Morley, Sylvanus Griswold, 2994
  about, 2994
Morley of Blackburn, John Morley, viscount, about, 2480–81
Mormons and Mormonism, 2867, 3879, 3961, 4183, 5404, 5411, 5439
  fiction, 1424
  folklore, 5538
  folksongs & ballads, 5538
  hist., 2161, 4384, 5464–65, 5538
  legends, 5538
  music, 5630
The Morning after the First Night, 4906
The Morning Watch, 1907
Morrill, Justin Smith, about, 2768
Morrill Act, 5113, 5186, 5191
Morris, Alton Chester, ed., 5581
Morris, Charles, 5335
Morris, George Pope, 2295

Morris, Joe Alex, 2860
ed., 3548
Morris, Lloyd R., 3746, 4048, 4519, 4903, 5333, 5938 Morris, Richard B., 6057, 6229–30
ed., 3072, 3288
Morris, Robert, about, 6016
Morris, Wright, 2052–56
Morris, Ill., soc. condit., 4557
Morrison, Alfred J., tr. & ed., 4257
Morrison, Hugh S., 5714–15
Morrow, Dwight W., about, 3586
Morse, John T., Jr., 377, 3416, 4036
ed., 3263
Morse, Samuel F. B., about, 4675–76, 4680, 4752, 4786
Mort, Paul R., 5144
A Mortal Antipathy, 375
Mortal Summer, 1826
Mortenson, Ernest, 6267
Mortimer, Lillian, 2305
Morton, Ferdinand Joseph ("Jelly Roll"), about, 5643
Morton, Ira, 5037
Morton, Thomas, 51–52
about, 1873, 3198
Morton, Thomas G., 4850
Morton, William T. G., about, 4721, 4822
Morton's Hope, 2293
Mosely, P. E., 3562
Moses, Anna Mary R. ("Grandma"), 2762–63
about, 2763
Moses, Montrose J., 4937
ed., 145, 199, 2347–48
Mosher, William E., 6188
Mosier, Richard D., 5126
Moskowitz, Sam, 2377
Mosquitoes, 1381
Mosses from an Old Manse, 338–40
The Moth and the Flame, 2347
The Mother (Asch), 1191
The Mother (Buck), 1255
A Mother in Mannville, 1684
The Mother's Recompense, 1853
Motion pictures, 4905, 4944–63 actors & actresses, 4946 arbitration, 6299
audiences, 4895, 4950
censorship, 4947
essays, 1226
hist., 4519, 4944–46, 4954–55, 4959, 4962–63, 5689
in education, 5231
psychological aspects, 4951
satire, 1688
Motley, John Lothrop, 2293
about, 2462, 3376
Motorboat racing, 5016
Mott, Frank Luther, 1052, 2482
ed., 131, 2329, 2847, 2907, 2915
Mott, Frederick D., 4869
Mott, Rodney Loomer, 6097
Mounds and mound-builders, 2996, 4323
Mount, Charles Merrill, 5771
Mount, William Sidney, about, 5768
Mount Holyoke College, hist., 5193
Mount Hood, guidebook, 3938
Mount Rushmore National Memorial, 5737
Mount Savage, 2302
Mount Shasta, 4210
Mt. Sinai Holy Church of America, Inc., about, 5498
Mount Tyndall, 4210
Mount Vernon, Va. (George Washington's residence), 3271
Mount Whitney, 4210
Mountain Interval, 1452
Mountain life, 4174, 5064
short stories, 910, 917–21, 1084–88
The Mountain Lion, 2158
Mountain men, 3330
fiction, 312
The Mountain on the Desert, 1691
Mountain States, 3784
Mountain Time, 2415
Mountaineering, 2665, 3938, 4174, 4210–11
Mourning Becomes Electra, 1647–48
The Moving Finger, 1855
Mowatt, Anna Cora, 2337, 2347, 4927
about, 4927
Mowbray, Albert H., 5990
Mowrer, Edgar A., 3627
Mowry, George E., 3084, 3467, 4202
Muck, Karl, about, 5649
Muckrakers, 1107, 1155, 1754, 6430, 6432
See also Reform and reform movements
Mudd, Emily (Hartshorne), 4570
Muelder, Hermann R., 2973
Muelder, Walter G., ed., 5259
Mueller, John H., 5650
Mueller, Kate (Hevner), 5212
Münsterberg, Hugo, about, 4225, 5392
Muhlenberg, Frederick Augustus, about, 3231
Muhlenberg, Henry Melchior, about, 3231, 5396, 5462
Muhlenberg, William A., about, 5457
Muhlenberg family, 3231
Muir, John, 1072–83
about, 1081–82, 2422
Muldoon, William, about, 5032
Mulford, Roland J., 5155
Muller, Herbert J., 1897
Mullet, Charles F., 3258
Mumford, Lewis, 2407, 3731, 5695, 5701
ed., 5716
about, 5508
Muncie, Ind., soc. condit., 4593
Municipal government. See Local government Municipal law, 6277
radio & television, 4708
The Municipal Year Book, 6213
Munitions problem, 3669
Munitz, Milton Karl, 5375
Munsell, Joel, 6447
Munsey, Frank A., about, 2913
Munsey's Magazine, about, 2913
Munson, Gorham B., 2425
Murat, Prince Achille, 4293–96
Murchison, Carl A., ed., 5393
Murder for Pleasure, 2436
Murder in the Cathedral, 1359
The Murder of Lidice, 1608
The Murders in the Rue Morgue, 529
Murdock, Frank, 2301
Murdock, Kenneth B., 2424, 2483, 2496, 3199
ed., 48, 50, 83, 1009
Murfree, Mary Noailles, 1084–88, 2296
Murphy, Arthur E., 3739, 5290
Murphy, Henry C., 5971, 5977
tr., 3208
Murphy, Robert Cushman, 2962
Murray, Henry A., ed., 441
Murray, John, about, 5473
Murray, Philip, about, 6394
Murray, William G., 5848
Murrell, William, 5803
Murry, J. Middleton, 656
Museums, 3049, 4726, 5721, 5794–5800
directory, 4716
industrial, 4716
Ohio, 4119
Music, 3736, 3747–48, 3751, 4025, 5605–87 and poetry, 1038, 1044–46, 1580 and the State, 5647
bibl., 5606, 5610–11
criticism, 1828
discography, 5613
econ. aspects, 5615, 5623
education, 5617, 5625, 5629, 5668–72, 5684
hist., 5607–8, 5612–14, 5628, 5635, 5638–39, 5650
Jewish, 4458
Bethlehem, Pa., 5667
Boston, 5628, 5648–49, 5672
Calif., 5630
Chicago, 5651–52
Cleveland, 5630
Minneapolis, 5654
Nashville, 3765
New England, 5633
New York (City), 4049, 5626–27
Philadelphia, 5629
Southwest, 5630
Toledo, 4894
See also Opera
The Music from behind the Moon, 1262
Musical comedy, 4935, 5638
Musical Courier, about, 5681
Musical instrument makers, 5628
Musicians, 146, 2638, 5644, 5673–87
bibl., 5606
biog. (collected), 5622, 5632, 5634, 5642
unions, 5619
See also Composers
Muskingum, Ohio, 3873
Musselman, G. P., 4479
Musselman, Morris M., 4954
Musser, Paul H., 198
Mussey, June Barrows, ed., 4029
Mutiny in January, 3264
Muzzey, David Saville, 3442
My Ántonia, 1276–77
My Boyhood Dreams, 798–99
My Chinese Marriage, 1659
My Days of Anger, 1374
My Début as a Literary Person, 798–99
My Diary North and South, 4379–81

My Ears Are Bent, 2756
My Farm of Edgewood, 509
My Father's Business, 2350
My First Lie, 798–99
My Glorious Brothers, 1979
My Heart and My Flesh, 1699
My Heart for Hostage, 1515
My Heart's in the Highlands, 2110, 2112
My Lady Pokahontas, 66, 251
My Life among the Indians, 1065
My Life and Hard Times, 1817
My Lord, What a Morning, 5673
My Mortal Enemy, 1277
My Name Is Aram, 2111
My Partner, 2316
My Several Worlds, 1260
My Study Windows, 467
My Summer in a Garden, 1137–38
My Ten Years in a Quandary, 1217
My Uncle Dudley, 2052
Myer, Jesse S., comp., 4818
Myers, Albert Cook, ed., 3214
Myers, Gustavus, 5882
Myers, Louis M., 2249
Myers, Margaret G., 5993
Myers, William Starr, 3486, 6385
Myrdal, Gunnar, 4446
Mystery novels. See Detective and mystery fiction
The Mystery of Marie Roget, 529
Mysticism, 5355
Mythology, Indian, 3013, 3021
Myths. See Legends and tales
Myths and Legends of the Old Plantation, 914 Myths and Myth-Makers, 5302
Myths and Realities, 4517

N

NEA Journal, 5245
Nagel, Ernest, 5267, 5290, 5291, 5350 ed., 5267
Nagel, Hildegard, tr., 4814
The Naked and the Dead, 2026
Nally, Thomas P., 5226
Names, 2238, 2246, 2248, 2264, 4390
See also Place-names
Names on the Land, 2976
The Nancy Flyer, a Stagecoach Epic, 1656
Nantucket, Mass., 4038
Napoleon I, about, 231
Narrative of the Captivity and Restoration of Mrs. Mary Rowlandson, 55
Narrative poetry. See Poetry—epic and extended narrative Narratives of Early Virginia, 71
Narratives of the Indian Wars, 55
Narratives of the Witchcraft Cases, 41
The Narrow House, 1744
Nasby, Petroleum V., pseud. See Locke, David Ross Nash, Ogden, 1629–34
about, 2426
Nashville, intellectual life, 3765
Nason, Arthur H., ed., 167
Nason, Thomas W., about, 5783
Nast, Thomas, 5803
illus., 424–25, 544
about, 422, 2917
Nathan, George Jean, 4906
Nathan, Robert Gruntal, 1635–43
Nathan, W. L., 3751
Nathanson, Jerome, 5296
Nation, Carry, about, 2588
The Nation, 2503, 2882, 2921
National Academy of Sciences, Washington, D.C., 4774
about, 4774
National Archives, 3066–67
about, 3066–67
National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, about, 6106
National Association of Nurse Anesthetists, hist., 4816 National Avenue, 1806
National banks, 5993, 5999
National Bureau of Standards, about, 4769
National characteristics, 2380, 2464, 2469, 2501, 3123, 3140, 3146–47, 3609, 3732–35, 3738, 3762, 4119, 4223–24, 4229, 4234, 4513–14, 4555–56
National Commission on Life Adjustment for American Youth, about, 5224
National Committee on General Education, 5228
National Conference of Social Work, 4618
National Council for the Social Studies, 3050, 3059
National Council of the Churches of Christ in the United States of America, about, 5487 National defense, 4761, 4773
econ. aspects, 5879, 5889
National Education Association, 5106, 5228, 5240, 5245, 5247
National Funeral Directors Association of the United States, 4527
National Gallery of Art, 5594
National Geographic Society, Washington, D.C., 2962
National Health Assembly, Washington, D.C., 4870
National Historical Publications Commission, 3068
National Industrial Conference Board, 5893
National Institute for Commercial and Trade Organization Executives, 6019
National Labor Union, about, 6034
The National Law Library, 6223
National Medical Library, about, 6476
National Museum, about, 4726, 4744
National Orchestral Survey, 5647
National parks and reserves, 1072, 1075–77, 2956, 5813, 5866
National Planning Association. Committee of New England, 5890 National Research Council, 4777
about, 4774
National Resources Board. Land Planning Committee, 3043
National Resources Committee, 5898
National Resources Committee. Science Committee, 4777 National Resources Planning Board, 5898
about, 6144
National Resources Planning Board. Science Committee, 4777
National Science Foundation, about, 4776, 4778
National Security Council, about, 6144
National Security Resources Board, about, 6144
National Society for the Study of Education, 5246
National Society for the Study of Education. Committee on Early Childhood Education, 5150
National songs, hist., 5616
National Tuberculosis Association, 4868
hist., 4863
National university, proposed, 101
Nationalism
18th cent., 3246, 3282, 3328, 5406
18th–19th cent., 3106, 4526
19th cent., 3305, 3313, 3328, 3347, 3363–64, 3397, 3399, 3412, 3419, 3431, 3445, 3781
Nationalism in literature
essays, 2421
(1764–1819), 101, 105, 109–17, 134, 146–48, 165–70, 2412, 2530
(1820–70), 198, 230, 252, 280, 283, 317, 323, 368, 381, 427, 430, 487, 511, 546, 769–71, 2295, 2478
(1871–1914), 890, 1136
Nationality, 4417, 4427, 4430
See also Foreign population
Native Son, 2233
Nativism, 4515, 6164
Natoma (opera), 5681
Natural history, 2956, 4726, 4738
bibl., 4736
S.C., 5087
Tex., 4734
See also Animals; Plants
Natural history societies. See Scientific societies
Natural law, 3258, 6072, 6094
Natural resources, 2940, 5810, 5884, 5898, 5900
Ga., 4095
Middle West, 4113
Mo., 4108
N. Dak., 4165
Northwest, Pacific, 4212
Ohio, 4119
Southern States, 4079, 4084
Vt., 4033
Va., 4085
See also Conservation of natural resources
Naturalism in literature, 3758
fiction, 768, 821, 959, 1048, 1089, 1333, 1743, 1775, 2365, 2498
See also Realism in literature
Naturalists, 4307
bibl., 4736
biog. (collected), 4734
See also names of individual naturalists

Naturalization, 4424
Nature, 281–82, 286, 293
Nature and Man, 5380
Nature in art, 5762
Nature in literature
  anthologies, 2453
  editorials, sketches, etc., 280–2, 286, 293, 506, 509–10, 633, 716–17, 740–44, 1136–38, 1144, 1724–26, 2453
  fiction, 716
  hist. & crit., 2422
  poetry, 7–11, 134, 138, 216–21, 223–25, 455, 614–17, 619–30, 636–37, 639, 642, 662, 667–71, 673, 838–46, 1126–31, 1823
  prose, 21, 36, 46, 585, 587–97, 599–602, 605–6, 608–9, 633–35, 638, 1072–83
  short stories, 612–13, 716, 1724
Naturopathy, 4811
Naughton, Thomas Raymond, 6221
Naughty Anthony, 2315
Naughty Marietta (operetta), 5681
Nauvoo, Ill., guidebook, 3879
Navajo Indians, 3013
  fiction, 1551–52
Naval Academy, Annapolis, Md., about, 3825
Naval Gun Factory, Washington, D.C., hist., 3670
Naval Observatory, about, 4770
Naval policy, 3643, 3666, 3674
Naval Research Laboratory, about, 3675
Naval warfare, law of, 3524
Navigation, 3164, 4110, 4114, 4746
Navigation Acts (1649–96), 3193, 3243
Naville, Pierre, 5393
Navy, 3666–77
  biog. (collected), 3825
  hist., 252, 3666–69, 3671–74, 3676, 4040
    American Revolution, 3678
    War with France (1798–1800), 3685–86
    War of 1812, 3688
    War with Mexico, 3689
    Civil War, 3416, 3700
    Spanish-American War, 3708
  in literature, 2746
  personnel policies, 3669
Navy Dept., 3700
  scientific research, 3675
Navy Yard, Washington, D.C., hist., 3670
The Nazarene, 1190
Near East, relations with, 3512, 3588
  travel & travelers, 2278
Nebraska, 3944, 3948, 4166
  fiction, 1276, 2052
  frontier life, 2799–2800, 4156
  govt., 6195
  guidebooks, 3901–3
  hist., 3901, 4166
  law, 6233
  rural communities, 4109
The Necessary Angel, 1783
Ned Myers, 271
Needles and Pins, 2317
Needlework, 5593, 5595, 5604, 5785
Neely, Wayne Caldwell, 5827
Nef, John U., 4504
Neff, Emery Edward, 1719, 2289
Negligible Tales, 739
Negroes, 2690, 2839–40, 4310, 4428, 4435–51 actors, 4921
  biog. (collected), 5515
  boxers, 5025
  colonization, Africa, 4258
  econ. condit., 4446, 4448, 6375
  education, 4443, 4450, 5116, 5206
  folklore, 5515, 5517–18, 5523, 5527, 5535, 5547
    in literature, 910–16, 922, 924–25
  in art, 5765
  language (dialect, etc.), 2271
    in literature, 192–93, 756–59, 856–60, 910–16, 922, 924–25, 1032, 1038, 1099–1102, 1106, 1133–35, 1526, 1653
    legends, 5517–18, 5521
  musicians, 5644
  politics & suffrage, 3106, 6375, 6378–79, 6409
  religion, 5401, 5498–5502, 5527, 5547
  soldiers (Civil War), 2280
  songs, 5517–18, 5521, 5540, 5556, 5564, 5569, 5582 spirituals, 5540, 5555, 5558–59
    Baltimore, 4062
    Brooklyn, 4046
    Chicago, 4439, 4451, 6375
    Northern States, 4310, 4451
    Philadelphia, 4258
    Southern States, 4083, 4438, 4443 6376, 6378–79
  See also Slavery
Negroes in literature editorials, essays, sketches, etc., 192–93, 1099, 1103–4, 1106, 2364
  drama, 1821
  fiction, 562–67, 722, 756, 949–52, 1099, 1106, 1390, 1392, 1512–13, 1526–29, 1569, 1653–55, 1759–60, 1832, 1914–15, 1937, 1939, 1966–67, 2011, 2050–51, 2232–33, 2235, 2631
  humor, 2501
  poetry, 856–59, 861, 1133–35, 1521, 1537–38, 1540, 1937–38
  reporting, 1653
  short stories, 192–93, 756–61, 856, 859–60, 910–16, 920–22, 924–25, 1032, 1099–1102, 1106, 1523–25, 2234
Neighborhood houses, New York (City), 4624
Neihardt, John Gneisenau, 1644–46
Nelson, Arnold L., 2960
Nelson, Bruce C., 4147
Nelson, Helge, 4486
Nelson, John H., ed., 2276
Nelson, Joseph, 2764
Nelson, Lowry, 4582
Nelson, William Rockhill, about, 2887
Nerber, John, ed., 417
Netherlanders. See Dutch
Netherlands, 2293
  relations with, 3528
Nets to Catch the Wind, 1903
Neuberger, R. L., 6207
Neufeld, Maurice F., ed., 6032
Neuman, H., tr., 4268
Neumann, Henry, 5435
Neumeyer, Esther S., 4998
Neumeyer, Martin H., 4998
Neurology, 4828
  study & teaching, 4840
Neurosurgery, 4821
Neutrality, 3535, 3582
  World War I, 3470, 3541
  World War II, 3537–38
Nevada, 4184–85
  descr., 4184
  fiction, 1420, 1954
  guidebook, 3916
  hist., 3959, 3961, 3989, 4184, 4189
  Indians, 3019, 3023, 3041
  music, 5630
Nevertheless, 1621
Nevins, Allan, 421, 2858–59, 2873, 3093, 3259, 3335, 3398–99, 3423, 3443–44, 3534, 4033, 4676, 4789, 5915–16, 5939
  ed., 2691, 2823, 3313, 3334, 3351, 3422, 4047, 4234
Nevius, Blake, 1856
The New Apologists for Poetry, 2452
New Castle, Del., 3823
"New Criticism," 2378, 2421, 2559
New Deal, 3119, 3458, 3491–92, 3497, 5877, 6095, 6354–55, 6364
New Directions in Prose & Poetry, 2560
New England, 4026–42, 4423
  agriculture, 5820, 5840
  biog. (collected), 2693, 4029, 4271
  church hist., 5417
  descr., 5086
  econ. condit., 4031, 5890
  fisheries, 5872
  folklore, 5524, 5534, 5541
  folksongs & ballads, 5554, 5574, 5580
  foreign population, 4026, 4413
  govt., Colonial period, 6079
  guidebooks, 3782, 3791–3805
  hist., 2268, 2681, 3279, 3281, 3783–84, 3965, 4030
    Colonial period, 3131, 3181, 3213, 3219, 3743
  intellectual life, 2549, 3742–43, 3745
  language (dialects, etc.), 2268
    in literature, 209, 558, 881–86
  music, 5633
  postal service, 4665
  public libraries, 6472
  schools, 2674
  science & technology, 4730
  soc. condit., 4031
  soc. life & cust., 2600, 2651–52, 4029
  theology, 2483, 5428
  transportation, 5933
  travel & travelers, 36–39, 69–71, 3069, 4227, 4261, 4266, 4271, 4279, 4324, 4329
A New England Boyhood, 906–7
The New England Courant, about, 2854

A New England Group and Others, 2480
New England in literature, 2459
diaries, journals, etc., 36–39, 49, 53, 58, 90–91, 187, 294–95, 600–1, 603, 706–10, 900, 906–7
drama, 168–70, 198, 200, 1647–48
essays, 286–87, 291–93, 298–301, 368, 371–74, 465–67, 469, 979, 1002–3, 2486
fiction, 188, 333–47, 356, 402–4, 470, 481–83, 491, 562, 568–73, 576, 579–84, 665, 706–10, 1284, 1286, 1437–44, 1589, 1619, 1736, 1845, 1916, 1992, 2156
hist. & crit., 1–6, 43–44, 69–71, 91, 2381, 2483, 2549
humor, 209, 558–61
poetry, 7–11, 72–74, 79–83, 288–90, 368–70, 455–59, 662, 667–71, 673, 1451–52, 1583–84, 1713–14, 2007, 2374
prose, 585, 587–97, 599–606
satire, 51–52, 75–77
short stories, 51, 333–40, 356, 359, 562, 574–75, 706, 711–12, 881–86, 1023–31, 1762, 2160
theology, 17, 19–22, 33–35, 40, 43–44, 59–62, 65, 86–89, 93–95, 2483
New England: Indian Summer, 2381
A New England Nun, 883–84
The New England Quarterly, 2561
New England Reformers, 286
The New England Weekly Journal, about, 2854
A New England Winter, 1008
New Englander and Yale Review, 2577
New Englanders, 3965, 4027–30, 4394, 4423
drama, 4926
Northwest, Old, 4117–18
See also Yankees
New English Canaan, 52
New Found Land, 1586
New France, 3156, 3171, 3175, 3207, 3226
New Hampshire, 4032
fiction, 706–10, 1656, 1916, 1918, 2163
folklore, 1222
guidebook, 3796
hist., 4031
poetry, 1451–52, 1916
short stories, 1222
New Haven, Conn., 4042, 4261
A New Home—Who'll Follow?, 416–17
New Hope, 1800
New Humanism. See Humanism, New New Jersey
culture, 3232
govt., 3470
guidebooks, 3811–15
hist., 3214, 3232, 3811, 3994, 4053
politics, 6395
New Jersey in literature
fiction, 1872, 1916
poetry, 1872, 1876
short stories, 1879
New Jersey Legislature, about, 6395
The New Laokoon, 2375
New Mexico, 2737
archaeology, 2992
architecture, 5723
descr., 4198
fiction, 1196, 1686–87
folklore, 5537
guidebook, 3924
hist., 3956, 3961, 4174, 4189, 4198
Indians, 2723–24, 3013, 3023, 3041
language (dialects, etc.), 4198
resources, 4188
The New Mexico Quarterly Review, 2562
The New Nation, 726
New Netherland. See New York (Colony)
New Orleans, 2586, 2871
guidebook, 3852
hist., 1036, 4101
jazz music, 5644
soc. life & cust., 4101, 4283, 4288
theater, 4922
New Orleans in literature
drama, 2221
fiction, 745, 749–50, 945, 1032, 1381, 1390
short stories, 746–48, 945, 951–52, 954–55, 1032–35
The New Partisan Reader, 2566
New Plymouth Colony. See Plymouth Colony
The New Realism, 5260
The New Republic, 1821
New School for Social Research, about, 5219
The New South, 1038
The New Spoon River, 1601
New Thought, 5439
The New World, 3153–75
colonization, 3086, 3156–58, 3162, 3169, 3171, 3173, 3175, 3223 disc. & explor., 3153–62, 3164–69, 3171–75, 3203, 3206–7, 3212, 3215, 3217, 3223, 4230
sources, 3163
geography, 3155, 3161, 3174
hist., 3075, 3086, 3153, 3157, 3165, 3189, 3223
sources, 3223
New World Writing, 2563
New Year's Day (The 'Seventies), 1845
New York (City)
art collections, 5795–5800
Bohemianism, 3757
Chinese, 4467
commerce, 5951
concerts, 5626–27 culture, Colonial period, 4518
econ. condit., 4602, 4638
folklore, 5522
foreign population, 4409
geography, 2939
govt., 6214
guidebooks, 3808–9
harbor, 5951
hist., 2478, 3443, 4045–49
hospitals, 4851, 4857
Italians, 4497
music, 5626–27, 5644
New York (City)—Continued
Negroes, 4447
pictorial works, 3782, 4045
politics, 4535, 6207, 6381–82
press, 2904
Puerto Ricans, 4470
soc. condit., 4597, 4624, 4638
soc. life & cust., 2586, 2691–92, 2755, 2822–23, 4048, 4261, 4263, 4290, 4602, 5522
theater, 2017, 4897, 4907–9, 4916, 4924, 4926, 4935, 4942–43, 5638, 5657–59, 5662
Yiddish press, 2898
See also Brooklyn; Harlem (N.Y.); Manhattan
New York (City) in literature
descr., 242–43, 1859
drama, 168–70, 1688–89, 2063, 2535
editorials, sketches, etc., 2466, 4048
essays, 979, 1002–3, 1859, 2017
fiction, 691–92, 1190, 1193, 1300, 1327, 1333–35, 1339, 1372, 1376, 1446–47, 1449, 1612, 1614, 1636, 1642, 1656–58, 1680, 1688, 1828–29, 1831, 1842, 1845, 1889–90, 1909, 1911–12, 1914–15, 1966–67, 2025, 2027, 2069, 2074, 2094, 2107–8, 2110, 2132, 2229, 2231, 2278
humor, 2152
personal narratives, 2473
poetry, 1857–58, 2133
short stories, 1111, 1114–20, 1155, 1851, 1855, 1910, 1913, 2057, 2110, 2145
New York (City) Health Dept., about, 4881
New York (City) Metropolitan Museum of Art, 5754, 5804
American Wing, 5796
hist., 5795
New York (City) Metropolitan Opera, about, 5657, 5659, 5662
New York (City) Museum of Modern Art, 5602, 5697, 5717–18, 5797
New York (City) Public Library, about, 4819, 6465, 6476
New York (Colony)
govt., 3224
hist., 3194, 3200, 3210, 3224, 3232
law, 6221
travel & travelers, 3208
New York (State), 4044–52
biog. (collected), 4271
boundaries, 4027
culture, 3224, 3232, 4027
folklore, 5518, 5548
govt., 6195
guidebooks, 3806–10
hist., 3304, 3441, 3966, 4027, 4043–44, 4049
hospitals, 4846
libraries, 6468
politics, 6374, 6384–85, 6387, 6399
prisons, 4653
travel & travelers, 3069, 4241, 4261, 4266, 4269, 4271, 4285

New York (State) in literature
essays, 675, 740
fiction, 268–69, 511, 514–15, 1155, 1158, 1160, 1338, 1353–56, 2132, 2282
humor, 382–83
short stories, 384–87, 1160
New York (State) Constitutional Convention (1821), about, 6374
New York (State) Constitutional Convention Committee, 6080
New York (State) Legislature, about, 6115
New York (State) Republican Party, about, 6385
New York Academy of Medicine. Committee on Medicine and the Changing Order, 4808
New York Academy of Medicine. Committee on Public Health Relations, 4851
New York Academy of Sciences, about, 4717
New York City Ballet, about, 4969
New York Committee on the Study of Hospital Internships and Residencies, 4857
New York Daily News, about, 2862
The New York Evening Post, about, 2858, 2873
New York Folklore Quarterly, 5518
The New York Gazette, about, 2854
New York Herald, about, 2851, 2868, 2877
New York Herald-Tribune, about, 2868 2903, 4984
European ed., about, 2872
New York Hospital, about, 4838
The New York Idea, 2337, 2347
New York Society Library, about, 6468
New York State Historical Association, 4044
New York Stock Exchange, about, 5982
New York stock market, 3477–78
The New York Times, 2564, 4984
The New York Times Book Review, 2564
The New York Weekly Journal, about, 2854, 2931
New York Tribune, about, 2851, 2868, 2883
The New Yorker, 2565, 2567, 2919
Newcomb, Rexford, 5719, 5723
Newcomb, Simon, 4724, 4756
about, 4724, 4756
Newcomer, Mabel, 6028
Newell, William Wells, 5588
Newfoundland fisheries controversy, 3542, 3554–55
Newhouse, Edward, 2057–59
Newlin, Claude M., ed., 108
Newman, Albert H., 5443
Newport, R.I.
econ. condit., 4602
essays, 1002–3
soc. life & cust., 4040, 4387, 4602
News agencies, 2860, 2864, 2890
News of the Night, 2309
Newsome, Albert Ray, 4090
Newspaper court reporting, 6288
Newspaper Days (Dreiser), 1344
Newspaper Days (Mencken), 1604
Newspaper Enterprise Association, about, 2890
Newspapermen, 2847, 2849, 2853, 2857, 2877–94
bibl., 2850
biog. (collected), 2848
See also Reporters and reporting; and names of individuals Newspapers, 2845–76, 2924, 2927
bibl., 2852
chain ownership, 2848, 2866, 2886, 2890, 2927
Civil War, 2851
Colonial, 2854, 2880
directory, 5958
foreign language, 2895–99
hist., 2846–48, 2852, 6447
policies & practices, 2846, 2851, 2900–9, 2911
Ariz., 4199
Ga., 2856
New York (City), 2904, 4049
Northwest, Pacific, 4214
Ohio, 2857
Oreg., 2863
Southern States, 2853
Washington, D.C., 4063
See also Newspapermen; Syndication (newspaper)
Newton, Arthur P., 3168
ed., 3169, 3179
Newton, Earle W., 4033
Newton, Walter H., 3486
The Next Voice You Hear (motion picture), about, 4949
Nez Percé Indians, 3001
Niagara
essays, 1003
hist., 3950
travel & travelers, 4336
Nicaragua, relations with, 3575
Nicaraguan Canal, 3437, 4221
Nice People, 2348
Nichols, Alice, 4167
Nichols, Dudley, ed., 2332
Nichols, Roy Franklin, 3347, 3400
Nicholson, Joseph William, 5500
Nick of the Woods, 201–4
Nickerson, Hoffman, 3682
Nicodemus, 1714
Nicolay, John G., 421, 941, 3395, 3426
Niebuhr, Helmut Richard, 5399
about, 5433
Niebuhr, Reinhold, 5399, 5447, 5496
about, 5432–33, 5436
Niger, Samuel, 4459
Nigeria, 5989
Nigger Heaven, 1832
A Night in Acadie, 761
Night Music, 2065
Night of the Poor, 2090
Night over Taos, 1174
Night Rider, 2194
Nightingale, Florence, about, 4852, 4854
The Nightmare Has Triplets, 1264–66
Nights with Uncle Remus, 914–16
Nikisch, Arthur, about, 5649
Niklaus, Thelma, 4953
Niles, Blair, 3977
Niles, Hezekiah, about, 2924, 3260
Niles, Samuel V., 3260
Niles' Weekly Register, 2924, 3260
Nims, John Frederick, 2060–62
Nine Days to Mukalla, 2097
1919, 1325, 1328
Nisei, 2812, 4466
Nishimoto, Richard S., 4469
Nissenson, Samuel G., 3200
Nixon, Edgar B., ed., 5884
Nixon, Herman Clarence, 3958, 4068, 4594
Nixon, Phyllis J., 2255–56
Nixon, Raymond B., 3445
The No 'Count Boy, 1475
No Friendly Voice, 5235
"No Haid Pawn," 1100–2
No Man Is an Island, 2042
No Man Knows My History, 5464
No Matter What Happens, 2754
No More Bohemia, 1553
No More War, 2342
No Mother to Guide Her, 2305
No People Like Show People, 4931
No Poems; or Around the World Backwards and Sideways, 1216
No Retreat, 1483
No Star Is Lost, 1374
No Thanks, 1313
No Time for Comedy, 1209
No Villain Need Be, 1423
No, Yong-Park, 4232
Noah, Mordecai Manuel, 2347
Noble, Peter, 4960
The Noble Exile, 517
Noble savage, 239, 241
Nock, Albert Jay, 3297, 4535
ed., 215
Noel, Mary, 2916
Noetzel, Gregor, maps, 3082
Nolan, Jeannette (Covert), 1132
Noland, Charles F. M., 5542
Nominalist and Realist, 286
Nomini Hall, Va., 2673
Nona Vincent, 1012
None Shall Look Back, 1468
Nonpartisan League, about, 5831, 6356
Nook Farm, 814
Noon Wine, 1661
Norborg, Sverre, 5363
Nordstjernan, about, 2895
Norfolk, Va., 4088, 4263
Norris, Benjamin Franklin, 1089–98
about, 2365, 2430, 2464, 2517
Norris, George W., about, 3446, 6195
North American Review, 2294
North & South, 1925–26
North Carolina, 3833, 3945, 3963, 4023, 4079, 4090
architecture, 5706
counties, 4090
culture, 3233
drama, 1473, 1475
fiction, 405, 1473–74, 1887–88
folklore, 5529, 5536
folksongs & ballads, 5582
governors, 4090
guidebooks, 3831–33
hist., 3216, 3223, 3233, 4021, 4023, 4090, 4104

North Carolina—Continued
language (dialects, etc.), 2256
legends, 5536
short stories, 1239, 1476
travel & travelers, 4248–50, 4277–78
North Dakota, 3951, 4165 econ. geography, 4165
frontier life, 4156
guidebook, 3895
hist., 4147
rural communities, 4109
North Is Black, 1553
North Little Rock, Ark., guidebook, 3854
North of Boston, 1452
North Pole expeditions. See Arctic expeditions
North Star Country, 3954
Northern Plains, frontier life, 4155–56
The Northern Shoshoni Indians, 2364
Northrop, F.S.C., 3758
ed., 5384
Northwest, Old, 4109–44
architecture, 5719
culture, 3737, 4117
descr. & trav., 2803
econ. condit., 4111
guidebooks, 3862–94
historical geography, 2969
hist., 3239, 4109–44, 5931
Indian fighting, 3660
soc. life & cust., 4111, 4115
travel & travelers, 366, 4307, 4322, 4324, 4329, 4349, 4358, 4374
writers & writings, 4112
Northwest, Pacific
econ. condit., 4212
fiction, 2161
governors, 4213
guidebooks, 3935–39
hist., 4213–14, 4022
Russian claims, 3560
travel & travelers, 391
Northwest Passage, 1710, 3160, 3167, 3169
Northwestern States, 3951
boundaries, 3951
descr. & trav., 2663
hist., 3663, 3783, 4147
Indians, 2998
pictorial guidebook, 3782
Northwestern University, Evanston, Ill., about, 4993
Norton, Andrews, about, 5436
Norton, Charles Eliot, 5387
ed., 11, 462, 465–67
about, 2480
Norwegians
fiction, 1720–23
immigration, 2267, 4482, 4484–85, 4487
language (dialects, etc.), 2267
Wis., 4347
Norwood, William Frederick, 4860
Noss, Murray, 2350
Not by Strange Gods, 1706
Not Guilty, 6298
Not Heaven, 1450
Not So Deep as a Well, 1651
Not So Long Ago, 4519
Notes of a Son and Brother, 1015
Notes on the State of Virginia, 4753
Notions of the Americans, 261
Notre Dame, Ind. University, about, 5041, 5044
Nourse, Henry S., ed., 55
Nova Britannia, 3031
The Novel of Violence in America, 2427
Novels. See Fiction
November Boughs, 627, 638
Now the Sky, 1827
Now with His Love, 1227
Nowell, Elizabeth, ed., 1894
Nueces County, Tex., 4476
Nugent, Elliott, 2334
Nullification (1820–1839), 3303, 3328
Number One, 1332
Nuñez Cabeça de Vaca, Alvar, 3217
Nursery Schools, 5148
Nurses and nursing, 4808, 4816, 4820, 4835, 4864
biog. (collected), 4854
hist., 4852
Nute, Grace L., 3170
Nutrition, 4722, 5819
Nutting, M. Adelaide, about, 4854
Nye, Edgar Wilson ("Bill"), about, 1126
Nye, Russel B., 3060, 3380, 3401, 3446

O

O Captain! My Captain!, 623
O Genteel Lady!, 1438
O Pioneers!, 1276–77
O Shepherd, Speak!, 1758
Oakes, J. B., 6128
Oakley, Annie, about, 4979
The Oasis, 2019
Oats, 5835
Oberfirst, Robert, ed., 2318
Oberhoffer, Emil, about, 5654
Oberholtzer, Ellis Paxson, 3447
Oberlin College, about, 5670
Oberndorf, Clarence P., 375
O'Brien, E. J., ed., 2322
O'Brien, Frank M., 2874
O'Brien, Robert, 4209
Obscure Destinies, 1277
Observations by Mr. Dooley, 866
Occupational therapy, 4840
Occupations, 6043 immigrants, 4395
Italians, 4497
Jews, 4459
Negroes, 4439
Nisei, 4466
Ocean City, N.J., 4596
The Ocean Highway, 3788
Ochs, Adolf S., about, 2869
Ocmulgee National Monument, 3840
O'Connor, Basil, 5427
about, 5427
O'Connor, Richard, 3701
O'Connor, William Van, 1402, 1785, 2361, 2484, 3376
The Octopus, 1093
The Octoroon, 2337
Ocular surgery, 4844
O'Daniel, W. Lee, about, 4192
An Ode in Time of Hesitation, 1069
Ode Recited at the Commemoration of the Living and Dead Soldiers of Harvard University, 459
Ode to the Confederate Dead, 1811
Odegard, Peter H., 4554, 6338
Odell, Alfred T., ed., 554
Odell, George C. D., 4924
Odets, Clifford, 2063–68, 2327, 2333, 2348
O'Donnell, James, about, 4536
Odum, Howard W., 3783, 3785, 4079, 4541, 5561
ed., 4540
Oehser, Paul H., 4775
Of All Things, 1214
Of Making Many Books, 6449
Of Men and Mountains, 2665
Of Mice and Men, 1780, 2333, 2336
Of the Earth Earthy, 4531
Of Time and the River, 1889–90
Of Broadway, 1175
Offenbach, Jacques, 5679
Office of Air Force History, 3727
Office of Education, 5206, 6474
Office of Experiment Stations, about, 4768
Office of Indian Affairs, 3043
Office of Naval Records and Library, 3686 Office of Scientific Research and Development, 4778
about, 4761
Office of the Comptroller of the Navy, 3677
Office of War Information, about, 3607
Official Records of the Rebellion, 3378, 3697
Ogden, Rollo, 2858
ed., 2882
Ogg, Frederic A., 6137
Oglala Sioux Indians, 2801
hist., 3003
Ogres and giants in folklore, 5528–29, 5546
Oh, Promised Land, 1787
Oh Susanna (song), 5677
O'Hara, John, 1429, 2069–78
about, 2536
Ohio, 3948, 4118–22
architecture, 5719
folksongs & ballads, 5573
frontier life, 4097–98, 4121
govt., 6195
guidebooks, 3862–73
hist., 4030, 4109, 4111, 4115, 4120–21
journalism, 2857
politics, 6428–29
rural communities, 4109
travel & travelers, 4277–78
Western Reserve, 4030, 4118
Ohio in literature
editorials, sketches, etc., 422–26
fiction, 867, 980, 1178, 1691, 1694
personal narratives, 964, 982
poetry, 2788
short stories, 1149–50, 1179, 1691
Ohio River and valley
descr., 2610
geography, 4113

Ohio River and valley—Continued
hist., 3147, 4110
intellectual life, 3767
mounds, 2996
travel & travelers, 319, 321, 4276, 4281, 4300, 4324, 4336, 4344
Ohio State Senate, about, 6428
Oil! A Novel, 1756
Oil industry. See Petroleum resources and industry
"Okie" minorities in Calif., 4204
Oklahoma, 3960, 3964, 4169–71
cities & towns, 4171
Delaware Indians, 3020
descr., 4170
fiction, 1403, 1406
Five Civilized Tribes, 3025–27
folksongs & ballads, 5570
guidebooks, 3908–9
hist., 4169, 4171, 4189
Olcott, Charles S., 3448
Old age employment, 4635
insurance, 4633
Old Black Joe (song), 5677
Old Bullion Benton, 3321
Old Cambridge, 2280
Old Creole Days, 746–48
The Old English Dramatists, 465, 467
The Old Farm and the New Farm, 147
The Old House in the Country, 2780
Old Ironsides, 368
Old Jules, 2800
The Old Lady's Restoration, 1035
Old Love Letters, 2307
The Old Maid, 1845, 1855
Old Man, 1390
The Old Man and Jim, 1126
The Old Man and the Sea, 1500
Old Mr. Flood, 2755
Old Morality, 1661
An Old New England School, 2674
Old New York, 1845
Old Pines, 1239
Old Plantation Days, 1724, 5087
Old Possum's Book of Practical Cats, 1359
The Old South, 1103–4
The Old Swimmin'-Hole and 'Leven More Poems, 1126
The Old Virginia Gentleman, 193
The Old Virginia Lawyer, 1103–4
The Old World and the New, 3771
Older, Fremont, 2888
about, 2888
Older, Mrs. Fremont, 2884
Oldtown Folks, 572–73
Ole Miss', 5066
Ole 'Stracted, 1100–2
O'Leary, Frank, ed., 2274
O'Leary, R. S., 6195
Oligopoly, 5887
Oliphant, Mary C. Simms, ed., 554
Oliver, Egbert S., ed., 491
Oliver, Henry M., 5971
Oliver, John W., 4727
Oliver, Robert T., 3597
Oliver Wiswell, 1711
Olmsted, Frederick Law, 4363–68
Olney, Marguerite, comp., 5574
Olson, James C., 4166
Olson, Julius E., ed., 3215
Olsson, K. A., 5442
Omaha Indian reservation, 3042
O'Meara, Carroll, 4694
Omoo, 476–77
On a Soldier Fallen in the Philippines, 1069
On Being Creative, 2375
On Native Grounds, 2448
On the Limits of Poetry, 1810
On These I Stand, 1308
On Trial, 1689
On Witchcraft, 42
Once in a Lifetime, 1548
One Arm, 2222
One Basket, 1408
One Clear Call, 1758
One Man's Meat, 1862
One More Spring, 1636
One Nation, 2161
One of Our Girls, 2307
One of Ours, 1277
"One of Us," 1035
One Part Love, 2413
One-Smoke Stories, 1198
1 x 1, 1313
O'Neil, T. P., 6207
O'Neill, Edward H., 536
O'Neill, Eugene, 1647–49, 2327, 2332, 2335, 2337, 2348
about, 1650, 2406
O'Neill, James, 2313
O'Neill, James M., 5445
Only Yesterday, 3477
The Open Boat, 830
The Open Heart, 2838
The Open Sea, 1601
Opera, 487, 654, 1222, 1512, 1771, 2210, 2472, 5655–63 comic, 701, 705
hist., 5656, 5661, 5663
Chicago, 5660
New York (City), 4924, 5657–59, 5962
See also Theater
Operationism (psychology), 5392
Ophthalmology, hist., 4844
Opie, Redvers, 3636
Opinions of Oliver Allston, 2380
Opler, Marvin K., 3041
Opler, Morris Edward, 3010
The Opposing Self, 2520
Optimism in literature, 280, 619
Options, 1119–20
Oralloossa, 205
Orange County, Calif., 3957
Orators, 420
Orchestras jazz, 5644
students, 5672
symphony, 5647, 5650, 5652
See also Bands (music)
The Orchid, 1637
The Ordeal, 3495
Ordeal by Hunger, 3331
The Ordeal of Mark Twain, 2380
Oregon
boundaries, 3351
fiction, 1314–15
Oregon—Continued
guidebooks, 3937–38
hist., 3959, 4214
newspapers, 2863
Orientals, 4468
resources, 4212
short stories, 1316
travel & travelers, 391
Oregon Trail, 3789
disc. & explor., 3335, 3338, 3345
travel & travelers, 3348
O'Reilly, John Boyle, about, 4530
Orfield, Lester Bernhardt, 6098, 6301–2
The Organizational Revolution, 5899
Orians, George H., 2401
ed., 2352, 2369
O'Rielly, Henry, about, 4675, 4680
Orient
in literature, 280
travel & travelers, 1136
Orientals, 2811–12, 4416, 4420, 4463–69
citizenship, 6120
econ. condit., 4468
The Origin of the Feast of Purim, 2312
Original Narrative of Early American History, 3201–19
Ormandy, Eugene, about, 5654
Ormond, 112–13, 117
Ornithological Biography, 4743
The Orphan Angel, 1904
Orphanages, 4310
Orpheus in America, 5679
Osage Indians, 2729
Osborn, F., 3562
Osborn, Henry Fairfield, 4748
about, 5434
Osborn, R. E., 5442
Osborne, Estelle Massey, about, 4854
Osgood, Ernest Staples, 5873
Osgood, Herbert L., 3220–21
about, 3058, 3221
Osgood, Robert Endicott, 3628
Osler, Sir William, 4818
about, 4821, 4829, 4845
Ossian, about, 2364
Ossoli, Sarah Margaret (Fuller) marchesa d'. See Fuller, Sarah Margaret (Marchesa d'Ossoli)
Osteopathy, 4811
Osterweis, Rollin G., 4042, 4080
Ostheimer, Richard H., 5174–75
Ostrom, John W., ed., 532
Oswald, John Clyde, 6442
Other Skies, 1950
The Other Two, 1855
Other Voices, Other Rooms, 1945
Otis, Harrison Gray, about, 3305
Otis, Philo Adams, 5651
Ottawa Indian war, 3033
Otto, Henry J., 5151
Otto, M. C., 5336
Our America, 1445
Our American Weather, 2950
Our Boarding House, 2301
Our Fair City, 6207
Our Hearts Were Young and Gay, 2809
Our Heroic Themes, 206
Our Landed Heritage, 5814

Our More Perfect Union, 6076
Our New Home in the West, 416–17
Our Rising Empire, 3531
Our Singing Strength, 2342
Our Soldiers Speak, 3662
Our Times, 3468
Our Town, 1865, 2327
Out of the Red, 4995
Out of the South, 1475
The Outcasts of Poker Flat, 930, 937, 939
Outcault, Richard Felton, about, 2865
Outlaws. See Adventurers, outlaws, etc.
The Outlet, 686
Outlines of Cosmic Philosophy, 5303
Outre mer, 4388–89
The Outsider, 2232, 2235
The Over-Soul, 280, 285
Over the Alleghenies and Across the Prairies, 4350
Over the Hills to the Poor House, 753
Overacker, Louise, 6336, 6406–8
Overland in a Covered Wagon, 1066, 1068
Overland journeys to the Pacific, 391, 1068, 3338, 3345, 3348, 4373
Overland mail and stagecoaches, 4666
Overland Monthly, 757, 933
Overland Trail. See Oregon Trail Overseas possessions, 2970, 4218–22
  econ. condit., 4218
  guidebooks, 3940–41
Owen, Robert Dale, about, 2713, 4525
Owen, Wilfred, 5921
Owen Wingrave, 1012
Owens, Hamilton, 2876
Owens, Richard N., 6008
The Owl in the Attic, 1817
Owsley, Frank Lawrence, 3539, 4081
The Ox-Bow Incident, 1955
The Oxford Anthology of American literature, 2321
The Oxford Book of American Verse, 2344
The Oxford Companion to American Literature, 2433
Oxford Group movement, 5439
The Oxford History of the United States, 3103
Ozark Mountain region, 3960
  folklore, 5543–45
  folksongs & ballads, 5569
  geography, 4113
  language (dialects, etc.), 2270
  population, 4102
  rural community, 2764

P

PMLA, 2457
Pacific Coast States, 3137
  editorials, sketches, etc., 1064–65, 1068
  hist., 3048, 3340, 3784
  historical geography, 2969 hunting & fishing, 5084, 5091
  Orientals, 4468–69
  poetry, 933–34, 1064, 1066–67
  short stories, 926–32, 937
Pacific Coast States—Continued
  travel & travelers, 391, 1068, 4384, 4386
Pacific Fur Company, about, 391, 6024
Pacific Grove, Calif., 3930
Pacific Islands (Trust Territory), 4218
Pacific Northwest. See Northwest, Pacific Pacific Ocean region
  relations with, 3591
  World War II, 3668, 3722, 3726–27
Pacific railroads, hist., 4150
Pack, Robert, 2350
Packard, Francis R., 4809
Packet boats, 4283, 5937
A Paean, 526
Pagano, Grace, ed., 5748
Page, Charles Hunt, 4542
Page, Leigh, 4715
Page, Thomas Nelson, 1099–1106, 2296
  about, 910
Page, Walter Hines, 2296, 5145
  about, 2922
Pageant of America, 3082
Paige, D. C., ed., 1664
Paine, Albert Bigelow, 771, 2917
  ed., 800, 808
Paine, Gregory, 2424
  ed., 2296
Paine, Nathaniel, 6447
Paine, Thomas, 154–60, 2290
  about, 2617, 2647, 5408
  fiction, 1977
Painters, 612, 1226, 5742, 5744, 5753–54, 5756
  biog. (collected), 5730, 5745, 5748–49, 5759
  See also Artists
Painting, 3751, 5595, 5597, 5601, 5741–76, 5797
  abstract, 5696
  Colonial period, 3747
  exhibitions, 5696, 5771, 5804–5
  hist., 5689, 5742, 5745, 5747, 5750–51, 5755–56, 5758
  indexes, 5753, 5757
  landscape, 5743, 5745, 5766, 5768, 5804
  miniature, 5759, 5763
  Plains Indians, 3018 still-life, 5744
  surrealist, 5696
Paiute Indians, religion, 3019
Pakistan, relations with, 3503
Pal Joey, 2074
Pale Horse, Pale Rider, 1661
Paleontological Society, about, 4733
Paleontology, 4721
  hist., 4715, 4748
  Calif., 4202
Paley, William S., about, 4683
Palmer, Alice Freeman, about, 2766
Palmer, Charles, 4949
Palmer, Elihu, about, 5408
Palmer, Frederick, 3713–14
Palmer, George Herbert, 2765–67, 5250, 5252
  about, 2767
Palmer, John McAuley, 3648
Palmer, William J., about, 4150
Palmer, Winthrop B., 4971
Palmetto Country, 3953
Palmyra, N.Y., fiction, 1157
Paltsits, Victor Hugo, ed., 6465
Palyi, Melchior, 5985
Pamphleteers, 75, 134, 138, 147, 154–60, 662, 727, 1048, 1053
Pan American Airways, about, 5941
Pan American conferences, 3575
Panama, relations with, 3583
Panama Canal, 3559, 3575, 3577, 4014, 4218, 4221, 4796
Pancoast, Harry S., 1091
Pandora, 1008
Pannill, H. Burnell, 5302
Papa La Fleur, 1459
Paperbound books, 6435, 6438, 6443–44
Papermaking and trade, hist., 6448, 6457–58
Paquita, the Indian Heroine, 1065
The Parable of the Ten Virgins, 59
Paradise, 1441
Paradise Lost, 2064
Pardon (1861–98), 3388
The Pardon, 1684
Parentator, 3199
The Parenticide Club, 739
Paris. Peace Conference (1919), 3111, 3471
Paris, Americans in, 2872
Paris Bound, 2332, 2337
Paris Embassy, about, 3600, 3606
Park, Edwards A., about, 5428
Park, Robert E., 2897
Park, Willard Z., 3019
Park-Street Papers, 2491
Parker, Barbara Neville, 5763
Parker, Donald Dean, 3061
Parker, Dorothy (Rothschild), 1651–52
  comp., 1429
Parker, Everett C., 4702
Parker, Florence E., 5964
Parker, Isaac Charles, about, 2656, 6220
Parker, Reginald, 6313
Parker, Theodore, about, 2279–80, 5472, 5481, 6424
Parker, William Belmont, 2768–69
  ed., 463, 2769
Parkes, Henry Bamford, 3104
Parkhurst, Helen H., 5289
Parkins, Almon E., 2940
Parkman, Francis, 2281, 2290, 3069, 3171, 3348
  about, 2281, 3058, 3069, 3175
Parks, E. Taylor, 3585
Parks, Edd Winfield, ed., 618, 2292, 4068
Parks
  Mass., 3803
  Rocky Mountains, 4172
  S. C., 3836
  See also National parks and reserves; and names of parks, e.g., Adirondack State Park
Parmer, Charles B., 5056
Parole, 4643
  Mass., 4648–49

Parran, Thomas, 4869
about, 4864
Parrington, Vernon Louis, 2424, 2485
about, 2407, 3058
Parrish, Lydia, 5540
Parry, Albert, 3757
Parry, Charles C., about, 4734
Parsons, Edward, ed., 27
Parsons, Elsie Clews, 5540
Parsons, Frank, about, 4530
Parsons, Geoffrey, 2903
Parsons, Robert P., 4809
Part of a Man's Life, 2280
Parties, 1828
The Partisan, 547
The Partisan Review, 2017, 2133, 2498, 2566
Parton, James, 2770–76, 2883
about, 2776
Partridge, Bellamy, 5005, 6324
Partridge, Eric, 2272, 2274
Partridge, Samuel Selden, about, 6324
Parts of a World, 1784
Paskman, Dailey, 5637
Pasó por Aquí, 1686–87
A Passage in the Night, 1194
Passage to Glory, 3154
Passage to Walden, 609
Passaic River, 3994
The Passing of Marcus O'Brien, 1058
The Passing of the Frontier, 4121
The Passion of Sacco and Vanzetti, 1980
Passions Spin the Plot, 1423
Pastor, A., 3169
The Pastoral Bees, 741
Pastoral manuals, 47–48
Pastures, 2780
Patchen, Kenneth, 2079–86
Patent laws and legislation, 4780–81
Patent medicines, 5955
Patent Office, about, 4767
Patents, 4780–81
Paterson, Isabel, 1904
Paterson, N.J., poetry, 1876
The Path I Trod, 6054
The Pathfinder, 258
Pathological psychiatry, 4833
Pathology, 4831
Paths to the Present, 3140
The Patient's Dilemma, 4891
Patrician and Plebeian in Virginia, 3234
Patrick, John, 2334, 2336
Patrick, Rembert W., 3384
Patriot and President, 3269
Patriotic societies, 3644
Patriotism, 4526
Patriotism in literature, 511–12, 2465
fiction, 579–82, 1730
poetry, 134–39, 146–48, 206, 368–70
short stories, 901–5, 909
Patriots (American Revolution), 3244, 3282, 3304
The Patriots, 2334, 2336
Patronage. See Spoils system
Patrons of Husbandry, 3421
Patroon system, 3200
Pattee, Fred Lewis, 810, 884, 2424, 2486–90
ed., 111, 138
Pattern of a Day, 1515
The Pattern of Responsibility, 3543
Patterns of Anti-Democratic Thought, 6069
Patterson, Caleb Perry, 6147
Patterson, E. W., 5290–91
Patterson, Eleanor ("Cissy"), about, 2862
Patterson, Harry N., about, 4734
Patterson, Joseph, about, 2862
Patterson, Robert L., 230
Patterson, Robert W., 2862
Patterson family, 2862
Pauck, Wilhelm, about, 5433
Paul, Randolph E., 5970
Paul, Rodman W., 774
Paul, Sherman, 304, 483
Paul Kauvar; or Anarchy, 2347
Paulding, James Kirke, 511–19, 2295, 2337
Paulding, William Irving, 517
Paulison, Walter M., 4993
Paullin, Charles O., 2974, 3678
The Pavilion, 4912
Paviotso shamanism, 3019
Pawnee Indian tales, 3000
Paxson, Frederic L., 3105, 3463
Paxton, Harry, 4996
Payne, John Howard, 2295, 2302–3, 2337, 2347
Payne, Pierre S. R., 4953
Peabody, Elizabeth P., ed., 586
Peabody, Josephine Preston, 2348
Peace in the Heart, 1724, 5087
Peace Mission movement, 5439, 5489
Peace, My Daughters, 1917
Peach, Arthur W., ed., 157
Peake, Ora B., 3028
Peale, Charles Willson, about, 2804, 5749, 5769
Peale (Charles Willson) family, 5744
Peanuts, 2690
Pearce, Roy Harvey, 3031, 3102
ed., 2326
Peare, Catherine O., 3222
The Pearl, 1780
Pearl Harbor, 3130
The Pearl of Orr's Island, 570–71
Pearson, Norman Holmes, 276, 593, 2412
ed., 350, 356, 2321
Pearson, T. Gilbert, 2962
Peary, Robert E., 2979
about, 2979–80
Pease, Theodore Calvin, 4129, 4133
Pease, Mrs. Theodore Calvin, 4133
Peattie, Donald Culross, 1130, 2963–64
Peattie, Roderick, ed., 4172
Peck, Taylor, 3670
Peckham, Howard H., 3032–33
Pecos Bill, about, 5506
The Peculiar Institution, 3403
A Peculiar Treasure, 1403
Peden, William, ed., 153, 3279
Peder Victorious, 1722
Pediatrics, 4841
Pedlar's Progress, 186, 5266
Peek, George A., ed., 3279
Peek, George N., about, 5860
Peel, Roy V., 6381–82
Peffer, E. Louise, 5813
Peirce, Charles Sanders, 5346–49
about, 5264, 5345, 5350–53
Pellegrini, Angelo M., 2777, 4494
about, 2777
Pelopidas, 205
Peltason, J. W., 6128, 6134
Pelton, Walter J., ed., 4871
Penal colonies, Colonial period, 6056
Penard, Eugene, about, 4734
Pencillings by the Way, 677–78
Pendleton, Edmund, about, 2740
Penhally, 1465
Penn, William, 5418
about, 171, 3222, 5396, 5419
drama, 2310
Penn State Yankee, 2490
Pennell, Elizabeth (Robins), 4060, 5776
Pennell, Joseph, 4060, 5776
Penniman, Howard R., 6139
Pennock, James Roland, 6314
Pennsylvania, 4054–61
bibl., 4054
culture, 3229, 3231–32, 4054
farm life, 2891
fiction, 105–8, 1239, 1507, 1691, 1694–95, 1916, 2055, 2069, 2076–78, 2282
folklore, 5579
folksongs & ballads, 5578–79
geography, 4057
govt., 3229–30, 4057, 6195
guidebooks, 3816–21
hist., 3280, 3962, 3993, 4043, 4054–57
Colonial period, 2880, 3214, 3222, 3225, 3229–32, 4490
legends, 5579
relations with Gt. Brit., 3225
Scotch-Irish, 4490
travel & travelers, 366, 4241, 4255, 4266, 4269, 4279, 4285
Pennsylvania. University, hist., 5130, 5192
Pennsylvania. University. Dept. of Medicine, hist., 4856 Pennsylvania Dutch. See Pennsylvania Germans.
The Pennsylvania Gazette, about, 2854
Pennsylvania Germans, 4479–80
arts & crafts, 5594, 5599–5600
culture, 3230–31
language (dialects, etc.), 2266, 4479
literature, 2266, 4479
religion, 3230–31
Pennsylvania Hospital, Philadelphia, hist., 4850
Pennsylvania-Virginia frontier, 2673
Penobscot Indians, 3011
Penology, 4639, 4654, 5028
Penrod, 1803
Penrod and Sam, 1802
Penrose, Boies, about, 6353
Penrose, E. F., 3562
Penson, Lilian M., 3179
Peonage laws. See Freedom of labor
People Behave Like Ballads, 1295
People of Plenty, 3734
The People of the Abyss, 1053
The People, Yes, 1731
The People's Choice, 6419

The People's Lawyer, 2347
Pepinsky, Harold B., 5228
Pepinsky, Pauline N., 5228
Pepper, George Wharton, 6161
Percival, Milton O., 481
Percy, William Alexander, 2778–79
about, 2779
Père Antoine's Date-Palm, 711
Père Raphaël, 748
Pereida, Ralph J., illus., 5503
Performing rights (music), 5621
Periodicals. See Literature—periodicals; Magazines; Newspapers
Perkin, Robert, 4176
Perkins, Dexter, 3491, 3509, 3523, 3577, 6254
Perkins, Eli, pseud., 212
Perkins, Frances, 3498
Perlman, Philip B., 4425
Perlman, Selig, 6033
Permanence and Change, 2387
The Permanent Horizon, 1571
Permit Me Voyage, 1908
Perry, Bliss, 2491–92, 3732, 5221
ed., 295
about, 2922, 5221
Perry, Ralph Barton, 3733, 5260, 5334–35
ed., 5327, 5329, 5334
Perry, Thomas Sergeant, 5304
Pershing, John J., 3715
about, 3714
Pershing Expedition (in Mexico), 3586
Persichetti, Vincent, 5687
Person, Place and Thing, 2140
Personae, 1666
Personal property law, 6271
Personalism, 631, 5265, 5317
Personality, 4568, 4572, 5289, 5291
Personnel administration, library, 6478–80, 6483
Personnel management in industry, 6038, 6042
Persons, Stow, 5435
ed., 3753, 3758
Persons and Places, 1737
Peru, History of the Conquest of, 2294
Pessimism in literature, 695–98, 732–39, 768, 798–99, 1532, 1927
Peter Martyr, 3153
Peter Whiffle, 1828
Peterkin, Julia Mood, 1653–55
Peters, Aimée M., comp., 937
Peters, Harry T., 5778–79
Petersburg, Va., 4406
Petersen, Elmore, 6009
Peterson, Clara Gottschalk, ed., 5679
Peterson, Elmer T., ed., 4594
Peterson, Florence, 6035
Peterson, Houston, ed., 5222
Peterson, Marcelene, 4946
Peterson, Robert E., tr., 5679
Peterson, Theodore, 2918, 2932
Peto, John Frederick, about, 5744
The Petrified Forest, 1749–50, 2327, 2348
Petrillo, James Caesar, about, 5619
Petroleum resources and industry, 2586, 2731, 2746, 5914
Petrology, hist., 4715
Petrullo, Vincenzo, 3020
Petry, Howard K., ed., 4804
Pewter, 5788
Peyotism, 3020
Peyton, Green, pseud. See Wertenbaker, Green Peyton Peyton, John Lewis, 4350
about, 4349
Pfeffer, Leo, 5103
Pfefferkorn, Blanche, 4845
Phaedra, 2101
Phelps, N. Y., in literature, 6324
Philadelphia
Chinese, 4463
culture, 4518
drama, 198, 1202
econ. condit., 4602
epidemic (1793), 4872
essays, 1002–3
fiction, 116–17, 1333, 1336, 1345
guidebooks, 3821
historic houses, etc., 4059
hist., 3764
music & music industries, 5629
Negro religious cults, 5498
politics, 6207, 6353, 6389
soc. life & customs, 3764, 4059–60, 4251, 4258, 4263, 4283, 4602
theater, 5659
The Philadelphia Story, 1202, 2334
Philanthropy, 2689
fiction, 1568
See also Charities
Philip II of Spain, 2294
Philippine Islands, annexation, 3594
Japanese conquest, 1992
relations with, 3595, 4218
Phillips, Cabell, 3615
Phillips, Charles F., 5945
Phillips, David C., 4695
Phillips, David Graham, 1107–10
about, 2464
Phillips, Duncan, 5767
Phillips, Merton Ogden, 2940
Phillips, Orie L., 6320
Phillips, Ulrich Bonnell, 3402–5, 5828
about, 3057–58
Phillips, Wendell, 244
about, 2280, 2546, 3099
Phillips, William, ed., 2566
Phillips Academy, Andover, Mass., about, 2674
Philo, an Evangeliad, 402
The Philosopher of the Common Man, 5290
Philosophers, 3746, 5250, 5253, 5257–58, 5265–5387
Philosophers at Court, 1740
Philosophers Lead Sheltered Lives, 5351
Philosophy, 3728, 3747, 3751, 3758, 5250–5387
and religion, 5259, 5289, 5311, 5319, 5338, 5354, 5358, 5361, 5431, 5437 as literature, 21, 186, 280, 585, 1733
European influences, 5262
hist., 3741, 5261–62, 5334
Indian, American, 3015
Philosophy—Continued
Scottish, 5337
study & teaching, 2767
The Philosophy of Composition, 520, 538
Phinney, Eleanor, 6482
Phipps, Henry, about, 4834
Phoenix, Ariz., 4187
The Phoenix and the Tortoise, 2099
Phonographs and records, 5618, 5629
Photography
hist., 5689, 5781
journalistic, 2908
Phrenology, 3752, 4516
Phyfe, Duncan, about, 5728
Physicians and surgeons, 4817–32
biog. (collected), 4804, 4807, 4822, 4844, 4856
drama, 1520
fiction, 1299, 1562, 1872
Physics, 4721
hist., 4715
Physiological chemistry, 4732
Physiology, 4818
Piano industry, 5622
The Piazza Tales, 484, 491, 493
Pickard, Karl, 4889
Pickard, Madge E., 4810
Pickard, Samuel T., 672
Pickering, Ernest, 5702
Pickett, Clarence E., 5427
about, 5427
Pickett, Ralph R., 5994
Pickford, Mary, 4955
about, 4955
Pickpockets, language (slang, etc.), 2262
Picnic, 1997, 2336
Pico, Rafael, 4222
Pictorial Americana (catalog), 5807
Pictures from an Institution, 2001
Pictures of the Floating World, 1584
A Piece of Land, 917
A Piece of My Mind, 2543
Pierce, Bessie Louise, 4136
Pierce, Edward L., 3406
Pierce, Franklin, about, 3347
Pierce, Truman M., ed., 5206
Pierce, W. H., 6207
Piercy, Josephine K., 2493
Pierre, S. D., guidebook, 3900
Pierson, George W., 4512
Pike, Kenneth L., 2275
Pike County Ballads, 942–43, 3426
Pike dialect in literature, 933, 937, 941–44, 1126
Pike's Peak theater, 4925
The Pilgrim Hawk, 1839
The Pilgrims
hist., 1–6, 3204
satire, 51–52
Pilgrims through Space and Time, 2377
The Pilot, 256–57
Pinckney, Josephine, 4068
Pinckney, Pauline A., 5603
Pinckney, Mich., in literature, 415
The Pink Church, 1878
Piñon Country, 3956
Pinson, Koppel S., ed., 5267
Pioneer America, 5596

Pioneers, 4186, 4199, 4211, 4213
architecture, 5719
See also Frontier and pioneer life
The Pioneers, 258–60
Pioneer's Mission, 3053
Pioneer's Progress, an Autobiography, 2702, 5219
Pious and Secular America, 5399
Pipe lines (industry), 5920
Pipe Night, 2073
Piper, C. V., ed., 5821
The Piper, 2348
Pique, 2317
The Pirate, 1211
Pirsson, Louis V., 4715
The Pisan Cantos, 1665
The Pit, 1094–95
Pitkin, W. B., 5260
about, 5327
Pittenger, W. Norman, about, 5433
Pittsburgh, 4312
econ. condit., 4591
hist., 3962, 4061
intellectual life, 3767
soc. condit., 4591
Place, Charles A., 5720
Place names, 2967
bibl., 2976
Indian, American, 2364
New York (State), 5548
Place of Hawks, 1959
Plagued by the Nightingale, 1243
Plain Folk of the Old South, 4081
Plain Language from Truthful James, 933, 937
Plain People, 959, 2885
"Plain" style, Puritan, 18, 33, 45, 75
Plains. See Great Plains; High Plains; Northern Plains
Plains Indians, 2799, 3006, 4164
painting, 3018
Plainville, U.S.A., 4585
Plant, Henry B., about, 4096
Plant lore, Ozark Mountains, 5544
Plant pathology, 2792
Plantation life, 4242–46, 4436, 4442
songs & music, 5677
Fla., 4293
Md., 4517
Miss., 5576
S.C., 4517, 5087
Southern States, 3402–3, 4283, 4363
Va., 3271, 4086, 3279, 4517
See also Farm and rural life
Plantation life in literature
descr., 1724
editorials, sketches, etc., 192–93, 1099, 1103–4, 1106
essays, familiar, 406–8
fiction, 245, 405–8, 1099, 1105–6, 1467, 1618–19, 1653
poetry, 856–59, 861; 1133–35
short stories, 192–93, 856, 859–60, 911–16, 922, 1032–35, 1099–1102, 1106, 1724
Ga., 911–16, 922
La., 1032
Va., 15–16, 192–93, 245, 405–8, 1099–1106
See also Farm and rural life
Plantation Proverbs, 911
Planter and Patriot, 3269
Plants, 2956–57, 2959–60, 2966, 2969, 4241, 4247, 4276
prairies, 4188
Fla., 4247
Ga., 4247
Ky., 4276
New York (State), 4237–38, 4241
New World, 3155
N.C., 4247, 4276
Ohio, 4276
Pa., 4237–38, 4241
S.C., 4247, 4276
Tenn., 4276
Plaskitt, Harold, 3146
Platonism, 280, 5368
Platt, Philip S., 4863
Platt (Thomas C.) political machine, 6385
Play-party songs
Appalachian Mountains, 5583
Middle West, 5586
Oklahoma, 5570
Ozark Mountains, 5569
Southern States, 5583
Playing Doctor (sculpture), 5739
Playing the Mischief, 277
Pleading, legal, 6282
Pleasure Dome: On Reading Modern Poetry, 2426
Plotkin, David George, ed., 3152
Plowman, Edward Grosvenor, 6009
Pluck and Luck, 1214
The Plum Tree (Chase), 1289
The Plum Tree (Phillips), 1107
A Plumb Clare Conscience, 1684
Plunder, 1155
Plunkitt, George Washington, about, 6382
A Pluralistic Universe, 5326
Plymouth, Mass., poetry, 1222
Plymouth Colony
hist., 1–6, 3204
satire, 51–52
Po' Sandy, 757
Poage, George Rawlings, 3344
Pocahontas, 2337
Pocahontas legend, 4273
See also Indians, American—legends & tales Pocahontas legend in literature, 66, 70
drama, 198–99
fiction, 251
Pochmann, Henry A., 5305
ed., 399, 2349
Poe, Edgar Allan, 520–38, 2290
about, 216, 333, 365, 381, 405, 415, 520, 533, 539–41, 614, 633, 732, 856, 1016, 1167, 1303, 1873, 2277, 2385, 2397, 2420, 2423, 2436, 2453, 2456, 2468, 2471, 2478–79, 2486, 2513, 2545
Poems about God, 1675
Poems for a Son with Wings, 1295
Poems for Music, 1516
Poems Here at Home, 1127
Poems of the War, 206
Poet of the People, 1132
The Poetic Principle, 216, 520, 538
Poetry
and science, 2412
anthologies, 1870, 1948, 2292, 2328, 2331, 2342, 2344, 2350, 2363, 2483, 2513
elegiac, 623
epic & extended narrative, 101, 104, 118–21, 165, 167, 427, 429, 432–33, 1222, 1224, 1434, 1532–34, 1585, 1644–45, 1713–14, 1824–25, 1876, 2134, 2200 ethical themes in, 1872, 2007, 2189 experimental, 1303–4, 1306, 1309, 1313, 1357, 1359, 1432, 1583–84, 1620–21, 1664–66, 1766, 1782, 1784, 1872, 2034, 2079, 2098
hist. & crit., 2544
"genteel tradition," 2513, 2545
hist. & crit., 520, 614, 1044, 1226, 1236, 1238, 1304, 1306, 1482, 1668, 1670–75, 1678–79, 1717–19, 1809–10, 1905, 2105, 2128, 2191, 2357, 2374, 2378–79, 2403–4, 2413–14, 2426, 2452, 2484, 2491, 2513, 2527, 2533
humanitarian, 1061, 1069, 1872, 2079
humorous, 368, 456–58, 680, 878–80, 933, 941–44, 1126–32, 1629–34, 1651–52 See also Verse, light; Verse, vernacular metaphysical, 2497, 2499
music in relation to, 1038, 1044–46, 1580 neo-classical, 2215, 2544 pastoral, 1451–52
periodicals, 2567
periods
Colonial, 7–11, 72–74, 79–83, 2483
(1764–1819), 101–4, 118–21, 134–43, 146–48, 165–67
(1820–70), 206–8, 216–21, 223–25, 280, 288–90, 323–29, 365, 368–70, 427–29, 431–44, 449–59, 464–67, 469, 486, 488, 491, 494, 520–27, 530, 533, 536–38, 546, 585, 598, 614–17, 619–30, 636–37, 639–42, 644–46, 662, 664, 666–71, 673, 675, 679–81
(1871–1914), 706, 714, 821, 831, 833, 835–36, 838–46, 852, 856–59, 861, 878–80, 926, 933–34, 941–44, 984, 1038–43, 1946–47, 1061–64, 1066–67, 1069, 1071, 1126–35
(1915–39), 1153–54, 1161, 1166, 1196, 1222, 1224, 1227, 1230, 1232, 1236–37, 1290, 1295–97, 1303–4, 1306–9, 1313–14, 1319–24, 1350–52, 1357, 1359, 1379, 1409–10, 1432–35, 1451–52, 1480–83, 1512, 1515–17, 1521, 1530–38, 1540, 1556, 1558, 1580–86, 1588, 1599–1601, 1608–9, 1614, 1620–21, 1623–27, 1629–35, 1644–45, 1651–52, 1664–66, 1675–77, 1679, 1697, 1699, 1713–14, 1724, 1727, 1731, 1733–34, 1740,

Poetry—Continued
periods—Continued
(1915–39)—Continued
1766, 1782, 1784, 1809, 1811, 1813–14, 1821–27, 18507–59, 1863, 1870–72, 1876, 1878, 1881, 1883, 1885, 1902–3, 1905–6
(1940–55), 1907–8, 1916, 1919, 1923–26, 1948–53, 1959, 1968, 1970–72, 1981–83, 1999, 2002, 2007–10, 2034–35, 2037, 2039, 2060–62, 2095, 2098–2100, 2102–6, 2123–24, 2126, 2133–34, 2138–44, 2166, 2172, 2189–93, 2196, 2200, 2215–17 political verse, 134–39, 456–57, 662, 664, 1069
psychological, 1357
realistic, 612, 1290, 1295–97, 1727, 1731
religious, 72–73, 79–83, 662, 680, 1357, 1359, 1369, 1537–38 1540, 2034–35, 2037, 2039
satiric, 120, 134–38, 148, 165, 167, 323, 456–57, 2189
essays, 2465, 2467
sentimental, 1126–31
sonnets, 206, 427, 1608, 1623–27, 1972 structure, 2379
surrealist, 2034
theories, 216, 280, 520, 538, 614, 618, 620, 1038, 1044–46, 1196, 1783, 2142, 2476, 2484
vernacular, 753–55, 933–34, 941–44, 1126–31
See also Ballads; Folk ballads; Verse drama
Poetry: a Magazine of Verse, 2139, 2760
Poetry and the Age, 2000
Poetry in Our Time, 2414
Poetry in the Theater, 1175
A Poet's Life, 2761
The Poet's Testament, 1740
Poganuc People, 576
Pohl, Frederick J., 3172
Point four program. See Technical assistance
Point of No Return, 1596
The Point of View, 1008
Points of View, 2504
Poland, fiction, 1992
Polar exploration, 2977–81, 3669
Poles (Polanders), 4435, 4495
Poletti, Charles, 6080
Police, 3644a, 4498, 4642, 4655, 4659–60
Political bosses, 3438, 6207, 6333, 6337–38, 6346, 6382, 6384–91
Political campaigns, 6149, 6333, 6336, 6340–41, 6362
(1884), 6373
(1932–40), 6364
(1948), 6414
funds, 6341, 6407, 6410
literature, 6348–49, 6394, 6410
Political candidates, 6333–34
Political clubs, 3300
New York (City), 6381
Political conventions, 3400, 6149, 6340, 6361
Political economy. See Economics
Political ethics, 3760, 6342–44
Political influences on literature, 2485
Political leaders and leadership, 3416, 3460, 3494, 3496
Political machines. See Machine politics Political parties, 3139, 3320, 4499, 6078, 6134, 6147, 6335–38, 6340, 6347–73, 6398, 6416, 6419, 6427 discipline, 6341, 6354–55, 6381–82, 6384, 6389
hist., 6076, 6149, 6347
platforms, 6341, 6366–67
New York (State), 4044
Southern states, 6376
Political psychology, 6345, 6349, 6354
Political science, 5279
hist., 3760
Political themes in literature
drama, 1172, 1176
editorials, sketches, etc., 422, 465, 467, 512, 546, 663, 862, 1048, 1103–4, 1107, 1739, 1859, 2278
fiction, 277, 422, 689–90, 722, 762, 775–77, 1107, 1155–56, 1566, 1792, 2025, 2027, 2148, 2197, 2278
periods
Colonial, 75–78, 84, 92–95
(1764–1819), 101, 103–4, 154–60
(1820–70), 252, 261–62, 265–67, 585–86, 593, 604–5, 607–8, 619, 631
poetry, 134–39, 456–57, 662, 664, 1069
satire, 147–48, 422–25, 558, 862, 1792
Political thought, 3073, 3099, 3758, 4556, 6059–72, 6074, 6170, 6382, 6402
hist., 6062, 6070
Colonial period, 3182, 3199, 3747
18th cent., 3187, 3256–59, 3261, 3279, 3283, 3300, 6075, 6085
19th cent., 3319, 6064, 6066, 6101
20th cent., 3487, 3492, 3499–3500, 6101
Southern States, 6059
The Politician Out-Witted, 2347
The Politicos, 3438
Politics, 3616, 4499, 4502, 6133–34, 6137, 6139, 6333–46, 6357, 6389–92, 6396, 6418, 6421, 6426
Corruption. See Corruption (in politics)
Dutch, 4493
hist., 2677
American Revolution, 3187, 3252, 3277, 3279
Civil War, 3382, 3400, 3416, 3435, 3441
Colonial period, 3187, 3194, 3256, 3261
Politics—Continued
hist.—Continued
18th cent., 3141, 3279, 3281, 3285–86, 3303
19th cent., 3141, 3275, 3286, 3303, 3313, 3319, 3322–26, 3333, 3337, 3339, 3352–53, 3356–58, 3397, 3408–10, 3412, 3417, 3421, 3423, 3431, 3436, 3438, 3442, 3444, 3447, 3450, 4312, 4315–17, 4334, 4515, 4664
20th cent., 3453, 3456, 3458, 3460, 3463, 3465–67, 2469–70, 3472–75, 3478–79, 3496, 3498, 3500a, 3548, 3613, 4405–8, 4515, 6076, 6165 public relations. See Public relations—politics
See also subdivisions History and Politics under names of places and regions, e.g., Illinois—hist.; Maine—politics Politics and the press, 2846, 2884, 2888, 2919, 2924, 2931
cartoons, 2859, 2917
Baltimore, Md., 2876
Hartford, Conn., 2875
New York (City), 2868–69, 2921
Ohio, 2857
Oreg., 2863
Tex., 2866
See also Presidents and the press
Polk, Alma Forrest, 4443
Polk, James Knox, 3349, 3351
about, 3350–51, 3540
Pollack, Queena, 2668
Pollak, Gustav, 2921
Pollard, James E., 2911, 2930
Pollard, John A., 662
Pollard, Joseph P., 6251
Pollock, Sir Frederick, 2607
Pollock, J. K., 6336
Pollock, Thomas C., ed., 1898
Polls. See Public opinion—research Polly, 1100–2
Polo, 5058
Polynesian life, fiction, 470–78
"Polyphonic prose," 1432, 1583
Pomeroy, Wardell B., 4565
Ponce de Léon, about, 3158
Pond, Frederick E., ed., 5077
The Ponder Heart, 2208
Ponteach, 2347
Pontiac (Ottawa chief), about, 3030, 3033, 3171
Pony Express, 4661
Pool, David de Sola, 4457, 5427
about, 5427
Poole, Ernest, 1656–58
Poole, Kenyon E., ed., 5971
Poor Aubrey, 2332
Poor laws, R.I., 4632
Poor Richard Improved, 131
Poor Richard's Almanack, 122, 131
Poor White, 1180
Poor whites (South) in literature
fiction, 1180, 1270, 1391, 1775, 1777, 2090
short stories, 910, 917–21, 1270, 1275

Poorhouses, 4310
Pope, Bertha, ed., 738
Pope, Jennie Barnes, 5951
Pope, Liston, 4702
Pope-Hennessy, Una, ed., 4300
Popular books, 2384, 2434, 2482, 5126
See also Bestsellers
Popular music and songs, 4935, 4973, 5635–40, 6443
bibl., 5613, 5639
hist., 5635, 5639
Population, 4390–4403, 4551, 4617
cities & towns, 4393
Colonial period, 4398
Indian, 2985, 3012, 3022, 3043
maps, 2937, 2972, 2974, 2985
stat., 3786, 4403
Ga., 4095
Milwaukee, 4140
Mo., 4108
Ohio, 4119
S.C., 4092
Wis., 4139
See also Foreign population; Migration, internal Populism, 3421, 3427, 3458, 6356, 6358, 6368, 6427
Populist Party, about, 6358
Porgy, 1512–13, 2332
Porgy and Bess (opera), 1512, 5678
Port Arthur, Tex., 3922
Portage, Wis., 3884
fiction, 1453
Portals of Tomorrow, 1959
Porter, Cole, about, 5639
Porter, Katherine Anne, 1659–63, 2372
about, 1663
Porter, Kenneth Wiggins, 6024
Porter, Keyes, 5606
Porter, Kirk H., 6204, 6409
comp., 6367
Porter, Mae Reed, 3330
Porter, Thomas C., about, 4734
Porter, William Sydney (O. Henry), 1111–25, 2296
about, 926, 1111, 2486
Porter, William T., 5542
ed., 4097
Portland, Maine, guidebook, 3795
Portland, Oreg., 4150
Portrait for Posterity, 3395
Portrait of a Gentleman Skating (painting), 5774
The Portrait of a Lady, 989–91
Portrait of an American, 1291
Portrait of Jennie, 1639
Portraits, 5735, 5759, 5763, 5769, 5771, 5774–76, 5804
Portraits of Places, 1093
Portsmouth, N.H., 4261
Portsmouth, Va., 4263
"Posson Jone," 748
Post Office Dept. and postal service, 4661–71
Postal, Bernard, 4461
Postscript to Yesterday, 3746
The Pot of Earth, 1586
Potiphar Papers, 2278
Potofsky, Jacob S., 5426
about, 5426
Potomac River, 4008
Potsdam Conference, 3544
Potter, Alfred Claghorn, 6470
Potter, Alonzo, about, 5457
Potter, David M., 3734
ed., 3106
Potter, Elmer B., ed., 3671
Potter, William J., 5435
Potter's Field, 1475
Pottery, 5596, 5791–92, 5796
Indian, 2723
Pound, Arthur, 4138, 5940
Pound, Ezra, 1664–68
about, 1670–74, 2426, 2497
bibl., 1669
Pound, Louise, ed., 635, 2330
Pound, Roscoe, 4649, 6223, 6231, 6233, 6251, 6268, 6272, 6290, 6302, 6304–5, 6325
Pounds, Norman J. G., 2939
Poverty, 4617, 4626, 4630 prevention, 4634
relief, 4634
New York (City), 4638
R.I., 4632
Powder River, 3971
Powderly, Terence V., 6054
about, 6054
Powdermaker, Hortense, 4948
Powell, John H., 4872
Powell, John Wesley, 4757
about, 2161, 4757
Power, Richard Lyle, 4117
Power and Glory, 6353
Power and Policy, 3623
Powers, Alfred, 3959
Pragmaticism, 5345
Pragmatism, 3115, 4545, 5254–55, 5259, 5291, 5324–25, 5327, 5332–34, 5345–50, 5352 and evolution, 5264
and science, 5254
hist., 5254, 5281
Prahl, A. J., 4481
The Prairie, 258
Prairie City, 4171
The Prairie Schooner, about, 2925
The Prairie Years, 1728, 3395
Prairies
travel & travelers, 4350
Ill., 4322
Southwest, 4188
The Praise of Folly, and Other Papers, 2492
Pratt, Dorothy, 5721–22
Pratt, Edwin J., 3536
Pratt, Fletcher, 3722
ed., 4381
Pratt, J.B., 5255
about, 5325
Pratt, Julius W., 3058, 3306, 3449, 4218
Pratt, Marion Dolores, ed., 3390
Pratt, Richard, 5721–22
Pratt, Richard N., about, 3035
Prayers of the Social Awakening, 5482
The Preacher and the Slave, 2164
Preacher tales
Brazos River, Tex., 5527
Mich., 5535
Precipitation (meteorology), 5816
Predilections, 1622
Preface to Life, 1457
A Preface to Logic, 5267
Prehistoric man, 2995–96, 4202
Prehistory. See Archaeology and prehistory
Preludes and Symphonies, 1433
Preludes for Memnon, 1166
Premedical education, 4861
Presbyterians, 5404, 5442
biog. (collected), 5466
hist., 5414, 5466
Preschool education, 5148
See also Kindergartens
Prescott, Frederick G., ed., 2291
Prescott, Samuel C., about, 4785
Prescott, William Hickling, 2294, 2534
about, 2277
Prescription for Rebellion, 2716
Presidency, 3399, 6140–49, 6184, 6340, 6370, 6422
and the press, 2861, 2930
candidates for, 2817, 2819
Continental Congress (1774–89), 6083
foreign affairs, 3604, 3610–11
functions, 6140–41, 6151
powers of, 3472
See also Executive branch
The President Makers, 3460
Presidential Agent, 1758
Presidential elections. See Elections Presidential Mission, 1758
Presidential primaries, 6408
Presidents, U.S. See names of Presidents, e.g., Adams, John Quincy President's Advisory Committee on Government Housing Policies and Programs, 4611
The President's Cabinet, 6145
President's Commission on Higher Education, 3113, 5189
President's Commission on Immigration and Naturalization, 4425
President's Commission on the Health Needs of the Nation, 4862
President's Communications Policy Board, 4711
The President's Lady, 2820
President's Research Committee on Social Trends, 6194
President's Scientific Research Board, 4779
Press, 2847, 2858, 2904–5, 2907 associations, 2849, 2860, 2864, 2890
bibl., 2931
business, 2902
Dutch, 4493
foreign language, 2895–99
law, 2932
Ukrainian, 4492
Southern States, 2853
Washington, D.C., 2861, 4065
See also Freedom of the press; Government and the press; Magazines; Newspapers; Politics and the press; Society and the press
Presses, printing. See Printing
Pressly, Thomas J., 3407

Pressure groups, 6139, 6201, 6218, 6335–38, 6343, 6357, 6392–99
Prestage, E., 3169
Preston, Captain, about, 3279
A Pretty Story, 147
Preventive medicine, 4815, 4826, 4864, 4873–74
Price, Don K., 4776, 6216
Price, Harry Bayard, 3640
Price, Robert, 5519
Priest, Loring Benson, 3034
Priestley, Herbert Ingram, 3086
Primaries, 6406 presidential, 6408
Primary education, 5148, 5150
  See also Elementary education
Prime, William C., 5086
Primer for America, 1295
Primer for Combat, 1247
Primitivism and Decadence, 2544
Primitivism in art, 5595, 5597, 5601
Prince, Morton, about, 5392
Prince Ananias (operetta), 5681
Prince Deukalion, 2282
A Prince in Their Midst, 4293
The Prince of Parthia, 144–45, 2337, 2347
Prince of Players, 4938
The Princess Bob and Her Friends, 930
Princeton, Ill., guidebook, 3880
Princeton College, 2673
Princeton University, about, 3470, 3472, 5204, 5221
The Principles of Literary Criticism, about, 2407
The Principles of Psychology, 5322
Pringle, Henry F., 3464, 3467, 4785
Printers
  biog. (collected), 6446–47
  early, 122, 130, 6442
Printing, 6446, 6448, 6455, 6459
  hist., 6436, 6440, 6442, 6447, 6456, 6459, 6464
  public, 6452
  trade unions, 6455
  university presses, 6437–39
  New England, 3745
  Philadelphia, 3764
Prints, 5778–80, 5782–83
  See also Engravings
Prisons, 4310, 4639–41, 4652
  hist., 4653–54
  Mass., 4648
  New York, 4653
Prisons (military)
  fiction, 1544
  personal narratives, 1310
Pritchard, John Paul, 2494
Pritchett, Charles H., 6252–53
Pritchett, Henry S., 4999
The Private Dining Room, 1634
Private enterprise. See Free enterprise
The Private Life, 1012
Private schools, 5155, 5217
  fiction, 1940, 1944
  See also Academies (schools); Seminaries (schools)
Probability, theory of, 5346
Probation. See Parole
Prochazka, Anne, about, 4854
Prochnow, Herbert V., ed., 5972
Proctor, Frederick Freeman, about, 4975
The Professor's House, 1277
  about, 1278
The Professor's Story, 375
Profiles from the New Yorker, 2565
The Profits of Religion, 1754
Progress, idea of, 3754
Progress and Poverty, 4535
The Progress of Dullness, 165, 167
A Progress to the Mines, 13
Progressive education, 5104, 5131, 5198, 5217, 5234, 5236, 5239
Progressive Education Association. Commission on the Relation of School and College, 5131
Progressive Party, 6350, 6362, 6427
Progressivism and the Progressive movement, 1048, 3433, 3446, 3453, 3458, 3467, 3473, 3489, 4202, 6340, 6362, 6424, 6426–27
Prohibition, 4523
Prohibition Party, platforms, 6367
Prokosch, Frederic, 2087–97
The Promised Land, 2585
Pronunciation, 2238, 2246, 2273, 2364
Propaganda, 3462, 3561, 3607, 6336–37, 6341, 6348–49, 6357, 6393–94
Property rights, 6011, 6060, 6094, 6101, 6105
The Prophet (Asch), 1190
The Prophet (Taylor), 2282
Prophet in the Wilderness, 2682
The Prophet of the Great Smoky Mountains, 1087–88
Proportional representation, 6059, 6134, 6402
Prospect of the Future Happiness of America, 121
Prosperity, economic, 4502
Prosser, Charles A., 5211
Prostitution
  Chicago, 2836
  New York (City), 4597
Protective tariff. See Tariff Protestant churches, 5404–5, 5441–42
  hist., 5492–93
  music, 5631
  segregation, 5499
  soc. problems, 5485–89, 5492–93
Protestant Episcopal Church. See Episcopal Church
Protestants and Protestantism, 3040, 4515, 5394, 5404, 5425, 5438, 5441, 5495
Proud Riders, 1314
Prout, Henry G., 4790
Provençal poetry, translations, 1664, 1667
Proverbs, 5511
  Miss., 5547
  New York (State), 5548
  N.C., 5536
Providence, R.I., soc. life & cust., 18th cent., 4261
Provincetown Playhouse, 1647, 1762, 4916
Provincialism, 896–97
Provo, Utah, 3915
Prucha, Francis Paul, 3663
Prue and I, 2278
Prufrock, 1359
Psychiana, 5439
Psychiatric hospitals, 4833–38
Psychiatry, 4722, 5409 forensic, 4840 military, 4833
  nursing, 4835
  research, 4833, 4835–36, 4838
  study & teaching, 4835–36, 4838, 4840, 4859
Psychical research, 5323
Psychoanalysis, 2716–18, 5389
Psychological influences and themes in literature
  drama, 1519, 1647–48
    hist. & crit., 2506
  fiction, 365, 375, 727, 986–1001, 1004, 1149, 1163, 1379, 1470, 1927, 1944–45, 1954, 2017–18, 2021, 2023, 2052, 2107–8, 2128, 2130, 2156, 2174–76, 2178, 2184, 2224, 2415
  personal narrative, 1557
  poetry, 1357, 1623–27
  short stories, 1929, 1944, 1946, 2128, 2176–77, 2179
Psychology, 5272, 5322–23, 5340–41, 5388–93
  and pragmatism, 5254 educational, 5123, 5229, 5307
  experimental, 5391 faculty, 5307
  functional, 5389
  Gestalt, 5389, 5392
  hist., 5388, 5392–93
  pathological, 4833
  physiological, 5391 political. See Political psychology religious, 25
  social, 3724 testing, 5229, 5247 therapy, 4840
Public administration, 6134–35, 6139, 6170–72, 6174, 6178, 6179–81, 6184, 6188, 6198, 6204
Public assistance, Negroes, 4448
Public debts. See Debts, public
Public defenders, 6329–30
Public domain. See Public lands Public education, 4095, 5106
  administration, 5135, 5139, 5240, 5307
  buildings, 5240
  criticism, 5226, 5232–33, 5235–39
  curricula, 5136, 5158, 5224–25, 5235, 5237, 5240
  directory, 5112
  experiments & innovations, 5158, 5224, 5235, 5237, 5240
  finances, 5135, 5144
  function, 5134
  govt. relations, 5141, 5144
  hist., 5122, 5125, 5137–38, 5140, 5143
  laws & legislation, 5143, 6138–39 local control, 5099, 5141
  methods, 5236
  objectives, 5124, 5136, 5146

Public education—Continued
organization, 5135
problems, 5240 programs, 5136 school buildings, 5240
soc. aspects, 5136–38, 5140, 5146
sources, 5125, 5138–39
state control, 5141
stat., 5114
surveys, 5114
teachers, 5105, 5132–34, 5216
theories, 5237
Concord, Mass., 5220
Mass., 5125
Va., 5122
Public finance. See Finance, public
Public health, 4617, 4808, 4823, 4829, 4831, 4841–42, 4858, 4862–81
Indians, 3023
laws, 4876
stat., 4862
Ala., 4099
Baltimore, 4867
Chicago, 4864
Ga., 4095
See also Health services; Medicine—charities Public Health Service, 4847, 4864, 4878
about, 4765, 4880
The Public Is Never Wrong, 4963
Public lands, 2970, 3237, 5809, 5811, 5813–14, 5817
Public libraries, 6440–41, 6472, 6474, 6480, 6482–83
hist., 6474
personnel, 6479
Public Library Inquiry, 6441, 6452, 6477, 6479–80
Public opinion, 3462, 3609, 3615, 4405, 4499, 4550, 4554
and the press, 2858, 2868, 2884, 2927
research, 4700, 6417, 6423
France, 3775
Russia, 3561
Public opinion polls. See Public opinion—research Public records, 3079
bibl., 3067
preservation & management, 3063
Public relations, politics, 6341, 6345, 6348
Public Speech, 1586
Public utilities, 6004, 6013
Public welfare, 4618, 4621, 4630–31, 4634
services, 4095
R.I., 4632
Publishers and publishing, 2391, 6435–38, 6440–41, 6444–46, 6449–53
Colonial, 122
directory (before 1889), 5611
music, 5635
periodicals, 2852, 2855, 2915
See also Newspapers—policies & practices
Boston, 5628
Nashville, 3765
Philadelphia, 5629
Publishers' Weekly, about, 6445
Puckett, Newbell Niles, 5561
Pueblo Indians
architecture, 5723
govt. relations, 3035
Puerto Ricans, 4428, 4470
in Brooklyn, 4046
Puerto Rico, 4222
guidebook, 3941
Puerto Rico Reconstruction Administration, 3941
Puleston, William D., 3672
Pulitzer, Joseph, about, 2848, 2889
Pulitzer prizes, 2869, 2889
Pullman strike (1894), 3133, 3439
Pulszky, Ferencz Aurelius, 4360–62
about, 4360
Pulszky, Terezia (Walder), 4360–62
about, 4360
Punch, 209
Punch: The Immortal Liar, 1166
Pupasse, 1035
The Pupil, 1007, 1014
Pupin, Michael I., 4791
about, 4791
The Puppet Master, 1635
Puppets and puppeteers, 2472, 4981
Purcell, Ralph, 5697
Purcell, Theodore V., 6055
A Puritan in Babylon, 3481
The Puritan Pronaos, 3745
Puritan Sage, 31
The Puritan Way of Life, 2345
Puritans and Puritanism, 43, 2345, 3131, 3733, 3742–43, 3745, 5394, 5428
music, 5633
Mass., 3178, 3182, 3197, 3235
Puritans and Puritanism in literature, 7–11, 17–35, 40–50, 53–55, 59–65, 72–95, 2441
anthologies, 2345
controversial writings, 17, 20, 86, 89
drama, 198, 200, 1069–70
essays, 2401, 2424, 2486, 2503
fiction, 333, 562, 1730, 2293
poetry, 7–11, 72–74, 79–83, 2483
sermons, 18, 21, 24, 33, 35, 59–62, 65
short stories, 333, 562
See also The Pilgrims; Separatists
The Puritans as Literary Artists, 2345
The Purloined Letter, 529
Pusey, Merlo J., 6254
Putnam, Carleton, 3467
Putnam, George Palmer, 4205
Putnam, Herbert, about, 6469
Putney, Cornelia F., 5589
Puttkammer, Ernst W., 6303
Putz, Louis J., ed., 5447
Puyallup Indians, 3041
Pyle, Ernie, 2745
about, 2745
Pyles, Thomas, 2250
Pylon, 1387

Q

Quacks and quackery, 1155, 4806, 4810–11, 4860
Quadrille (dance), 5587, 5590
Quaife, Milo Milton, 4137
ed., 3349
Quaker Oats Co., about, 5835
Quakers and Quakerism, 3222, 4038, 4258
in literature, 178–85, 662, 1343, 2211
See also Friends, Society of Qualey, Carlton C., 4487
Quare Medicine, 1475
Quarries and quarrying, 2991
Quarterly Review of Literature, 2568
Queen, Ellery, pseud., 2436
Queen Anne's War (1702–13), 3171
Queeny, John F., about, 4735
Queries, of Highest Consideration, 89
The Quest for Certainty, 5280
Quia Pauper Amavi, 1666
Quiet Cities, 1510
Quiet, Please, 1268
Quiett, Glenn Chesney, 4150
Quigley, Thomas H., 5211
Quillian, W. F., Jr., 3758
Quilts, 5604
Quimby, George I., 2993
Quincy, Josiah, 6475
Quinn, Arthur Hobson, 2337, 2495–96, 3735, 4904–5
ed., 145, 170, 200, 205, 208, 536, 1070, 1855, 2496
Quinn, Bernetta, 2497
Quinn, David B., 3223
ed., 3223
Quinn, Kerker, ed., 2551
Quint, Howard H., 6368
Quite So, 711
Quo Vadimus, 1861
The Quorndon Hounds, 5080
Quotations, 3152

R

Rabbi in America, 5483
Rabbis, 4458
Rabble in Arms, 1708–9
Race question, 2811–12, 2839–40, 3399, 3404, 4426–27, 4430–34, 4443, 4447, 4550, 4617, 4619, 6106, 6117, 6121, 6129, 6379
Race question in literature, 1653
essays & studies, 1103–4, 2364
fiction, 722, 756, 789–93, 1099, 1105, 1569, 1653, 1759–60, 1914–15, 1939, 2011, 2045, 2050–51
personal narratives, 1522, 1539
poetry, 856–58, 1133–35, 1537–38, 1540
short stories, 756–58, 856, 910, 1099–1102, 1523–25
See also Slavery in literature
Racing. See Automobile racing; Horse-racing; Motorboat racing; Yacht racing Racketeering, 2274, 4652
Rackman, Emanuel, 4458
The Racquet Game, 5046
Radar, 3675
Radiation, 4722
Radical empiricism, 5327
Radical Republicans, 3361, 3377, 3412

Radicalism, 3139, 3253, 3255, 3262, 3303, 3425, 3427, 6039, 6130, 6426
Radin, Max, 6268
Radin, Paul, 2407
Radio and radio broadcasting, 4682, 4684, 4686, 4691, 4695, 4697–98, 4700–1, 4703, 4965
advertising, 4696
audiences, 4700–1, 4703, 4895
drama, 4966
hist., 4519, 4690, 4693
in education, 5230–31
in religion, 4702
industry, 4683, 4687
journalists, 2848
law & regulations, 4706–9
Radisson, Pierre Esprit, about, 2831, 3170
Raeder, Ole Munch, 4348
about, 4347
Rael, Juan Bautista, 5537
Raesly, Ellis Lawrence, 3224
Rafinesque, Constantine Samuel, about, 4721
Ragan, Allen E., 6255
Rage for Order, 2529
Rage of the Soul, 2806
A Rage to Live, 2076
Ragusin, Anthony, 3946
Rahab, 1446
Rahv, Philip, 994, 2498
ed., 1007, 2566
Railroadmen, songs & music, 5512, 5559, 5562
Railroads, 2580, 2937, 4312, 5920, 5922, 5924–27
biog. (collected), 5927
fiction, 1093
folklore, 5512
frontier, 4156
hist., 5923, 5927
law, 6236
mountain, 4174
New England, 5933
Northwest, Pacific, 4214
The West, 4139
Wis., 4139
Railton, G. S., about, 5497
Rain from Heaven, 1207
Rainbow on the Road, 1444
Raintree County, 2006
Raisz, Erwin, 4172
maps, 3161, 3164, 3298
Raivaaja Publishing Company, about, 2896
Raiziss, Sona, 2499
Rajan, Balachandra, ed., 1367
Raleigh, Walter, Sir, about, 3223
Raleigh, N.C., 3833
Rall, Harris Franklin, about, 5433
Ralston, William Chapman, about, 2660
Ramona, 985
The Rampaging Frontier, 4097
Ramsaye, Terry, 4944
Ramsdell, Charles W., 4068
Ramsey, Frederic, ed., 5644
Ranch life, 2794, 4152–54, 4161–63, 4174, 4196, 5503
Randall, David A., 6464
Randall, James G., 6081
Randall, Henry S., 3296–97
Randall, J. H., Jr., 3065, 5289–90
Randall, James G., 3388, 3394–95, 3408
Randolph, John, about, 2617, 2621
Randolph, Vance, 2270, 5543–45
ed., 5569
Raney, William Francis, 4139
Rankin, Daniel S., 759
Rankin, Hugh F., 3244
Rankin, Rebecca B., 6214
Ransom, John Crowe, 1675–79, 2512
about, 2499, 2544, 2559
Rare books, 6462, 6464
Raritan River, 3994
Raskin, A. H., 6207
Ratchford, Benjamin U., 5891
Rathbone, Perry T., 5805
The Rational Study of the Classics, 5115
The Rationale of Verse, 520
Ratner, Joseph, ed., 5120, 5287
Ratner, Sidney, 5290–91, 5970
Rats, Lice and History, 2843
Rauch, Basil, 3492
ed., 3494
Raudebaugh, Charles, 6207
Rauschenbusch, Walter, 5482
about, 5396, 5436, 5443, 5482
The Raven and Other Poems, 530
The Raven and the Whale, 2478
Raw Material, 1551
Rawlings, Marjorie (Kinnan), 1680–85
about, 1685
Rawson, Marion (Nicholl), 4531
Ray, Sarah Paulding, 6267
Rayburn, Otto Ernest, 3960
Raymond, Henry Jarvis, about, 2848, 2869
Razzle Dazzle, 2114
Reactionary Essays on Poetry and Ideas, 1810
Read, Conyers, ed., 6082
The Reader's Digest, about, 2919–20
Reading Modern Poetry, 1968
Reading the Spirit, 1351
Real estate business, 5812, 5815
Real property law, 6278
The Real Right Thing, 1012
Realism in literature
drama, 1518, 1647, 1688, 1995, 2043, 2063
fiction, 277, 821, 867, 887, 956, 959, 964, 986, 1372, 1379, 1445, 1453, 1460, 1494, 1559, 1571, 1611, 1647, 1720, 1743, 1754, 1775, 1792, 1940, 1954, 1992, 2003, 2011, 2025, 2069, 2128, 2229
hist. & crit., 2276, 2364, 2401, 2424, 2485
poetry, 1290, 1727
short stories, 821, 881, 890, 986, 1149, 1379, 1453, 1494, 1796, 2011, 2071–73, 2128, 2210
theories, 890, 964, 977
See also Naturalism in literature—fiction Reality, 5379
Realms of Being, 5371
about, 5375
Realms of Value, 5334
Reason and Law, 5269
Reason and Nature, 5268
Reason in Madness, 1810
Reason the Only Oracle of Man, 5408
Rebel without a Cause, 2717
Rebels and Ancestors, 2430
Rebels and Democrats 3241
Rebels and Gentlemen, 3764
Rebels and Redcoats, 3244
The Rebuilding of Old Commonwealths, 5145
Récamier, Marie, 2281
Recollections and Impressions, 2279
Recollections of Europe, 263
Recollections of the Last Ten Years, 308–9 Reconstruction, 3093, 3120, 3141, 3361–63, 3372, 3377, 3385, 3387–88, 3408, 3412, 3416–17, 4077
editorials, sketches, etc., 556
fiction, 1105, 1382, 1618–19 reminiscences, 277, 2828–30
short stories, 1151, 1389
sources, 3376
Reconstruction in Philosophy, 5276
Recreation, 4983–5097 areas, 3786
See also Parks community, 4997–98
Plains Indians, 3006
social aspects, 4998
Mass., 3803
Mitchell, S. Dak., 3899
Northwest, Pacific, 4214
San Diego, Calif., 3932
See also Games and dances
Recreations of an Anthologist, 2467
The Red Badge of Courage (motion picture), about, 4949
The Red Badge of Courage (novel), 821, 825–29, 835–36
Red Bird, 1556
Red, Black, Blond, and Olive, 2535
Red Cloud (Sioux chief), about, 3003
Red Cross, American, hist., 4620
The Red Decade, 3490
Red Jacket, 323
The Red Mill (operetta), 5681
Red: Papers on Musical Subjects, 1828
The Red Pony, 1780
Red River valley, 3954
Red Rock, 1105
Red Roses for Bronze, 1321
Red Sand, 1792
Red Sky in the Morning, 1290
Red Wine & Yellow Hair, 2086
Redburn, about, 498
Redfield, Robert, 4472
The Re-discovery of America, 1445
The Redskins, 268
Redwood, 3959
Reebel, Dan, 5918
Reed, Alfred Zantzinger, 6326–27
Reed, David W., 2260
Reed, Henry Hope, 4609
Reed, Louis S., 4811
Reed, Mark, 2333

Reed, Walter
about, 4872
drama, 1520
Reed, William Gardner, 5816
The Reef, 1849
Reese, Albert, 5780
Reese, Lizette Woodworth, 2780–81
about, 2781
Reese, M. Lisle, 3896
Reeve, Henry, tr., 4510–12
Reeves, Jesse S., 3540
Reflections at Fifty, 1378
Reflections in a Golden Eye, 2023–24
Reform and reform movements, 4614, 6424–34
19th cent., 3430–31, 3446, 3769, 4522, 4530, 4535, 4537, 6360
20th cent., 3446, 3455, 3458, 6360, 6362
See also Muckrakers
Reform Judaism, 5459
Reformatories. See Prisons
The Reformed Church, about, 5442
The Reformed Presbyterian Church, about, 5466
Refrigerators and refrigerating machinery, 4794
Refugees, political, 4263, 4289, 4481
since 1933, 4407, 4414, 4419
Regier, Cornelius C., 6430
Regional characteristics, 4230, 4283
See also Culture
Regional libraries, 6471
Regionalism, 1809, 3781, 3783, 3785, 3942, 4079
in art, 5748
Regionalism and local color in literature
editorials, sketches, etc., 192–93, 445–48, 542–45, 556–61, 612–13, 701–5, 716–17, 1064–65, 1068, 1072, 1090, 1103–4, 1724–26, 1791
fiction, 402–4, 562, 683–86, 716, 718–20, 745, 749–50, 768, 867–73, 945–52, 955, 959–63, 980, 1032, 1099, 1105, 1145–8, 1270–74, 1276–77, 1314–15, 1379, 1453, 1460–62, 1653–55, 1680–83, 1686–87, 1691, 1693–4, 1696, 1697–99, 1701, 1705, 1786–89, 1792–96, 1798–1800, 1836–40, 1845, 1959–62, 1964–65, 2023–24, 2166, 2193–94, 2197, 2199
poetry, 662, 753–55, 926, 933–34, 941–44, 1038–43, 1046–47, 1064, 1066–67, 1126–31, 1133–35, 1290, 1295–97, 1314, 1809, 1959, 2166, 2172, 2193, 2196, 2202
short stories, 556–62, 574–75, 612–13, 687, 701, 704–5, 716, 745–48, 759–60, 881–86, 890–95, 910–22, 924–32, 935–40, 945, 951–52, 954–55, 1032–35, 1084–88, 1099–1102, 1149–51, 1270, 1275, 1379, 1453, 1680, 1684, 1686–87, 1697, 1724, 1796, 1839, 1841, 1845, 2110, 2166–68, 2170–71, 2202, 2205, 2207, 2209
anthologies, 2322, 2369
Regionalism and local color in literature—Continued
See also names of regions, states, and places in literature, e.g., New England in literature
Regionalisms (language). See Language—dialects & regionalisms
Regulation of Lobbying Act, 6397
Regulatory agencies. See Executive branch
Rehabilitation centers, 4637
Reich, Nathan, 4457
Reichard, H. H., 4479
Reid, Ira De A., 4428, 4447, 5500
Reid, Ogden Mills, about, 2868
Reid, Whitelaw, about, 2868
The Reign of Law, 718
The Reign of Philip the Second, History of, 2294
Rein, David M., 4828
Reindeer industry, Alaska, 2719–20
Reinemann, John Otto, 4657
Reinhardt, George C., 3629
Reinhart, C. S., illus., 1101
The Reinterpretation of American Literature, 2424
Reis, Claire (Raphael), 5609, 5620
Reischauer, Edwin O., 3510
Reisner, Edward H., 5121
Reiss, Albert J., Jr., 4395
Reissman, Norman, 5039
Reitzel, William, 3573, 3630
Reizenstein, Elmer. See Rice, Elmer L.
Religion, 3469, 3969, 4551, 5254, 5311, 5394–5502
biog. (collected), 5396, 5426–27
Colonial period, 3747, 3763
Dutch communities, 4493
frontier & pioneer, 5411–16
hist., 4224, 4315, 5394–5417
Jews, 4458
law & legislation, 5420–22
Negroes, 5498–5502, 5527, 5547
Pennsylvania Germans, 4480
Baltimore, 4062
Mass., 4034
Nashville, 3765
New England, 5417
N.C., 4090
Northwest, Old, 4112
Ohio, 4121
Pa., 4054–55
S.C., 4091
Southern States, 3766, 4069, 4083
See also Indians—religion; Radio in religion; Sects; Cults; Television in religion; and names of individual religious bodies Religion, folk
Brazos River, Tex., 5527
Mo., 5528
N. Mex., 5537
Religion and public education, 5103, 5181, 5236, 5419, 5491, 5494
Religion and science, 3114, 3761, 5315, 5337, 5434 Religious folksongs, 5549, 5553–54, 5564
hist., 5549
Appalachian Mountains, 5583
Ky., 5584
Religious folksongs—Continued
Mich., 5575
Ozark Mountains, 5569
Southern States, 5583
Religious institutions, Jewish, 4461
Religious leaders, 5474–83
Religious life
Italians, 4497
Swedish, 4483
Religious literature, Colonial period, 3742–43, 3745
Religious movements, 4522, 4525
Jewish, 4459
Religious music. See Choirs (music); Church music
Religious themes in literature
Christian life, 17, 45, 90 church govt., 19, 34, 93–95
church hist., 43–44
controversial writings, 17, 20, 86, 89
conversion, 60–61
devotional books, 45, 87–89
diaries, journals, etc., 178–85 doctrinal, 26, 230–31
essays, 230–31, 2479
fiction, 402–4, 716, 762, 1252, 1343, 1396, 1446, 1563, 1578, 2415
hist. & crit., 2483, 2493
manual for pastors, 47–48 meditations, 2034, 2038, 2041–42
missions, 62
natural theology, 46
personal narratives, 2024, 2036
poetry, 7–11, 72–73, 79–83, 662, 670–71, 680, 1357, 1359, 1369, 1537–38, 1540, 2034–35, 2037, 2039
prose, 2279
psychological, 25
revivals, 22–23
sermons, 17–18, 24, 33, 35, 230, 900
See also Theology—in literature
Religious thought. See Theology; Religion; Philosophy; etc.
Relocation centers, Japanese, 4469
Remedial law, 6279
Remember to Remember, 1613
Remembered Yesterdays, 2923
Remembering Laughter, 2161
Remembrance Rock, 1727, 1730
Remington, Frederic drawings, 5034
illus., 1147
about, 5770, 5802
bibl., 5770
Removal and Return, 4469
Remsen, Ira, 4724
Renascence, 1609
Rendezvous with Destiny, 3455
Renegade, 1578
Reno, Nev., 2746, 4176, 4184
in literature, 1954, 2746
Repent in Haste, 1594
Reporters and reporting, 2903, 2905–7, 2928
Civil War, 2851
Oreg., 2863
Washington, D.C., 2861, 2930
See also Newspapermen
Representative American Dramas, 2348
Representative American Plays, 145, 170, 200, 205, 208, 1070, 2337

Representative Men, 298
Representative Plays by American Dramatists, 145, 170, 199, 2347
Republic Steel, 5918
The Republican Era, 1869–1901, 6178
Republican newspapers, 2851, 2862–63, 2868–70, 2875
Republican Party, 3424, 6347–48, 6352–53, 6361, 6365–66, 6370 hist., 2879, 3438, 3442, 3456, 3466, 3500a, 6361, 6365–66
  National Committee, 6361
  National Convention (1912), 6350
  platforms, 6367
  Philadelphia, 6353, 6389
Republican Party (Jeffersonian), 3141, 3286, 3310–11, 6347
Republicanism, 3144, 3308
Requiem for a Nun, 1395
Research. See specific subjects, e.g., Business research Research libraries, 6470, 6478, 6483, 6487
Reserves, national. See Forests and forestry; National parks and reserves Resorts. See Health—resorts, etc.; Skiing and ski resorts
The Responsibilities of the Critic, 2477
The Responsibilities of the Novelist, 1096
Restless Is the River, 1961
Reston, James, 3615
The Restoration of Learning, 5233
The Resurgent Years, 5913
Retail trade, 5949
The Return of a Private, 893
The Return of Lanny Budd, 1758
The Return of Peter Grimm, 2347
Return to the Fountains, 2494
Reuben and Rachel, 164
Reunion and Reaction, 3417
Reunion in Vienna, 1749
Reusser, Walter C., 5144
Reutter, E. E., Jr., 5216
Revelry, 1156
Reverchon, Julien, about, 4734
Revere, Paul, about, 1437
The Reverend Griffith Davenport, 2304
Reveries of a Bachelor, 507–8
Revett, Marion S., 4894
The Revival of Realism, 5351
Revivals and revivalism, 22–23, 5401–3, 5407, 5411, 5480
  See also Great Awakening; Great Revival
Revolution, right of, 6073
Revolution and Other Essays, 1048
The Revolutionary Generation, 3089
Revolutionary War. See American Revolution
Revolutionists. See Patriots (American Revolution)
Rexroth, Kenneth, 2098–2102
Reynolds, Levering, Jr., 5424
Reynolds, Lloyd G., 6037
Reynolds, Mary (Trackett), 6189
Rhapsody in Blue (music), 5678
Rhees, Rush, about, 5671
A Rhetoric of Motives, 2390
Rhode Island, 3965, 4039–40
  econ. condit., 4632
Rhode Island—Continued founding, 84
  guidebooks, 3804
  hist., 3197, 4039
  soc. condit., 4632
Rhodes, Charles D., 3651
Rhodes, Eugene Manlove, 1686–87
  about, 1686
Rhodes, Frederick Leland, 4679
Rhodes, James Ford, about, 2695, 3058
Rhodes, May Davison, 1686
Rhyme, folk, 5510–11, 5592
  N.C., 5536
  Schoharie County, N.Y., 5539
  Southwest, 5507
Rhymes of Childhood, 1127
Rhymes to Be Traded for Bread, 1581
Rhyne, Charles S., 4708
Rhyne, J. J., 4594
Rhys, Ernest, ed., 4343
Rian, Edwin H., 5494
Ribalow, Harold U., ed., 4453
Ribalow, Menachem, 4453
Rice, Charles S., 4058
Rice, Edward, 5024
Rice, Elmer L., 1688–90, 2332, 2334, 2348
Rice, Grantland, 4994, 5048
  about, 4994
Rice, John Andrew, 2782–83
  about, 2783
Rice, Philip Blair, 5366
Rice, William North, 4724
Rich, Arthur Lowndes, 5684
Rich, Wesley E., 4669
Richard Edney, 402
Richards, Eugene S., 4431
Richards, Ivor Armstrong, about, 2407
Richards, Laura E., 4040
Richardson, Alfred Talbot, ed., 2663
Richardson, Edgar P., 5755–56, 5760
Richardson, Harry V., 5501
Richardson, Henry Hobson, about, 5710
Richardson, Lyon N., 2915
  ed., 2352
Richardson, Rupert Norval, 4189, 4194
Richert, Gottlieb Henry, 5949
Richey, Herman G., 5140
Richman, Irving Berdine, 4039
Richmond, Va., essays, 1002–3
Richter, Conrad Michael, 1691–96
Rickaby, Franz L., 5567
Rickard, Tex, about, 4987
Rickard, Thomas Arthur, 5917
Riddick, Floyd M,. 6162
Riddles, 5511
  N.C., 5536
  Schoharie County, N.Y., 5539
Rideout, Walter B., ed., 1187
Rider, Fremont, 6476
Rider, Richard L., 4682
Riders of the Purple Sage, 1485
Ridge Runner, 2590
Ridler, Anne, 1367
Riegel, Robert E., 3103, 3137, 4520
Riegger, Wallingford, 4968
Riemer, Ruth, 4469
Riesman, David, 4452, 4513, 4555–56, 5190
Riggs, Robert L., 5050
  about, 5050
Right of revolution, 6073
Right of search, 3554, 3558
Right to vote. See Freedom of the franchise
Rights of man, 6068, 6071–73, 6085, 6094
The Rights of Man, 155
Riis, Jacob August, 2784–85, 4638
  about, 2785
Riker, Charles Cook, 5671
Riker, Dorothy, comp., 4125
Riley, I. Woodbridge, 5262
Riley, James Whitcomb, 1126–31
  about, 941, 1132, 4124
Rimmer, William, about, 5738
Rinehart, Mary (Roberts), 2786–87
  about, 2787
Ring, Martha D., 4883
Ringer, Gordon, tr., 5363
Ringer, Virginia, tr., 5363
The Ringer, 1486
Ringwalt, Ralph Curtis, ed., 4464
Rio Grande River and valley, 4197, 5083
Riordon, William L., 6382
Rip Van Winkle autobiography of Joseph Jefferson, 4934 play by Charles Burke, 2347 play by Joseph Jefferson, 2337
  short story by Washington Irving, 381, 384–87
Rip Van Winkle Goes to the Play, 2475
Ripley, George, about, 2279
Ripley, Sarah Alden, about, 2615
Ripostes, 1666
Rippy, James Fred, 3138, 3586
Rips, Rea Elizabeth, 6138
The Rise of a New Federalism, 6198
The Rise of American Civilization, 3073, 3479, 3750
The Rise of Realism, 2276
The Rise of Silas Lapham, 967–70, 982
The Rise of the Common Man, 3091
The Rise of the Dutch Republic, 2293
Rise of the New West, 3356–57
Rister, Carl Coke, 4160, 4189
Ritchie, Andrew Carnduff, 5696
Ritchie, Anna Cora (Ogden) Mowatt. See Mowatt, Anna Cora Ritchie, Thomas, about, 1267
Rittenhouse, David, about, 4758
River boat life
  Mississippi River, 784–86, 4281, 5505
  Ohio River, 5505
A River Goes with Heaven, 1837
River navigation, 5929
River travel. See Travel and travelers—river
Riverhead, 1515
A Rivermouth Romance, 711
Rivers, 3969–4025
  Canada, 4237–38
  Fla., 4247
  Ga., 4247
  Ill., 4322
  Ind., 4282
  Ky., 4282, 4322
  La., 4282
  Md., 3999
  Mass., 4012

Rivers—Continued
Miss., 4282
Mo., 4322
New York (State), 4237–38, 4282
Ohio, 4282
Pa., 4237–38, 4282
Southern States, 4083
Tenn., 4282
Va., 4282
See also Waterways, inland; and also specific rivers, e.g., Hudson River Rivers Parting, 1918
Rivers to the Sea, 1814
The Riverside Bookshelf, 685
Riverside County, Calif., 3957
Rives, William Cabell, 3283
The Rivet in Grandfather's Neck, 1262
The Road Between, 1376
Road of Ages, 1635
The Road to Disappearance, 3025
The Road to Rome, 1749, 2332
Roads, 5934 guides, 3786, 3805
See also Highways
Roalfe, William R., 6328
Roan Stallion, 1534
Rob of the Bowl, 412–13
Roback, Abraham A., 5392
Robacker, Earl F., 2266
The Robber Barons, 5880
The Robber Bridegroom, 2204
Robbins, Ira S., 4612
Robbins, Rossell H., 1368
Robbins, Roy M., 5814
Robbins, Thomas, 44
Robert, Joseph C., 5829
Robert Emmet, 2298
Roberts, Anna M., tr. & ed., 4265
Roberts, Elizabeth Madox, 1697–1706
Roberts, Henry L., 3557
Roberts, Howard, 5040
Roberts, John S., 5307
Roberts, Kenneth, 1707–12
tr. & ed., 4265
Roberts, Leonard W., ed., 5546
Roberts, Leslie, 4015
Roberts, Mary M., 4852
Roberts, Morris, 1010
Robertson, Elizabeth Wells, 5604
Robertson, Stuart, 2251
Robertson, William, 3031
Robeson, Dave, 4982
Robinson, Blackwell P., ed., 3831
Robinson, Daniel S., ed., 5359
Robinson, Edwin Arlington, 1713–16
about, 1717–19, 2289, 2404, 2527, 2544, 2682
Robinson, George O., 4747
Robinson, James Harvey, about, 4540, 4545
Robinson, John, about, 3257
Robinson, Roland I., 5971
Robinson, Thomas Porter, 4709
Robinson, William W., 4202
Robson, Eric, 3261
Rochester, N.Y.
guidebook, 3810
hist., 3810, 4050–52
Rockefeller, Abby (Aldrich), Folk Art Collection, 5595
Rockefeller, John D., about 3117, 5915–16
Rockefeller, John D., Jr., about, 4622
Rockefeller Foundation, 4622
about, 5163, 5198
A Rocket in My Pocket, 5592
Rocket to the Moon, 2064
Rockford, Ill., 3881
Rockne, Bonnie Skiles, ed., 5041
Rockne, Knute, 5041
about, 5041, 5044
Rocks before the Mansion, 2788
Rocky Mountain Fur Co., 4148
Rocky Mountain Herald, 1409
Rocky Mountain region, 2933, 3967, 4172–85
cities & towns, 4176–77
fiction, 312, 1239
folklore, 5530
frontier life, 4155–56
fur trade, 4148
geology, 4172
guidebooks, 3910–16
travel & travelers, 391, 4384
Rocky Mountain Review, 2576
Rodabaugh, James H., ed. & illus., 4120
Rodall, Marie F., 2436
Rodell, Fred, 6256
Roden, Robert F., 6448
Rodgers, Andrew Denny, 2788–92, 4760
Rodgers, Richard, about, 5639, 5685
Rodgers, Robert R., 5170
Rodman the Keeper, 1151
Roe, Frank G., 2965, 2984
Roebling, John August, about, 4801
Roebling, Washington Augustus, about, 4801
Roebuck, A. D., about, 5956
Rølvaag, Ole Edvart, 1720–23
Roemer, Ferdinand, about, 4734
Roemer, Milton I., 4869
Roethke, Theodore, 2103–4
Rogers, A. K., 5255, 5289
Rogers, Bruce, illus., 4123
Rogers, John, about, 5739
Rogers, Lindsay, 6423
Rogers, Meyric R., 5732
Rogers, Richard, 2337
Rogers, Robert, 2347
about, 1710
Rogers, Samuel, about, 219
Rogers, Walter P., 5191
Rogers, Will, about, 556, 558, 862, 2657
Rogers, William Garland, 1773
Rogers groups, 5739
Rogers' Rangers, fiction, 1710
Rogin, Leo, 5830
Rogue's Legacy, 2413
Roll, Jordan, Roll, 1653
Roll River, 1239
Rollins, Philip Ashton, 4161, 4163
Roman Bartholow, 1714
Roman Catholic Church. See Catholic Church
Roman Fever, 1855
The Roman Spring of Mrs. Stone, 2224
Romance of a Plain Man, 1461
The Romance of Certain Old Clothes, 1012
The Romance of Madroño Hollow, 930
The Romantic Comedians, 1460–61
The Romantic Egoists, 1913
The Romantic Triumph, 2276
Romanticism, 3751, 4080, 6065
Romanticism in literature, 2364, 2367, 2375, 2401, 2424, 2485, 2507, 2510
anthology, 2276
editorials, sketches, etc., 192, 674, 716
essays, 280
fiction, 201, 226, 245, 252, 333, 345, 405, 471–78, 546, 716, 762, 768, 1048, 1089, 1099, 1145
poetry, 134, 216, 323, 427, 520, 586, 614, 619, 662, 941
short stories, 381, 520, 716, 745, 1099
Romberg, Sigmund, 6322
Rome Haul, 1354
Romines, Stephen, 5158
Romulus, the Shepherd King, 2302
Roosevelt, Eleanor, 3493
Roosevelt, Elliott, ed., 3493
Roosevelt, Franklin D., 3493–94
about, 1749, 3108, 3130, 3489, 3491, 3494–3500, 3567, 5884, 6354–55, 6364
Roosevelt, Theodore, 2793–95, 3307, 3465
about, 2474, 2503, 2542, 2625, 2682–83, 2686, 2795, 3058, 3121, 3466–67, 3489, 3527, 4533, 6385, 6424, 6432
sculpture, 5737
Root, Elihu, about, 2712, 3459, 3653
Root, Winfred Trexler, 3225
The Roots of American Culture, 3736
The Roots of National Culture, 2276
The Rope, 1648
Roper, Daniel C., 4670
Rorem, C. Rufus, 4883
Rose, Arnold M., 4433, 4446
ed., 4434
Rose, Billy, about, 6322
Rose, Caroline, 4433
Rose, J. Holland, ed., 3179
Rose Bowl football game, 5042
Rose Michel, 2308
The Rose Tattoo, 2225
Roseboom, Eugene H., 4120–21, 6149
Rosedale, 2301
Rosen, Carl George Arthur, about, 4803
Rosen, George, 4844
Rosenau, James N., ed., 3494
Rosenbach, Abraham S., 2500
Rosenberg, Bernard, ed., 6443
Rosenberry, Edward H., 503
Rosenberry, Lois (Kimball) Mathews, 4028, 4030
Rosenfield, Harry N., 4425
Rosengarten, George D., about, 4735
Rosenman, Samuel I., 3499
Rosenthal, Herbert, 3081
Rosenthal, Morris S., 5950
Rosenwald, Julius, about, 5956
Rosewater, Victor, 2860
Ross, Charles D., 5186
Ross, Clay C., 5229
Ross, Earle Dudley, 6369

677676 O–63–75

Ross, Edward Alsworth, 4543
about, 4542
Ross, Harold W., about, 2565
Ross, Ishbel, 4820
Ross, Leonard Q., 2861
Ross, Lillian, 4949
Ross and the New Yorker, 2565
Ross County, Ohio, 3864
Rossetti, Christina Georgina, about, 1905, 2481
Rossiter, Clinton, L., 6067–68
Rossiter, William S., 4400
Rosskam, Edwin, ed., 3039
Rosten, Leo C., 2861, 4948
Rotary International, about, 4578
Rotha, Paul, 4944
Rothberg, Abraham, ed., 2322
Rothenberg, Robert E., 4889
Rothenberg, Stanley, 5621
Rothery, Agnes Edwards, 4087
Rothstein, Arthur, 2908
Rothstein, Samuel, 6483
Rottschaefer, Henry, 6099
Roucek, Joseph S., ed., 4426
Rough-Hewn, 1415
Roughing It, 772–74
Round by Round, 5023
Round dances, 5587
A Round of Visits, 1008
Round-Shot to Rockets, 3670
Rourke, Constance M., 2443, 2501, 2796–98, 3736, 5772
Rousseau and Romanticism, 2375
Rovere, Richard H., 3482
Rowing, 4990, 5020
Rowland, Henry Augustus, about, 4724
Rowland, Stanley J., drawings, 5728
Rowlandson, Mary (White), 53–55, about, 3032
Rowlingson, Donald T., 5496
Rowson, Susanna (Haswell), 161–64
about, 161
Roxy, 874–75
Royal Government in America, 3195
A Royal Slave, 2305
Royce, Josiah, 5303, 5354–61
about, 5252, 5354, 5362–64, 5369
Rozwenc, Edwin C., ed., 3118–22
Rubin, Joseph J., ed., 657
Rubin, Louis D., 1899
ed., 2442
Rucker, Frank W., 2909
Ruffin, Edmund, about, 3367
ed., 13
Ruffin, Thomas, about, 6231
Rugg, Harold O., 5104
Ruggles, Eleanor, 4938
Rukeyser, Muriel, 2105–6
Rumford, Count. See Thompson, Benjamin
Rumsey, James, about, 4784
Runaway Star, 688
The Rungless Ladder, 562
The Running of the Tide, 1443
Rural communities. See Country life
Rural folklore, 4579
Rural government. See Local government
Rural life. See Communities, rural; Farm and rural life Rural press, Southern, 2853
Rush, Benjamin, 5251
about, 4822, 4830, 4872, 5121
Rush, Nixon Orwin, 5479
Rusk, Howard A., 4637
Rusk, Ralph Leslie, 2502
ed., 295, 305
Rusling, James Fowler, 4386
about, 4385
Russell, Bertrand, about, 5368
Russell, Carl Parcher, 4211
Russell, Charles Edward, 5652
Russell, Charles M., about, 5802
Russell, Elmer Beecher, 6232
Russell, Henry Norris, 5427
about, 5427
Russell, Irwin, 1133–35
about, 1135
Russell, Peter, ed., 1673
Russell, William, 5644
Russell, William Henry, about, 4661
Russell, Sir William Howard, 4379–82, about, 4378
Russell, William L., 4838
Russell Sage Foundation, 4623
Russia
econ. relations with, 3619, 3638
fiction, 1190
relations with, 3505, 3523, 3557, 3563–64, 3619
19th cent., 3429
20th cent., 3546, 3560–65, 3567–68, 3570, 3620, 3622, 3624–25, 3627, 3629–30
reporting, 2535
travel & travelers, 1311
Russian Revolution, fiction, 1656
Russo, Dorothy Ritter, 1807
Ruth, George H. ("Babe"), 4987, 5012
about, 5012
Rutherford, Mary Louise (Schuman), 6332
Rutherfurd, Livingston, 2931
Rutledge, Archibald, 1724–26, 5087–90, about, 5087–90
Rutledge, John, about, 6260
Rutledge, Joseph L., 3226
Ryan, Earl H., 4695
Ryan, Grace L., comp., 5590
Ryan, Margery W., ed., 5206
Rymer, Charles A., 4859
Rynning, Ole, 4485
Ryskind, Morris, 1545

S

S.U.M., about, 6015
Sac Prairie Saga, 1960
Sacco, Nicola
drama, 1173
fiction, 1980
Sachs, Leon, 6104
Sachse, William L., 3227
Sacramento River, 3974
Sacred and Profane Memories, 1828
Sacred Books of the East, 280
The Sacred Harp, 5577
The Saga of the Roaring Road, 5007
Sagamore Hill, 2686
Sage, Margaret Olivia, about, 4623.
Sahagún, Bernardino de, 2997
Sailing, 5017, 5019, 5021
Sailor on Horseback, 2815
Sailors
folklore, 5533
songs, 5551, 5553, 5556, 5558–59, 5562, 5580
St. Augustine, Fla.
guidebook, 3847
language (dialects, etc.), 2258
St. Cloud, Minn., guidebook, 3888
Saint Elizabeths Hospital, Washington, D.C., about, 4840
Saint-Gaudens, Augustus, about, 5735
St. Helena Island, S. C., Negro folklore, 5540
St. John, J. Hector. See Crèvecoeur, Michel Guillaume St. Jean de
St. John, Vincent, about, 6045
St. John's River, Fla., 3980
St. Lawrence River, 3979
St. Louis, Mo.
drama, 2219
fiction, 763–65
Hegelians, 5305
politics, 6207
theater, 4913
St. Louis. City Art Museum, 5805
St. Louis. Public Library, 6467
St. Martin, Alexis, about, 4818, 4822
St. Olaf College, Northfield, Minn. Choir, 5664
St. Paul, Minn., Swedes in, 4486
Saint Peter Relates an Incident, 1540
Saints of Sage & Saddle, 5538
Sakoda, J., 4469
Sakolski, Aaron M., 5815
Sale, John B., 5547
Salem, Mass., 2600
drama, 198, 200, 2048
essays, 1002–3
fiction, 1439, 1443, 1508, 1917
witchcraft trials, 41–42, 56, 198, 200, 2048
See also Witchcraft
Salesmen, 5955
Salina, Kans., guidebook, 3907
Salinas River, Calif., 3998
Salinger, Jerome David, 2107–9
Salley, Alexander S., 554
ed., 3216
Salmagundi, 511
Saloons. See Hotels, taverns, etc.
Saloutos, Theodore, 5831
Salt Lake City, 4176
Salter, J. T., 6336, 6389
Saltwater Farm, 1295
The Salvage, 4469
Salvation Army, about, 5497
poetry, 1581
Salvation on a String, 1476
Sam Ego's House, 2117
Sam Lawson's Oldtown Fireside Stories, 574–75
Samaroff Stokowski, Olga, 5686
about, 5686
Sam'l of Posen, 2301
Samoa, American, 4218
Samplers (needlework), 5593
Sampling (radio program rating), 4700
Sampson, Martin W., 999
Samuelsen, Rube, 5042
Samurai and Serpent Poems, 2350

San Antonio, 4187
guidebook, 3923
San Bernardino County, Calif., 3957
San Diego, Calif., 2746–47, 2750, 4150
guidebooks, 3931–32
San Diego County, Calif., 3957
San Francisco
Bohemianism, 3757
fiction, 1090–92
guidebook, 3933
hist., 2560, 3943, 4150, 4208–9
politics, 2888, 6207
port, 4208–9
soc. life & cust., 4352–53
theater, 4918, 4943
underworld, 2586
San Francisco Bay, 3933, 4208
San Francisco Federal Theatre, Research Dept., 4918
San Ildefonso Indians, 3041
San Xavier del Bac (Ariz.) mission, guidebook, 3926
Sanborn, Franklin B., 5266
ed., 599–601
Sanctuary, 1385, 1395
Sand, George
about, 2504
drama, 2337
Sandage, Charles H., 5962
Sandburg, Carl, 1727–32, 3393, 3395, 4483, 5511
ed., 5562
about, 2406, 2419, 2503
Sanders, Jennings B., 3058, 6083
Sanders, Rufus, pseud., 2257
Sando at Seventy, 626
Sandoz, Jules Ami, about, 2800
Sandoz, Mari Susette, 2799–2801
Sands, Robert Charles, 2295
Sandusky Bay (Ohio) region, guidebook, 3868
Sandusky County, Ohio, 3867
Sandys, Edwyn, 5091
Sanford, Charles L., ed., 3123
Sanford, Trent Elwood, 5723
Sangamon River, 3988
Sanger, Joseph P., ed., 3651
Sanitary engineering, 4823, 4831, 4864, 4874, 4878
Mass., 4879
Sankey, Ira D., about, 5405, 5480
Santa Barbara, Calif., guidebook, 3934
Santa Barbara County, Calif., 3957
Santa Fe, 4148, 4176, 4187
Santa Fe Trail, 4188
Santayana, George, 1733–41, 5255, 5366–74
about, 1678, 1742, 5259, 5262, 5365, 5375–77
Santee River, 4023
Saposs, D. J., 6033
Sapphira and the Slave Girl, 1277
Sappington, Clarence O., 4873
Saratoga, N.Y.
essays, 1003
fiction, 1407
Saratoga campaign, 3682
poetry, 323
Saratoga Trunk, 1407
Sarazen, Gene, 5051
about, 5051
Sargeant, Winthrop, 5622, 5645
Sargent, John Singer
illus., 439
about, 5771
Sarnoff, David, about, 4683
Saroyan, William, 2110–22, 2327, 2334, 2336
about, 2119, 2121, 2536
Sarton, May, 2123–27
Sartoris, 1382
Saskatchewan River, 4004
Satanstoe, 268–69
Satire, 3732
drama, 1317, 1548–49
editorials, sketches, etc., 209–15, 381–83, 422–26, 542–45, 556–61, 732, 862–66, 1214, 1815–20
essays, 147–48, 165, 1317–18, 1602, 1604–5
fiction, 105–8, 689–90, 775–77, 794–97, 1261–62, 1267, 1381, 1559–64, 1567, 1589–90, 1635, 1643, 1682, 1792, 1842–45, 2001, 2017–19, 2021–22, 2053, 2154, 2180, 2229
periods
Colonial, 51–52, 75–77, 92–93, 2493
(1764–1819), 105–8, 118, 120, 134–39, 147–48, 165–68
(1820–70), 209–15, 323, 381–83, 422–26, 456–58, 542–45, 556–61
(1871–1914), 689–90, 732, 775–77, 794–97, 862–66
(1915–39), 1261–62, 1267, 1317–18, 1381, 1545, 1548–49, 1589–90, 1635, 1643, 1651–52, 1688, 1792, 1815–20, 1842–44, 1845
(1940–55), 2017–22, 2053, 2082, 2154, 2180, 2189–92, 2229
poetry, 120, 134–39, 148, 165, 167, 323, 456–58, 1651–52, 2189–92, 2467
short stories, 1651–52
Satires & Bagatelles, 128
Satterlee, Herbert L., 5978
The Saturday Evening Post, about, 2919, 2926
Saturday Night, 1475
The Saturday Review of Literature, 2398, 2415, 2569
Saturday's Children, 2332
Savage, Carlton, 3524
Savage, Henry, 4023
Savage, Howard J., 4599
Savage, James, ed., 91
Savannah, Ga., guidebook, 3841
Savannah River, 4016
Savelle, Max, 3747
Saveth, Edward N., ed., 3062
Saxe Holm's Stories, 984
Saxon, Olin Glenn, 5952
Say, Thomas, about, 4721
Sayre, Charles R., 5839
Sayre, Paul L., 6233
Scandinavia, relations with, 3511
Scandinavians, 4482–87
in Brooklyn, 4046
in the Mississippi Valley, 3975
folklore, 5523
Scarborough, Dorothy, 5582
The Scarecrow, 2337, 2348
The Scarlet Letter, 341–44
Scarlet Sister Mary, 1655
Scarlett, William, Bp., 5499
Scenes and Portraits, 2380
Scepticism and Animal Faith, 5370
about, 5375
Schachner, Nathan, 3290–91
Schafer, Joseph, 5832
Schaldach, William J., 5092–93
Schantz, B. T., ed., 2293
Schary, Dore, 4949
Schattschneider, Elmer E., 6370, 6396
Schaub, Edward L., ed., 5309
Schauman, Georg, ed., 4243–44
Scheer, George F., 3244
Schele de Vere, Maximilian, 2252
Schellenberg, Theodore R., 3063
Schenk, Gretchen (Knief), 6471
Scherman, Harry, about, 6463
Schevill, James Erwin, 1189
Schick, Frank L., 6444
ed., 6438
Schickele, Rainer, 5860
Schilling, Jane Metzger, 6047
Schilpp, Paul A., ed., 5294, 5377, 5385
Schlesinger, Arthur Meier, Jr., 3083, 3352, 3500
Schlesinger, Arthur Meier, Sr., 2424, 3083, 3095, 3139–40, 3262, 4532, 6431
ed., 3085–98, 4368, 4412–13
Schlesinger, Eugene R., 5971
Schlosberg, Harold, 5391
Schmeckebier, Laurence F., 4706, 4765, 6138, 6163, 6215, 6452
Schmitt, Martin F., 4158
Schneider, Herbert W., 5261, 5289, 5291, 5335, 5409, 6082
ed., 5335
Schnier, Jacques P., 5734
Schoberlin, Melvin, 4925
Schönberg, Arnold, 5678
Schöpf, Johann David, 4256–57
about, 4255
Schoharie County, N.Y., 5539
Scholar's Workshop, 6478
Scholarship and learning, 3739, 4458–59
Scholes, Percy A., 5633
The School for Scandal, 168
The School Review, 5249
The School that Built a Town, 5145
Schoolcraft, Henry Rowe, 2802–3
about, 2802
Schools
art, 5690
frontier, 4214
in fiction, 583–84
Indian, 3040
Jewish, 4454
music, 5668
public, 4320
Cincinnati, 4310
Ga., 4095
Ky., 4310
Pennsylvania Germans, 4479
New England, 2674
Va., 4310

Schools—Continued
See also Education; and specific types of schools, e.g., Journalism—schools
Schools and business enterprise, 5116
Schools in Transition, 5206
Schorer, Mark, 2128–32
Schouler, James, 3141
about, 3058
Schramm, Wilbur L., 2932, 5899
Schreiber, Flora Rheta, 5687
Schreyvogel, Charles, about, 5802
Schriftgiesser, Karl, 3500a, 6397
Schroeder, Gertrude G., 5918
Schuchert, Charles, 4715, 4754
Schulberg, Budd, 1425
Schuller, Charles F., 5231
Schultz, Christian, 4282
about, 4281
Schulweis, H. M., 4458
Schuman, William, about, 5687
Schurr, Sam H., 5907
Schurz, Carl, 2858
about, 2677, 2882, 3431, 4481
Schwantes, Robert S., 3780
Schwartz, Bernard, 6257
Schwartz, Delmore, 2133–38
Schwartz, Edward, 1663
Schwartz, Harry Wayne, 5653
Schwartz, Morris S., 4838
Schwartz, Sulamith, 4457
Schweitzer, Albert, about, 2682
Science, 4513, 4537
awards, 4729
bibl., 4714, 6453
Colonial period
Charleston, S.C., 3763
New England, 3745, 3747–48
Philadelphia, 3764
hist., 4714–15, 4718–19, 4721–24, 4726, 4730, 4753, 4761, 5289
museums, 3049
periodicals, 4715, 4736
philosophy of, 5267–68, 5280, 5291, 5349
study & teaching, 4719
New York (City), 4049
Northwest, Old, 4112
Southern States, 4723
Science, 4678
Science and pragmatism. See Pragmatism—and science
Science and religion. See Religion and science
Science and state, 4761–4779, 6118, 6130
Science and the Idea of God, 5315
Science as a profession, 4725
Science fiction, 520, 1932, 1934, 1959
anthologies, 1959
essays & studies, 2377
Scientific apparatus and instruments, 4719, 4721
Scientific management, 4798
Scientific method, 5254, 5257, 5267–68, 5289, 5346
Scientific personnel, 4725, 4779
Scientific research, 3675, 4777–79
hist., 4722
wartime, 4761
Scientific societies directory, 4728
hist., 4713, 4726
Scientists, 4725, 4742–60, 4765, 4773, 5434
bibl., 4729
biog. (collected), 4712, 4717, 4721, 4724, 4730, 4774, 4785
directory, 4712
Scientists against Time, 4761
Scoon, R., 3758
Scopes trial, 5429
Scotch immigrants, 4488, 4491
Scotch-Irish, 4489–90
Scott, A. P., 3058
Scott, Arthur L., ed., 819
Scott, Cecil W., ed., 5236
Scott, Clinton Lee, about, 5473
Scott, Evelyn, 1743–48
Scott, Franklin D., 3511
ed., 3064
Scott, Harvey Whitefield, about, 2863
Scott, Hugh L., about, 3025
Scott, James Brown, 3519
Scott, Marian, 4893
Scott, Robert L., Jr., 3643a
Scott, Sir Walter, bart. (1771–1832), about, 216, 252, 323
Scott, Walter (1796–1861), about, 5455
Scott, Wilbur S., ed., 2353
Scott, Winfield, 3655
about, 2710, 3655
Scribner's (Charles) Sons, about, 6445, 6449
Scripps, Edward W., 2890
about, 2857, 2890
Scripps, George, about, 2890
Scripps, James, about, 2890
Scripps-McRae League, 2886
Scroggs, William O., comp., 3634
The Scrolls from the Dead Sea, 2535
Scudder, Horace E., 466, 599, 4036
ed., 370, 441, 453, 671, 2922
Scudder, Townsend, 4037
Scudder, Vida D., 181
about, 4530
Sculptors, 5734, 5738, 5740
Sculpture, 5595, 5601, 5733–40
abstract, 5696
collection, 5797 exhibition, 5696
hist., 5689, 5696, 5733–34, 5738, 5740, 5797
Sea Garden, 1320
The Sea-Hunters, 5871
Sea in art, 5765, 5767
Sea Islands, S.C., 3835
folklore, 5540
Negroes, 4436
The Sea of Grass, 1693
The Sea-Wolf, 1054
Seafaring life
diaries, journals, etc., 274–75
drama, 1647–48
fiction, 252, 256–57, 470, 479–83, 487, 562, 1054
The Seagull on the Step, 1251
Sealock, Richard B., 2976
Seamen, cruelty to, 274–75
fiction, 479–80
Seapower, 3671, 3673–74, 3688
Search, right of, 3554, 3558
A Search for the King, 2186
Sears, Clara E., 5265
Sears, Laurence, ed., 5259
Sears, Louis M., 3058
Sears, P. B., 4594
Sears, Richard W., about, 5956
Sears, Roebuck and Company, about, 5956
The Seaside and the Fireside, 431
The Season of Comfort, 2184
Seasoned Timber, 1417
Seattle, 4150, 4216, 6207
Seaver, Edwin, 2370
Secession movement, 3328, 3364, 3367, 3370–71, 3404, 5828
Second April, 1609
The Second Generation, 1109–10
Second Growth, 2163
The Second House from the Corner, 2750
The Second Man, 1206, 2332, 2348
Second Overture, 1174
Second Threshold, 1203
The Second Tree from the Corner, 1863
The Second World, 1232
Secondary education, 5131
administration, 5135, 5154
athletics, 5000
comprehensive high schools, 5156
criticism, 5236
curricula, 5100, 5153, 5158, 5224
finances, 5135
hist., 5152
junior high schools, 5157
methods & techniques, 5227
objectives, 5217
organization, 5135
periodical, 5249 private, 5155
sources, 5158
vocational, 5156
See also Academies (schools); Catholic schools; Public education; Seminaries (schools)
Secret History of the American Revolution, 3264
Secret Service, 2337
Secret societies, 4574
Secretaries of state, 3519
See also Diplomatic history; names of individual Secretaries, e.g., Hull, Cordell Sectionalism, 3106, 3305, 3323, 3328, 3337, 3354, 3356–57, 3363, 3781, 3784, 4067, 4074–75 economic causes, 3346 political aspects, 3346, 3361, 3397, 3399–3401, 3409, 3451
See also Regionalism; Secession movement
Sects, 5397–98, 5400–1, 5404–5, 5409, 5439–41, 5495
Secularism, 5395, 5399, 5401, 5409, 5488
Securities and Exchange Commission, about, 6322
Security investigations and programs, 3149
Security risks, 6112, 6117–18, 6130

Security tests, 6107, 6110
See also Loyalty-Security Program
Sedgwick, Ellery, about, 2922
Sedgwick, Henry Dwight, 2281
about, 2281
See You in the Morning, 2085
Seeds of Contemplation, 2038, 2042
Seeds of Liberty, 3747
Seedtime of the Republic, 6068
Seeger, Charles, music arr. by, 5559
Seeger, Ruth (Crawford), 5563
music arr. by, 5559
Seehafer, Eugene F., 4696
Seeing More Things, 4909
Seeing Things, 4909
Seely, Pauline A., 2976
Segregation, 4437, 4444, 4451, 5447, 5499–5500, 6120
in education, 5206, 5236
See also Minorities; Race question
Seilhamer, George O., 4905
Seillière, Ernest, about, 2375
Seitz, Don C., 2877
Selden, Elizabeth S., 4971
Seldes, Gilbert, 4895, 4945
ed., 1555
Selective Service Acts of 1917, 3709
Self, 2347
Self-Culture, 233
The Self, Its Body and Freedom, 5313
The Self-Made Man in America, 3762
Self-Reliance, 285
Seligman, Edwin R., 5963
Sellards, Elias H., 2995
Sellars, R. W., 5255
Sellars, Wilfrid, 5291
Sellers, Charles Coleman, 2804–5, 5769
Sellers, Charles Grier, 3351
Sellers, N. W., 5849
Sellers, Nathan, about, 6457–58
Sellery, G. C., 5336
The Selling of Joseph, 56–57
Semantics, 3756
in literature, 2388–90
Seminaries (schools), 5212
Seminole Indians, 3025–27
Semiotic, 5346
Semmes, Raphael, about, 2613
Semple, Ellen Churchill, 2975
Senate, U.S. See Congress. Senate
Senator North, 722
Seneca, Ill., 4589
Senior, Clarence, 4428, 4470
Sense and Sensibility in Modern Poetry, 2484
The Sense of Beauty, 5366
The Sense of the Past, 1004
about, 1009
The Sentimental Novel in America, 2384
The Sentimental Years, 4516
The Sentinels, 2310
Separation of powers, 3608, 3610, 6075–76, 6199, 6257, 6312, 6315
Separatists, 1, 84
The Sequel of Appomattox, 3377
Sequoya (Cherokee Indian), about, 3027
Seraph on the Suwanee, 1529
Serbein, Oscar N., 4890
Serena Blandish, 1206
The Serenade (operetta), 5681
Serenade to the Big Bird, 2814
The Serene Cincinnatians, 4122
Sergeant, Elizabeth Shepley, 1283
Sermons
Colonial, 17–18, 21, 24, 32–33, 35, 59–61
hist. & crit., 2493
in verse, 1537–38
See also Preacher tales
Sertorius, 2347
Servants, indentured, 6056
Sessions, Archibald, 1117
Sessions, Roger, 5615
Settlement houses, New York (City), 4624
Seven Decisions that Shaped History, 3549
The Seven-League Crutches, 1999
7 P.M., 1827
The Seven Sleepers, 1827
The Seven Storey Mountain, 2034, 2036
The Seven Who Fled, 2089
Seven Years' Harvest, 2398
Seven Years' War in America. See French and Indian War (1755–63)
Seventeen, 1804
Seventh-Day Adventists, 5404, 5442
The Seventh Hill, 1516
Seventy Years of It, 4543
Seventy Years of Life and Labor, 6050
Severinghaus, Aura E., 4861
Sevier, John, about 3287
Sewall, Harriot Winslow, ed., 244
Sewall, Samuel, 56–58
about, 2493
The Sewanee Review, 1809, 2570
Seward, William Henry, about, 2614, 3359, 3382, 3416
Sexual behavior (human), 4560–61, 4565–66
Seybold, Ethel, 611
Seymour, Charles, 3541
Seymour, Flora Warren (Smith), 3035
Seymour, Horatio, about, 3441
Shackford, James Atkins, 2649, 3353
Shackford, John B., ed., 3353
Shadow of a Man, 2123
Shadow of Night, 1959
The Shadow of the Hawk, 1748
Shadows in Silver, 4086
Shadows Move Among Them, 1493
Shadows on the Rock, 1277–78
Shafer, Henry Burnell, 4812
Shafer, Robert, 2425, 2479
Shakers, 3736, 5411, 5469, 5594
Shakespeare, William, about, 280, 4917
Shakspeare in Love, 2310
Shaler, Nathaniel S., 4036, 5222
Shamanism, 3010, 3019
Shame and Glory of the Intellectuals, 2189
The Shame of the Cities, 6207, 6432
The Shame of the States, 4837
Shankland, Robert, 5866
Shannon, David A., 6371
Shannon, Fred Albert, 3702, 4164, 5877
Shannon, W. V., 6195
Shantymen and Shantyboys, 5551
Shantz, Homer L., 5816
The Shapers of American Fiction, 2509
The Shaping Spirit, 1785
Shapiro, Charles, ed., 1348
Shapiro, Elliott, 5611
Shapiro, Karl, 2139–44
ed., 2363
Shapiro, Theresa R., 4712
Sharp, Cecil J., comp., 5583
Sharp Eyes, 741
Sharpe, Dores Robinson, 5482
Sharps and Flats, 878
Shartel, Burke, 6269
Shattuck, Charles, ed., 2551
Shattuck, Lemuel, about, 4403, 4879
Shaw, Henry Wheeler, 542–45
about, 5524
Shaw, Irwin, 2145–48, 2333
about, 2371
Shaw, Lemuel, about, 6228, 6231
Shaw, Lloyd, 5591
Shaw, Robert Kendall, 6476
Shaw, Wilbur, 5006
about, 5006
Shaw, Wilfred B., ed., 5201
Shawnee Indians, 3037
Shay's Rebellion, 3309
She Would Be a Soldier, 2347
Shea, John D. Gilmary, 5451
Sheean, Vincent, 1610, 2806–7
Sheehan, Donald H., 6445
ed., 3062
Sheeler, Charles, 5772
about, 5772
Sheep industry, 5874
Tex., 2733
Sheffield, F. D., 3724
Shelburne Essays, 2479–81
Sheldon, Edward, 2337
Shelford, Victor E., ed., 2956
Shelley, Percy Bysshe, about, 520, 2481, 2545
The Sheltered Life, 1461
The Sheltering Sky, 1928
Sheltering Tree, 5265
Shenandoah (Howard), 2337, 2347
Shenandoah (Schwartz), 2135
Shenandoah River and valley, 3997
fiction, 226, 228–29
Shenk, Hiram Herr, ed., 4056
Shepard, Odell, 186, 442, 4041, 5266
ed., 187, 588, 603, 2375
Shepard, Thomas, 59–65
about, 63, 65, 3198
Shepardson, Whitney H., 3634
Shepherd, W. R., 4540
Shepherd's Empire, 5874
Shepperson, Wilbur S., 4488
Shera, Jesse H., 6472
Sheridan, Philip H., about, 3701
Sheridan, Richard, 168
Sherman, C. B., 4458
Sherman, John K., 5654
Sherman, Stuart Pratt, 2503–5, 5222
ed., 1067, 2393
Sherman, William Tecumseh, about, 2614, 3699
Sherwood, Elizabeth J., comp., 3292
Sherwood, Foster H., 6240
Sherwood, Garrison P., ed., 4897
Sherwood, Robert Emmet, 1203, 1749–53, 2327, 2332–34, 2348, 3499
Shetrone, Henry Clyde, 2996

Shilling, Ned, 4395
Shipbuilding, 5930
Shippen, William, about, 4856
Shipping industry, 5930
  Mass., 5936
  New York (City), 5937
Ships
  in art, 5801
  See also Warships
Shipton, Clifford Kenyon, 6447
Shipwrecks, fiction, 1712
Shirley, Dame, pseud. See Clappe, Louise Amelia Knapp (Smith)
Shirley, Hardy L., 5865
Shirley, Wayne, 6481
Shiskin, Julius, 5905
The Shock of Recognition, 2538
Shoemaker, Ervin C., 5127
Shoemaker, Floyd Calvin, 3346
  ed., 5569
Sholes, Christopher Latham, about, 4786
De Shootinest Gent'man, 5066
Shores, J. Harlan, 5158
Shores, Louis, 6478, 6481
  ed., 6484
The Shores of Light, 2541
Shorewood, Wis., 3885
Short, Lloyd Milton, 6173
Short, Raymond W., ed., 2353
Short ballot, 6203, 6425
Short Grass Country, 3964
Short stories
  anthologies, 2318, 2322, 2325, 2351, 2369
  experimental writing, 1242, 1379, 1766–67, 1771
  hist. & crit., 2362, 2487, 2489, 2495
  periodicals, 2916, 2922, 2925
    See also Fiction in periodicals
  periods
    (1820–70), 319, 322, 330–40, 356, 359, 381, 384–90, 405–8, 484, 491, 493–94, 496, 520, 528–29, 533, 536, 556–62, 574–75, 612–13, 674
    (1871–1914), 683, 687, 701, 704–6, 711–12, 716, 725, 732–37, 739, 745–48, 756–61, 798–99, 821, 830, 834, 836–37, 856, 859–60, 878, 881–87, 890–95, 900–5, 909–22, 924–32, 935–40, 945, 951–52, 954–55, 984, 986, 1004, 1007–8, 1011–12, 1014, 1023–35, 1048–52, 1058–60, 1084–88, 1099–1102, 1106, 1111–25, 1145, 1149–52
    (1915–39), 1155, 1160–61, 1164, 1178–79, 1181, 1185, 1197–98, 1222, 1224, 1239, 1242, 1248, 1250, 1270, 1275, 1277, 1316, 1341–42, 1345, 1372, 1379, 1389, 1393–94, 1403, 1408, 1411, 1413, 1418, 1429, 1453, 1464, 1471, 1476, 1478, 1494, 1498, 1510, 1523–25, 1541, 1553–55, 1651–52, 1659–60, 1662, 1680, 1684, 1686–87, 1691–92, 1697, 1703, 1706, 1724, 1762, Short stories—Continued
  periods—Continued
    (1915–39)—Continued
      1764–67, 1771, 1776, 1786, 1790, 1796–97, 1801, 1839, 1841, 1851, 1855, 1872, 1879, 1892
    (1940–55), 1910, 1913, 1927, 1929, 1932–33, 1935–36, 1944, 1946, 1958–59, 1963, 1986, 2011, 2015–16, 2020, 2024, 2057–58, 2071–75, 2109–10, 2116, 2118, 2128, 2131, 2133–34, 2137, 2145, 2147, 2160–61, 2165–68, 2170–71, 2176–77, 2179, 2198, 2202–3, 2205, 2207, 2209–11, 2214, 2222, 2227, 2234
  techniques, 520, 538, 1111
The Shoshonee Valley, 312
Shoshoni Indians, 2364, 3041
Shouts and Murmurs, 4911
Show Biz, from Vaude to Video, 4892
The Show Must Go On, 1688
The Show-Off, 2348
Showboats, 4978
  fiction, 1405
A Shower of Summer Days, 2125
Shreve, Forrest, 2959
Shryock, Richard H., 40, 3061, 3103, 4479, 4813, 4826, 4845
Shumaker, Wayne, 2421
Shurter, Robert L., 731
Shuster, George N., 4457, 5426, 5447
  about, 5426
Sibley, Mulford Q., 3649, 6124
Sicily, fiction, 1994
Sidelights on American Literature, 2486
Sidewalks of America, 5510
Siebert, Frederick Seaton, 2932
Siege, 1155
The Siege of London, 1007
Siegfried, André, 4505–8
Siepmann, Charles A., 4685, 4703, 5230
Sierra Nevada, 3955, 4210–11
  disc. & explor., 2971
Sierras, Songs of the, 1066
'Sieur George, 748
Sievers, Wieder David, 2506
Sigerist, Henry E., 4814
Sights and Spectacles, 2017
The Sign of Jonas, 2041
The Signature of All Things, 2100
Den Signede Dag, 1723
The Significance of the Frontier in American History, 2437
  about, 2407
Signor Marc, 2311
Signs, Theory of (philosophy), 5346
Sikes, Earl R., 6410
Silas Crockett, 1286
Silas Timberman, 1973
Silberling, Norman J., 6025
Silcox, Clarice Edwin, 5495
Sill, Edward Rowland, 2769
  about, 2769
Silliman, Benjamin, about, 4724, 4740, 4759
Silver, Rollo G., 6440
  ed., 643
Silver and silversmithing, 5784
The Silver Cord, 1519, 2337
Silver rushes, 772–74
The Silver Stallion, 1262
Simkhovitch, Mary K., 5426
  about, 5426
Simkins, Francis Butler, 4082
Simmons, E. J., 3562
Simms, Henry H., 3409
Simms, William Gilmore, 546–55, 2296
  about, 554, 2277
Simon, Charlie May (Hogue), 1436
Simon Suggs' Adventures, 380
The Simple Cobler of Aggawam, 76
Simple Speaks His Mind, 1523
Simple Takes a Wife, 1525
Simplification (doctrine), 585
Simpson, Louis, 2350
Sims, William Sowden, 3716
Sinai, Nathan, 4886
Sinatra, Frank, about, 5636
Since Yesterday, 3478
The Sincere Convert, 60
Sincerely, Willis Wayde, 1597
Sinclair, Upton, 1754–58
  about, 2380, 2406
Singers, operatic, 5662
  biog. (collected), 5663
Singing games, 5588
  Middle West, 5586
  New England, 5580
The Single Hound, 2123
Single tax doctrine, 4535
Singleton, Arthur, pseud. See Knight, Henry Cogswell
Singstad, Ole, about, 4803
Sinners in the Hands of an Angry God, 24 Sioux Indians, 2831, 3003
  fiction, 1646
Sir Dominick Ferrand, 1012
Sir Edmund Orme, 1012
Sir Henry, 1643
Sirjamaki, John, 4571
Sirmay, Albert, 4025
Sis' Becky's Pickaninny, 757
Sister Carrie, 1334
  about, 1089
Sitterson, Joseph Carlyle, 5822
Sitting Bull, about, 2832, 3036
Situation Normal, 2044
Six Horses, 5931
Six Nations. See Iroquois Indians
Sizer, Theodore, ed., 5775
Skandinaven, about, 2895
Skeel, Emily E. F., ed., 177
The Sketch Book, 384–87
Sketches. See Editorials, sketches, etc.
Sketches in Criticism, 2380
Skid Road, 4216
The Skies of Europe, 2091
Skiing and ski resorts, 5062
  Rocky Mountains, 4174
The Skin of Our Teeth, 1868
Skinner, Constance Lindsay, ed., 3969–77
Skinner, Cornelia Otis, 2808–10
  about, 2810
Sklare, Marshall, 5460
Skyscrapers, 5703, 5705

Slabs of the Sunburnt West, 1731
Slang
in literature, 619, 701–5, 878–80, 1111, 1554–55
See also Language—slang
The Slave Auction (sculpture), 5739
Slave patrol, 3554, 3558
Slave trade, 3558, 4224, 4258, 4293, 4333, 4336, 4341, 4440 Slavery, 2603, 3122, 3398–99, 3414, 3766, 4258, 4364, 4367–68, 4440, 4442, 5828 defense, 3286, 3303, 3366, 3370, 3381, 3389, 3404
econ. aspects, 3234, 3371, 3381, 3389, 3402–3, 3409 extension to the territories, 3339, 3346, 3371, 3397
folklore, 5515, 5521
political aspects, 3370–71, 3389, 3409 public opinion, 3346, 3409 social aspects, 3371, 3381, 3389
See also Abolitionism
Slavery in literature, 149, 192, 216, 239, 449, 511, 556, 1099 antislavery pamphlets, tracts, etc., 56, 178–85, 232, 240, 463, 662–63, 2493
fiction, 562–67, 749–50, 949–52, 1277, 2201
poetry, 456–57, 664, 856–59, 861, 1222, 1224, 2200
short stories, 757–58, 856, 859–60, 1100–2
See also Civil War in literature; Plantation life in literature; and Race question in literature Sleepers Awake, 2084
The Sleeping Fury, 1237
Slender, Robert, pseud. See Freneau, Philip Morin
Slichter, Sumner H., 5894, 6038–39
Sloan, John, 5800
about, 2380, 5773
Sloane, Eric, 5724
Sloane, Howard N., ed., 2946
Sloane, William Milligan, ed., 5344
Slocum, Joshua, 5021
Slogans, 3152
Slogum House, 2799
Slosser, Gaius J., ed., 5466
Slosson, Edwin E., 4724, 5113
Slosson, Preston William, 3097
Slovenian folklore, Mich., 5533
Slums, 2784, 4598, 4612
New York (City), 4638
Sluyter, Peter, 3208
Slye, Maud, about, 4722
Small, Albion Woodbury, about, 4540, 4542
A Small Boy and Others, 1015
Small business, 6021
The Small Town in American Literature, 2438
Smalley, Donald, ed., 4377
Smallpox
epidemic (1721), 4826
treatment, 40, 2493
Smallwood, Mabel Sarah Coon, 4738
Smallwood, William Martin, 4738
The Smart Set, 1602
Smet, Pierre Jean de, 2663
about, 2662–63
Smidt, Kristian, 1369
Smiley, Dean F., 4999
ed., 4855
Smillie, Wilson G., 4874–75, 4877
Smire; an Acceptance in the Third Person, 1266
Smirt; an Urbane Nightmare, 1264
Smith, A. Merriman, 6148
Smith, Abbot Emerson, 6056
Smith, Al, about, 5450, 5493
Smith, Albert E., 4961
about, 4961
Smith, B. Othanel, 5158
Smith, Bernard, 2406–7
ed., 2407, 3142
Smith, Bradford, 66
Smith, Bruce, 4655
Smith, Cecil Michener, 5623, 5638
Smith, Chard Powers, 4000
Smith, Charles Alphonso, ed., 1123
Smith, Charles Edward, ed., 5644
Smith, Charles Henry, 556–57, 2257
Smith, Chetwood, 5739
Smith, Chris, about, 5016
Smith, Darrell Hevenor, 5995, 6190
Smith, David Eugene, 4739
Smith, Edgar F., 4740
Smith, Elbert B., 3322
Smith, Erwin E., photographs by, 4153
about, 4153
Smith, Erwin Frink, about, 2792
Smith, Frank E., 4024
Smith, Frank L., about, 6383
Smith, George Otis, 4715
Smith, Gerrit, about, 2279, 2689
Smith, Guy-Harold, ed., 4119
Smith, H. Allen, 2149–55, 2370, 5013
Smith, Harold D., 6191
Smith, Harry de Forest, about, 1716
Smith, Harry James, 2348
Smith, Harry Worcester, 5080
Smith, Helen Lyman, 6482
Smith, Henry Justin, 4135
Smith, Henry Ladd, 2845, 5941
Smith, Henry Nash, 2412, 3759
Smith, Hilrie S., 5436
Smith, Hubert L., 6018
Smith, Huston, 5187
Smith, Ira L., 5013
Smith, J. Lawrence, about, 4740
Smith, J. P., 3058
Smith, James Eugene, 2875
Smith, James G., 5993, 5998
Smith, James Morton, 3308, 6125
Smith, Jay, about, 5016
Smith, John, captain, 66–71
about, 66, 3198
Smith, John Edwin, 5364
Smith, Johnston, pseud. See Crane, Stephen
Smith, Joseph, about, 4183, 5464–65
Smith, Joseph H., 6234
Smith, Joseph Russell, 2940
Smith, Julia, 5675
Smith, Justin H., 3354, 3689
Smith, Kendall, 5938
Smith, Lillian, 1759–61
Smith, Louis, 3650
Smith, Marian W., 3041
Smith, Mary, 5739
Smith, Mortimer B., 5237
Smith, Onnie Warren, 5094
Smith, R. L., 4594
Smith, "Red." See Smith, Walter W.
Smith, Reginald Heber, 6328–29
Smith, Richard Penn, 2310, 2650
Smith, Robert Miller, 5014
Smith, Samuel H., about, 5121
Smith, Samuel Stanhope, 5251
Smith, Seba, 558–61
Smith, Shirley W., 5223
Smith, Stephen W., 5644
Smith, T. V., 3646, 5289, 6128
Smith, Thelma M., 2508
ed., 464
Smith, Theodore Clarke, 3144, 3450
Smith, Thomas Lynn, 4584
Smith, Thomas P., 4740
Smith, Walter Bedell, 3565
Smith, Walter Buckingham, 5999
Smith, Walter W., 4995
Smith, William, 145
Smith, William Carlson, 4415
Smith, William Ernest, 3410
Smith, a Sylvan Interlude, 1265
Smithies, Arthur, 6001
Smith's London Journal, 2155
Smithson, James, about, 4775
Smithsonian Institution
about, 4775
See also names of administrative divisions, e.g., National Museum
Smoke and Steel, 1731
The Smoking Mountain, 1250
Smoky Mountains, 3945
Smyth, Albert H., 2282
ed., 3183
Smyth, Mary Winslow, 5566
Smythe, Dallas W., 4702
Snell, George D., 2509
Snow-Bound, 662, 667
Snyder, Richard C., 3605
So-Big, 1404
So Little Time, 1593
So Red the Rose, 4912
Sobel, Bernard, 4942, 4976
Social and business ethics, 5273, 5899, 6010
Social clubs, 4574, 4578
Social conditions, 2824, 4225, 4415, 4551, 4554, 4557–58, 4562, 4581, 4595, 4617, 4619, 4627, 4634, 5405, 6346, 6426, 6431 cities, 4395 country life, 4395
hist., 3073, 3085–98, 3150, 4514–4534, 4560, 4654, 5875, 6005, 6082
American Revolution, 3252–53
Civil War, 3374
Colonial period, 3141, 3747
19th cent., 3091, 3275, 3281, 3313, 3421, 3425, 3447, 3754, 4313, 4345, 4499, 5781
20th cent., 3096, 3474, 3477–78, 3494, 3746, 4505–8, 4514, 4571–72, 4625
maps, 2972
Negroes, 4437, 4439, 4441–42, 4446, 4448

Social conditions—Continued
Orientals, 4468
Poles, 4495
See also Church and society; also subdivisions History and Social conditions under names of places and regions, e.g., Chicago—soc. condit; Southern States—hist.
Social influences on literature
hist. & crit., 2448, 2450–51, 2485, 2489, 2507
Social insurance. See Social security
Social life and customs, 4232, 4234, 4531–32, 4534, 4562, 5510, 5596, 5598, 6456
bibl., 4229
hist., 4235, 4519–21, 4529, 5729
Colonial period, 3748, 4227, 4263, 4518
18th cent., 4228, 4500–1
19th cent., 4224, 4228, 4303–5, 4314–17, 4354–57, 4370–71, 4516, 4927, 4937
See also subdivisions History and Social life and customs under names of places and regions, e.g., Indiana—hist.; Virginia—soc. life & cust.
Social life and customs in literature, 319–22, 512
diaries, journals, etc., 36–39, 56–57
drama, 168–70, 198, 1199–1204
essays, 1002, 2469
fiction, 161–64, 689–92, 964–76, 978, 980, 982, 986–88, 992–95, 1007–8, 1014, 1589, 1828–29, 1831–33, 1845, 1874, 1909, 1911–12, 2078, 2149, 2278
letters, 96–100
satire, 381
short stories, 415–18, 986, 1004, 1008, 1011, 1014
Social medicine (plans), 4882, 4888
Social psychology, 3724, 4539, 4556, 4561, 4635, 5277
Social questions in literature anthology, 2355
drama, 1199–1204, 1518–20, 1647–48, 1688–90, 1988–91, 2043–49, 2063–68, 2145, 2218–21, 2223, 2228
essays & studies, 546, 695–98, 732, 862–66, 1155, 1357–58, 1372, 1375, 1445, 1602, 1907, 2189, 2278, 2412, 2519, 2532
fiction, 689–92, 716, 718–20, 722, 726, 728–31, 756, 821–24, 835–37, 867–75, 887–89, 941, 956–70, 973–76, 978, 982, 986–1001, 1004, 1048, 1056, 1089–95, 1107–10, 1136, 1142–43, 1155–56, 1178, 1180, 1183, 1190–94, 1270–74, 1333–39, 1343, 1372–74, 1376, 1379–84, 1386, 1388, 1390–92, 1414, 1417, 1425–29, 1445–50, 1453–59, 1460–62, 1467, 1472, 1474, 1494–97, 1499–1500, 1559–69, 1571, 1573–74, 1576, 1579, 1589–97, 1656–58, 1743–44, 1746–48, 1754–56, 1758–60, 1775, 1777–81, 1792–95, 1845–50, 1852–
Social questions in literature—Continued
fiction—Continued
55, 1887–91, 1907, 1914–15, 1932, 1940–43, 2045, 2050–51, 2059, 2079, 2081, 2084, 2090, 2145–46, 2156–59, 2180, 2182–84, 2229, 2231, 2235
poetry, 1038–43, 1046, 1061–63, 1069–70, 1225, 1227, 1357, 1585–86, 1588, 1599–1600, 1608–9, 1727, 1731, 1872, 1878, 1881, 1885, 1907, 1968, 2079, 2105–6
tracts & propaganda, 178, 184–85, 235, 239, 313, 726, 862, 1048, 1053, 1107, 1559, 1571, 1754, 1759, 1775, 1907, 1932, 1973, 2180, 2183
The Social Record, 2355
Social Register (Boston), 4035
Social Science Research Council, 4777
Social Science Research Council. Committee on Historiography, 3065
Social Science Research Council Public Library Inquiry. See Public Library Inquiry Social sciences, 3739, 4536, 4544–45
biog. (collected), 4540, 4712
research, 4777
study & teaching, 4540
Social security, 4621, 4631, 4633, 4635
Tex., 4194
Social Security Act, 4631
Social settlements, New York (City), 4624 Social status, 4549, 4557
children, 4559
occupation, 4547
women, 3073, 4524, 4563
Social work, 4618, 4621, 4624 medical. See Medicine—social work Socialism, 3753, 6356
bibl., 3753
fiction, 726, 728–31, 964, 973–76, 978, 1048, 1055, 1656, 1754–56, 1758
hist., 3753, 6360, 6368, 6433
propaganda, 2896
Socialist Party
about, 6356, 6360, 6367, 6371, 6433
platforms, 6367
A Socialist's Faith, 6433
Society and the press, 2845, 2847, 2912, 2915, 2919–20, 2927–32
Society and Thought in America, 3150
Society for Establishing Useful Manufactures (SUM), about, 6015
Society for the Advancement of Education, 5248
Society in America, 4315–17
Society in Transition, 4617
Society Islands, fiction, 476–77
Society, Manners and Politics in the United States, 4314
Society of Economic Geologists, about, 4733
Society of the Cincinnati, about, 3644
Society of the United Believers, about, 5469
Society; the Redeemed Form of Man, 5319
Socinianism, 5471
Sociology, 2717–18, 3758, 4536–37, 4541–43, 4547–48, 4551, 4558–59, 4599, 5351
Christian, 5484–97
hist., 3755, 4539
industrial, 4552
motion picture industry, 4948, 4951
rural, 4581, 4583–84, 5832
bibl., 4580
urban, 4587
Nev., 4184
Socrates
drama, 1176
fiction, 2413
The Sod-House Frontier, 4156
Soil conservation, 5808
Soil Conservation Service, about, 5884
Soil Survey, about, 2947
Soils, 2934, 2943–44, 2947, 5816
bibl., 2947
maps, 2943–44, 2947
Fla., 4248–50
Ga., 4248–50
Middle West, 4113
New York (State), 4237–38
N.C., 4248–50
Pa., 4237–38
S.C., 4248–50
Southern States, 4084
The Sojourner, 1680, 2024
The Soldier, 1166
Soldier in the White House, 3333
Soldier of Democracy, 3482
Soldier of the Republic, 3333
Soldiers, 3652, 3662, 3679, 3690–92, 3704–5, 3724
Pennsylvania German, 4479
songs, 5556, 5559, 5562
World War II, 2734
Soldiers' Pay, 1380
A Soldier's Story, 3718
Soldiers without Swords, 5497
Soley, James Russell, 3700
The Solid Gold Cadillac, 1550
The Solitary Singer, 647
A Solo in Tom-Toms, 2878
Solomon, Barbara Miller, 4423
Solstice, 1534
Soltes, Mordecai, 2898
Solum, Nora O., tr., 1722
Some Chinese Ghosts, 951–52, 955
Some Creole Melodies, 951–52
Some Enchanted Evenings, 5685
Some Laggards Yet, 638
Some Old Puritan Love Letters, 90
Some Others and Myself, 1801
Somebody up There Likes Me, 5028
Something about Eve, 1261–62
Sometimes, 956
A Son of Earth, 1558
A Son of the Middle Border, 898–99
The Son of the Wolf, 1049–50
Sone, Monica (Itoi), 2811–12
about, 2812
Song and Idea, 1351
A Song Catcher in Southern Mountains, 5582
Song in the Meadow, 1697
The Song of Hiawatha, 432
The Song of Hugh Glass, 1645
Song of the Chattahoochee, 1038

The Song of the Indian Wars, 1645
The Song of the Lark, 1276–77
The Song of the Messiah, 1645
The Song of Three Friends, 1645
Song Writers Protective Association, about, 6322
Songs, 4025, 5614, 5677
  bibl., 5611
  in literature, 911–13, 922
  Mexican, 4472
  national, 5616
  See also Folksongs and ballads; Play-party songs; Popular music and songs; Work songs Songs and Satires, 1601
Songs before Parting, 623
Songs for Eve, 1588
Songs of Italy and Others, 1066
Songs of Parting, 624
Songs of the American Seas, 1066
Songs of the Sierras, 1066
  about, 1064
Songs of the Sunlands, 1066
Sonn, Albert H., 5790
Sonneck, Oscar George Theodore, 5610, 5612, 5616, 5661, 5677
Sonnets to Duse, 1814
Sonnichsen, Charles L., 4163
Sons, 1254
Sons and Soldiers, 2145
Sons of Science, 4775
Soper, David Wesley, 5433
Sophocles. Women of Trachis, translation, 1664
Sorokin, Pitirim A., 3566
A Sort of a Saga, 2737
Sosman, R. B., 4715
Soth, Lauren, 5861
The Soul of America, 3735
Soule, George, 2407, 5877
The Soules Preparation for Christ, 33
Soulsby, Hugh G., 3558
The Sound and the Fury, 1383
The Sound Believer, 61
The Sound Wagon, 1792
Sour Grapes, 1881
The Sources of Religious Insight, 5354
The South. See Southern states
South America. See Latin America
The South as a Conscious Minority, 6059
The South Atlantic Quarterly, 2571
South Carolina, 3963, 4023, 4079, 4091–93
  architecture, 5706
  counties, 4092
  culture, 3233
  governors, 4092
  guidebooks, 3834–36
  Gullah dialect, 2271
  hist., 3180, 3216, 3233, 4023, 4091–93
  language (dialects, etc.), 2258, 2260
  natural hist., 5087
  parks, 3836
  plantation life, 4517, 5087
  population, 4092
  soc. life & cust., 4091, 4517
  travel & travelers, 4248–50, 4277–78
The South Carolina Gazette, about, 2854
South Carolina in literature
  descr., 1724–26
  fiction, 405, 546–49, 552–53, 1512–13, 1653, 1720–23
  poetry, 614–17, 1168, 1512
  short stories, 1149, 1762
South Dakota, 3948, 3951
  frontier life, 4156
  guidebooks, 3896–3900
  hist., 4147
  rural communities, 4109
South from Hell-fer-Sartin, 5546
South Moon Under, 1681
South Pacific, 2337
South Pacific Islands in literature, 470–78
South Pole expeditions. See Antarctic expeditions
South Star, 1434
South Today, 1759
Southeast Asia, relations with, 3591
Southern Folklore Quarterly, 5518
Southern Renaissance, 2442
Southern Review, 1809, 2572
Southern States, 2635, 3958, 4066–96
  agriculture, 5823
  architecture, 5706
  culture, 4067–70, 4083–84
  econ. condit., 3402–3, 4067–68, 4079, 4084, 4401, 4438, 5828, 5891
  folklore, 5518, 5525
  folksongs & ballads, 5572, 5582–83
  guidebooks, 3827–47
  historiography, 3057
  hist., 3286, 3361, 3367, 3404, 3415, 3417, 3445, 3451, 3754, 4067, 4070–72, 4074, 4077–78, 4080–82, 5828, 6059
  industry, 4084, 5909
  intellectual life, 3766, 4723
  Ku Klux Klan, 3386
  nationalism, 4067, 4075, 4080
  Negro songs, 5561, 5582
  Negroes, 4443
  pictorial guide, 3782
  pol. & govt., 4067, 4075, 6376, 6378–79
  rural press, 2853
  science, 4723
  soc. condit., 2721, 4066–68, 4078–79, 4084, 4438
  soc. life & cust., 4081, 4097
  travel & travelers, 3365, 4233, 4235, 4256–57, 4266, 4285, 4297, 4329, 4336, 4344, 4367, 4387
  white spirituals, 5577
  See also Confederate States
Southern States in literature, 1036–37, 1724–26, 1761, 1791, 1907, 2296
  anthologies, 2292, 2296, 2320
  drama, 1473, 1475–77, 2218–21, 2223, 2225, 2228
  editorials, sketches, etc., 192–97, 330–32, 379–80, 405–8, 445–48, 556–57, 612–13, 1809
  essays, 618, 945, 951–52, 954–55, 1103–4, 1679, 1791, 1809–10, 2442, 2466
Southern States in literature—Continued
  fiction, 226–29, 245–51, 277–79, 409–13, 546–50, 552–53, 555, 745, 749–50, 756, 946–52, 955, 1032, 1099, 1105–6, 1239–41, 1270–7, 1379–95, 1460–62, 1464–70, 1472–74, 1512–13, 1526–29, 1618–19, 1653–55, 1680–83, 1697–1702, 1704–5, 1759–60, 1786–89, 1792–95, 1836–38, 1887–91, 1944–45, 2023–24, 2050–51, 2090, 2174–76, 2178, 2193, 2199, 2201–2, 2204, 2206, 2208, 2232
  folklore, 910–16, 922–25
  hist., 12–16, 66–68, 70–71, 149–53, 2442
  humor, 192–97, 379–80, 445–48, 556–57, 856–61, 910–16, 922, 924–25
  poetry, 520–30, 533, 536, 614–17, 856–58, 861, 1038–43, 1046, 1133–35, 1512, 1623–24, 1675–79, 1809, 1811, 2172, 2193, 2196, 2200, 2292
  short stories, 612–13, 745–48, 756–61, 856, 859–60, 910–22, 924–25, 951–52, 954–55, 1032–35, 1099–1102, 1106, 1149, 1151, 1225, 1240, 1275, 1379, 1389, 1393–94, 1471, 1476, 1478, 1684, 1703, 1790, 1892, 1944, 1946, 2024, 2176–77, 2179, 2202–3, 2205, 2207, 2209, 2222, 2227
  travel & travelers, 12–14, 66–68, 70–71, 612–13
Southwest
  archaeology, 2992
  architecture, 5723
  biog. (collected), 4190
  cession by Mexico, 3355
  colonization, 3158
  culture, 4191
  disc. & explor., 3158
  folklore, 5503, 5507, 5509, 5518, 5520, 5531
  guidebooks, 3917–26
  hist., 3158, 3783–84, 3947, 3956, 4005, 4017, 4186–99, 5874
  Indians, 3023, 3027
    Apache, 3004
    Comanche, 3014 customs, 2722
    Navajo, 3013
    shaminism, 3019
  language (dialects, etc.), 2264
  legends, 5531
  Mexicans, 4475
  music, 5630
Southwest, Old, 4097–4108
  descr. & trav., 4191
  guidebooks, 3848–61
  hist., 3287, 4098
  soc. life & cust., 4098
  See also Southern States
Southwest in literature
  bibl., 2525
  fiction, 1276, 1551–52, 1691
  periodicals, 2562, 2572
  poetry, 1984

Southwest in literature—Continued
short stories, 1196–98, 1553, 1659, 1691, 1762
writers & writings, 4187
Southwest Review, 2572
The Soveraignty & Goodness of God, 54
Soviet Union. See Russia
Sow the Golden Seed, 2896
Sowerby, Emily Millicent, comp., 6460
Spaeth, Sigmund G., 5637, 5639
Spain
Civil War, 3536
culture, 1445
fiction, 1495, 1497
hist., 2294
legends & sketches, 381
relations with, 3307, 3444, 3449, 3528, 3530–31, 3569, 3572, 3707
travel & travelers, 381, 449
Spain in the New World, 3162, 3171
Spalding, Albert G., about, 5009
Spalding, Walter Raymond, 5672
Spanish-American War, 3448, 3554, 3707–8
diplomatic hist., 3530
fiction, 2682
naval operations, 3708
songs, 5616
Spanish Bayonet, 1222, 1224
The Spanish Borderlands, 3158
The Spanish Husband, 2302
Spanish influence
arts & crafts, 5594
culture, 985, 4187, 4189, 4197–98
folklore, 5518, 5526, 5537
folksongs & ballads, 5521
language (dialects, etc.), 2264, 4198
legends, 5518, 5521
on literature, 201, 205, 2534
Spanish missions. See Missions, Indian Spanish North America
colonization, 3075, 3156–58
disc. & explor., 3153, 3157–58, 3165, 3203, 3217
hist., 3075, 3158, 3165
Spann, John R., ed., 5496
Spargo, John, 5791
The Spark (The 'Sixties), 1845
Sparks, Jared, about, 3057
Sparrow, Stanwood Willston, about, 4803
Spaude, Paul W., 5462
Spaulding, E. G., 5260
Spaulding, Oliver Lyman, 3664
Speak to the Earth, 2746
Speaking Frankly, 3544
Specimen Days, 633–35
Speck, Frank G., 3009, 3011
Speckled Trout, 741
Speculation (stocks), 5952, 5981, 5993
Speeches, addresses, etc., 230–31, 233, 276, 420–21, 460–61, 465, 467, 900
See also Lectures and Lecturing Speiser, Ephraim A., 3512
Spelling, simplified, 2469
Spelling books, 5127
Spencer, Eleanor P., 3751
Spencer, Gwladys, 6473
Spencer, Samuel R., 4450
Spengler, J. J., 3758
Spengler, Oswald, about, 2407
Sper, Felix, 4926
Spero, Sterling D., 6192
Sperry, Willard L., 5400, 5424, 5427
about, 5427
Spewack, Bella, 2327, 2333
Spewack, Samuel, 2327, 2333
Spider Boy, 1833
The Spider's House, 1931
Spiller, Robert E., 230, 252, 267, 301, 692, 897, 2412, 2510
ed., 264, 269, 273, 2276, 2460–61
Spingarn, Joel Elias, 2411, 2511
Spink, J. G. Taylor, 5015
Spires of Form, 303
The Spirit and the Flesh, 1258
The Spirit of St. Louis, 2715
Spirit of the Times, 379, 613, 4097, 5542
Spiritual Laws, 285
Spiritualism, 4516, 5439
Spirituals. See Negroes—spirituals; White spirituals
Spitz, David, 6069
Spivack, R. G., 6195
The Splendid Idle Forties, 725
Splendid Poseur, 1064
Spoerri, William T., 3771
Spofford, Ainsworth R., about, 6469
Spohn, George Weida, ed., 2330
The Spoilage, 4469
Spoils system, 3424–25, 3437–38, 4664, 6183, 6357, 6363, 6382, 6384, 6386, 6389–90
See also Corruption (in politics)
Spokane, Wash., 4150, 4217
Spoon River Anthology, 1599–1601
The Sport of Gods, 856
Sporting goods business, 5009
Sports, 2794, 4387, 4983–84, 4986–88, 4990–92, 4994–96, 5065–97
fiction, 5080
hist., 4990
soc. aspects, 4983
Baltimore, 4062
Berkshire Hills, Mass., 3799
Rocky Mountains, 4174
Southern States, 4083
See also Athletics; Recreation; and particular sports, e.g., Baseball
Spotswood, Alexander, fiction, 226, 228–29
Sprague, Marshall, 4181
Spring, Leverett Wilson, 4168, 5222
Spring and All, 1881
Spring Birth, 1827
Spring Thunder, 1827
Springfield, Ill., 1582, 4588
Springfield, Mass., guidebook, 3802
Springfield [Mass.] Republican, about, 2879
Springfield, Ohio, guidebook, 3870
Sprout, Harold H., 3673–74
Sprout, Margaret, 3673–74
The Spy, 253–55, 2311
Square dances, 4160, 5587, 5589–91
Srole, Leo, 4435
Stackpole, Edouard A., 5871
Stafford, Jean, 2156–60
Stage. See Theater
Stage-Coach and Tavern Days, 4227
Stagecoaches, 4666, 5931
drivers, 4227
See also Travel and travelers—stagecoach
Stage Door, 1547, 2333
Stagg, Amos Alonzo, 5043
about, 5043
Stahl, O. Glenn, 6188
Stahlberg, John, 4176
Stalin, Joseph, 3622
Stallings, Laurence, 2332
Stallman, Robert W., 828, 2383
ed., 836–37
Stalson, J. Owen, 5991
Stamp Act, 3257
Stampp, Kenneth M., 3403
Standard of living. See Cost and standard of living Standard Oil Company, about, 2824, 5913, 5916
Stanley, John M., about, 5806
Stanley, Julian C., 5229
Stanley, William O., 5158
Stanton, Alfred H., 4838
Stanton, Edwin McMasters, about, 2614
Stanwood, Edward, 6149
The Star Spangled Banner (song), 5616
about, 5616
Stark, John Stilwell, about, 5641
Starke, Aubrey H., ed., 1046
Starkey, Marion L., 3228, 3309
Starr, Harris E., 4544
ed., 3080
Starr, Mark, 5291, 6034
Stars To-Night, 1814
Starved Rock, 1601
Stasheff, Edward, 4697, 5230
The State, 5279, 5310, 6073
See also specific subjects "and state," e.g., Church and state; Industry and state
The State of Mind, 2131
State of the Nation, 1330
State of the Union, 2335
State rights, 3139, 3303, 3367, 3369, 3397, 6101
States and local relations, 6200, 6217–18
civil service, 6192
colleges & universities, 5163–68, 5176, 5194, 5201–2 constitutions, 6080, 6086, 6195
courts, 6281–82, 6293
executive branch, 6193, 6197, 6201, 6203–4, 6311
executive-legislative relations, 6203
finance, 5973
govt., 4266, 6133–35, 6137, 6167, 6195–6206, 6425, 6432
functions, 6139, 6180, 6196–97
hist., 3259
labor policy, 6192, 6195
organization, 6137, 6180, 6196–97 govt. officials & employees, 6196–97 govt. publications, 6452
bibl., 6205
judicial branch, 6197
legislative branch, 6197

States—Continued legislative power, 6098, 6154–56, 6158, 6160, 6164, 6168, 6178, 6191, cases, 6091
library extension agencies, 6482
See also names of individual states, e.g., Alabama Statesmen of the Lost Cause, 3383
Statistics, 2970
See also specific subjects, e.g., Agriculture—stat.; Census; Vital statistics
Statues. See Monuments
The Statues, 2137
Stauffer, Donald A., ed., 2512
Steamships and steamboats
hist., 4784, 5929
in literature, 784–86
Stearns, Marshall W., 5646
Stearns, Myron M., 5023
Stebbins, Richard P., 3634
Stedman, Edmund Clarence, 2513
Stedman, Laura, 2513
Stedman, Murray S., Jr., 6372
Stedman, Susan W., 6372
Steeg, Clarence Ver, 4072
Steel industry, 2825, 4061, 5909, 5918
Steel Workers' Union, about, 6039
Steele, Sir Richard, about, 381
Steele, S.S., 2311
Steele, Wilbur Daniel, 1762–65
Steelman, John R., 4779
Steeple Bush, 1452
Steere, Douglas V., about, 5433
Steffens, Joseph Lincoln, 6207, 6432
about, 6430, 6432
Stefferud, Alfred, ed., 5817
Stegner, Wallace, 2161–65, 3782, 3961, 4757
Steiger, Ernst, about, 6446
Stein, Gertrude, 1766–72
about, 1773–74, 2504, 2535
Stein, William B., 362
Steinbeck, John, 1775–81, 2333, 2336
about, 2376, 2427–28, 2508, 2536
Steinberg, Milton, 4457
Steinman, David B., 4801
Steinmetz, Rollin C., 4058
Stendler, Celia B., 5148
Step Right Up!, 4980
Stephen Escott, 1576
Stephens, Alexander H., about, 2613, 3415
Stephens, John L., 2994
Stephenson, George M., 4416
Stephenson, Nathaniel Wright, 3271, 3355
Stephenson, Wendell Holmes, 3057
ed., 4072
Sterling, George, 737–38
Sterling Memorial Library, 6470
Stermer, James Edson, 4586
Stern, Bernhard J., 3009, 4815
Stern, Madeleine B., 188, 6446
Stern, Philip Van D., ed., 421, 535
Stern, Siegfried, 6002
Sterner, Richard, 4446, 4448
Stettinius, Edward R., 3567
Stevens, Henry, 6465
about, 6465
Stevens, Henry N., ed., 6465
Stevens, John, about, 4786, 4802
Stevens, John Austin, 4049
Stevens, Robert Livingston, about, 4786
Stevens, Sylvester K., 4057
Stevens, Thaddeus, about, 3362, 3368
Stevens, Wallace, 1782–84
about, 1785, 1923, 2426, 2497, 2544
Stevenson, Adlai, 3646
Stevenson, Elizabeth, 688, 1022
Stevenson, Robert Louis, 610
about, 520
Steward, Julian H., ed., 4222
Stewart, Edgar I., 3036
Stewart, George B., Jr., ed., 931
Stewart, George R., 2976, 3331, 4521
Stewart, Irvin, 4761
Stewart, Isabel M., about, 4854
Stewart, Kenneth, 2848
Stewart, Lawrence D., 5678
Stewart, Lowell O., 4800
Stewart, Paul R., 2925
Stewart, Randall, ed., 349–50, 2320, 2323
Stewart, Raymond F., 4704
Stewart, Watt, 3058
Stewart, William Drummond, about, 3330
Sticks and Stones, 5701
Stieglitz, Alfred, about, 5783
Stiles, Bert, 2813–14
about, 2814
Stiles, Helen E., 5792
Still, Bayrd, 4048, 4140
Still Seeing Things, 4909
A Stillness at Appomattox, 3692
Stilwell, H., 6195
Stilwell, Joseph W., 3723
Stimpson, George W., 6339
Stimson, Henry L., about, 3547, 3595
Stine, C. S., 4479
Stine, Oscar C., 5855
Stirring Them in Austria, 798–99
Stock, Frederick, about, 5652
Stock, Leo F., ed., 3045
Stock companies, 6008
Stocking, George W., 6026
Stocks and stock-exchange, 5981–82
Stoddard, Richard Henry, 224
The Stoic, 1337
Stokes, Anson Phelps, 5103, 5420
Stokes, Thomas L., 4016
Stokowski, Evangeline, 4968
Stone, Barton W., about, 5455
Stone, Candace, 2881
Stone, Geoffrey, 504
Stone, Harlan Fiske, about, 6249–50
Stone, Harold A., 6216
Stone, Henry, 461
Stone, Irving, 2815–21
ed., 3145
Stone, John Augustus, 518, 2311
Stone, Kathryn H., 6216
Stone, Shepard, 3615
Stone, William L., 4049
Stone, Witmer, 4724
Stone quarrying and mining, 2991
Stone Walls and Men, 2716
Stonecutters, 5738
Storck, John, 5289
The Store, 1794
Stores. See Department stores; Chain stores; etc.
Storey, Moorfield, 2696
about, 2696
Stories in the Modern Manner, 2566
Stories of the Streets and of the Town, 704
Stories on Stone, 4527
Storm, Hans Otto, about, 2536
Storm and Echo, 2096
Story, Isabelle F., 4182
Story, Joseph, 6100
about, 6231
The Story of a Bad Boy, 707–10
about, 706
The Story of a Country Town, 960–63
The Story of a Day, 1035
The Story of a Poker Steer, 687
The Story of a Year, 1008
The Story of Bras-Coupé, 749–50
The Story of Kennett, 2282
A Story of the War, 911
The Story of Toby, 475
A Story Teller's Story, 1182
The Story up to Now, 6469
Stoudt, John J., 5600
Stouffer, S. A., 3724, 6130
Stourzh, Gerald, 3187
Stout, Wesley Winans, 5043
Stovall, Floyd, 640, 2401, 2514
ed., 2515
Stowe, Harriet (Beecher), 562–78
about, 562, 577–78, 881, 1023, 2615, 2797, 3413
Stowe, W. H., 5442
The Strange Career of Jim Crow, 4444
The Strange Children, 1472
Strange Fruit, 1759–60
Strange Holiness, 1290
Strange Interlude, 1647–48
Strange Ports of Call, 1959
Strange Victory, 1814
A Stranger Came to Port, 2746
Strangers in the Land, 4422
The Stranglers of Paris, 2315
Strategic Air Command, about, 3643a
Stratemeyer, Florence B., 5158
Stratton, George Malcolm, ed., 5318
Stratton, Winfield Scott, about, 4181
Straumann, Heinrich, 2516
Straus, Isidor, about, 5959
Straus, Nathan, 4608, 5959
Straus, Oscar S., about, 2504
The Straw, 1648
Strawberries, 741
Straws and Prayer-Books, 1262
Stray Leaves from Strange Literature, 951–52
Strayer, Joseph Reese, ed., 6087
Stream of consciousness writing, fiction, 1161–62, 1183, 1379, 1579, 1887, 2055, 2174–75
Street, James, Jr., ed., 1791
Street, James Howell, 1786–91, 5822
Street Corner Society, 4598
A Street in Bronzeville, 1937
Street Scene, 1688–89, 2332
A Streetcar Named Desire, 2221, 2335–36
Streeter, Floyd Benjamin, 3990
Streets in the Moon, 1586

The Strength of Gideon, 860
The Strength of the Strong, 1052
The Strenuous Age in American Literature, 2451
The Strenuous Life, 2793
Strevey, T. E., 3058
Stribling, Thomas Sigismund, 1792–95
Strickland, W. P., ed., 2634
Strictly Dishonorable, 2332
Strike through the Mask!, 2191
Strikes, 3439, 4147, 4181, 4310, 6047
Strode, Hudson, 3369
Strong, Charles Augustus, 5255 Strong, George Templeton, 2822–23
  about, 2823
Strong Cigars and Lovely Women, 4991
Structural geology, 2942
Structural psychology, 5389
A Struggle for Life, 711
The Struggle for Survival, 5879
Struggles and Triumphs, 4977
The Struggles (Social, Financial and Political) of Petroleum V. Nasby, 425
Struik, Dirk Jan, 4730
Strunsky, Simeon, 2858
Stryker, Lloyd Paul, 3411–12
Stuart, Charles, about, 3360
Stuart, Gilbert, about, 5749, 5774
Stuart, H. W., 5254
Stuart, J. E. B., about, 2613, 3703
Stuart, Jesse, 2166–73
Stuart, Lyle, 2894
Studenski, Paul, 5973
Studies in Classic American Literature, 2456
Studies in Literary Types, 2493
Studies in Logical Theory, about, 2407
Studies of a Litterateur, 2547
Studies of Good and Evil, 5354
Studs Lonigan, 1373
Stumpf, Florence Scovil, 4983
Sturges, Henry C., 224
Sturges, Preston, 2332
Sturges, Wesley A., 6299
Styron, William, 2174–75
Substance and Shadow, 5319
The Suburb by the Sea, 1517
Subversive Activities Control Act, 6108
Subversives and subversive activities, 4424, 6112, 6119, 6130
  New York (State), 6115
Success, 3762, 6029
  as a theme in literature, 2464
Such Counsels You Gave to Me, 1534
Sucker's Progress, 2586
Suckow, Ruth, 1796–1801
  about, 1809
Suffolk County, Mass., 4036
Suffrage, 6401–2, 6405, 6409
  Southern States, 6378–79
Sugar industry, 5822
Suggs, Simon, pseud. See Hooper, Johnson Jones
Sullivan, Anne Mansfield, 2706
  See also Macy, Anne Sullivan
Sullivan, E. C., about, 4785
Sullivan, James, about, 5121
Sullivan, John Florence. See Allen, Fred
Sullivan, John Lawrence, about, 5027
Sullivan, Louis Henry, 5715
  about, 5703, 5715
Sullivan, Mark, 2891, 3468
  about, 2891
Sullivan, Paul H., ed., 6019
Sullivan, Thelma L., 1807
Sullivant, William Starling, about, 4760
The Sultan of Sulu, 701, 705
Sulzberger, Arthur Hays, about, 2869
Suman, John Robert, about, 4803
Summer and Smoke, 2223, 2335
Summer on the Lakes, in 1843, 314
Summer Resort, 4596
Summers, Robert E., ed., 3631
Sumner, Charles, 425, 3406
  about, 2280, 2614, 3406
Sumner, Helen L., 6033
Sumner, William Graham, about, 2407, 4542, 4544
The Sun (Baltimore), about, 1602, 2876
The Sun (New York), about, 2874, 2881
The Sun also Rises, 1495
Sun-Up, 2337
Sunday, Billy, about, 5403, 5480
Sunderland, Edson R., 6331
Sunrise to Sunset, 1159
Sunshine and Shadow, 4955
Supernatural stories
  Mich., 5535
  New England, 5534
  See also Ghost stories
Supernaturalism, Indian, 3006, 3019
Superstition
  Mich., 5533
  Miss., 5547
  New England, 5541
  N.C., 5536
  Ozark Mountains, 5543
  Pa., 5578
  Schoharie County, N.Y., 5539
Superstition, 200, 2337
Supper for the Dead, 1475
Supreme Court, 3108, 3304, 6078, 6093–94, 6096, 6098, 6101, 6120, 6147, 6151, 6236–60, 6286, 6340
  decisions & opinions, 6084, 6089, 6092, 6095, 6099–6100, 6102, 6104–6, 6121, 6128–29 influence in pol. & govt., 6240
Surgeon General's Library, Washington, D.C., about, 4819 Surgeons. See Physicians and surgeons
Surgery, 4821, 4824, 4827, 4831
Surgery of the eye. See Ocular surgery
Surgery of the nervous system. See Neurosurgery Surrealism in literature
  drama, 2226
  fiction, 1987, 2079, 2081, 2084
  poetry, 2034
Surry of Eagle's Nest, 247–48
A Survey of the Summe of Church Discipline, 34
Susan Lennox, 1107 Susquehanna River and valley, 4020
  in literature, 675
Sut Lovingood, 331–32
Sutcliffe, Denham, ed., 1716
Sutermeister, Edwin, 6458
Sutherland, Donald, 1774
Sutherland, Stella H., 4398
Sutter, John, about, 2659
Sutton, Albert Alton, 2910
Sutton, Francis X., 6010
Suwannee River, 3976
Svenska Amerikanaren Tribunen, about, 2895
Swallow Barn, 405–8
Swan, Howard, 5630
Swan, M. L., 5577
Swan, W. H., 5577
Swanee (song), 5678
Swanton, John R., 2985, 3012
Swedes, 4482, 4483, 4486
Swedish-American journalism, 2895
Sweeney, James Johnson, 4968
Sweeney in the Trees, 2113
Sweet, William Warren, 5396, 5401–2, 5410–16, 5466
  ed., 5412–16, 5463
Sweet Thursday, 1781
Swenson, May, 2350
Swenson, Rinehart J., 6315
Swetnam, George, 3962
Swift, Jonathan, about, 165
Swift & Co., about, 6055
Swift v. Tyson case, 6293
'Swingin Round the Cirkle', 424
Swinnerton, James, about, 2865
Swisher, Carl Brent, 6084–85, 6238, 6258
Switzerland, travel & travelers, 426
Sword Blades and Poppy Seed, 1583–84
Sybil, 1911
Sydnor, Charles S., 4074
A Symbolic of Motives, 2390
Symbolism in literature
  drama, 1069–70, 2218–19, 2226
  essays, 2388, 2535
  fiction, 333, 470, 478, 481–83, 491, 1281, 1379, 1388, 1494, 1500, 1947, 1954, 1992, 2023, 2081, 2212
  hist. & crit., 2420
  poetry, 1823, 1948
    crit., 2378
The Symphony, 1038
Symphony Hall (Boston), 5649
Synagogues, 4454, 4457
Syndicalism, 6045
Syndication (newspaper), 2864, 2881, 2890, 2894
Syntax, 2243
Syrett, Harold C., 3103, 3318
Syrkin, Marie, 4457
System of Logic, 5337
Systematic Theology, 5433
Szarkowski, John, 5715

T

TVA. See Tennessee Valley Authority
Tableau des Etats-Unis, 4507
Tacoma, Wash., 4150
Taeuber, Conrad, 4397
Taff, Charles A., 5942
Taft, Kendall B., ed., 2295
Taft, Lorado, 5740

Taft, Philip, 6033, 6039
Taft, Robert, 5781, 5806
Taft, William Howard, about, 3464, 6255
Taft-Hartley Act, 6053
Take Them, Stranger, 2413
Take Them Up Tenderly, 4931
Taking the Census, 380
A Tale for Midnight, 2087
A Tale of Two Conventions, 6350
Tales. See Legends & tales; Short stories; Tales, folk; Tall tales Tales, folk, 910–16, 922–25, 5506, 5508, 5510–13, 5516
  Mormon, 5538
  Beech Mountain, N.C., 5529
  Brazos River, Tex., 5527
  Ky., 5529, 5546
  Mich., 5533, 5535
  Middle West, 5519
  Miss., 5547
  Mississippi River, 5523
  Mo., 5528
  New England, 5524, 5534
  N. Mex., 5537
  New York (City), 5522
  New York (State), 5548
  N.C., 5529, 5536
  Ozark Mountains, 5545
  Pa., 5578–79
  Rocky Mountains, 5530
  Schoharie County, N.Y., 5539
  Southern States, 5525
  Southwest, 5507, 5509, 5518, 5520, 5531
  Tex., 5518, 5520–21, 5532
  Va., 5529
  West, 5526
  Wise County, Va., 5529
Tales before Midnight, 1224
Tales from the Plum Grove Hills, 2170
Tales of a Time and Place, 1033
Tales of a Wayside Inn, 434
Tales of Fishes, 1486
Tales of Lonely Trails, 5073
Tales of Soldiers and Civilians, 735
Tales of the Grotesque and Arabesque, 528
Talifer, 1714
Talking books, 4636
Talking to the Moon, 2730
The Talking Turtle, 5545
Tall tales, 330–32, 379–80, 511, 5506, 5508, 5511–13
  Ark., 5542
  Mich., 5535
  New England, 5534
  New York (City), 5522
  New York (State), 5548
  Ozark Mountains, 5544
  Rocky Mountains, 5530
  Southern States, 5515
  Southwest, 5503, 5509, 5520
  Tenn., 330–32
  Tex., 5520, 5532
Tallant, Robert, 3852
The Talley Method, 1210
Tallmadge, Thomas E., 5703
Talmadge, John Erwin, 2856
Tamar and Other Poems, 1534
Tambimuttu, M. J., ed., 1364
Tambo and Bones, 5640
Tamerlane, 521–27
Tammany Hall, 6382, 6387, 6390
Tammen, Harry Heye, about, 2878
Tancred, King of Sicily, 2311
Taney, Roger B., about, 6096, 6240, 6258
Tanks (military science), 3658
Tannenbaum, Frank, 3632, 4656
Tannenbaum, Samuel A., 4891
Tansill, Charles Callen, 3587
Taos, N. Mex., 4187, 4198
  drama, 1174
Tapp, Jesse W., 5855
Tappan, Arthur, about, 3360
Tappan, Lewis, 3360
Taps for Private Tussie, 2169
Tar, a Midwest Childhood, 1184
Tarbell, Ida M., 2824–27, 3094, 5916, 6430
  about, 2827
Tariff, 3124, 3303, 3351, 3422–23, 3448, 3638, 5947, 6352, 6366, 6373, 6396
  See also General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade Tarkington, Booth, 968, 1802–6
  about, 1808, 2504, 4124
  bibl., 1807
Tascosa, Tex., hist., 4195
The Tastemakers, 5694
Tate, Allen, 1481, 1809–11, 2008
  ed., 1227, 1809, 2354
  about, 1812, 2499
Tate, Mrs. Allen. See Gordon, Caroline
Tate, Merze, 3525
Tattered Coat, 5068
The Tattooed Countess, 1830
Tatum, Laurie, about, 3035
Tauber, Maurice F., 6487
  ed., 6484
Taubman, Hyman Howard, 5624, 5627, 5662
Taussig, Frank W., 6027
Taverns. See Hotels, taverns, etc.
Taxation, 5965, 5970–71, 5973, 6090, 6095, 6105
  cases, 6090, 6095
  gift deductions, 4615
  radio & television, 4708
Tayleure, Clifton W., 2347
Taylor, Albert H., 3675
Taylor, Anne (Dewees), 5834
Taylor, Bayard, 2282, 4351–53
  tr., 2282
  about, 2282, 2513, 4351
Taylor, Carl C., 4583, 5833
Taylor, Charles A., 2305
Taylor, Deems, 1608, 4946, 5685
Taylor, E. G. R., 3169
Taylor, Edward, 72–74
  about, 73–74
Taylor, Eugene J., 4637
Taylor, Frederick W., about, 4798
Taylor, George Rogers, ed., 3107–36, 5877
Taylor, Henry C., 5834
Taylor, Horace, 5895
Taylor, John, 2296
Taylor, Laurette, about, 4932
Taylor, Nathaniel W., about, 5428, 5436
Taylor, Paul Schuster, 4476
Taylor, Peter Hillsman, 2176–79
Taylor, Richard, 2828–30
Taylor, Robert J., 3079
Taylor, Robert Lewis, 4956
Taylor, Rosser H., 4091
Taylor, Telford, 6164
Taylor, Walter Fuller, 2517
Taylor, Zachary, about, 3332–33
Teachers and teaching, 118, 2767, 5105, 5213–23, 5239, 5243 academic freedom, 5132–33, 5181, 5185, 5238–39, 5243, 6115–17, 6123, 6126
  colleges & universities, 5213–15, 5219, 5221–23
  education & training, 5233, 5236, 5239
  hist., 3050, 3055, 3059, 3083
  laws & legislation, 5139
  methods & techniques, 5218, 5225–27, 5239
  private schools, 5217
  profession, 5128, 5216 public schools, 5134, 5216, 5239
Tead, Ordway, 5427
  about, 5427
The Teahouse of the August Moon, 2336
Teale, Edwin W., ed., 1083
Team Bells Woke Me, 1316
Teamsters' Union, about, 6039
Teapot Dome scandal, fiction, 1756
Tears and Smiles, 198
The Tears of the Blind Lions, 2039
Teasdale, Sara, 1813–14
Tebbel, John, 2848, 2862, 2884, 2926
  ed., 3171
Technical assistance, 3624, 3636, 3641
Technical societies, directory, 4728
Technology, 6440, 6454–55, 6458 awards, 4729
  bibl., 4729, 6453
  development, 3670–71, 3711, 3722, 4079
  hist., 4312, 4320, 4727
Tecumseh (Shawnee chief), about, 3030, 3037
Teedyuscung (Delaware chief), about, 2835
Teeters, Negley K., 4639, 4657
Teichmann, Howard, 1550
Teigler, Elaine, ed., 3064
Telecommunication, 4711
  hist., 4675
  laws & regulations, 4707
Telegraph, 4675, 4680–81, 4707
  unions, 4681
Telephone, 4674
  hist., 4675, 4679
  industry, 4672, 4710
Television, 4692
  advertising, 4696
  audiences, 4699, 4703–4, 4895
  boxing, 5033
  broadcasting, 4682, 4686, 4691–92, 4694–95, 4697, 4699, 4703–5, 4965 in education, 4685, 4688, 4705, 5230–31
  in religion, 4702

Television—Continued
journalists, 2848, 2894
laws & regulations, 4708
Teller, James D., 4742
Temperance movement, 4516, 4528
fiction, 190–91
A Temperance Town, 2306
The Tempers, 1881
Temple School, Boston, about, 5220
The Temptation of Roger Heriott, 2059
The Ten Grandmothers, 3007
Ten Nights in a Bar-Room, 191
Ten North Frederick, 2078
Ten Years in Japan, 3545
Tender Buttons, 1771
Tender Is the Night, 1429
Tenement life, 2703–4
New York (City), 4638
Tennessee, 3945, 3963, 4079, 4103–5
caves, 2946
frontier life, 4097
guidebook, 3855
hist., 3287, 3353, 4021, 4103
pol. & govt., 4103
travel & travelers, 366, 4277–78
Tennessee in literature
fiction, 1464, 1468, 1470, 1472, 1792
humor, 330–32
language (dialects, etc.), 330–32
short stories, 1684–88
Tennessee River and valley, 4006
Tennessee Valley Authority, 4006, 4794, 5892
Tennessee's Partner, 930, 937, 939
Tenney Committee. See California. Senate. Fact-Finding Committee on Un-American Activities in California
Tennis, 4987, 4993, 5046–47, 5049–50, 5052
The Tent on the Beach, 668
The Tenth Muse Lately Sprung up in America, 8
Terence. Andria, about, 1864
Terrible Woman, 1762 Territorial expansion overseas, 3428, 3527, 3531, 3540
The West, 3075, 3138, 3161, 3307, 3314, 3330, 3337, 3340, 3354, 3663, 3760, 4146, 4218
Terror and Decorum, 2190
Terry, John Skally, 1893
The Testament of Man, 1420
Texas, 3964, 4188, 4192–97
architecture, 5723
bibl., 4190
boundaries, 3355
descr. & trav., 3949
econ. condit., 4193
fiction, 1985, 1987
folklore, 5507, 5509, 5518, 5520–21, 5532
frontier life, 2733
German immigrants, 4478
govt., 6195
governors, 4194
guidebooks, 3917–23
hist., 2650, 2866, 3314, 3353–55, 3949, 3956, 4189, 4193–94, 4196
Mexican labor, 4476
naturalists, 4734
Texas—Continued
pictorial work, 4153 relations with France, 3577 relations with Gr. Brit., 3554, 3577
short stories, 1659
soc. condit., 4193
travel & travelers, 4365
U.S. Senators, 4194
Texas Folklore Society, about, 5518
Texas Sheepman, 2733
The Texas Review, 2572
A Texas Steer, 2348
Textile arts, 5595, 5600, 5604
Thacher, Thomas, 2493
Thanatopsis, 217
Thane, Eric. See Henry, Ralph Chester
Tharp, Louise Hall, 5125
That Fortune, 1142
That Girl from Memphis, 1763
That Reminds Me, 2598
That Spot, 1058
Thatcher ,Virginia S., 4816
That's All that Matters, 1871
Thayer, Frank, 2911
Thayer, Horace S., 5283
Thayer, James Bradley, 5387
Thayer, John E., ed., 55
Thayer, Sylvanus, about, 3656
Thayer, Vivian T., 5103, 5238, 5491
Thayer, William R., 689
Theater, 2743, 4897–4943, 4929, 4932, 4981
anthology, 4896
Colonial period, 3748
criticism, 4906–12
design, 5689
experimental plays, 2535
fiction, 1688
hist., 4899–4900, 4902–3, 4905, 4909, 4912, 4929–30, 4932, 4941 little theater movement, 1647, 1762, 4901
yearbooks, 4897, 4906
Calif., 2798, 4923
Colo., 4925
Nashville, 3765
New Orleans, 4922
New York (City), 2017, 4907–9, 4916, 4924, 4935, 4942–43
Ohio, 4121
Philadelphia, 5659
St. Louis, 4913
San Francisco, 4918, 4943
Toledo, Ohio, 4894
See also Drama; Musical comedy; Opera
Theatre Arts, 4896
Theatre Guild, about, 4941
Theatrical dancing, 2472, 4971
Theatricals, 3736
Their Eyes Were Watching God, 1528
Their Fathers' God, 1723
Theologians, 5425–27, 5433
Theology, 3758, 5409, 5433
hist., 5436, 5438, 5489
in literature, 17, 21, 26, 32, 40, 59, 84, 230, 2483
See also Religious themes in literature Theology—Continued natural, 5338
study & teaching, 5423–24
New England, 5428
See also Philosophy—and religion
A Theology for the Social Gospel, 5482
The Theory of American Literature, 2446
The Theory of Business Enterprise, about, 2407
Theory of Flight, 2106
The Theory of Human Culture, 5351
Theory of Literature, 2529
The Theory of the Leisure Class, 4538
Theosophy, 5439
There Is Another Heaven, 1637
There Shall Be No Night, 1753
There Will Be Bread and Love, 1295
These Also Believe, 5439
These Bars of Flesh, 1792
These Many Years, 2473
These Things Are Mine, 2744
These 13, 1379
They Also Ran, 2817
They Built the West, 4150
They Came Like Swallows, 2031
They Gathered at the River, 5403
They Knew What They Wanted, 1518, 2327, 2332
They Seek a Country, 5466
They Stooped to Folly, 1461
They Took to the Sea, 5021
Thies, Frieda C., comp., 1046
Third party movements. See Political parties
The Third Person, 1012
Thirteen Americans, 5427
The Thirteen Colonies
census, 4398, 4400
commerce, 3193, 3243, 3262
culture, 3088, 3236
elections, 6401
German immigrants, 4477
govt., 3195, 3221, 6088
hist., 3087–88, 3141, 3157, 3171, 3176–77, 3179, 3188, 3190, 3202, 3221, 3236
Scotch immigrants, 4491
Scotch-Irish immigrants, 4490
trade, 4398
Thirteen O'Clock, 1224
35,000 Days in Texas, 2866
This Body the Earth, 1474
This Green Thicket World, 1838
This House against This House, 2807
This Life I've Led, 4996
This Modern Poetry, 2413
This Music Crept by Me upon the Waters, 1587
This Reckless Breed of Men, 4186
This Side of Paradise, 1426
This Simian World, 1317–18
This Was Normalcy, 3500a
Thistlethwaite, Frank, 3146
Thomas, Allen C., 5467
Thomas, Augustus, 2337, 2347–48
Thomas, Benjamin Franklin, 6447
Thomas, Benjamin P., 3392, 3395, 3413
Thomas, Dorothy S., 4428, 4446, 4469
Thomas, Elbert D., 5427
about, 5427

Thomas, George Henry, about, 2614
Thomas, Harrison Cook, 6373
Thomas, Isaiah, 6447
about, 6447
Thomas, Jeannette (Bell), 3963, 5584
Thomas, Lewis V., 3513
Thomas, Milton Halsey, ed., 2823
Thomas, Norman M., 6433
Thomas, Robert B., 5541
Thomas, Theodore, about, 5652
Thomas, William I., 4495
Thomas Aquinas, about, 5289
Thomas-Thomas-Ancil-Thomas, 1293
Thomason, John W., 3703
Thompson, Alan Reynolds, 2425.
Thompson, Benjamin, about, 4721, 4724
Thompson, Charles Manfred, 4131
Thompson, Charles Seymour, 6472
Thompson, Daniel G. Brinton, 4043
Thompson, Daniel Pierce, 579–84
Thompson, Esther Katherine, 5823
Thompson, Harold W., 5548
Thompson, Holland, 4792
Thompson, John Eric S., 2994, 2997
Thompson, L. S., 4481
Thompson, Manley H., 5350
Thompson, Oscar, 5663
Thompson, Ralph, 2518
Thompson, Randall, 5670
Thompson, Robert L., 4680
Thompson, Ronald, 3065
Thompson, Stith, ed., 3021, 5518
Thompson, Warren S., 4399, 4594
Thompson, William Boyce, about, 2682
Thomson, Charles A. H., 3607
Thomson, Elizabeth H., 4759, 4821
Thomson, Virgil, 1771
Thoreau, Henry David, 585–608, 2290
about, 186, 280, 470, 606, 609–11, 619, 740, 2277, 2287, 2364, 2394, 2397, 2422, 2453, 2476, 2479, 2481
bibl., 589, 599
Thoreau, Sophia, ed., 594, 596
Thornbrough, Gayle, comp., 4125
Thorndike, Edward L., 4595
about, 5116
Thorne, Florence Calvert, 6050
Thornthwaite, Charles Warren, 2937
Thornton, Harrison John, 3058, 5835
Thornton, Richard H., 2240
about, 2240
Thorp, Margaret (Farrand), 4950
Thorp, Willard, 2412
ed., 481, 492, 2355, 2460–61, 4083
Thorp, Willard Long, 6030
Thorpe, Francis Newton
comp., 6086
ed., 5130
Thorpe, Thomas Bangs, 612–13, 5542
Those Not Elect, 1154
Those Were the Days, 5090
Thoughts on Death and Life, 5316
Thoughts without Words, 1318
A Thousand-Mile Walk to the Gulf, 1079
Thrasher, Frederic M., 4658
The Thread That Runs So True, 2166
The Three Black Pennys, 1507
Three Cities, 1190
"The Three Colored Aces," 5025
Three Essays on America, 2380
Three Lives, 1767
Three Men on a Horse, 2333
Three Men on Third, 5013
3 Smiths in the Wind, 2150
Three Soldiers, 1326
The Three Taverns, 1714
Three Worlds, 2523
Threshold and Hearth, 1906
Throckmorton, Archibald H., ed., 6275
Through the Brazilian Wilderness, 2794
Through the Eye of the Needle, 978 Thurber, James Grover, 1815–20, 2334
drawings, 1815
Thursfield, Richard E., 5128
ed., 3059
Thurso's Landing, 1534
Thwaites, Reuben Gold, ed., 3299
Thwing, Charles F., 5188
Ticknor, George, about, 2462, 2534, 3776
Ticonderoga, Fort, fiction, 580–82
Tidwell, James Nathan, 2257
ed., 518
Tiffany, Herbert Thorndike, 6278
Tiger in the House, 1828
Tiger Joy, 1224
Tiger-Lilies, 1046
Tilden, Freeman, 5866
Tilden, Samuel Jones, about, 3430
Tilden, William T., 5052
about, 5052
Tilghman, Benjamin Chew, about, 4786
Till Fish Us Do Part, 5070
Till the Day I Die, 2064
Tillich, Paul, about, 5433, 5436
Tilquin, André, 5393
Tilton, Eleanor M., ed., 377
Tilton, Theodore, about, 5476
Timber Line, 2878
Timberlake, Craig, 4943
Timberland Times, 2661
Time in the Rock, 1166
The Time of Man, 1698
The Time of Your Life, 2110, 2112, 2327, 2334, 2336
A Time to Act, 1585
Time to Come, 1959
Time Will Darken It, 2033
Times-Herald (Washington, D.C.), about, 2862
The Times-Picayune (New Orleans), about, 2871
Timoleon, 488
Timrod, Henry, 614–18
Tindall, George, 4072
Tinker, Edward Larocque, 748, 4101
Tinling, Marion, ed., 15
tr., 16
Tinware, 5726, 5787
The Titan, 1337
Titchener, Edward B., about, 5389
'Tite Poulette, 748
To a Waterfowl, 217
To Build a Fire, 1052, 1058
To Helen, 526
To the Finland Station, 2535
Tobacco industry, 5823, 5829
fiction, 2194
Tobacco Road, 1271, 2333
Tobey, James A., 4876
Tobias, Channing H., 5427
about, 5427
Tobin, James, 6010
Tocqueville, Alexis de, 4509–12
about, 4512
The Tocsin of Revolt, 2474
Todd, Charles B., 101
Todd, Mable (Loomis), ed., 839–41, 843, 847–49
Together, 956
Toilers of the Hills, 1421
Toledo, Ohio
entertainment, 4894
politics, 6434
Tolles, Frederick B., 3229
Tolley, Howard R., 5837
Tolman, Richard C., about, 4722
Tom Owen the Bee-Hunter, pseud. See Thorpe, Thomas Bangs
Tom Sawyer, The Adventures of, 778–83, 811
Tomas, Vincent, ed., 5349
Tomorrow the New Moon, 1920
Tomorrow the World, 2334
Tompkins, Pauline, 3568
Toombs, Robert, about, 2613, 3405
Top, Franklin H., ed., 4877
Topical songs, 5552, 5556, 5564, 5575, 5584
Torbet, R. G., 5442–43
Tories, 3262, 3267, 3272, 4044
Tornadoes, 2948
Torpey, William G., 5421, 6193
Torrence, Frederic Ridgely, 1821–22
Torrey, Bradford, ed., 600
Torrey, John, about, 4760
Torrielli, Andrew J., 3779
Tort Claims Act of 1948 (Federal), 6313
Tortesa, the Usurer, 676, 2337, 2347
Tortilla Flat, 1780
Torts, 6230, 6279
Toscanini, Arturo, about, 2638, 5622
A Tour of the Prairies, 381
Tourtellot, Arthur Bernon, 3991, 6340
Toward a Better Life, 2387
Toward the Flame, 1170
Toward the Gulf, 1601
The Town, 1694
The Town down the River, 1714
Town Hall Tonight, 4902
Town Meeting Country, 3965
The Town with the Funny Name, 2746
Towne, Charles Wayland, 5874
Towns. See Cities and towns Towns and villages in literature
drama, 1865, 2223
editorials, sketches, etc., 701
essays, 418
fiction, 562, 572–73, 576, 959–63, 1178, 1225, 1299, 1301, 1453, 1560, 1568, 1694, 1705, 1786, 1789, 1830, 1964, 1997, 2005, 2033, 2070, 2129, 2163, 2208
hist. & crit., 2438
personal narrative, 1543
poetry, 1599–1601, 1727, 1731
short stories, 415–17, 562, 574–75, 1023–31, 1178–79, 1476, 1797

Townsend, Harvey Gates, 5262
ed., 5298
Townsend of Lichfield, 1262
Trachtenberg, Joshua, 4459
The Track of the Cat, 1957
Tracy's Tiger, 2120
Trade
Colonial period, 4069, 4398
Indian, 2993, 3009
Santa Fe, 4148
See also Commerce
Trade associations, 6008, 6019
Trade book publishing, 6437–38, 6441
Trade-marks, 4781
Trade regulation. See Commerce—govt. regulation
Trade schools, 5210
Trade unions, 5899, 6032–42, 6049, 6054, 6192
See also names of individual organizations, e.g., National Telegraph Union
Trading posts, Indian, 3028
Traffic courts, 6307
Traffic regulation, 4655, 4659–60
Tragedy. See Drama
The Tragedy of "Superstition," 200
The Tragic Era, 3362
Tragic Ground, 1274
Trail Driving Days, 4158
The Trail-Makers of the Middle Border, 898
Train, Arthur C., 6306
The Traitor, 2229
The Trampling Herd, 4158
Transatlantic Migration, 2508
Transcendentalism, 186–87, 230, 239, 280–82, 313, 585, 2279–80, 3134, 5256, 5259, 5263, 5301, 5305 anthology, 2346 essay, 2401
fiction, 333, 402–4
poetry, 619
anthology, 2328
Transcontinental routes, 2971
Transitions in American Literary History, 2401
Transport to Summer, 1784
Transportation, 4113, 4221, 5920–43 automotive, 5942
govt. regulation, 5921, 5924
hist., 4227, 4281, 5877, 5920, 5923–24
in art, 5801
inventions, 4787
Mississippi Valley, 4110
New England, 5933
N.C., 4090
Northwest, Old, 4112
Northwest, Pacific, 4214
Ohio, 4119
Rocky Mountains, 4174
Tex., 4194
The West, 4349
See also Travel & travelers
Trappers, folklore, 5523
Trappists, 2034
Traubel, Horace L., 658
ed., 627, 637
Traumatic surgery, 4873
Trautman, Ray, 6485
Travel and travelers, 4223–4389
bibl., 4229
fiction, 1656
horseback, 36–39
river, 4247, 4281
See also names of individual rivers stagecoach, 4227
See also subdivisions Guidebooks and Travel & travelers under names of places and regions, e.g., New England — Guidebooks; Indiana—travel & travelers
A Traveler from Altruria, 978
The Traveling Anecdote, 5509
Travelling with a Reformer, 798–99
Travels in Two Democracies, 2535
Treadmill to Oblivion, 4964
Treadwell, Sophie, 2332
Treason, 3148, 3273
American Revolution, 3264
Treasure-trove, folklore, 5531–32
The Treasurer's Report, and Other Aspects of Community Singing, 1214
Treaties, 3522, 3526, 3540, 3612
Treatise on the Atonement, 5428, 5473
Treaty-making power, 3612
Treaty of Ghent, 3329, 3542
A Tree, a Rock, a Cloud, 2024
A Tree Is a Tree, 4962
The Tree Named John, 5547
The Tree of Life, 1433
A Tree of Night, 1946
Trees, 2960, 2963–64
The Trees, 1694
Trembling Prairie, 5351
Trent, William Peterfield, 393, 2393, 4501
ed., 2345, 2393, 4724, 4786
Trent Collection, Duke University, 643
Trente ans, ou La vie d'un joueur, 2299
Trial by Time, 1410
Trial courts, 6285
See also Courts
Trial of a Poet, 2143
Trial practice, 6295–96
Trial procedure, 6282
Trial without Jury, 2302
Trials, 6292, 6298, 6322 criminal, 6229
Triangle Fire case, 6229
Tribute to the Angels, 1323
Trifles, 2332
Trigg, Oscar L., 620
comp., 637
Trilling, Lionel, 792, 2406, 2412, 2519–20, 5197
A Trilogy of Desire, 1337
Trimble, Bruce R., 6259
Trinity Church, New York (City)
Choir, about, 5666
A Trip to Chinatown, 2306
The Triple Thinkers, 2539
Trippe, Juan, about, 5941
Tristram, 1714
The Triumph, 3495
Triumph of Freedom, 3255
The Triumph of Infidelity, 120
The Triumph of Night, 1851
The Triumph of the Egg, 1181
Triumphant Democracy, 3434
Trivial Breath, 1903
Trollope, Anthony, 4375–76
about, 4374
Trollope, Frances (Milton), 4304–06
about, 4303
Tropic of Cancer, 1611
Tropic of Capricorn, 1612
Trouble in July, 1273
Trouble on Lost Mountain, 920
The Trouble with Cops, 4642
The Troubled Air, 2158
Troupers of the Gold Coast, 2798
Trow, Martin A., 6455
Troy, N.Y., fiction, 1159
Trucking industry, 5942
Trudeau, Livingston, about, 4868
True, Alfred Charles, 5836
True, Frederick W., ed., 4774
True Account of America for the Information and Help of Peasant and Commoner, 4485
Truesdell, Leon E., 4474
Truman, Harry S., 3500b, 5189
about, 3489
Truman, Stanley R., 4817
Trumbull, J. H., ed., 89
Trumbull, John (1750–1831), 165–67
about, 167, 2365
Trumbull, John (1756–1843), 5775
about, 5775
Trumbull County, Ohio, 3872
Trumpets of Jubilee, 2797
Trumps, 2278
Trust, 1058
Trust companies, 5998, 6006
Trusts, industrial, 3121, 6008, 6026 govt. control, 6004
The Trusty Knaves, 1687
Truxal, Andrew G., 4572
Tryon, Rolla Milton, 5919
Tryon, Warren S., ed., 4235
Tsanoff, R. A., 5252
Tuberculosis, control, 4868, 4881
Tucker, Glenn, 3037
Tucker, Samuel M., ed., 909
Tuckerman, Bayard, ed., 2691
Tuckerman, Henry T., 4230
Tucson, Ariz., 4176, 4187
Tufts, James H., 5254, 5273, 5289
Tufts, Matilde C., 5289
Tugwell, Rexford Guy, 2407, 3498
ed., 5827
about, 5888
Tulips and Chimneys, 1309, 1313
Tulloch, Avis, sculptures, 2994
Tulsa, Okla.
guidebook, 3909
hist., 4171
The Tumult and the Shouting, 4994
Tuna industry, fiction, 2746
Tunnard, Christopher, 4609
Tunney, Gene, 3488, 5031
about, 4987, 5031
Turbulent Era, 3545
Turkey, relations with, 3513, 3545
The Turmoil, 1806
The Turn of the Screw, 1007, 1012
Turn West, Turn East, 817, 1017
Turnbull, Archibald D., 3676, 4802
Turnbull, George S., 2863
Turner, Arlin, 752

Turner, Frederick Jackson, 3083, 3147, 3356–57, 3784
about, 2407, 3058, 3137, 3147, 4540, 5222
Turner, Julius, 6398
Turner, Lorenzo Dow, 2271
Turner, Nat, about, 5502
Turner, Scott, about, 4803
The Turning Wheel, 5940
A Turning Wind, 2106
Turns and Movies, 1166
Turpie, Mary C., 5757
comp., 5613
Tuskegee Institute, Tuskegee, Ala., 4450
Tutt, Ephraim, about, 6306
Twain, Mark, 768–812, 2290, 2367
about, 445, 542, 745, 813–20, 926, 982, 1017, 1126, 2380, 2416–17, 2468, 2474, 2517, 2616
'Twas All for the Best, 2309
Tweed (William Marcy) Ring, 6387
Twelve Men, 1342
Twelve Men in a Box, 6295
The Twenties, 2440
Twentieth Century Authors, 2455
Twentieth Century Fund. Committee on Cartels and Monopoly, 6026
Twentieth Century Fund. Housing Committee, 4610, 5896–97, 6040 Twentieth-Century Literature in America, 2356–62
XXIV Elegies, 1433
27 Wagons Full of Cotton, 2220
20,000 Leagues under the Sea; or, David Copperfield, 1215 Twice-Told Tales, 334–37
about, 333, 538
Twichell, Joseph H., ed., 90
The Twin Adventures, 2119
Twins of Genius, 745
Twiss, Benjamin R., 6101
Two Blades of Grass, 5857
Two Gentlemen in Bonds, 1677
Two Lives, 1556
Two Minutes Till Midnight, 3621
Two Old Colonial Places, 1103–4
Two on an Island, 1689
Two on the Aisle, 4909
Two Reels and a Crank, 4961
Two Slatterns and a King, 1608
The Two Sons-in-Law, 2302
Two-thirds of a Nation, 4608
Two Years before the Mast, 275, 479
Tyler, Alice (Felt), 4522
Tyler, John, about, 3323–24, 3540
Tyler, Lyon Gardiner, ed., 71, 3218
Tyler, Moses Coit, 2521–22, 3263
about, 2521
Tyler, Royall, 168–70, 2312, 2337, 2347
Type and type-founding, 6442, 6448, 6456, 6459
Typee, 471–75
Types of Philosophy, 5310
Typhus, 2843
The Tyranny of Sex, 1573

U

U.S.A., 1325, 1328
U.S.A., the Permanent Revolution, 4503
U.S. 1, 2106
U.S. One, Maine to Florida, 3790
U.S.S.R. See Russia
Ukrainians, 4492
Ullman, Edward L., 2937
Ulman, Joseph N., 6291
Ulman, Lloyd, 6041
Ulrich, Carolyn F., 2914
Ulriksson, Vidkunn, 4681
Umbra, 1666
Unc' Edinburg's Drowndin', 1100–2
Uncle Ethan Ripley, 893
Uncle Moses, 1192
Uncle Remus. See Harris, Joel Chandler
Uncle Sam's Acres, 5809
Uncle Sam's Stepchildren, 3034
Uncle Sam's Uncle Josh, 545
Uncle Tom's Cabin, 563–67, 749–50, about, 562
2347
Uncle Tom's Children, 2234
The Undeclared War, 3538
Under Duke and King, 4044
Under the Bridge, 2680
Under the Lion's Paw, 893
Undercliff, 1352
Underground River, 2123
Underhill, Ruth Murray, 2986, 3013
Understanding the American past, 3062
Undertakers and undertaking, 4527
Underworld, 2586, 4652
language (slang, etc.), 2274
Unemployment, 3440, 6048
Unemployment insurance. See Social security
Unfinished Cathedral, 1795
Unger, Leonard, ed., 1370
Union List of Serials, 2915
A Union Officer in the Reconstruction, 277
Union Pacific Railroad, about, 5927, 5932
Union Portraits, 2614
Union reporters, 2851
Unions, labor. See Trade unions
Unit instruction in education, 5158
Unitarianism, 230, 239, 280, 402, 900, 2279, 5404, 5428, 5442, 5470
hist., 5435, 5471–72
Salem, Mass., 2600
United Brethren, 4480
United House of Prayer of All People, about, 5498 United Nations, 3557, 3635 special agencies, 3633
U.S. particiaption, 3619, 3633
The United Netherlands, History of, 2293
United Packinghouse Workers of America, about, 6055
United Presbyterian Church, 5442, 5466
United Press, about, 2860, 2890
United Service Organizations for National Defense, theater production, 4919
United States. For official agencies of the U.S. government, see the name of the agency, e.g., Congress; Dept. of State
United States Commission on Organization of the Executive Branch of the Government, 5099
United States Exploring Expedition (1838–42), about, 4749
United States Steel, 5918
Unity School of Christianity, 5439
Universalism, 5428
bibl., 5473
Universalist Church of America, 5442, 5473
Universities. See Colleges and universities
The University of Kansas City Review, 2573
University Players, 4920
University presses. See Printing—university presses Unknown Soldier (World War I), about, 4533
Unpartisan Review, 689
Untermeyer, Louis, 1584
ed., 221, 290, 443, 673, 845, 2363
Unto Such Glory, 1475
Untriangulated Stars, 1716
The Untried Years, 1020
The Unvanquished (Fast), 1976
The Unvanquished (Faulkner), 1389
Up from Methodism, 2587
Up from Slavery, 4449
Up Front, 2735
Up Stream, 1572, 1575
Up the Coolly, 893
Updegraff, Clarence M., 6058
Updike, Daniel Berkeley, about, 6459
Updyke, Frank A., 3542
Upper class, 3139, 3434, 4524, 4538, 6063, 6070
New England, 3279
New York (State), 6374
Southern States, 3766
The Thirteen Colonies, 3236
Va., 3234, 3749
Uppsala. Universitet. Amerikanska Seminariet, 2364–68
The Uprooted, 4411
Upstage, 4909
Upton, Emory, 3651
Upton, William Treat, 5614
ed., 5610
Urban, W.M., 5252
Urban blight, redevelopment, etc. See Cities and towns—planning; Housing Urban communities. See Cities and towns; Communities, urban Urban folklore, 5510–11, 5514
New York (City), 5522
Urban government. See Local government
Urban Land Institute. Central Business District Council, 4603
Urbana, Ohio, 3871
Urology, 4832
Useful arts. See Decorative arts; Arts and crafts Ushant, 1165
The Usurper, 2311
Utah, 4183
fiction, 1420, 1424
govt., 6195

677676 O–63–76

Utah—Continued
guidebooks, 3914–15
hist., 2161, 3956, 3961, 4174, 4183, 4189
Indians, 3023
Mormons, 5465
Utah Humanities Review, 2575
Ute Indians, 3041, 4174
Utley, George Burwell, 6486
Utopian themes, fiction, 726, 728–31, 956, 978, 2019
Utopias (settlements), 4525
See also Brook Farm; Fruitlands; Harmony Society Utter, William T., 3058, 4121

V

V-Letter, 2141
Vail, R. W. G., 161
Vaillant, George C., 2997
Valente, John, 632
Valien, Bonita, 4441
Vallandigham, Clement, 3149
The Valley Below, 2724
Valley Forge, drama, 1174
The Valley Nis, 526
The Valley of Decision, 1846
Value, theory of, 5252, 5334
Van Amringe, John Howard, about, 5197
Vance, Rupert B., 3785, 4068, 4084, 4401
Van den Bark, Melvin, 2272
Vandenberg, Arthur H., 3548
Vanderbilt, Arthur T., 6270
ed., 6307
Vanderbilt, Cornelius, about, 5054, 5880, 5882, 5935
Vanderpoel, Emily (Noyes), 5793
Van Dersal, William R., 5818
Van Deusen, Glyndon G., 2883, 3343–44
Van Devander, Charles W., 6390
Van Doren, Carl, 127, 133, 480, 796, 827, 834, 905, 1904, 2523–24, 3185, 3187, 3264, 6088
ed., 129, 2393
Van Doren, Charles, comp., 3152
Van Doren, Mark, 363, 641, 660, 849, 1823–27
ed., 13, 57, 176, 358, 4249–50
Van Druten, John, 2334–36
Van Dyke, Henry, 5095–96
Van Dyke, T. S., 5091
Van Every, Edward, 5032
Van Gogh. See Gogh, Vincent van
Vanguards of the Frontier, 4155–56
The Vanishing Virginian, 8241
Van Kirk, Walter M., 5496
Van Metre, Thurman W., 5924, 5948
Van Nostrand (D.) Company, about, 6453
Van Nostrand, Jeanne Skinner, 4202
Van Riper, Paul P., 6174
Van Santvoord, George, ed., 924
Van Tyne, Claude H., 3265–67
about, 3058
Van Vechten, Carl, 1828–33, 1904, 4972, 5678
Van Vechten, Carl—Continued
ed., 1771
about, 1835
bibl., 1834
Vanzetti, Bartolomeo
drama, 1173
fiction, 1980
The Varieties of Religious Experience, 5431
Varmints, 1684
Vassar College, about, 5670
Vaudeville, 4892, 4973–76
hist., 4974
Vaudeville for a Princess, 2138
Vaughan, Floyd L., 4781
Veblen, Thorstein, 5190
about, 2407, 4538, 4540, 4545, 5888, 6424
Vegetation, 2956–57, 2959, 2966, 2969, 5816
Vein of Iron, 1460–61
The Venetian Glass Nephew, 1904
Venezuela, fiction, 1792
Ventura County, Calif., 3957
A Venture in Remembrance, 2698
Verbrugghen, Henri, about, 5654
Veritism, 890
Vermilion, Ohio, 2958
Vermont, 4010, 4033 boundary, 4027
econ. condit., 4031
farm life, 2742
fiction, 579–84, 1411, 1414–15, 1417, 1635
folksongs & ballads, 5574
guidebook, 3797
hist., 1419, 4033
poetry, 1451–52
soc. life & cust., 4031
travel & travelers, 4290
Vermont. University, 5223
Versailles Treaty, 3111, 3471, 3541
Verse, light, 368, 878–80, 1629–34, 1651–52, 1859, 1863
Verse, vernacular, 753–55, 856–59, 861, 878–80, 933, 941–44, 1038, 1126–31, 1133–35
See also Poetry—humorous
Verse drama, 144–45, 198, 200–1, 205, 1069–70, 1172, 1174, 1357, 1359–60, 1535, 1585, 1587, 1608, 1664, 2098, 2101, 2134–35
criticism, 1175
Versification, theory, 216, 520, 538, 614, 618, 1038, 1044–46
Versus, 1633
Very, Jones, 280, 2544
Vespucci, Amerigo, about, 3172
Vestal, Stanley, pseud., 2525, 2831–33, 3964, 4001, 4175, 4190 Veterans, 3652 organizations, 3644–45
World War II, 2736
Vicissitudes Exemplified, 2805
Vickery, Olga W., ed., 1399
Victor Talking Machine Company, about, 5618
Victorian Knight-Errant, 449
A Victorian Village, 2781
The Victory at Sea, 3716
Victory at Sea (music), about, 5685
Vidal, Gore, 2180–88
about, 2371
Vidor, King W., 4962
about, 4962
Viereck, Peter, 2189–92, 2363
A View from the Bridge, 2049
Vigilance Committees, 6220
Vignettes of Manhattan, 2466
Village Daybook, 1965
Village Year, 1959
Villages
immigrant, 4406
Middle West, 4109, 4197
Villains Galore, 2916
Villard, Oswald Garrison, 2849, 3414
Villon, François, fiction, 2413
Vincent, Howard P., 481
ed., 491
Vincent, J. M., 4540
Vinde, Victor, 4232
A Vindication of the Government of New England Churches, 94–95
Vines, Howell Hubert, 1836–38
Vineyard, Catherine Marshall, 5507
Viniculture, Calif., 4494
Vinson, Fred M., about, 6262, 6256
Vinton, Stallo, 4148
The Violent Wedding, 2011
Virgin Islands, 4218
Virgin Land, 3759
Virgin Spain, 1445
Virginia, 3963, 4079, 4085–88
architecture, 5706
biog. (collected), 3749
caves, 2946
culture, 3233–34
descr., 149–53
econ. condit., 4085
education, 5122
folklore, 5529
guidebooks, 3827–29
hist., 12–16, 66–68, 70–71, 149–53, 245, 3218, 3233–34, 3271, 3295, 3977, 4073
pictorial works, 4086
in literature
drama, 1477
editorials, sketches, etc., 192–93, 1099, 1103–4, 1106, 1267
fiction, 226–29, 245–51, 405–8, 516, 1099, 1105–6, 1261, 1460–62, 1466, 1469
short stories, 405–8, 1099–1102, 1106
intellectual life, 3749
language (dialects, etc.), 2255–56
mounds, 2996
plantation life, 4517
politics, 2740
soc. life & cust., 2603, 2841, 3749, 4086–87, 4517
travel & travelers, 12–13, 66–68, 70–71, 366, 4269, 4279, 4283, 4310
Virginia University, 5122, 6466
Virginia City, Nev., 4184–85, 5630
The Virginia Comedians, 246
The Virginia Gazette, about, 2854
The Virginia Quarterly Review, 2574
The Virginian, 1145–48, 2316
The Virginians, 405
Visher, Stephen S., 2952, 4725

The Vision, 121
The Vision of Columbus, 104
The Vision of Sir Launfal, 455
Visson, André, 3772
Vistas of New York, 2466
Vitagraph, 4961
Vital statistics, 4402
See also Census
Vocational education, 5105, 5211, 5246
colleges & universities, 5179
Federal participation, 5211
foreign countries, 5211 secondary, 5156, 5211
Vogt, P. L., 4594
Voice in the West, 2867
The Voice of Bugle Ann, 1541
The Voice of the City, 1116–18
The Voice of the Desert, 2453
The Voice of the People, 1461
The Voice of the Street, 1656
The Voice of the Turtle, 2334
Voices of Freedom, 664
Vollmer, August, 4659
Vollmer, Lula, 2337
Voltaire, about, 2770
A Volunteer's Adventures, 277, 3693
Von Abele, Rudolph R., 3415
Von Stroheim, Erich, about, 4960
Voorhies, Stephen J., illus., 6324
Voorhis, Horace Jeremiah ("Jerry"), 6165
Vosburgh, Walter S., 5055
Voss, Joseph Ellis, 4596
Voters and voting, 6334, 6336, 6414, 6418–20, 6422 registration, 6403–4
Voting maps, congressional, 2974
A Voyage to Pagany, 1872
A Voyage to Purilia, 1688
Voyages, small-boat, 5021
Voyageurs. See Boatmen, French-Canadian

W

W., 1313
Wabash River and valley, 3995
Wade, John Donald, 4068
Wade, Mason, 3069
Wadsworth, Jeremiah, about, 6016
Wagenknecht, Edward Charles, 427, 2526
Wager, Paul W., ed., 6217
Wages, 4310, 6040, 6048
Waggoner, Hyatt H., 359, 364, 2527
Wagner, Fred J., 5007
Wagner Act, 6053
The Wagnerian Romances, about, 1278
Wah 'kon-tah, 2729
Wahlke, John C., ed., 3128–29
Waite, John Barker, 6308
Waite, Morrison R., about, 6096, 6259
Waiting for Lefty, 2064, 2327
Wake Island, 4218
Wake Island (poetry), 2106
Wake Up the Echoes, 4984
The Waking, 2103–4
Walcott, Charles Doolittle, about, 4775
Walcott, Joe, about, 5025
Wald, Lillian D., 4614
about, 4854
Walden, 589–93, 606
Walden Pond, 585
Walker, Charles R., 6055
Walker, Franklin D., 4202
Walker, Harvey, 6166
Walker, John, 5758
Walker, Mabel L., 4612
Walker, "Singin' Billy," 5577
A Walker in the City, 2704
Wall, Joseph Frazier, 2892
Wall, Norman J., 5834
The Wall, 1992
Wall decoration, 5726, 5730
Wall Smacker, 5006
Wallace, Anthony F. C., 2834–35
Wallace, Bigfoot, about, 2831
Wallace, David Duncan, 4092
Wallace, DeWitt, about, 2920
Wallace, Edward S., 3659
Wallace, Ernest, 3014
Wallace, Francis, 5044
Wallace, Paul A. W., 3230–31
Wallace, Willard M., 3683
Wallace, Idaho, 4176
Wallack, Lester, 2301
Waller, George M., ed., 3130–31
Waller, Judith C., 4698
The Wallet of Time, 4931
Wallin, John E. Wallace, 5207
Wallis, Charles L., 1063, 4527
The Walls Do Not Fall, 1322
Walpole, Horace, 6464
Walser, Richard G., ed., 1479, 1900
Walsh, William F., 6279
Walter, Eugene, 2347
Walters, Raymond, 3310, 5667
Wanamaker, John, about, 5957
Wann, Louis, ed., 2276
Wansey, Henry, 4234
The Want of a History of the Southern People, 1103–4 War, 3140, 3524
econ. aspects, 5879, 5889
in art, 5807
moral aspects, 234
satire, 1608
See also Indians, American—wars; Military history; and specific wars, e.g., Civil War
War correspondents. See Reporters and reporting War Dept., 3697
about, 3376, 3702, 3726
War Dept. General Staff, about, 3653
War Is Kind, 831, 835
War of 1812, 3687–88, 4038
causes, 3306, 3553
diplomatic hist., 3189, 3306, 3542
naval operations, 3688
public opinion, 3305–6
War of the Classes, 1048
The War of the Rebellion: A Compilation of the Official Records, 3697
War with France (1798–1800), 3685–86
War with Mexico, 3331, 3333, 3340, 3351, 3355, 3554, 3689
diplomatic hist., 3586
War with Mexico—Continued
personal narratives, 3696
sources, 3349
The War Years, 3393, 3395
Warbasse, James P., 5964
Ward, Alfred Dudley, 5899
ed., 5899
Ward, Archie, 5045
Ward, Artemus, pseud. See Browne, Charles Farrar
Ward, Christopher, 3683
Ward, Lester F., about, 4537, 4540, 4542
Ward, Nathaniel, 75–78
about, 3198
Ward, R. M., 5529
Ward, Robert DeCourcy, 2953
Ward, Theodora (Van Wagenen), ed., 850
A Ward of Colonel Starbottle's, 937
Ware, Henry, about, 5472
Ware, Norman J., 6054
Warfel, Harry R., 2528, 5127
ed., 2369
Warne, Colston Estey, ed., 3132–33
Warner, Charles Dudley, 775–77, 1136–44
ed., 2277
about, 2466
Warner, Lucien C., about, 4735
Warner, Sam Bass, 6292
Warner, William Lloyd, 4435, 4438, 4557, 5146, 6029
Warpath, 2831
Warren, Austin, 342, 355, 2529, 5319
Warren, Charles, 6089, 6235–36, 6260
Warren, Earl, 6238
Warren, Helen Ann, 4748
Warren, Joseph, about, 3245
Warren, Mercy (Otis), 2347
Warren, Robert Penn, 2193–2201, 2372, 2378
about, 1809, 2499
Warren, Sidney, 4214
Warren, Stanley, 5208
Warren, Ohio, 3872
The Warrens of Virginia, 2313
Wars I Have Seen, 1769
The Wars of Love, 2132
Warships, 3666, 3708, 3716
The Warwick Woodlands, 5076, 5080
Washburn, Carleton W., 5234
Washburn, Charles, 2836
Washburn, Frank S., about, 4735
Washburn, Frederic A., 4853
Washington, Booker T., 4449
about, 4449–50, 5116
Washington, Chester L., 5030
Washington, George, 3268, 3271, 4254
about, 171–76, 381, 1873, 3269–71, 3680, 4533
fiction, 1976
port., 5769
sculpture, 5737
Washington (State), 4215–17
descr., 5070
guidebook, 3939
officials (State), 4215
Orientals, 4468
Puyallup Indians, 3041
resources, 4212

Washington (State) Legislature. Joint Fact-Finding Committee on Un-American Activities, about, 6116
Washington (State) University. Committee on Tenure and Academic Freedom, about, 6116
Washington, D.C., 4063–65, 6215
essays, 1002–3
fiction, 689–90, 722, 1156, 1332, 2278
guidebook, 3826
historic houses, etc., 4063
hist., 3826, 4063–64, 4344
pol. & govt., 4065, 6215
public life, 2861
reporters & reporting, 2861, 2930
soc. life & cust., 2668–69, 3320, 3362, 3395, 4065, 4279, 4283
Washington, D.C., Navy Yard, hist., 3670
Washington, Ga., 3842
The Washington Correspondents, 2861
Washington Herald, about, 2862
Washington Post, about, 2862
Washington Square, 1008, 1014
Washington Times-Herald, about, 2862
Washington University (St. Louis), 5187
The Waste Land, 1357, 1359
about, 1367
The Watch Diggers, 2212
Watch on the Rhine, 1989, 2334, 2336
Water conservation, 5808, 5858
Water power, Rochester, N.Y., 4050, 4052
Water resources
Great Plains, 4164
Middle West, 4113
Mo., 4108
N. Mex., 4198
Water-supply problem (city), 4797
Waterman, Thomas Tileston, 5725
Waterman, Willoughby Cyrus, 4597
Waters, Edward N., 5615, 5681
ed., 5560
Waters, Frank, 4017
The Waters of Siloe, 2040
Waterways, inland, 3786, 4312, 5018, 5920, 5923
See also Canals; Great Lakes; Rivers
Watkins, Floyd C., 1901
ed., 2320
Watkins, Myron W., 6026
Watson, Elmo Scott, 2864
Watson, Forbes, 5741
Watson, Frank Dekker, 4626
Watson, John Broadus, 5393
about, 5389
Watson, Thomas E., about, 3451
Wattenberg, William W., 4573
Watterson, Henry, 2892
about, 2892
Watts, Harold H., 1674
Waud, Alfred R., about, 5806
Waugh, Coulton, 2865
The Wave, 1745
Waverly, Md., 2781
Way, Frederick, 3992
Way Down East, 561
The Way of the Churches of Christ in New England, 19
The Way of the South, 4079
The Way West, 1490
Wayfaring Stranger, 5553
Wayne, Anthony, about, 3684
The Wayward Bus, 1778
The Wayward Press, 2904
The Wayward Pressman, 2904
We Accept with Pleasure, 2415
We Always Lie to Strangers, 5544
We Are Betrayed, 1423
We Are Not Divided, 5487
We Called It Culture, 4893
We Speak for Ourselves, 3145
We Went Thataway, 2153
We Were New England, 4029
We Who Built America, 4417
Wealth, 292
Wealth and Commonwealth, 4044
Weapons, 3664, 3711
The Weary Blues, 1521
Weather, 2950
See also Climate
Weather Bureau, 2953
about, 2951–52, 4764
Weather lore
Ozark Mountains, 5544
Southwest, 5509
Weaver, James Baird, about, 3433
Weaver, John E., 2966
Weaver, Raymond M., 474, 566
ed., 487, 489
Weaver, Robert C., 4451
Weaver, Samuel P., 6103
Weaver, William Wallace, 4627
The Web and the Rock, 1890–91
Webb, Walter Prescott, 4164
Weber, Brom, 1306
ed., 332, 1305
Weber, Carl J., comp., 1023
Weber, Clara C., comp., 1023
Weber, Gustavus A., 4764, 4766–67, 4769–72
Webster, Clarence M., 3965
Webster, Daniel, 3336
about, 2674, 3336, 4034
fiction, 1222
Webster, Noah, 2236, 5127
about, 2277, 2364, 5121, 5127
Webster's New International Dictionary of the English Language, 2236, 2238
Wecter, Dixon, 786, 791, 820, 3098, 3652, 3662, 4533–34
ed., 801–2, 2460–61
The Wedge, 1878
A Week on the Concord and Merrimack Rivers, 587–88, 606 Weeks, Edward A., 2837–38
about, 2838, 2922
Weeks, Lyman Horace, 6458
Weeks, Mary Elvira, 4731
Weems, Mason Locke, 171–77
bibl., 177
Wehle, Harry B., 5759, 5804
Weidner, Edward W., 6196
Weinberg, Albert K., 3760
Weiner, Edward, 2894
Weingarten, Joseph A., 2272
Weinlick, J. R., 5442
Weinstein, J. J., 4457
Weisberger, Bernard A., 2851, 5403
Weisenburger, Francis P., 4120–21
Weiser, Conrad, about, 3230
Weisgall, H. D., 4458
Weiss, Paul, 5379–82
ed., 5346
about, 5378
Weitenkampf, Frank, 2859, 5782
Weitling, Wilhelm, about, 4481
Welch, William Henry, about, 4722, 4813, 4821, 4823, 4829, 4831, 4834, 4845
Weld, Isaac, 4269–70
about, 4269
Weld, Ralph Foster, 4046
Weld, Theodore Dwight, 3360
about, 3360, 3413
Welded, 1648
Welker, Robert Henry, 4741
The Well Wrought Urn, 2379
Wellek, René, 2529, 3739
Welles, Edgar T., ed., 3416
Welles, Gideon, 3416
about, 3416
Welles, Sumner, 3549, 4513
ed., 3501
Wellesley College, 2766
Wellman, Paul I., 4158
Wells, Benjamin W., ed., 2345
Wells, Carolyn, comp., 633
Wells, Frederic L., comp., 4838
Wells, H. G., about, 4225
Wells, Henry W., 1628, 2530
Wells, Horace L., 4715
Wells, Ronald Vale, 5263
Welty, Eudora, 2202–9
about, 1809, 2372
Wendell, Barrett, about, 2694
Wendell, Mitchell, 6206, 6293
Wenger, J. C., 5442
Went, Stanley, ed., 3040
Wentworth, Edward Norris, 5874
Wentworth, Harold, 2241
Wentz, Abdel R., 5461
Werner, Morris R., 4977
Wertenbaker, Green Peyton, 4191
Wertenbaker, Thomas Jefferson, 3087, 3232–35, 3748, 4088, 5204
Wescott, Glenway, 1839–41
Wesley, Charles, about, 5463
Wesley, Edgar B., 3050, 4142
Wesley, John, about, 5463
West, Benjamin, 144
about, 5749
West, E., 5442
West, James, pseud. See Withers, Carl
West, Jessamyn, 2210–14
West, Nathanael, 1842–44
West, Ray Benedict, 2362, 5465
ed., 2531, 4176
West, Richard S., Jr., 3416
West, Victor J., 6407
The West, 2610, 3759, 3783, 3948, 3964, 4145–50, 4860
biog. (collected), 4175
descr. & trav., 4148
disc. & explor., 2971, 3335, 3345
econ. condit., 4149
folklore, 5518, 5526, 5591
folksongs & ballads, 5560, 5569
geology, 2935

The West—Continued
guidebook, 3789
hist., 2867, 3048, 3074, 3078, 3105, 3137, 3147, 3151, 3964, 3967, 4001, 4017, 4146, 4148–58, 4160, 4164, 4174, 4176–77, 4179, 4186
pictorial works, 4151–53, 4158, 5770, 5777, 5802, 5806
18th cent., 3170, 3237, 3271, 3307
19th cent., 3331, 3342–44, 3356
language (dialects, etc.), 2253
law, 6220
physiography, 2935
soc. life & cust., 4097
theater, 4943
travel & travelers
18th cent., 3170, 4235
19th cent., 365–67, 391, 984, 3069, 3298, 3348, 4223, 4235, 4277–78, 4281, 4315, 4320, 4344, 4372, 4382–83, 4386–87
The West in literature, 768, 772–74, 1064–65, 1068, 2831, 3759
descr., 365–67, 1072–77, 1079–83, 2153
drama, 1069–70
fiction, 312, 683–86, 984–85, 1145–48, 1239, 1420–24, 1484–90, 1644, 1646, 1763, 1954–57, 2161–62, 2415
poetry, 926, 933–34, 941–44, 1064, 1066–67, 1644–45
short stories, 687, 926–32, 937, 939–40, 1145
West Indies, 3168
in literature, 945–52
The West in American History, 3078
West of Midnight, 1970
West Point, 3656
West-Running Brook, 1452
West Virginia, 4089
fiction, 1225
folksongs & ballads, 5572
guidebook, 3830
hist., 4089
legislators, 4089
Westchester County, N.Y., soc. condit., 4577
Westcott, Minita, ed., 6019
Westerfield, Bradford, 3616
Westerfield, Ray Bert, 5974
Westering, 1410
Western dialect in literature, 683–87, 933–34, 941–44
Western Federation of Miners, about, 6045
The Western Humanities Review, 2575
Western Lands and the American Revolution, 3237
Western Literary Institute and College of Professional Teachers, about, 5121
Western Reserve, hist., 4030, 4118
The Western Review, 2576
Western Star, 1222
Westerns (novels), 1314, 1484–86, 1686–87
Westin, A. F., 6128
Westinghouse, George, about, 4790
Westmeyer, Russell E., 5925
The Westover Manuscripts, 13
Westward Ho!, 516
Wetmore, Alexander
ed., 2962
about, 4775
Wetmore, Claude H., 6430
Wetmore, Elizabeth (Bisland), 951–53
Weyl, Nathaniel, 3148–49
Whaling, 5871
fiction, 470, 481–83, 491
Wharton, Charles, about, 5477
Wharton, Edith, 1845–55
about, 1856, 2537
Wharton School of Finance and Commerce, about, 6017
What Are Years, 1621
What Dooley Says, 866
What Is American Literature?, 2523
What Is Humanism?, 5115
What Man Can Make of Man, 5314
What Price Glory?, 2332
What's O'Clock, 1583–84
Wheat, Carl I., 2641
Wheat, 3944, 4141–42, 4165, 5830
fiction, 1093–95
Wheeler, A. C., 2305
Wheeler, Anne Bolling, 5763
Wheeler, Harold Alden, about, 4803
Wheeler, Joseph Towne, 6448
Wheeler, Lynde Phelps, 4751
Wheelock, John Hall, 1857–58
ed., 2350
Wheelwright, Philip, 1367
Whelpton, Pascal K., 4399, 4402
When Johnny Comes Marching Home, 3652
When Lilacs Last in the Door-Yard Bloom'd, 623
When the Frost Is on the Punkin', 1126
When the Tree Flowered, 1646
When the War Ends, 6392
When the Whippoorwill, 1684
When This You See Remember Me, 1773
Where Main Street Meets the River, 2632
Where the Cross Is Made, 1648
Where the Word Ends, 5679
Whetstone, Pete, 5542
Whicher, George F., 592, 2496
ed., 3107–36
Whicher, Stephen E., 306
A Whig Embattled, 3324
Whig Party, 3141, 3255, 3324, 3326, 3333, 3344, 6075, 6351
New York (State), 2691, 6374
Whigs (Revolution), 2691
poetry, 165, 167
New York (State), 4044
Whipple, George Chandler, 4879
Whipple, Mary Anne, ed., 3002
Whiskey rebellion (1794), 3280
Whistler, James McNeill, about, 2616, 5776
Whitaker, Arthur P., 3514–15, 3579
Whitaker, Joe Russell, 5900
White, Andred D., about, 5191
White, Andrew S., about, 3761
White, B. F., 5577
White, Charles Langdon, 2940
White, David Manning, ed., 6443
White, Donald J., 5872
White, Edward A., 3761
White, Edward Douglas, about, 6245
White, Elizabeth Brett, 3775
White, Elwyn Brooks, 1816, 1859–63
ed., 2370
White, Frederic R., 730
White, John, about, 3198
White, John M., 5849
White, Katherine S., ed., 2370
White, Leonard D., 6175–79
White, Llewellyn, 4687
White, Morton G., 4545, 5291, 5295
White, Newman I., 5564
White, Theodore H., ed., 3723
White, Walter Francis, 2839–40
about, 2840
White, William, Bp., 5457
White, William Alanson, 4840
about, 4840
White, William Allen, 2887, 2893, 3481
about, 2893
White, William Carter, 5653
White, William Chapman, 3966
White April, 2780
White Buildings, 1304
White Bull (Sioux chief), about, 2831
White civilization and Negroes in literature, 2631 and the American Indians, 2729, 2835, 3082, 3156, 3161, 3171, 3180, 3229–30
White Collar, 4553
White Dresses, 1475, 2332
The White Gate, 1284
White Hopes and Other Tigers, 4991
White House Office, about, 6144
White-Jacket, 274, 479–80
White Knife Shoshoni Indians, 3041
White Mule, 1874–75, 1882
The White Oxen, 2387
The White Slave & Other Plays, 2316
White spirituals, 5554–55, 5558
Southern States, 5577
Whitefield, George, about, 5396, 5480
Whitehead, Alfred N., 5129, 5384
about, 5378, 5383, 5385
Whitehill, Walter Muir, 6475
Whiteman, Paul, 5678
Whiting, B. J., 2256
Whitley, William T., 5774
Whitlock, Brand, 6434
about, 6434
Whitman, Walt, 619–46, 2290, 2363, 2406
about, 280, 470, 647–52, 654–61, 740, 1303, 1727, 2277, 2280, 2394, 2397, 2413, 2420, 2422–23, 2456, 2476, 2491, 2503, 2513, 2624
bibl., 633, 637
catalog, 659
concordance, 653
Whitman, William, 3041
Whitney, Eli, about, 4786, 4789
Whitney, Gertrude Vanderbilt, about, 5800
Whitney, Janet, ed., 182
Whitney, Willis R., about, 4785
Whitney Foundation, 5198

Whitney Museum of American Art, New York, 5798–5800
about, 5798–5800
Whittall, Gertrude Clarke. Gertrude Clarke Whittall Poetry and Literature Fund, 660
Whitten, Charles W., 5000
Whittier, John Greenleaf, 179, 181, 244, 662–73, 4036
about, 662, 672
Whittlesey, Walter, 5677
Whiz Mob, 2262
Who Blowed Up the Church House?, 5545
Wholesale trade, 5949
Whom We Shall Welcome, 4425
Why Johnny Can't Read, 5226
Whyte, William F., 4598
Wickford Point, 1591
Wide Is the Gate, 1758
The Wide Net, 2205
Wider Horizons of American History, 3075
The Widow's Marriage, 207–8
The Widows of Thornton, 2179
Wied-Neuwied, Maximilian Alexander Philipp, Prinz von, 4308–09
about, 4307
Wieland, 110–11, 117
Wieman, Henry Nelson, 5437
about, 5433
Wiener, Philip P., 5264
ed., 5353
Wienpahl, P. D., 5291
Wieting, Charles Maurice, 5964
The Wife, 2314
A Wife at a Venture, 2310
The Wife of His Youth, 758
Wiggins, Lida Keck, 859
Wigglesworth, Michael, 79–83
Wight, Frederick S., 5767
Wigmore, John H., 6268
Wigwam and Bouwerie, 4044
Wilbur, Earl Morse, 5471
Wilbur, Homer A. M., pseud. See Lowell, James Russell
Wilbur, James H., Father, about, 3035
Wilbur, Ray Lyman, 3487, 4840, 4884 Wilbur, Richard, 2215–17
ed., 2363
Wilcox, Francis O., ed., 3635
Wilcox, Jerome K., ed., 6205
Wilcox, Walter W., 5838–39, 5850, 5899, 6133
The Wild Flag, 1859
Wild Horse Mesa, 1486
Wild Life of the South, 1725
The Wild Palms, 1390
Wild Scenes in the Forest and Prairie, 367
Wildcats (football team), about, 4993
Wilder, Burt G., 4724
Wilder, Thornton, 1864–69, 2327
The Wilderness Hunter, 2794
Wildes, Harry Emerson, 3684, 3993–94
Wildlife
birds, 2960, 2962
conservation, 5870
Yellowstone National Park, 4182
Wildwood, Will, pseud. See Pond, Frederick E.
Wiley, Bell Irvin, 3704–5
Wiley, Farida A., ed., 744
Wiley (John) and Sons, about, 6453
Wiley, Lulu R., 109
Wilkes County, Ga., 3842
Wilkins, J. H., 2311
Wilkins, Mary E. See Freeman, Mary E. (Wilkins)
Wilkinson, James, about, 3273, 3660
The Will to Believe, 5323
Willard, Charles B., 661
Willard, Frances Elizabeth, about, 2615
Willcox, Walter F., 4390, 4403
Williams, Albert N., 3967
Williams, B. C., ed., 2351
Williams, Ben Ames, ed., 2637
Williams, Cecil B., ed., 204
Williams, D. C., 5335
Williams, Daniel Day, 5438
Williams, Edward, ed., 27
Williams, Edward I. F., 5125
ed., 5242
Williams, Edwin E., ed., 6478
Williams, George, about, 5490
Williams, George Huntston, ed., 5424
Williams, Gluyas, illus., 1214
Williams, Herbert Lee, 2909
Williams, Hermann Warner, 5768
Williams, John P., 5404
Williams, Joseph P., 5033
Williams, Kenneth P., 3706
Williams, Leewin B., 2370
Williams, Mary Wilhelmine, 3559
Williams, Oscar, 1870–71
ed., 2344
Williams, Phyllis H., 4496
Williams, Ralph C., 4880
Williams, Rebecca (Yancey), 2841–42
about, 2842
Williams, Robin M., 4558
ed., 5206
Williams, Roger, 20, 84–89, 5418
about, 84, 89, 3196–97, 5396, 5443, 6068
Williams, Stanley T., 383, 398, 793, 2412, 2532–34, 3693
ed., 393, 401, 2460–61
Williams, Tennessee, 2218–28, 2334–36
Williams, William Appleman, ed., 3518
Williams, William Carlos, 656, 1872–85
about, 1880, 1886, 2426, 2497–98
Williams College, 5221
Williams County, Ohio, 3863
Williamson, George, 1371
Williamson, James A., 3169, 3173–74
Williamson, Thames R., 3968
Willis, Edgar E., 4682
Willis, Nathaniel Parker, 674–82, 2295, 2337, 2347
about, 2277
Williwaw, 2181
Willoughby, Westel Woodbury, 6104
Willoughby, William F., 6167, 6180, 6309
Willow Run, Mich., 4586
Wilmer, James Jones, 123
Wilmerding, Lucius, 6168, 6411
Wilmot, David, about, 3339
Wilmot, Walter S., Jr., 6134
Wilmot Proviso, 3339
Wilson, Alexander, 4741
about, 4724, 4741
Wilson, Arthur Herman, 5659
Wilson, C. R., 3058
Wilson, Edmund, 2512, 2535–37, 2539–43
ed., 1226, 2538
about, 1016, 2443
Wilson, Everett E., 4621
Wilson, Francis Graham, 6070
Wilson, George Lloyd, 5943
Wilson, George P., 2270
Wilson, Harold Fisher, 4031
Wilson, Harry Leon, 1546
Wilson, Herbert W., 3708
Wilson, James Grant, 329
ed., 328, 3080, 4049
Wilson, James Harrison, 2881
Wilson, John, 3020
Wilson, Louis Round, 6487
Wilson, Milburn L., 4579, 5426
about, 5426
Wilson, Orlando W., 4660
Wilson, Paul A., 3557
Wilson, Robert Renbert, 3526
Wilson, William B., about, 6051
Wilson, William E., 3995
Wilson, Woodrow, 2296, 3469
about, 2492, 2591, 3058, 3111, 3121, 3470–73, 3489, 3541, 5222, 6359, 6428, 6432
Wilstach, Paul, 3271
Wiltse, Charles M., 3328, 6071
Winchell, Walter, about, 2894
Wind, Herbert Warren, 5051, 5053
Wind over Wisconsin, 1960
Windless Cabins, 1823
Winds of Doctrine, 5368
The Winds of Fear, 2631
Winds of Morning, 1314
Windswept, 1288
Wine from These Grapes, 1609
Winesburg, Ohio, 1179
Winged Victory, 1491
Wingersky, Melvin F., ed., 6276
The Wingless Victory, 1174
The Wings of the Dove, 996–97
about, 998
Winkler, John K., 2884
Winn, Matt J., 5057
about, 5057
The Winner, 1690
Winnick, Louis, 4395
The Winning of the West, 3307
Winooski River, 4010
Winship, George Parker, 38, 6448, 6459
Winslow, Charles E. A., 4877, 4881
Winslow, Mary N., 2584
Winslow, Ola Elizabeth, 3197, 3751, 5299, 5417
Winsor, Justin, ed., 4036
Winston, Ellen, 4448
Winston, Robert W., 3412
Winter, Jefferson, 4943
Winter, William, 4931, 4934, 4938–39
A Winter Diary, 1827
Winter in April, 1638
A Winter in the West, 366
The Winter Sea, 1811
Winterich, John T., 6464
ed., 829

Winters, Robert K., ed., 5865
Winters, Yvor, 2544
about, 1231, 2443
Winterset, 1173–74, 2333, 2336–37
Winther, Oscar Osburn, 4214
Winthrop, John, Jr., about, 3198, 4735
Winthrop, John, Sr., 90–91, 3219
about, 90, 3198, 4034
Winthrop, Margaret (Tyndal), 90
Winthrop, Robert C., 4036
Wirt, W., 2296
Wirth, Louis, 3739
Wisan, Jacob M., ed., 4871
Wisbey, Herbert A., 5497
Wischnitzer, Mark, 4459
Wisconsin, 3948, 4139–40
architecture, 5719
Germans, 4478
govt., 6195
governors, 4139
guidebooks, 3883–85
historical geography, 2969
hist., 3663, 4139
Norwegians, 4487
towns, 4109
travel & travelers, 4324, 4347
Wisconsin. University, 5194
Wisconsin Earth, 1959
Wisconsin in literature
drama, 1556
fiction, 1453–59, 1839–40, 1959–62, 1964, 2030, 2129 personal narrative, 1078, 1959, 1965
poetry, 1959
short stories, 1453, 1839, 1841, 1963
Wisconsin River, 3985
Wise, Isaac M., about, 5483
Wise, John, 92–95
about, 92, 6068
Wise, Stephen S., 5483
about, 5483
Wise County, Va., 5529
See also Virginia—folklore
Wish, Harvey, 3150, 3474
Wissler, Clark, 2987–89, 4592
Wister, Owen, 1145–48
Wiszniewski, Wladek, about, 4495
The Wit of Porportuk, 1058
The Witch Diggers, 2212
Witchcraft, 3205, 5513
Mich., 5535
New England, 5541
Salem, Mass.,
drama, 198, 200, 2048
fiction, 1439, 1917
trials, 40–42, 56
Schoharie County, N.Y., 5539
The Witching Hour, 2337, 2348
With a Quiet Heart, 4936
With Lust for Life, 2815
With the Procession, 889
With Various Voices, 4143
With Western Eyes, 1656
Withers, Carl, 4585
comp., 5592
Within an Inch of His Life, 2304
Without Fear or Favor, 2906
Without Magnolias, 2051
A Witness Tree, 1452
Wittich, Walter A., 5231
Wittke, Carl F., 2899, 4417, 4498, 5640
ed., 4089, 4106, 4120–21, 4139, 4180, 4194
Witty, Paul, ed., 5205
Wobblies. See Industrial Workers of the World
Woestemeyer, Ina Faye, ed., 3151
The Wolf, 1094
The Wolf That Fed Us, 2015
Wolfe, James, about, 3171
Wolfe, Julia Elizabeth, 1893
Wolfe, Linnie Marsh, ed., 1080
Wolfe, Thomas, 1887–94
about, 1892, 1895–1901, 2372, 2376, 2406, 2427–28
Wolfenstein, Martha, 4951
Wolff, Robert L., 3516
Wolle, Muriel V. (Sibell), 4177
Wolseley, Roland E., 2850, 2912, 2919
Wolseley, Garnet J., viscount, 3697
Womack, Bob, about, 4181
Woman in the Nineteenth Century, 315
The Woman of Andros, 1864
A Woman of Means, 2178
The Woman Within, 1463
Woman's Revenge, 2303
Women, 4315, 4387, 5212
biog. (collected), 2615
delinquents, 4649
education, 165, 167, 5116, 5193, 5198
bibl., 5212
employment, 4312, 4341
fertility, 4402
in history, 3139, 4563 in industry, 2583
in literature, 4524
in society, 2583
Indian, 3042
legal status, 2588, 4290, 4516, 6409 physicians & surgeons, 4820, 4860 publishers, 2588 status. See Social status—women
S.C., 4091
New York (City), 4047
Washington, D.C., 4065
The West, 4098
The Women, 2327, 2333
The Women at Point Sur, 1533
Women at Yellow Wells, 1553
Women of Trachis, 1664
The Women on the Porch, 1470
The Women on the Wall, 2165
Women's rights in literature, 313, 315–6
fiction, 992–95, 1008, 1565
Won at Last, 2308
Wonder-Working Providence, 1628–1651, 3211
Wonderful Neighbor, 2655
The Wonders of the Invisible World, 41–42
Wood, Gar, about, 5016
Wood, H. J., 3169
Wood, Helen, 4712
Wood, James Playsted, 2919
Wood, Leonard, about, 2684, 3595
Wood, Ralph, ed., 4479
Wood-carving, 5603
Woodard, Clement M., 2256
Woodberry, George E., 2411, 2545–48
about, 2385, 2513
Woodbridge, F. J. E., 5289
Woodbridge, Homer, 2503
Woodburn, James A., 3368
Woodbury, Coleman, ed., 4613
The Woodcutter's House, 1637
Wooddy, Carroll H., 6194, 6383
Woodfin, Maude H., ed., 16
Woodford, Frank B., 3358
Woodling, George V., 4780
Woodress, James L., 971, 1808
Woodring, Paul, 5239
Woodrow Wilson Foundation, 3642
Woodrow Wilson Foundation. Study Group, 1950–51, 3608
Woodruff, George P., 5952
Woods, Henry F., 3152
Woods, Walter, 2305
Woods and woodworking, 5598, 5724
Woodson, Carter G., 5502
Woodward, Comer Vann, 3417, 3451, 4078, 4444
Woodworth, Robert S., 5391
about, 5389, 5391
Woodworth, Samuel, 2295
Woody, Thomas, 5212
ed., 5130
Woofter, Thomas J., 5540
Wool industry, 5910
Woollcott, Alexander, 4911
Woolley, Mary E., 5193
Woolman, John, 178–85
Woolson, Constance Fenimore, 1149–52
about, 1152
Worcester, Mass.
Jews, 1213
Swedes, 4486
The Worcester Account, 1213
The Word of Love, 1971
A Word of Remembrance and Caution to the Rich, 180
Words That Won the War, 3462
Work, Hubert, 3038
Work songs, 5510, 5517, 5558, 5561, 5564
See also Cowboys—songs & music; Railroadmen Workers. See Labor and laboring classes
The Works of Love, 2054
Works Projects Administration, 3786, 4630
The World (New York), about, 2889
The World a Mask, 2300
The World and the Individual, 5355–56
World Court, 3534
World Enough and Time, 2199
The World I Live In, 2707
A World I Never Made, 1374
The World in a Man-of-War, 479
The World in the Attic, 2052
The World Is a Wedding, 2137
The World of Fiction, 2418
The World of Washington Irving, 2381
World politics, 3557, 3618, 3621–22, 3625, 3629, 3634, 5310
World power, U.S. as a, 3520, 3527, 3532, 3769
See also Foreign relations
The World, the Flesh, and H. Allen Smith, 2155

A World to Win, 1758
World War I, 3097, 3462–63, 3468–71, 3473, 3709–16
aerial operations, 3711 costs, 3454
diplomatic hist., 3541
in foreign-language newspapers, 2897 military operations, 3715
naval operations, 3716
songs, 5616
sources, 3524
World War I in literature
diaries, journals, etc., 1167, 1310
fiction, 1326, 1380, 1396, 1496
reporting, 1170
short stories, 1413
World War II, 3482–83, 3499, 3500b, 3668, 3717–27 aerial operations, 2813–14, 3717, 3727
agriculture, 5838
campaigns, 3718–20, 3722
causes, 3130, 3563, 3590
conscientious objectors. See Conscientious objectors
diplomatic hist., 3537–38, 3544, 3546–47, 3549, 3562, 3576, 3591
econ. aspects, 4586, 4589, 5879, 5977
evacuation of Japanese, 2811–12, 4469, 6120
historiography, 3726
naval operations, 3721
personal narratives, 2813–14, 3718–19, 3723
pictorial works, 3726 relations with Spain, 3572
science, 4761, 4778
social aspects, 4625
Mediterranean Sea, 3573
World War II in literature, 2746, 2807
drama, 1491, 2046
fiction, 1247, 1249, 1302, 1499, 1640, 1839, 1940–41, 1992–94, 2003–4, 2011, 2025–26, 2053, 2092–94, 2146, 2169, 2181, 2229–30
personal narratives, 1769–70
poetry, 1608, 1948, 1999, 2139, 2141
reporting, 1992, 2011, 2044
short stories, 2057
The World's Body, 1678
World's Christian Fundamentals Association, about, 5430
World's End, 1758
World's Fair (1893), Chicago, 4134–36
The World's Rim, 3015
Worn Earth, 1968
Worship, 292
Wouk, Herman, 2229–31
The Wound and the Bow, 2537
Wounds in the Rain and Other Impressions of War, about, 1278
Woytinsky, Wladimir S., 6040
Wrensch, Frank A., 5054
Wrestling, 5060–61
Wright, Alfred J., 2940
Wright, Benjamin Fletcher, 6072, 6105
Wright, Charles, about, 4734
Wright, Chauncey, 5386–87
about, 5264, 5386–87
Wright, Chester W., 5883
Wright, Conrad, 5424, 5472
Wright, Edith A., 5611
Wright, Fanny. See D'Arusmont, Francis (Wright)
Wright, Frank Lloyd, 5712
about, 5711–12
Wright, Henry, 4612
Wright, John K., 2941
ed., 2938, 2974
Wright, Louis B., 2412, 3236, 3737, 3749
ed., 15–16, 2339
Wright, Nathalia, 505
Wright, Orville, about, 4788, 5938
Wright, Richard, 2232–35, 4439
Wright, Robert Joseph, about, 4536
Wright, Thomas Goddard, 2549
Wright, Wilbur, about, 4788, 5938
Wriston, Henry M., 3600
The Writer in America, 2382
Writers in Crisis, 2428
Writers' Program, 3786
The Writing of American History, 3057
Wrong, George M., 3175, 3272
Wroth, Lawrence C., 6440, 6448
ed., 77
Wunderkind, 2024
Wylie, Elinor (Hoyt), 1902–4
about, 1904, 2499
Wylie, Max, 4697, 5705
Wylie, Philip, 5097
Wyllie, Irvin G., 3762
Wyman, Jeffries, about, 4724
Wyoming, 3951, 3967, 3971, 4179
Arapaho Indians, 3041
fiction, 1145–48
hist., 3911, 3961, 4147, 4174

X

XIT Ranch, Tex., 4196
Xingu, 1851, 1855

Y

Yachting, 4990, 5019, 5022
Yakima Indians, 3035
Yale Review, 2577
Yale University, 2652
about, 5035
Yale University. Divinity School, about, 5423
Yale University. Library, about, 6470
Yalta Conference, 3109, 3544, 3567
Yankee Coast, 1290
Yankee Doodle (song), about, 5616
The Yankee Exodus, 4028, 4394
Yankee from Olympus, 2607
Yankee in London, 168
Yankee Life by Those Who Lived It, 4029
Yankee Reformers in the Urban Age, 4530
Yankee Science in the Making, 4730
Yankee Stargazer, 4746
Yankee Stonecutters, 5738
Yankee Teacher, 5309
Yankees, 4435
drama, 168–70
humor, 456–57, 558–61, 2501
Yankees—Continued
language (dialects, etc.), 456–57, 558
See also New Englanders
Yankees and Yorkers, 4027
Yarmolinsky, Avrahm, tr., 2413
Yates, Brock W., 5003
Yates, Robert, 6087
Yazoo River, 4024
Year before Last, 1244
The Year of Decision, 3331
Year of Decisions, 3500b
Yearbook of Agriculture, 2947, 2951, 5817, 5837
The Yearling, 1683
Years of Adventure, 3485
The Years of Preparation, 3465
Years of the Modern, 4513
Years of This Land, 2973
Years of Trial and Hope, 3500b
Yeats, William Butler, about, 1225, 2497
Yellow fever, 4105, 4221, 4823 control, 4872
drama, 1520
epidemic, Philadelphia (1793), 4872
fiction, 116–17
etiology, 5872
Yellow Gentians and Blue, 1458
Yellow Jack, 1520
The Yellow Violet, 217
Yellowstone National Park, 2625, 4182
The Yemassee, 548–49
Yes, My Darling Daughter, 2333
Yet Other Waters, 1376
Yiddish culture, 4459
Yiddish newspapers, 2898
Yoder, Dale, 6042
The Yoke of Thunder, 1295
Yosemite National Park, 1077, 4211
Yost, Edna, 4803, 4854
You and I, 2337
You Be the Judge, 6267
You Can't Go Home Again, 1891
You Can't Take It With You, 1491, 1548, 2333
Youma, 949–52
Young, Brigham, about, 4183, 5465
Young, Eugene ("Scrapiron"), 5041
about, 5041
Young, Francis Marion, 4179 Young, Frederic Harold, 5320
ed., 5353
Young, Hugh H., 4832
about, 4832
Young, Owen D., about, 2826
Young, Philip, 1505
Young, Roland, 6169
Young, Stark, 1047, 4912, 4968
about, 4912
Young, Thomas Daniel, ed., 2320
Young, William H., 6137
Young Adventure, 1224
Young America, 4520
A Young Desperado, 711
The Young Lions, 2146
Young Lonigan, 1373
Young Men's Christian Associations, 5490
Young People's Pride, 1222
Your City, 4595

You're Paying for It, 6343
You're the Boss, 6384
Youth, 4564, 4568, 4573, 4619
  See also Children and youth in literature
Youth and the Bright Medusa, 1277

Z

Zabel, Morton D., ed., 2550
Zaharias, Mildred (Didrikson), "Babe," 4996
  about, 4996
Zanesville, Ohio, 3873
Zanzig, Augustus Delafield, 5625
Zaturenska, Marya, 1482, 1905–6
Zeitlin, Jacob, 2503
Zeleny, Carolyn, ed., 4418
Zeller, Belle, 6399
Zenger, John Peter, 2931
  about, 2931, 6229
  bibl., 2931
Ziegler, Benjamin Munn, ed., 3136
Zigrosser, Carl, 5783
Zilboorg, Gregory, 4833
Zim, Herbert S., 2960
Zimmermann, Frederick L., 6206
Zink, Harold, 6139, 6218, 6391
Zinsser, Hans, 2843–44
Zionism, 4457–59
Znaniecki, Florian, 4495
Zola, Émile, about, 1089
Zollinger, James, 2659
Zollmann, Carl F. G., 5422
  ed., 6278
Zolotow, Maurice, 4931
Zon, Raphael, 5816
Zook, George F., 5189
Zoology, 4715
Zorach, William, 5734
Zorbaugh, Harvey Warren, 4599
Zucker, Adolf E., ed., 4481
Zukor, Adolph, 4963
  about, 4963

U.S. GOVERNMENT PRINTING OFFICE : 1963 O—677676